

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

1968

SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

REFERENCE BOOK

Not to be taken from the Library

PERIODICAL DEPT.

AUG 26 1969

SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

PERIODICAL DEPT.
AUG 26 1968
SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

Sixty-Fourth Annual Cumulation

MARCH 1968 TO FEBRUARY 1969 INCLUSIVE

Edited by
JOSEPHINE SAMUDIO

Indexers
ANNA TINKEL LAUFFER
MARTHA T. MOONEY
KATHLEEN MURPHY

NEW YORK
THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
1969

Published 1969

Printed in the United States of America

Library of Congress Catalog Card No. (6-24490)

*

51

B64

Acknowledgment

In addition to the staff members whose names appear on the title page, we wish to acknowledge the contribution of Carolyn A. Hough and Sandra Scott who indexed for this volume part of the year.

JS

Statement of Policy

Selection of the periodicals used as review sources in the BOOK REVIEW DIGEST is made by the subscribers to the DIGEST. This is done at intervals of several years by means of voting lists and policy questionnaires prepared by the Committee on Wilson Indexes, appointed by the Reference Services Division of the American Library Association. In casting their votes, the subscribers are urged by the Committee to place the greatest emphasis on good subject balance, so that no important subject field will be overlooked and none too heavily represented. The subscribers and the Committee are also in agreement that emphasis should be placed on books and reviews for the general user rather than the specialist who has other sources of information (e.g., science for the layman is stressed rather than the specialized type of periodical covered by the Technical Book Review Index).

The Committee on Wilson Indexes has also helpfully advised the publisher in determining certain necessary rules governing the inclusion and presentation of material, to keep the DIGEST within manageable bounds of size and cost, as follows:

To be eligible for inclusion in the DIGEST a work must be published in the United States. Because of problems of space and cost, it is not possible to include reviews of paper-bound books, or of hard-bound books which fail to receive the qualifying number of reviews within eighteen months after publication. A work of non-fiction must have two or more reviews and a work of fiction four or more reviews in the periodicals selected as review sources by the subscribers. At least one of the reviews must be from a periodical published in the United States. An exception is made for books reviewed in Subscription Books Bulletin where one review is sufficient to allow inclusion of the work in the DIGEST, since material of this sort is often reviewed only in this one place and generally is the type about which the librarian and the library patrons are most eager to obtain information.

Generally not more than three review excerpts for a work of fiction or four excerpts for a work of non-fiction are included, except in listings for books of unusual importance or of a controversial nature where more excerpts are needed to reflect several points of view. However, all reviews found in the periodicals used in the DIGEST are cited.

Review citations are arranged alphabetically by name of the periodical. The first number of the citation refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to a date and the last figure to the approximate number of words in the review. To fulfill a need expressed by many subscribers, the symbol YA is appended to a citation for a review which indicates the suitability of a book for young adults.

Non-fiction titles are classified according to the Abridged Dewey Decimal Classification. Subject headings are based on Sears List of Subject Headings. It should be borne in mind that classification and subject headings assigned in this publication are suggested ones only.

ABBREVIATIONS OF PERIODICALS FROM WHICH REVIEWS ARE TAKEN

- AM ANTHROPOL—American Anthropologist
 AM ECON R—American Economic Review
 AM HIST R—American Historical Review
 AM J PUB HEALTH—American Journal of Public Health and the Nation's Health
 AM J SOC—American Journal of Sociology
 AM LIT—American Literature
 AM POL SCI R—American Political Science Review
 AM SCHOLAR—American Scholar
 AM SOC R—American Sociological Review
 AMERICA—America
 ANN AM ACAD—American Academy of Political and Social Science. Annals
 ARCH FORUM—Architectural Forum
 ART BUL—Art Bulletin
 ATLANTIC—Atlantic

 BEST SELL—Best Sellers
 BOOK WEEK—Book Week
 BOOK WORLD—Book World
 BOOKLIST AND S B B (reviews taken only from Subscription Books Bulletin section) BUL ATOMIC SCI—Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists

 CANADIAN FORUM—Canadian Forum
 CHOICE—Choice
 CHRISTIAN CENTURY—Christian Century
 CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR—Christian Science Monitor
 CLASS WORLD—Classical World
 COL & RES LIB—College & Research Libraries
 COMMENTARY—Commentary
 COMMONWEAL—Commonweal
 CRITIC—Critic

 ECONOMIST—Economist (London)
 ENCOUNTER—Encounter (London)
 ENGL HIST R—English Historical Review

 HARPER—Harper's Magazine
 HARVARD ED R—Harvard Educational Review
 HORN BK—Horn Book

 J AESTHETICS—Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism
 J AM HIST—Journal of American History
 J HIGHER ED—Journal of Higher Education
 J HOME ECON—Journal of Home Economics
 J PHILOS—Journal of Philosophy
 J POL ECON—Journal of Political Economy
 J RELIGION—Journal of Religion
 LIBRARY J—Library Journal
 LIBRARY Q—Library Quarterly
 LRTS—Library Resources and Technical Services
 MOD LANG J—Modern Language Journal
 MOD PHILOL—Modern Philology
 MUS Q—Musical Quarterly
 MUSIC LIB ASSN NOTES—Music Library Association Notes
 N Y REV OF BOOKS—New York Review of Books
 N Y TIMES BK R—New York Times Book Review
 NAT R—National Review (44p issue, pub. in alternate weeks)
 NATION—Nation
 NATUR HIST—Natural History
 NEW ENG Q—New England Quarterly
 NEW REPUB—New Republic
 NEW STATESMAN—New Statesman
 NEW YORKER—New Yorker
 NEWSWEEK—Newsweek
 PACIFIC AFFAIRS—Pacific Affairs
 POETRY—Poetry
 POL SCI Q—Political Science Quarterly
 RECORD—Record
 REPORTER—Reporter
 SAT R—Saturday Review
 SCHOOL LIBRARY JOURNAL. See Library J
 SCI AM—Scientific American
 SCIENCE—Science
 SOCIAL STUDIES—Social Studies
 SPECIAL LIBRARIES—Special Libraries
 SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS BULLETIN. See Booklist and S B B
 TEACH COL REC—Teachers College Record
 TIME—Time
 TLS—Times Literary Supplement (London)
 VA Q R—Virginia Quarterly Review
 WORLD POL—World Politics
 YALE R—Yale Review

FULL INFORMATION CONCERNING PERIODICALS FROM WHICH REVIEWS ARE TAKEN

- America. $10. w America, 106 W 56th St, New York 10019
- American Academy of Political and Social Science. Annals. $10; clothbound $14; free to members. bi-m American Academy of Political and Social Science, 3937 Chestnut St, Philadelphia 19104
- American Anthropologist. $25; free to members. bi-m American Anthropological Assn, Suite 112, 3700 Massachusetts Av, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20016
- American Economic Review. $10. q American Economic Assn, Harold F. Williamson, Sec, 629 Noyes St, Evanston, Ill. 60201
- American Historical Review. $15; free to members of the American Historical Assn. 5 times a yr The Macmillan Co, 866 Third Av, New York 10022
- American Journal of Public Health and the Nation's Health. $15. m American Public Health Assn, 1740 Broadway, New York 10019
- American Journal of Sociology. $8. bi-m University of Chicago Press, 5750 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- American Literature. $5. q Duke University Press, P.O. Box 6697, College Station, Durham, N.C. 27708
- American Political Science Review. $15; free to members. q American Political Science Assn, 1527 New Hampshire Av, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20036
- American Scholar. $5. q United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa, 1811 Q St. N.W. Washington, D.C. 20009
- American Sociological Review. $10; free to members. bi-m American Sociological Assn, 1001 Connecticut Av, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20036
- Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. See American Academy of Political and Social Science. Annals
- Architectural Forum. $12. m The Architectural Forum, Urban America, Inc, 111 W 57th St, New York 10019
- Art Bulletin. $15. q College Art Assn. of America, 432 Park Av, South, New York 10016
- Atlantic. $8.50. m Atlantic Monthly Co, 8 Arlington St, Boston 02116
- Best Sellers. $7. semi-m University of Scranton, Scranton, Pa. 18510
- Book Week. $7; for libraries & schools. w World Journal Tribune, Inc, 125 Barclay St, New York 10015 (Ceased publication. Appeared in the Sunday editions of the Chicago Sun-Times and the Washington Post through July 16, 1967, and in the World Journal Tribune through May 7, 1967)
- Book World combining Books Today and Book Week. $7. w Postrib Corp, 230 W 41st St, New York 10036
(Appears in the Sunday editions of the Chicago Tribune and the Washington Post)
- Booklist and Subscription Books Bulletin. $8. semi-m American Library Assn, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. $7. m Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, 935 E 60th St, Chicago 60637
- Canadian Forum. $5. m Canadian Forum, Ltd. 56 Esplanade, Toronto 1
- Choice. $20. m American Library Assn, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Christian Century. $8.50. w Christian Century Foundation, 407 S Dearborn St, Chicago 60605
- Christian Science Monitor (International daily). $24. Christian Science, One Norway St, Boston 02115
- Classical World. $4.25. m The Classical World, Rutgers, The State University, Newark College of Arts and Sciences, 175 University Av, Newark, N.J. 07102
- College & Research Libraries. $10. bi-m College & Research Libraries, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Commentary. $9. m Commentary. 165 E 56th St, New York 10022
- Commonweal. $9. w Commonweal Publishing Co. Inc, 232 Madison Av, New York 10016
- Critic. $5. bi-m The Thomas More Assn, 180 N Wabash Av. Chicago 60601
- Economist. £6 10s 0d. w The Economist. New Mercury House, 81 Farringdon St, London, E.C. 4 ($19.50. The Economist, 415 Madison Av, New York 10017)
- Encounter. 57s 6d. m Encounter, The Continental Publishers & Distributors. Ltd, 25 Worship St, London, E.C. 2 ($10. British Publications, Inc, 30 E 60th St, New York 10022)
- English Historical Review. 84s. q Longmans, Green & Co, 48 Grosvenor St, London, W. 1 ($12. British Publications, Inc, 30 E 60th St, New York 10022)
- Harper's Magazine. $8.50. m Harper's Magazine. 381 W Center St, Marion, Ohio 43302
- Harvard Educational Review. $7. q Harvard Educational Review, Longfellow Hall, 13 Apian Way, Cambridge 02138
- Horn Book. $6. bi-m Horn Book, Inc, 585 Boylston St, Boston 02116
- Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism. $10. q American Society for Aesthetics, The Cleveland Museum of Art, Cleveland 44106
- Journal of American History. $8. q Organization of American Historians, University of Utah, Salt Lake City 84112
- Journal of Higher Education. $6. m The Journal of Higher Education, Ohio State University Press, 2070 Neil Av, Columbus 43210
- Journal of Home Economics. $10. m American Home Economics Assn, 1600 20th St, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20009
- Journal of Philosophy. $7.50. bi-w Journal of Philosophy, Inc, 720 Philosophy Hall, Columbia University, New York 10027
- Journal of Political Economy. $10. bi-m University of Chicago Press, 5750 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Journal of Religion. $8. q University of Chicago Press, 5750 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Library Journal. $10. semi-m R. R. Bowker Co. 1180 Avenue of the Americas, New York 10036
- Library Quarterly. $8. q University of Chicago Press, 5750 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Library Resources and Technical Services. $5. q American Library Assn. 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Modern Language Journal. $4. m National Federation of Modern Language Teachers Assns, 13149 Cannes Dr, St Louis 63141
- Modern Philology. $8. q University of Chicago Press, 5750 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Music Library Association Notes. $9. q The Music Library Assn, W. J. Weichlein, Exec. Sec, School of Music, University of Michigan. Ann Arbor, Mich. 48105
- Musical Quarterly. $5. q The Musical Quarterly, 609 5th Av, New York 10017
- Nation. $10. w The Nation, 333 Sixth Av, New York 10014
- National Review. $10. bi-w (44p issue) National Review, 150 E 35th St, New York 10016

- Natural History. $7. m The American Museum of Natural History. Central Park West at 79th St, New York 10024
- New England Quarterly. $8. q The New England Quarterly, Hubbard Hall, Brunswick, Me. 04011
- New Republic. $10. w The New Republic, 381 W Center St, Marion, Ohio 43302
- New Statesman. £3 13s. w Statesman & Nation Publishing Co, Great Turnstile, London, W.C. 1 ($11. British Publications, Inc, 30 E 60th St, New York 10022)
- New York Review of Books. $7.50. bi-w The New York Review, Subscription Service Dept, P.O. Box 79, Des Moines, Iowa 50301
- New York Times Book Review. $9.60. w The New York Times Co, Times Square, New York 10036
- New Yorker. $8. w The New Yorker Magazine, Inc. 25 W 43d St, New York 10036
- Newsweek. $10. w Newsweek, 117 E 3d St, Dayton, Ohio 45402
- Pacific Affairs. $5. q Pacific Affairs, University of British Columbia, Vancouver 8, Canada
- Poetry. $10. m Modern Poetry Association, 1018 N State St, Chicago 60610
- Political Science Quarterly. $8; free to members. q The Academy of Political Science, Columbia University, 413 Fayerweather Hall, New York 10027
- Record. (formerly Teachers College Record). 7.50. m Teachers College, Columbia University, 525 W 120th St, New York 10027
- Reporter. $7. bi-w The Reporter, Box 501, Des Moines, Iowa 50302
(Ceased publication June 13, 1968)
- Saturday Review. $8. w Saturday Review. 380 Madison Av, New York 10017
- School Library Journal. See Library Journal
- Science. $12. w American Association for the Advancement of Science, 1515 Massachusetts Av, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20005
- Scientific American. $8. m Scientific American, Inc, 415 Madison Av, New York 10017
- Social Studies. $5. m McKinley Publishing Co. 112 S New Broadway, Brooklawn, N.J. 08030
- Special Libraries. $20. m Special Libraries Assn. 235 Park Av, South, New York 10003
- Subscription Books Bulletin. See Booklist and Subscription Books Bulletin
- Teachers College Record. $7.50. m Teachers College, Columbia University, 525 W 120th St, New York 10027
(Title changed to the Record with issue for October 1967)
- Time. $12. w Time, Inc, 540 N Michigan Av, Chicago 60611
- Times Literary Supplement. £3 18s 0d. w The Times, Printing House Square, London. E.C. 4 ($10.50. The Times (London) Inc, 201 E 42d St, New York 10017)
- Virginia Quarterly Review. $5. q The University of Virginia, One West Range, Charlottesville, Va. 22903
- World Politics. $7.50. q Princeton University Press, Princeton, N.J. 08540
- Yale Review. $5. q The Yale Review. 92-A Yale Station, New Haven, Conn. 06520

Book Review Digest

CUMULATION OF MONTHLY NUMBERS

MARCH 1968—FEBRUARY 1969

(Subject and title index at the end of author entries)

ABBEY, EDWARD. Desert solitaire; a season in the wilderness; drawings by Peter Parnall. 269p $5.95 McGraw

917.92 Arches National Monument. Deserts. Utah—Description and travel 67-26166

For two seasons, the author worked as a park ranger at Arches National Monument in south-east Utah. He was "housed alone in a trailer at the end of a little-used stretch of poor road. . . . Few tourists found their way past his door, and these only on weekends. Most of the time nothing distracted him from such serious occupations as watching snakes and sunrises. . . . Abbey writes in praise of the day-to-day desert, indifferent and untamed." (Book World) Parts of this book, in abridged form, first appeared in Harper's Magazine, Sage, and The Reader's Digest.

"From now on, no one should visit south-eastern Utah without first reading this book but, informative as it is, Desert Solitaire is literature, not just a guidebook. It is an eloquent expression of tense, vehement, joyous living. Its subject is . . . man alone in a desert, a man articulate about both philosophical universals and personal peculiarities. . . . Perhaps the finest single chapter reports a float trip with a lame companion through Glen Canyon, before the misguided flooding of that now lost wilderness stretch of the Colorado River. . . . One chapter attacks with vigor the National Park Service itself. . . . [This book] should survive on the strength of its prickly integrity and the life-style it expresses." A. C. Ames

Book World p15 Mr 24 '68 400w

"Some religious people may object to thoughts [in this book] that hint of sacrilege. If Mr. Abbey's realistic view of life and death in nature startles any readers, they must be strangers to the 'surface of things' which he makes one really see and feel. A tear shed for one natural setting—Arches National Monument—overrun by 'progress,' may help save other wonders of nature. Even when his phrasing proves awkward rather than poetic, Mr. Abbey has something important to say, and he has reason to degrade man—especially the tourist and the bureaucrat—in saying it." C. P. May

Library J 93:67 Ja 1 '68 160w

Natur Hist 77:72 Ap '68 110w

New Yorker 44:174 Ap 6 '68 160w

Va Q R 44:clxxxix autumn '68 70w

ABBOTT, MARTIN. The Freedmen's bureau in South Carolina, 1865-1872. 162p $5 Univ. of N.C. press

975.7 Reconstruction. U.S. Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and abandoned lands 67-26031

The Freedmen's Bureau was "entrusted with the task of providing emergency relief, immediate protection, and general assistance in the transition from slavery to freedom. . . . In a presentation that is topical, the nature and variety of Bureau activities, including the extensive provision of relief to whites and loans to planters, [is] depicted. So, too, are the variety and ambivalence of the southern white response to this . . . agency." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by M. L. Dillon
Am Hist R 73:1649 Je '68 410w

Reviewed by R. W. Logan

Ann Am Acad 378:172 Jl '68 490w

Choice 5:1211 N '68 190w

"This brief volume, based upon rich archival records, provides the first up-to-date, book-length study of the Bureau's operations on the state and local level. . . . The Bureau's employees emerge as honest and conscientious, essentially unpolitical, and tainted only by normal amounts of inability, dishonesty, and ambition. Other enlightening discussions range from problems of wedlock to a new interpretation of Negro land acquisition in the Sea Islands. Too often, however, the precision and detail, and the sense of life, that one expects from such a study as this are lacking. Very few individuals are sketched, critical statistics are vague and unrelated, and several opportunities for compilation are ignored. . . . A bit pedestrian in approach and style, this is nonetheless a sound, quite objective, and informative study of a much neglected topic." O. H. Olsen

J Am Hist 55:151 Je '68 360w

"Abbott, a historian at Oglethorpe College, Georgia, based this book on his doctoral dissertation. He has produced a clearly written, definitive study. . . . Many libraries would find this book valuable in understanding the background of the present civil rights dispute" R. F. Kugler

Library J 92:4409 D 1 '67 130w

ABELL, AARON I., ed. American Catholic thought on social questions. 571p $8.50; pa $4.75 Bobbs

261 Catholics in the U.S. Catholic Church in the U.S. Church and social problems

66-30548

This collection of Catholic writings seeks to "demonstrate the diversity of reactions among American Roman Catholics over the past century to the problems common to an industrialized [and urban] society. They illustrate the conflicts within the Catholic church as it adjusted to American life; conflicts ranging from the battles over 'Americanization' in the nineteenth century to the debates of the 1960's between the advocates and opponents of the 'new pluralism.' . . . [There is] representation for diverse points of view, both official and unofficial." (Foreword) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by L. F. Buckley

America 119:296 O 5 '68 550w

"The late Aaron I. Abell of Notre Dame was a distinguished historian of Catholic social movements. In this, his last book, he collected a wide range of documents and articles illustrating the scope and development of Catholic thought on social questions, all the way from Archbishop John Hughes to John Courtney Murray. The selections are superb."

Commonweal 88:415 Je 21 '68 70w

"[The editor] has selected statements by the famous . . . as well as some by the less well known . . . [and] has written introductory notes for each section and headnotes for each document placing it in its proper context. He also relates the various contributions in the anthology by his excellent historical essay keyed by numbers to each document. . . . Recommended for any collection, it is essential for academic libraries." C. J. Schmidt

Library J 93:3007 S 1 '68 170w

ABELS, JULES. The degeneration of our presidential election; a history and analysis of an American institution in trouble. 322p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

329 Presidents—U.S.—Election 68-13210

In a description of the techniques used in presidential campaigns from the time of Washington to the present, the author "contends that the complexities of modern society preclude the electorate from making a knowledgeable choice. To him 'it is clear that personality and "image" are the overriding factors today, not issues or policies.' [Mr. Abels contends that] 'This new age of ours . . . (is) rendering obsolete the established methods of political communication. There will have to be new answers if democracy is to be effective in translating the popular will into governmental action.'" (Library J) Index.

"Abels's thesis comes as a shock. . . . This book is a popular treatment of a problem in political science; as such it should be acquired by public libraries. Not recommended for college libraries." J. J. Fox
Library J 93:558 F1 '68 300w

"Compiling an impressive array of anecdotes and quotes about Presidential elections, Jules Abels attempts to demonstrate how our campaign techniques have steadily degenerated since the first contest of 1796. . . . Unfortunately, [the book] neglects the considerable virtues that attach to election campaigns and consequently reads like opinionated history. To that extent it is not history at all."

N Y Times Bk R p41 My 5 '68 200w

"The value of the . . . book lies in the diagnosis and analysis rather than the speculation about the future. . . . Do the highly tentative and general schemes that Abels advances give any assurance of improvement?"

Whatever the answer. . . . [he has] contributed to a valuable dialogue that must be expanded and continued in the future." K. W. Thompson

Sat R 51:61 My 18 '68 310w

ABODAHAR, DAVID J. Warrior on two continents, Thaddeus Kosciuszko. 192p $3.50; lib bdg $3.34 Messner

B or 92 Kościuszko, Tadeusz Andrzej Bonaventura—Juvenile literature. U.S.—History—Revolution—Juvenile literature 68-14943

A biography of the Polish aristocrat who came to America to fight for the colonies and won the rank of general. His engineering skill helped build West Point and fortify Philadelphia. He later returned to Poland to lead that country against the Russians. Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:657 D 21 '68 90w

"The author not only describes [Kosciuszko's] background and education, but manages to capture [his] altruistic spirit. . . . In an effort to give background the author inserts some stilted conversation, but the overall result is an inspiring and informative book."

Best Sell 28:62 My 1 '68 100w

"Kosciuszko's record shows that this was indeed a hero and one designed to appeal to today's young teen readers—a many-sided idealist who devoted his life to a struggle for freedom and individual rights, successfully in the American Revolution, repeatedly but unsuccessfully in his beloved war-torn Poland. . . . The author shows an understandable bias for this attractive subject, but the book is flawed by an unnecessarily adulatory tone ill-suited to the complex political and philosophical issues that surrounded and ensnared Kosciuszko. Despite this one-sided approach and the addition of contrived dialogue, the book can be considered an adequate first introduction and is the only full-length treatment of Kosciuszko currently available for younger readers." Julia Losinski

Library J 93:2736 J1 '68 130w

ABRAHAM, GEORGE. The green thumb book of indoor gardening; a complete guide. 304p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

635.9 House plants 67-19294

This handbook gives directions for growing flowering and foliage plants. The author "also includes sections on gardening in greenhouses and coldframes and under lights; forcing bulbs; planting hanging baskets, terrariums, planters, and the like; growing herbs and mushrooms; making holiday decorations; drying plant materials; arranging and caring for cut flowers; gardening projects for children; and . . . recipes." (Sat R)

"The author uses too many words to give too little helpful, reliable information sandwiched between irrelevant, inadequate and sometimes misleading text. . . . The inadequacies are so numerous that I scarcely know where to begin. . . . Altogether, this is a curious mish-mash of ill-assorted and poorly organized material that makes no worthwhile contribution to horticultural literature." E. C. Hall
Library J 92:2937 S1 '67 300w

"Abraham excels as a mentor because he sensibly assumes the beginner knows nothing and provides just those elementary points (e.g., which end of a bulb is up?) most gardening books take for granted. The more experienced gardener will find literally hundreds of useful tips (e.g., how to sterilize flower pots with Clorox)." E. Merritt

Nat R 20:513 My 21 '68 100w

"Intriguing ideas for old hands and a great deal of clearly written basic information for beginners are to be found in [this book]. . . . Quite comprehensive for its 304 pages, [it] has been shaped by the many questions the author answers each year in a syndicated garden column and on a radio program. . . . Something of a potpourri in places, it is a useful and pleasantly informal book with a good index." H. S. Witty
Sat R 50:48 N 25 '67 210w

ABRAHAM, GERALD, ed. New Oxford history of music. v4. See New Oxford history of music, v4

ABRAHAM, GERALD. Slavonic and romantic music; essays and studies. 360p $20 St Martins

780 Music, Slavic—History and criticism. Romanticism in music 68-13029

"The subjects range from the relationship of Slavonic music to the western world to . . . essays on figures such as Chopin, Dvořák, Rubinstein and Mussorgsky. There are two new unpublished essays . . . [and] an account of the . . . 'erotic diary' for piano in which Fibich, . . . the nineteenth-century Czech symphonist, recorded the secrets of his love affair with Anežka Schulzová." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Most [of these essays] have been published previously in British musical journals, notably Musical Times, Music & Letters, and Monthly Musical Record. . . . Written in a delightfully readable style, the essays often provide valuable insights into compositional techniques and personalities as well. With his broad knowledge of the 19th century and his specialized work with Slavonic music, Abraham fits his isolated pieces into the broad mosaic of Romanticism with consummate skill. Highly recommended, especially for libraries who do not carry the periodicals mentioned."

Choice 5:970 O '68 130w

"[Abraham] brings together 29 articles written between 1928 and 1966, mostly available otherwise only in British journals, and introduces American readers to the wide variety of his studies in other areas. The articles cover a broad subject range; from Janáček to Wagner, Bartók, and even Fibich. Most significant are probably those articles on Dvořák and Tchaikovsky. All are characterized by a lucid and altogether praiseworthy literary style. I cannot, however, understand the book's relatively high price. Recommended for college and large public libraries." A. B. Skel
Library J 93:2876 Ag '68 130w

"The role [Abraham] has played in Russian studies is unique. . . . His first essay [here] relates the medieval and the Renaissance music of Eastern Europe to the Western tradition and argues the essential unity of the musical culture of Western Slavonic music and Europe. . . . It is in his writings in this area rather than that of Russian music that this collection of essays may contain the greatest surprises for the lay reader. . . . Operatic issues inspire Professor Abraham to some of his most stimulating and perceptive writing. . . . Outside the Slavonic field, the volume includes some essays on Schumann, including a thoughtful study of the youthful G minor symphony . . . and a study of Wagner's revisions of The Flying Dutchman and Tannhäuser. . . . It is a pity that in this excellently produced volume the music-type examples, which are generous, should be so small."

TLS p816 Ag 1 '68 650w

ABRAMSON, HAROLD A., ed. The use of LSD in psychotherapy and alcoholism; introd. by Frank Fremont-Smith. 697p il $17.50 Bobbs
616.89 LSD 66-25284

The majority of these thirty-six papers are concerned with "the major therapeutic approaches used with LSD; psycholytic therapy in which small doses . . . are used to produce rapid regression and transference; . . . and psychedelic therapy in which high doses . . . are used to arrive at so-called cosmic, mystic experiences, oneness and ecstatic joy." (Commonweal) Bibliography.

"A substantial volume. . . . The scope is specific, almost narrow: honest scientific inquiry into the therapeutic usefulness of LSD. . . . A work of this caliber deserves a warm welcome, both by the scientific community and the educated public. The present volume advocates the justification of the only legitimate use for LSD at present: pharmacopsychiatric research under controlled conditions. . . . Good writing, excellent bibliography, extensive case records, no index."

Choice 5:559 Je '68 220w

"The volume's 697 pages of small print packed with psychological and medical jargon is likely to afford a rather bad trip for the average lay reader more interested in the drug's kicks than its cures. This difficulty, of course, in no way reflects on the fifty doctors, scientists and psychiatrists from all over the Western world who delivered the papers in South Oak Hospital in May 1965. The book obviously was meant for professionals. . . . However, if the lay reader doesn't panic [he will find] . . . a number of the papers fascinatingly record what may well be, as the jacket blurb has it, 'one of the greatest breakthroughs in psychotherapy in the last sixty years.' . . . The taped LSD sessions of both psychiatrists and patients . . . are totally reliable and together with the taped discussions after each paper . . . provide much more easily assimilated knowledge of the theories in practice than the papers themselves. . . . Perhaps the most challenging areas covered are those which seem to suggest a common origin for insanity, alcoholism, religious mysticism and LSD experience." D. J. Leary

Commonweal 86:426 Je 30 '67 1100w

"The conference was able to bring concretely and objectively into the foreground the observed effects of the use of the substances on persons in various psychopathological states. This is one of the most illuminating presentations of the work in the field. It is recommended for all libraries with collections in the fields of psychiatry, psychotherapy, clinical psychology, and the allied fields." Louis De Roslis

Library J 92:1168 Mr 15 '67 230w

ABSHIRE, DAVID M. The South rejects a prophet; the life of Senator D. M. Key, 1824-1900; foreword by Ralph McGill. 250p il $5.95 Praeger

B or 92 Key, David McKendree 67-24671

The biography of a "Southern colonel who was appointed by the governor of Tennessee to complete the term of office of Andrew Johnson, who died while serving in the Senate. Mr. Abshire, executive secretary and chairman of the research committee of Georgetown Center for Strategic Studies, provides a . . . background of Senator Key's early life, his role in the Civil War culminating in his defense of Vicksburg, his subsequent career in Washington, and finally his return to Chattanooga as federal judge. He gives [an] . . . account of Key's liberal stand in the Senate and of his acceptance of appointment as Postmaster General in the Hayes cabinet, a position he filled with an idealism neither understood nor appreciated." (Library J) Index.

"This is a most disappointing book. . . . [Key's career] contains some fascinating problems for a biographer and offers the possibility for placing him in a context of important, stirring events. Furthermore, the author has had access to 'formerly hidden sources' which were given to him by Senator Key's daughter shortly before she died in 1958. . . . [However] Abshire is painfully uncertain as to where the historian's craft ends and the novelist's art begins. Not content with the inherent interest and drama of his subject, he attempts to present the interior thoughts and emotions not only of Key but also of some of the minor characters in his story. . . . And [Key's] mild rejection of the southern Democratic party's use of the race issue in favor of Wade Hampton-style noblesse oblige seems a flimsy basis on which to make him the rejected prophet of the title." R. F. Durden

J Am Hist 55:152 Je '68 360w

"A book-length portrait of Senator David McKendree Key has been needed to fill out the picture of post-Civil War days. . . . Although Mr. Abshire lacks literary style and his book suffers throughout from patches of fiction writing that throw an otherwise direct historical account out of focus, this is an interesting and fully documented biography." Rice Estes

Library J 92:4497 D 15 '67 190w

ACHEBE, CHINUA. Arrow of God. 287p $5.50 Day

67-28702

This novel by the Nigerian author of Things Fall Apart (BRD 1961), is "set in the Ibo villages of Umuaro in Eastern Nigeria in 1921. [Ezeulu] Chief Priest of Ulu, god of the six Ibo villages . . . sends one of his young sons to learn Christianity. . . . But this brings the conflict between old ways and new to its height as the boy, in an excess of . . . Christian enthusiasm, tries to kill a royal python, a creature most sacred in the religious traditions of Umuaro. After this, Ezeulu's opposition to the authority of the white man becomes more pronounced, but this . . . obstinacy, although it achieves a temporary victory over Captain Winterbottom, brings tragedy in the end." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 220:150 D '67 500w

Reviewed by C. P. Collier

Best Sell 27:365 D 15 '67 390w

"This book is a fine example of [Achebe's] writing ability, and has won prizes. It is an intricately woven tale of the wisdom of a tribal priest, an old man who senses the upheavals that British government and Christianity will bring, and tries to cushion the blows that will fall upon his people. He is not entirely successful, and Mr. Achebe captures a bit of the personal and social tragedy that often comes with the imposition of a colonial regime. The novel has some flaws: the author's handling of dialogue is sometimes confusing. But he is masterful in capturing the idiom of African speech patterns, and the obtuseness and insensitivity of colonial government. Highly recommended for adult and young adult fiction collections, and for libraries specializing in Africana." H. K. Flad

Library J 93:569 F 1 '68 210w [YA]

"As plots go, this is familiar and acceptable. But the slender story-line is soon lost in a plethora of local color—and local color alone, whether Nigerian or Californian, is no longer adequate stuff for novels. . . . Perhaps no Nigerian, at the present stage of his culture and ours, can tell us what we need to know about that country, in a way that is available to our understanding—not, at least, in the way W. H. Hudson made South America real to us, or T. E. Lawrence brought Arabia to life on the printed page. Here and there, in flashes, Achebe can embody the power struggle he is describing—only to lose it again in folk-patter. There is no doubt that he is writing from the inside out." Ronald Christ

N Y Times Bk R p22 D 17 '67 700w

"[This story is] Olympian in its rendering, and the key to its impact will, I think, be found in Achebe's clean, unerringly direct manner of saying what he has to say. His approach to the written word is completely unencumbered with verbiage. . . . Even in the most emotion-charged passages the tone is absolutely unruffled, the control impeccable. It is a measure of Achebe's creative gift that he has no need whatever for prose fireworks to light the flame of his intense drama. Worthy of particular attention are the characters. Achebe doesn't create his people with fastidiously detailed line drawings; instead, he relies on a few sure strokes that highlight whatever prominent features will bring the total personality into three-dimensional life." Charles Miller

Sat R 51:30 Ja 6 '68 1100w

Time 90:112 N 10 '67 340w

ACTON, H. B. What Marx really said. 148p $4 Schocken

335.4 Marx, Karl

67-25233

The professor of moral philosophy at Edinburgh University "tries to set the record straight, going back to the original sources of

ACTON, H. B.—Continued

Marx" (Library J) Chapters include The origins of Marxism, Marxist materialism, Historical materialism, Profit and exploitation, Revolution, the State and the Communist ideal, Bibliography, Index.

"Marx is known primarily as an economist because his impact has made itself felt more on economic conditions than in any other sphere. But Professor Acton may claim that Marx originally devoted himself more to philosophy and only turned to economic problems under Engels' influence. Whatever one's point of view, this small book achieves Professor Acton's purpose, to elucidate some of Marx's thinking. Recommended for larger public and academic libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:4516 D 15 '67 180w

"On the evidence of [this book] publishers of the . . . series need to think again about what they really want. Each book, we are told, is intended not only to supply an 'authoritative factual summary of a great thinker's oeuvre, but also to 'express the personal criticisms' of the summarizer. This combination of purposes may have been achieved by previous contributors. It has certainly not been achieved by Professor Acton; for to summarize and criticize Marx in 140 small pages is quite impossible. A most distinguished student of Marxism, Professor Acton has done his best; but he should never have been asked to make the attempt."

TLS p350 Ap 27 '67 500w

ADAIR, PATRICIA. The waking dream; ■ study of Coleridge's poetry. 247p $6.75 Barnes & Noble

821 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 68-1977

The author analyzes "Coleridge's alleged account [of how he wrote Kubla Khan, and] . . . demonstrates that the seedbed must not have been a literal dream but a Coleridgean day-dream—a sort of reverie brought on by two grains of Opium' (as the Crewe manuscript of the poem has it). Discounting the much later Biographia Literaria comments as inaccurate, the critic builds her theses on . . . Coleridge's early poems, letters, and his first . . . notebooks." (Library J) Bibliography.

Economist 225:viii D 2 '67 450w

"Miss Adair interrelates meticulously Coleridge's poetic development from 'Religious Musings' to the agonized 'Asra' poems and finally to 'Self-Knowledge' (1832) and the wistful 'Epitaph'; her 55-pages on 'The Ancient Mariner' constitute the central chapter. This study is indispensable for students and admirers of Coleridge and for all who seek to solve the ultimately unsolvable: how poetic word-magic originates." B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:2874 Ag '68 190w

"[This] is a scholarly, sensitive and deeply human study of the man who 'was never able to distinguish clearly between the real and the imaginary world and often lived in a day-dream.' . . . Miss Adair gives much importance to his courageous attempts, through the powerful imagery of his poetry, to grapple with the problems of evil and suffering. . . . [She] has avoided in this essay the danger of explaining every image in terms of sexual symbolism or indeed of any symbolist theory. . . . She is to be congratulated on the integrity, the scholarship and the imaginative patience with which she has accomplished a difficult but most rewarding task."

TLS p914 Ag 29 '68 900w

ADAM, RUTH, jt. auth. Beatrice Webb. See Muggeridge, K.

ADAMS, ADRIENNE, jt. auth. Two hundred rabbits. See Anderson, L.

ADAMS, D. K. America in the twentieth century; a study of the United States since 1917. 264p maps $5.50; pa $2.75 Cambridge

973.9 U.S.—History—20th century [67-12844]

This book "follows two main themes. One traces the change in America's place in the world from a position of isolation . . . to its present role as leader of the western world. The second is the increasing initiative taken by the Federal Government in improving social conditions and ensuring civil rights for all citizens. [There is an] introductory chapter covering the period up to 1918, and accounts of the cultural and social background are included." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies, Index.

"While some knowledge of [the book's] two themes is basic to any understanding of 20th-century America, Adams' unfortunate organization of them constantly leaves the reader turning pages looking, usually in vain, for some chronological thread to hold his narrative account together. Even though Adams' study does have the advantage of giving the reader some insight into the way that a noted British scholar interprets a significant period in our development, students seeking extensive historical coverage of recent America must still turn to [standard works]. . . . Appendices include population statistics, election maps, ■ workable but brief bibliography, and an accurate index."

Choice 4:1309 Ja '68 160w

"[This history] fills a gap in the available literature, both for students and for the general reader. . . . In general Dr Adams holds a judicious balance, not only of space but also of judgment. He is not blind to the deficiencies and perversities of America . . . but he is sympathetic to the country's problems and conscious of its achievements. When the American story proper spills over into world history . . . Dr Adams keeps a firm control of his multiple themes while holding the focus fairly on Washington. He has a good feeling for issues of foreign policies and a responsive ear for voices of American protest; there is a perceptive interlude on the Beat Generation, in general the book reads well."

Economist 224:418 Jl 29 '67 340w

"[This book] will not be of much help to the . . . sophisticated reader for Mr. Adams does not seem to be a very sophisticated writer. . . . Cultural sections are inserted but there is no visible attempt to penetrate below the surface. . . . The political narrative is clear and, in general, accurate, but Mr. Adams never strays far from the fable convenue. . . . The judgments on personalities are equally conventional. . . . There are minor slips in detail. . . . But as a straight historical narrative this book can be recommended, if it does not live up to its claim to be a study."

TLS p551 Je 22 '67 470w

ADAMS, HENRY. History of the United States of America during the administrations of Jefferson and Madison; abr. and ed. by Ernest Samuels. 425p maps $8.50; pa $3.45 Univ. of Chicago press

973.4 U.S.—History—1783-1865 67-21380

The original work by Adams "was completed in the 1830's and published in nine volumes from 1839 through 1891. . . . [This abridgment] focuses on diplomacy, the dominant activity of the period." (Publisher's note) "Adams's central thesis is, that honest as Jefferson and Madison may have been, the Republicans in general were unrealistic in resisting the growth of a strong central government." (Library J) Annotated bibliography, Index.

Christian Century 84:86 Ja 18 '68 20w

"Adams's History is a classic, and readers should welcome its reappearance in almost any form. This edition, with its brief but intelligent introduction, is particularly good, because it keeps the feel of Adams by including whole chapters without condensation. The first six chapters, a magnificent description of America in 1800, are the best of the classic, and they are reprinted here in full. . . . For all public and academic libraries." Jerome Nadelhaft

Library J 92:2765 Ag '67 170w

ADAMS, J. DONALD. Naked we came; a more or less lighthearted look at the past, present, and future of clothes; designed and il. by Tim Lewis. 123p $4.95 Holt

391 Costume 67-19053

A former editor of the New York Times Book Review presents a "history of costume, analyzing the . . . twists and dictates of Dame Fashion. . . . [He] guides us through a variety of human costumes . . . ending with the uniformity—male and female—of the present day." (Publisher's note)

"Obviously, Mr. Adams enjoys words. Even when he shoots them like poisoned darts you don't feel he really wants to kill anybody. . . . He's just shooting between the legs, as it were, to express his annoyance. . . . But it makes him rather uneasy when boys and girls dress so that they're hard to tell apart. And what makes him uneasy of all is that by the year 1984 we may all wear identical uniforms with numbers on our backs. His chapter 'The Iron Hand of Tradition,' and the way the iron hand is losing its grip, is fascinating." Hildegard Dolson

■ Y Times Bk ■ p24 N 12 '67 700w

"Some chatty essays on costume and fashion by the retired Times book columnist, who says that he is an amateur in this field but that he has read a lot. Mr. Adams traces the sheath skirt and the wasp waist back to Minoan Crete, and the basic black dress to Coco Chanel's desire to have all women share her mourning; he seasons this with petulant interjections against 'half-starved models' and 'homosexual dress designers.' . . . The charm of the book lies in the illustrations—including jacket, binding, and endpapers—which were chosen by Mr. Lewis and are profuse, Pop, and funny." New Yorker 43:90 Ja 6 '68 130w

ADAMS, JOHN M. Viruses and colds; the modern plague. 170p $5.75 Elsevier pub. co.

616.2 Cold (Disease). Viruses 67-17937

"To inform the public about the results of medical research, [the] professor of pediatrics at the University of California, Los Angeles, has written [an] account of the causation, prevention, and treatment of mankind's most common disease, the 'common cold.' In the first chapter he is concerned with the variety and complexity of the causes of colds, mainly viral infections. Next, he traces, from their first descriptions or discoveries to present-day laboratory knowledge about them, the acute respiratory diseases which, in their mild form, constitute what we call colds; among them: influenza, croup, measles, polio, pneumonia, mononucleosis, and hay fever. There are sections on prevention and treatment of colds in both children and adults." (Library J) Bibliography.

"A small volume that seems unique in universal appeal. In a succinct yet challenging way, it presents reliable factual material from the molecular structure of viruses to how to treat a baby's first cold. The discussion of various virus conditions is scientific enough to appeal to biologists and medical students, and yet it is practical enough to be useful to parents, teachers, nurses, and others. Most chapters are summarized in one brief paragraph. Limited but adequate glossary; bibliography containing both book and periodical references from 1938 to 1965. Recommended."

Choice 5:373 My '68 90w

"This is an interesting account of a health problem which affects all of us. . . . Recommended for public and health-oriented libraries." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 92:2935 S 1 '67 180w

ADAMS, MARY SCOTT. Six to break even. 194p $4.95 Rand McNally

920 Farm life—Indiana 67-20589

The author describes her family's efforts "to make a success of a farm in Zulu, Indiana [which] they inherited, and still keep up their life in suburban Winnetka, Illinois. With two young daughters, a job in Chicago, and no farming experience, Charles Adams plunged into a series of disasters. Mother took a crash course in animal husbandry, but the sows died, and the chinch bugs flourished." (Sat R)

"In this [narrative] suspense rises steadily to a final, satisfying climax that in a novel would win it a round of applause. Mary Scott Adams is full of natural wit that is genuinely comical. . . . The book is marred by crude and profane language which could have been omitted without loss of integrity and strength." E. W. Luker

Library J 92:2916 S 1 '67 150w

"Although there are moments when the author seems to overembroider the quaint speech of rural characters, this book about coping with farm life is ruefully comic." Zena Sutherland

Sat ■ 51:51 F 24 '68 180w [YA]

ADAMS, WALTER, ed. The brain drain; pref. by Paul H. Douglas. 273p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

331.7 Professions. Scientists. Immigration and emigration 68-19818

"A conference on 'brain drain,' sponsored by the Centre de Recherches Européennes, Lausanne, and by the United States Advisory Commission on International & Cultural Affairs, was held in August 1967 in Lausanne. Sixteen scholars from ten countries representing all continents read papers on the problems of human capital. The papers have been . . . edited for the present work by Professor . . . Adams of Michigan State University. He also provides the introductory and concluding chapters of the book." (Library J) Index.

"Various papers in this book deal with case studies of brain drain from France, Greece, Africa, India, and European Common Market countries. This interesting study is recommended for any library in need of such material." Victor Novak

Library J 93:2001 My 15 '68 210w

"This collection of well-chosen papers . . . provides considerably more than an introduction to the current phenomenon of the 'brain drain.' . . . Here the reader will find mathematical analyses in the contribution by Dr. Enrique Orteiza of Buenos Aires, and a wealth of statistics in several of the other papers—complete with graphs in the one by Professor Brinley Thomas on 'Modern' Migration—as well as a number of simple, well-reasoned expositions. . . . Professors Walter Adams of Michigan State University and Joel Dirlam of the University of Rhode Island conclude this volume with a number of generally workable proposals, which should be read alongside the recommendations contained in Senator Paul H. Douglas's preface to the book." Arthur Lall

Sat ■ 51:39 Ag 6 '68 1400w

Reviewed by G. B. Baldwin

Science 161:873 Ag 30 '68 1300w

ADAMSON, GEORGE. A lifetime with lions. 286p il $5.95 Doubleday

R or 92 Lions 67-11733

The author "relates the adventures of a lifetime spent not only with lions, but with malaria, elephants, a truculent hippo, campfires in the African mountains, and leaky government accommodations, all in the evolving course of a career which began as hunter, progressed to game warden, and active conservationist." (Library J)

"An excellent book. . . . The author, (husband of Joy Adamson who wrote the best-selling 'Born Free' [BRD 1960], 'Living Free' [BRD 1961], 'Forever Free' [BRD 1963]) has spent over 40 years in Kenya, 23 of them as a game warden. . . . Except for his pleas for game preservation, no other politics appear in the book. The author plays down many hair-raising adventures he and his companions, mostly native scouts, have had with dangerous animals. . . . A wry sense of humor pervades the telling of many of these incidents." W. H. Schweder

Best Sell 28:186 Ag 1 '68 650w

"This is a gentleman's account, and a gentleman's philosophy is stated: 'It is the plain duty of man to guard and protect what is at his mercy.' Lacking the excitement and poignancy of the Elsa tales, the narrative nevertheless possesses its own appeal of wit and sympathy. A tranquil reminder of wilder, freer lives and places, the book is recommended for public libraries." Anita Nygaard

Library J 93:2646 J1 '68 120w

Reviewed by George Merrill

Library J 93:133361 S 15 '68 130w [YA]

ADAMSON, JOY. The peoples of Kenya; epilogue by G. W. Huntingford. 400p il col il $9.75 Harcourt

390.09676 Ethnology—Kenya. Kenya—Social life and customs 66-20851

The 'biographer of Elsa the lioness and her cubs [The Story of Elsa, BRD 1966], here tells about her travels throughout Kenya to paint and photograph the African tribesmen with the traditional clothing and ornaments. She describes many rites and ceremonies which she witnessed in the course of her work." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This extraordinary volume with its hundreds of illustrations . . . is more than adequate testimony to the justice of the Kenya government in backing [the author]. She has been able to find an empathy with the peoples, and they are widely varied, to the point where she was permitted to paint, not only many of the chiefs, witch doctors (male and female), and warriors, but also to witness and photograph some of the most secret ceremonials. The text is excellent; but what strikes the reader of this volume is the physical beauty and dignity of these peoples. End-paper maps make reference to the geographical location of the many tribes easy enough to follow. For libraries this would seem to be a 'must' acquisition."

ADAMSON, Joy—Continued

Best Sell 27:318 N 15 '67 260w

"Mrs. Adamson is a self-taught painter, and her pictures are interesting for detail rather than for artistic quality. G. W. Huntingford has supplied a chapter on the geographical and ethnological background of the tribes. Useful as a picture of the people of Kenya and their traditional life as it is lived, where it has not been touched by foreign influence."

Louis Barron

Library J 92:4516 D 15 '67 110w

"[Joy Adamson] reveals herself as a portrait artist of considerable gifts, with a special feeling for color, movement, and expression that is supremely suited to the flamboyant character of African tribal society. . . . Inevitably, the costumes catch your eye first, and you almost gasp at their explosive gaiety, rich variety, and unfailing taste. . . . [But this] is much more than a fashion catalogue, and if you overlook the text you will be passing up quite an adventure. Although tribal ways in Kenya today are little more than a tourist floor show, a handful of people still manage to live as they did centuries before the invention of travelers' checks. Mrs. Adamson's word-pictures of their isolated communities—particularly in the cruelly magnificent, measureless crematorium of Kenya's northern region—are no less vivid than her paintings. To read her accounts of how these prehistoric tribes turn their backs on jet-age society and transform grim survival into a rewarding way of life is to enjoy the weird and beautiful experience of a journey through a lost dimension of time." C. L. Miller

Sat R 50:28 D 23 '67 650w

"[The author] was commissioned by the colonial Government to produce a record of the twenty-two most important tribes. This task was considerable, involving the painting of 132 portraits in twelve to eighteen months. The present book is an account of the undertaking. . . . Mrs. Adamson makes it clear in the text that she had difficulty in finding sitters who normally wore the costumes she was painting, and this shows. . . . Though she worked hard to reproduce what she saw, the result—even as a record—was not very satisfactory. She may, for instance, have tried to find out the ritual significance and symbolism of the clothes and ornaments she was painting, but neither in the Coryndon Museum, Nairobi (where the originals hang) nor in this book are her paintings adequately captioned. As a result they are sadly uninformative. . . . If poor captioning makes the illustrations . . . unsatisfactory, the text is even more so. . . . Her book reads as though she had gone chronologically through her old diaries, writing them up a bit adding a little from memory, and supplying a certain amount of anthropological and sociological meat from the books listed in the bibliography. The result is a mishmash."

TLS p1179 D 7 '67 1000w

ADDAMS, CHARLES, II. The Chas. Addams Mother Goose. See The Chas. Addams Mother Goose

ADELMAN, IRMA. Society, politics & economic development: a quantitative approach. by Irma Adelman and Cynthia Taft Morris. 306p $8.95 Johns Hopkins press

338.9 Underdeveloped areas. Economic development 67-21582

The authors "attempt to gain quantitative insights into the relation between social, political, and economic factors and the levels and pace of economic development [through the use of factor analysis]. . . . The variables . . . comprise forty-one indicators of social, political, and economic structure and development. . . . Data for seventy-four countries are analyzed and the countries divided into three groups representing successive levels of development: the tribal level, the market economy level, and the industrial level. . . . The form of government, the authors conclude, whether democratic or authoritarian, has little or no systematic effect on economic performance at any level of development." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] have broadened the usual factors stressed by economists—which revolve around output and income per head—to include the factors that preoccupy sociologists and political scientists, such as urbanization and population growth, communication and mass media, mobility and social organization, and participation and political stability. . . . For the 'development community' [this book] is required reading." Daniel Lerner

Ann Am Acad 378:203 J1 '68 800w

"A highly specialized book that has much interest in it for the non-specialist. . . . Factor analysis is a technique that attempts to make quantitative use of variables essentially qualitative. As such it is quite esoteric. However, in carrying out the analysis, a number of useful items emerge even for those who will not understand the statistical technique. . . . There are no comparable books on the market."

Choice 5:1001 O '68 180w

ADLEMAN, ROBERT H. Rome fell today. by Robert H. Adleman and George Walton. 336p il $7.95 Little

940.542 World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Italy 68-11536

The authors "seek to make understandable the twists and trials of the Allied campaign in Italy by centering main attention on personages, great and small, on both sides of the hill, or caught in the middle. . . . The central figure is General Mark Wayne Clark, who commanded the U.S. Fifth Army. . . . The authors raise the question: Was Clark a great general, an average commander or a mediocre publicity-seeker? To answer, they . . . quote assessments and sidelights from a medley of witnesses." (Book World) Bibliography. Index.

"Although dealing with a weighty subject, this book is full of the personal angles of war which resulted in the capture of Rome . . . and is, therefore, fascinating. . . . There are no details of platoon, battalion, or even regimental tactics. But there are the clash of wills and the force of character that make and dominate battlefields. We have characterizations, well documented and presumably trustworthy. [The book] is declared to be based upon . . . thousands of reference books, published biographies, memoirs, and critiques . . . the national archives in Alexandria, Virginia, and other primary sources . . . (and) hundreds of interviews with every major surviving character. . . . It had best be read, however, by someone who knows the main outline of the campaign." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:69 My 15 '68 700w

"[The authors] have collaborated on an entertainingly brisk narrative about how and why the Italian campaign ran its eccentric stall-and-start and lamentably full-length course. Fresh air is pumped into long-stalled strategic arguments and new light is thrown on the tactical dumps and deadfalls, of which, in Italy, there was a plethora. But this is no study of war, made at bathysphere depths. It is done kimono-style, covering all, while touching nothing closely. As light reading for the summer, preferably in a hammock on a hot day, it is recommended. . . . [However,] whether lengthy quoting of witnesses pro and con be a valid way of writing history, one must doubt. . . . [This is] far better for reading than for reference." S. L. A. Marshall

Book World p4 My 12 '68 1100w

"This is not a scholarly, detailed study of the conflict in Italy, but an attempt to explain the meaning of this controversial campaign. Most of all, it is a defense of General Mark Clark. . . . Too often [the authors] wander off the subject and become entangled in topics which have little direct relation to the war in Italy. The book is a chatty, unconventional history which could have profited by editing and rewriting to produce a tighter, more sustained narrative. But it does give an excellent picture of the 'backstage bickering' among the prima donna generals. Recommended for libraries with special collections on World War II history." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:2493 Je 15 '68 240w

"[The authors] usefully recapitulate three high moments of drama—the landing at Salerno, the bombing and battle for Monte Cassino, the Anzio beachhead. These operations have been covered before and better in Hugh Pond's 'Salerno' [BRD 1963] and Fred Majdalany's

'The Battle of Cassino' [BRD 1957]. Eric Seavareid's 'Not So Wild a Dream' [BRD 1946] provided a less official view of the temperaments in the high command that worked at cross-purposes. . . . The authors of 'Rome Fell Today' speak no evil; they are overly kind in their assessment of individuals, especially those of officers who, in the roseate glow of memory, granted them after-the-fact interviews. All's fair in love and war—but books cannot protect reputations if they are to serve history." Herbert Mitgang

N Y Times Bk R p49 N 3 '68 600w

ADLER, BILL, comp. & ed. Letters to the editor; il. by Ernest Marquez. 93p $2.95 Double-day

817

67-15351

A collection of American letters to the editor including excerpts from eighteenth- and nineteenth-century journals as well as from contemporary sources.

"This slim volume is hardly worth putting between hard-cover binding. The letters are mostly the kind that are sent to columnists, those like Ann Landers or Heloise. Maybe they strike Bill Adler as comic, the sense of humor differs in degree and kind from man to man. But be wary, unless you wish to buy something more than a 'get-well' card for someone in hospital."

Best Sell 27:236 S 15 '67 70w

"Adler's new book of letters is blessedly brief. It is also a grab bag that has something for everybody, from the teen-age addict of rock and roll to the lover of political discord. . . . Most of the contributions are funny; a few left me staring blankly at the text, and led to the reflection that humor is as delicate and fragile as a soap bubble drifting through sun-drenched summer air. A basic and inescapable defect of this type of book is that, like the dictionary, it keeps changing the subject. An extremely ephemeral item for humor collections." P. F. Moran

Library J 92:2573 J1 '67 90w

ADLER, IRVING. Mathematics and mental growth; with diagrams by Ruth Adler and Ellen Viereck. 191p $4.95 Day

510.7 Mathematics—Study and teaching

68-15246

The author of A New Look at Arithmetic (BRD 1965) "begins with expositions of the learning theories of Rousseau and Piaget and comments on their relevance to the teaching of modern mathematics. He then proceeds to argue that the primary and secondary mathematics curriculum should be based even more firmly on the 'new math,' and he . . . outlines some ways that this can be done." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[The author] aims his discussion chiefly at mathematics teachers. . . . [but] well-informed laymen should [also] learn something from this intelligently written volume. It is recommended especially for libraries of those institutions training large numbers of grade school and high school teachers." J. W. Welgel

Library J 93:1007 Mr 1 '68 150w

"[Adler] takes up the cudgels for the new math in a series of . . . essays published originally in professional journals. . . . It is to be hoped that interested parents will read them to see what one enlightened educator thinks." Isaac Asimov

N Y Times Bk R p20 O 27 '68 900w

ADLER, JACOB, ed. The journal of Prince Alexander Liholiho. See Kamehameha IV, King of the Hawaiian Islands

ADLER, JOHN H., ed. Capital movements and economic development. See International economic association

ADLER, LUCILE. The traveling out, and other poems. 64p $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

811

67-10443

A first volume of poems.

"[The author's] writing seems a bit stiff and unyielding, and I had a hard time with some of the ideas, though her words have power. It will be interesting to see her future work. Recommended for college and university libraries and to large public libraries with extensive poetry collections." Jerome Cushman

Library J 92:245 Ja 15 '67 200w

"Lucile Adler presents her first volume . . . at a time in her life when we might be expecting her fourth or fifth. Perhaps more publication and consequent exposure to criticism would have taught her a greater subtlety at times; she is surely intelligent and has a sense of beauty and a reverence for life. A meticulous writer and an accomplished versifier, she has a good eye for subjects, and . . . possesses wit and lyricism. . . . I hope to read more of Mrs. Adler's well-languaged poetry. It is the real thing." Charles Philbrick

Sat R 50:32 Je 3 '67 120w

ADLER, MORTIMER J. The difference of man and the difference it makes; based on the Encyclopaedia Britannica lectures delivered at the University of Chicago, 1966. 395p $7.95 Holt

128 Man. Anthropology—Philosophy 67-19054

In this analysis of the "ways in which man differs from everything else, . . . [the author examines] the theories of philosophers, ancient and modern; . . . the accounts of man's evolution by biologists and paleoanthropologists; . . . the studies of animal and human behavior by comparative and behavioral psychologists; and . . . the work of neurologists, mathematicians, and computer technologists in making models of the brain and in building mechanical robots to simulate human intelligence. . . . [He] concludes that the question of how man differs still remains open." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of proper names.

"After rejecting the possibility that philosophers, zoologists or neurologists will resolve the issue on their own terms, Adler argues that the work of computer technologists—in particular, Turing's robot—will be decisive on the question of radical vs. superficial difference. . . . [The author's] compact, humorless book does not give his ultimate answer as to the possibility of Turing's robot or as to man's radical difference from animals; but it provides a basis for understanding all the voluminous writing on the subject of the brain-thought relation. It is especially challenging in its evaluation of the claims of computerized intelligence. . . . Adler's well-wrought searchings will be of annoying interest to everyone from philosophers to paleo-anthropologists to computer technologists, and perhaps even to robots." R. J. Gerber

America 117:722 D 9 '67 600w

"This is a useful addition to any library's collection on the philosophy of man where it will find its use not only among the specialists in the field, and scholars generally, but also among informed laymen and general readers." William Gerber

Library J 92:4505 D 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by Anthony Quinton

N Y Rev of Books 11:10 N 21 '68 1450w

"Amassing information from biology, chemistry, paleontology, cybernetics and psychology, [Adler] has contrived a dazzling exercise in scholarship and logic. His arguments however, are ultimately unconvincing. To believe that man is doomed by his animal instincts if science fails to decree that he is not significantly different from other creatures is both foolish and dangerous. Equally naive is Mr. Adler's conviction that scientific proof of a unique human brotherhood will usher in a golden age."

N Y Times Bk R p26 F 18 '68 260w

"The book may be read for the esthetic pleasure that belongs to perfect works in logic and mathematics no less than to perfect works of art. . . . The major part of the book is 'a dialectically objective assessment of the research and thinking' that has so far been devoted to this subject. It is fascinating as a display of dialectical skill, and if in the end it leads to no definite conclusion, the failure is to be attributed not to any defect in the argument but to its resolute logic." Herbert Reed

Sat R 50:30 N 18 '67 1000w

Science 160:57 Ap 5 '68 1100w

Time 91:60 Ja 12 '68 900w

ADOFF, ARNOLD, ed. Black on black; commentaries by Negro Americans; foreword by Roger Mae Johnson. 236p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.451 Negroes. Negro authors 68-24101

This volume contains excerpts from the writings of twenty-three Negro authors from the time of Frederick Douglass to the present. The commentaries "underline the continual rediscovery of the barriers placed before black Americans and delineate how some of these barriers can be overcome to achieve real equality." (Pref)

ADOFF, ARNOLD—Continued

"From W. E. B. Dubois, through Walter White, Langston Hughes, Gordon Parks and James Baldwin, to LeRoi Jones, Stokely Carmichael and Martin Luther King, Jr., these excerpts are a challenge to the idealism and the political activism of the young generation of white Americans."

Best Sell 28:322 N 1 '68 130w [YA]

"The book illustrates one of the prime 'separating myths' that divides the two races. Most whites believe that drastic changes have occurred, that today's black attitudes are relatively new. . . . That comfortable perspective is destroyed when we read [these commentaries]. . . . We are shown the continuity of attitudes and resentments in a way that should make us hesitate to lament the black man's 'lack of patience.' . . . The truths here are used to cure, not to wound. I am grateful that I can pass them on to my own children, preferring that they see the picture true, even with its rawness of language which some will call obscenity, rather than having them live on exposed to the ultimate obscenity of racism." J. H. Griffin
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p7 N 3 '68 600w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:40 D 21 '68 130w [YA]

ADOFF, ARNOLD, ed. I am the darker brother: an anthology of modern poems by Negro Americans; drawings by Benny Andrews; foreword by Charlemae Rollins. 128p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

811 Negro poetry—Juvenile literature

68-12077

"A teacher in the New York City schools has compiled 64 selections by 28 American Negro poets who reflect on the past, the current social scene, and the hope for the future. [Index to authors and index to first lines.] Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Masters

Book World p30 (children's issue) My 5 '68 280w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 90w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson

Harper 237:76 Ag '68 480w

Horn Bk 44:332 Je '68 210w

"Well known poets such as Langston Hughes, Gwendolyn Brooks, Arna Bontemps and Leroi Jones are represented, as are lesser knowns like Ray Durem, Raymond Patterson, and Joseph White. . . . Including some of the newer poetry and some less familiar selections from established Negro poets, this is a good addition to collections of poetry. Attractive print and open pages." Julia Losinski

Library J 93:1317 Mr 15 '68 200w

"The book is handsome and elegantly edited, but I am not really clear as to whether it was meant to be aimed primarily at students or at a general public. Both the title—a poor one, I think—and the well-intended but somehow rather simplistic introduction give the impression that it was all intentionally geared down to grade-school children. The great majority of the poems, however, are anything but grade-school poems, and the collection as a whole would be lost and cheated in the chalkboard world of school-librarians and genteel lady-teachers. . . . It will unquestionably be read by large numbers of both white and Negro students, but it would be a pity if it were not at the same time made accessible to a much larger public, too." Jonathan Kozol

N Y Times Bk R p26 My 19 '68 1100w

"Almost all the selections in this anthology express the poets' feelings as Negroes, whether the mood is reflective, hopeful, mournful, or humorous. The editor, himself a poet, has chosen [this piece] with discrimination. . . . The inclusion of explanatory notes and biographical sketches add to the usefulness of the book, but it is far more than a merely utilitarian collection." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 100w [YA]

ADOLFS, ROBERT. The grave of God; [and] the church a future? tr. by N. D. Smith. 156p $4.50 Harper

260 Catholic Church. Church and social problems. Secularism 67-14940

A discussion of the effect of secularization on the future of Christianity and of the Roman Catholic Church, both of which the author asserts fail to be relevant to today's needs and consequently may well become the grave of God. Originally published in Amsterdam as Het graf van God. Heeft de Kerk nog Toekomst?

Choice 5:208 Ap '68 200w

"A Dutch Augustinian prior, [Fr. Adolfs] was for some time a pastor and teacher in the United States. He begins this book with a chapter in which he reviews the stances of Protestants Bultmann, Tillich and van Buren. . . . Gibson Winter and Harvey Cox feature prominently in the text, alongside Maurice Merleau-Ponty, Hans Urs von Balthasar and Yves Congar. To a Protestant, [this book] reads very much as though it had been written by a Catholic Gabriel Vahanian. . . . [It] shows a Catholic perspective most clearly in its contention that the problem of the church, rather than the problem of God, is the basic contemporary issue. . . . [Fr. Adolfs] emphasizes that the Christian message always points us above and beyond each historical constellation, so that we are called to fight the 'hidden powers' that secularism has brought into being. . . . Thus [the book] is both an adventure into acroistics—the investigation of the future—and an essay in biblical theology." Kenneth Hamilton

Christian Century 84:1255 O 4 '67 600w

"[Fr. Adolfs] calls for a kenosis, an emptying of the Church; as a power structure it is unable to compete with the power structures of the secular world. . . . To this reader it appears that the author is unduly impressed by the technological developments of the secular world. . . . I do not believe the secular world is any more secular now than it was when the apostolic Church confronted the secular world. Whatever else the Roman world was, it was not religious. . . . My point is that the problem is not entirely new, and the suggestion that it may be entirely new tends, I suspect, to discourage those who contemplate it. . . . I share [the author's] faith in the power of the Church to renew herself, but I am less certain of the form which the renewal will take." J. L. McKenzie

Commonweal 87:415 D 29 '67 950w

"The secularization hypothesis is a far too simplistic model of the condition of religion in the modern world; it tells us something of the story and something very important, but it is not the whole story. Adolfs' naive acceptance of the entire hypothesis and his equally naive plan for reform contribute little to our knowledge of where the Church ought to be going. But the book is just simple-minded enough in dealing with complex and difficult matters to be a success." A. M. Greeley

Critic 26:83 D '67-Ja '68 700w

Reviewed by Richard Walz

Library J 92:2578 Jl '67 190w

Reviewed by Richard Ginder

Nat R 20:509 My 21 '68 300w

"[Although some of Father Adolfs'] conclusions seem relatively unimportant, possibly even naive. . . . many of the ideas . . . are cogent and sound. Father Adolfs would have the hierarchy eliminate trappings of royalty; he stresses the need for lay members of the Church to be aware of their role; he raises the question of the Church's honesty in admitting mistakes and facing errors. Perhaps the most important point to make about this book is that, as Father Adolfs says, his suggestions for change are 'material for discussion.'" P. K. Cuneo

N Y Times Bk R p28 O '67 750w

AESOP. Caxton's Aesop; ed. with an introd. and notes by R. T. Lenaghan. 264p il $7.50 Harvard univ. press

398.2 Fables

67-17315

"In 1484 William Caxton printed his own version [of the Fables] which was his translation of Julien Macho's French version of Heinrich Steinhöwel's German translation of a Latin version of the original Greek." (Va Q R) Glossary. Index of fables.

"Professor Lenaghan's edition is unusual in our century for its attractiveness as a book and for its excellence as a scholarly production. His text represents a collation of three sources, very slightly modernized in orthography. . . . The woodcuts are delightful; however, they are taken from a German edition because of their superiority to Caxton's cruder versions. Five of Caxton's illustrations are included in an appendix. Caxton's prose is modern enough for readers 12 years of age and up, and I recommend this volume to academic and public libraries and to all appreciators of fine printing." D. K. Fry

Library J 93:190 Ja 15 '68 160w
Va Q R 44:lxvxi spring '68 130w

AFRICA, THOMAS W. Science and the state in Greece and Rome. 128p $4.95 Wiley

509.38 Science and state. Science—History
67-29015

The author describes "the employment of scientists in the managerial societies of the ancient Near and Far East. The book begins with a discussion of the scientist in ancient Greece. Dr. Africa shows how many scientists were active in politics, but at times were harassed for 'impiety' at Athens. Chapter II deals with the scientist in the Hellenistic Age. . . . Chapter III deals with scientists in the Roman Empire. . . . A recurrent theme throughout is the tendency of state-supported scientists to avoid controversy by merely echoing the views of the their employers. . . . Some of the other topics treated are: Pythagoreans in politics, blasphemy trials at Athens, Aristotle and racism, subsidized research at Alexandria, Hellenistic warfare, and court astrologers at Rome." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Professor Africa's book is a serious and well-documented attempt to explain the reasons behind science's limited role in shaping classical thought. . . . The results seem to indicate a deep-seated failure of the Greeks to mobilize scientific knowledge and technological expertise within the existing socio-economic framework. The situation is no better in the Hellenistic period. . . . The Romans concentrated on practical results. . . . In this small but well-written book, one cannot expect final answers. But by re-examining clichés and by eschewing easy solutions, the author has laid the foundations for a fuller study, potentially as valuable for classicists as for historians of science." Jerry Stannard

Class World 62:29 S '68 310w

"Professor Africa of the University of Southern California, and author of Rome of the Caesars [BRD 1966] . . . emphasizes neither biographies of scientists, nor their discoveries, choosing rather to discuss the scientist as a member of society, his changing status, his relations with state religion, his patrons, and his philosophy. He has strong opinions which he states more often than explains, but, at least, he does so enthusiastically. He does warn that ' . . . historical generalities are often misleading ' . . . ' although he seems addicted to them. His facts, however, are well documented and organized. For large academic and public library collections." R. C. Hilton

Library J 92:4010 N 1 '67 180w

AGASSIZ, LOUIS. Studies on glaciers: preceded by the Discourse of Neuchâtel; tr. and ed. by Albert V. Carozzi. 213p il pl maps $27.50 Hafner pub. co.

551.3 Glaciers 67-16633

Originally published in 1840, this is a translation of Études sur les Glaciers, "in which the concept of a glacial age of secular proportions was formulated. . . . Much of the argument constitutes an . . . essay, proceeding from field details to larger and larger syntheses. . . . [Also translated is the slightly earlier] Discours de Neuchâtel. . . . Finally, the volume includes a reprint of the atlas accompanying Agassiz's book, with its . . . lithographs by Nicolet." (Science)

"An excellent volume for all geologists. The writing . . . is good and has a personal flavor that has gone out of modern scientific work. Some of the ideas are archaic, of course. . . . The reader unfamiliar with glacial phenomena should see James Dyson's The World of Ice [BRD 1962, 1963] and Flint's Glacial and Pleis- tocene Geology [BRD 1957] for modern interpretations and data. [The] translator and editor . . . has included a valuable preface and introduction."

Choice 5:820 S '68 110w

"This handsome book appears at a very appropriate time. Its appeal will not be confined to scientists concerned . . . with glacial ages; its language will be clear to anyone, and Agassiz's reasoning from the well-described field evidence can be followed without difficulty. . . . Toward the end, however, the highest synthesis becomes very speculative and in places almost wild. [The introduction] skillfully sets the historical stage for the two translations and makes them more meaningful than they could have been otherwise. . . . The translation is extremely tight; in his effort to stay close to the original text, the translator has sacrificed English idiom in some places, and occasionally he betrays the fact that English is not his native language. These matters do no harm, however, to an excellent and highly readable work." R. F. Flint

Science 159:520 F 2 '68 500w

The AGE of the grand tour; containing sketches of the manners, society and customs of France, Flanders, the United Provinces, Germany, Switzerland, and Italy in the letters, journals and writings of the most celebrated voyagers between the years 1720 and 1820, with descriptions of the most illustrious antiquities and curiosities in these countries, together with the story of such traffic, by Anthony Burgess, and an appreciation of the art of Europe in the eighteenth century, by Francis Haskell. 136p il col il maps $30 Crown

914 Europe—Description and travel—Views
67-24845

A description of the eighteenth-century era of European travel. Accounts by such "Grand Tourists as Sterne, Smollett, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Boswell, Gibbon, Hazlitt, Mme. de Staël, Byron, and Stendhal . . . are accompanied by an [assortment of maps and sketches, and by paintings—printed full-page and mostly in color—by Tiepolo, Watteau, Bellotto, Canaletto, and Zocchi, among many others." (New Yorker)

"For the connoisseur and lover of great, handsome, expensive books, this volume provides a treasure trove of scenes, both verbal and visual, of a Europe long disappeared. . . . The accounts of Paris, Rome, Venice, and intermediate points . . . are delightful, and numerous reports from the 1820's and 1830's provide an interesting contrast to those of preRevolutionary days. For general readers, informed laymen, specialists and scholars." Robert Rea

Library J 93:77 Ja 1 '68 120w

"A coffee-table book . . . that recreates without sentiment the sentimental journey through the Continent considered obligatory for the would-be English gentleman of the 18th century. . . . [It] is designed rather aptly for leisurely nonsequential reading and browsing. Short passages from diaries, letters and travel books provide the excuse for the sumptuous illustrations, steel engravings and color plates. . . . It is an extravagant book, totally unnecessary; but it will impress and delight both the extremely literate and the quasi-literate, the seasoned Continental gadabout as well as the armchair traveler." John Perreault

Nation 205:697 D 25 '67 150w

"[An] extraordinarily satisfactory book. . . . The illustrators for the various accounts [could hardly be bettered]. . . . The letters, extracts from journals and wonderful pictures evoke the look and feel of their century with such vividness that one is less aware of the differences between the Grand Tour and the 17-day bargain excursion than of the eternal wonder of the spots visited. . . . The book is beautifully made. The reproductions of paintings, prints and drawings are all you could ask." John Canaday

N Y Times ■■ R p62 D 3 '67 390w

New Yorker 43:246 D 9 '67 260w

TLS p135 F 8 '68 480w

AGEE, WILLIAM C. Marca-Relli; pub. for the Whitney mus. of Am. art. 80p il $5 Praeger

759.13 Marca-Relli, Conrad 67-30560

"This catalog was prepared for a major retrospective exhibit of the paintings, collage drawings, and [metal] sculpture done by Conrad Marca-Relli from 1952 through 1967 and installed in the Whitney Museum of American Art. . . . Mr. Agee [is] an art writer and associate curator at the Whitney Museum. . . . Most of the works are given a full page reproduction." (Library J)

AGEE, W. C.—Continued

"The artist was born in the U.S. but is European by upbringing. The catalogue would be of no special value to most libraries, since the artist is not a strong influence and does not have a strongly unique style. Elegance and competence are his main distinguishing characteristics."

Choice 5:189 Ap '68 70w

"This artist is especially renowned for his collages which are primarily abstract, of large proportions and highly individualized. . . . [Agee] has written an appreciative essay with particular emphasis on the development of the big collages. . . . The sculpture pieces are especially well photographed. A chronology, exhibition record, and selected bibliography round out this monograph on a sophisticated abstract American artist. Recommended for large collections." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:1129 Mr 15 '68 120w

AGNON, S. Y. A guest for the night; tr. from the Hebrew by Misha Louvish [ed. by Naftali C. Brandwein and Allen Mandelbaum]. 485p $6.95 Schocken

68-13723

The "guest," . . . makes a nostalgic return to his native village in [Galician Poland] after World War I. Finding lodging, he plans to remain until his money is gone and he has to return to his new home in Palestine. This reverse pilgrimage by a simple, unworldly man finds him faced with the reality of contemporary life against the background of the past. He reopens, cleans, and heats the study hall attached to the temple in an attempt to restore a tradition and establish himself as part of the dying Jewish community." (Library J)

"[This] is the most important of Agnon's novels thus far to be made available in English. The translation is good, although it cannot convey the full flavor of the religious overtones of the original. The book does give outsiders an adequate basis for judging the merit of a writer who can be measured by the standards of world literature. . . . Originally written before World War II, [it] is partly autobiographical, and it is rich in realistic detail. The precise and sympathetic portrayal of people and places vividly re-creates the world of Eastern European Jewry as it existed in the 1920s. . . . The plot itself has two levels of symbolic meaning. On the more literal level, the guest for the night is a man who comes back for a year from Palestine to the place of his birth in Poland. But the guest can also be understood as Israel, which passes fleetingly through the history of the nations." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:111 My '68 2000w

Reviewed by T. L. Vince

Best Sell 28:54 My 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Alan Levensohn

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 20 '68 750w

Reviewed by M. R. Kohn

Library J 93:1159 Mr 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 76:435 O 4 '68 140w

"Agnon is the 1966 Nobel Prize laureate for literature; with some uncharacteristic exceptions, his work to appear in English, thus far, is marked by such tedium, such an absence of what James called 'felt life,' or of relevance, drama, or vital wit . . . that one begins to wonder if the fault is entirely one of translation. . . . What has happened is that a modern man has deliberately turned away from the contradictions imposed by his sensibility to postulate a commitment—not entirely unambiguous—to reinvigorating traditional learning. While this may be entirely noble and even courageous, it does not necessarily bode well for Agnon's writings, as 'A Guest for the Night' testifies." R. M. Elman

N Y Times Bk ■ p5 Ap 28 '68 2000w

"Despite the difficulties in rendering Agnon into English, Misha Louvish has masterfully synthesized the various layers of Agnon's Hebrew into one stylistic entity. In dignified, classic prose he blends the modern temperament of Agnon's theme with the host of age-old linguistic elements. . . . [One] problem concerns Agnon's rendering of dialogue: no quotation marks and no new paragraphs to indicate a change of speaker. Mr. Louvish's compromise, which uses single quotes but retains Agnon's paragraphing, makes it difficult to follow short interchanges. Aside from these reservations, I believe we have in Mr. Louvish's version one of the finest translations of Agnon to date, and in A Guest for the Night one of the crowning achievements of modern Hebrew prose, a magnificent novel that is both an epic of the Jew in Europe between the Great Wars and a commentary on twentieth-century man's spiritual severance in a world over which flutter the dark wings of angels of death." Curt Leviant

Sat R 51:38 Ap 27 '68 2000w

Time 91:83 Ap 19 '68 600w

TLS p1218 O 31 '68 400w

The AGRARIAN history of England and Wales [general ed: H. P. R. Finberg] v4, 1500-1640; ed. by Joan Thirsk. 919p il $25 Cambridge 333 Land. Agriculture—Great Britain

[66-19763]

"Ten years ago [the late] R. H. Tawney assumed the generalship of a brigade of . . . historians whose ultimate objective was a definitive analysis of English history from Neolithic to modern times. Of the seven projected volumes this is the first to be published. . . . The editors involved interpret 'agrarian' in the broadest sense—not merely crops, cultivation, and marketing, but laboring classes, landowners, and the relationship of the church and crown to the land. Thirsk has a . . . section on public opinion toward the enclosure movement; contributor Gordon Batho covers the decline of the aristocracy and the rise of the gentry; . . . and M. W. Barley details the building of the manor houses of the great as well as those of squires and farm laborers. [There are] year-by-year tables of food production and prices, [and of] farm wages." (Choice) Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by J. R. Rilling

Am Hist R 73:805 F '68 650w

"[This] is magnificent. . . . Though one could point to some imbalances (why so much on Wales?), this volume will take its place as a fundamental study of rural economics and society largely because there is nothing to compare in scope and depth. A must for all libraries that already have Cambridge History sets in other fields."

Choice 4:1303 Ja '68 190w

"Two features give the volume great solidity: an insistence throughout on regional variety, especially important in an age of growing specialisation; and an extensive use of both national and local archives and of unpublished theses. The contributors vary widely in their approaches: one is a geographer, one an archaeologist, and another, the most severely economic in his analysis, a member of the Business Research Unit at Durham. . . . The general editor of the series, Professor Finberg, refers to unavoidable gaps in this volume: it would certainly have been valuable to have had some comparison of English agriculture with that of western Europe. But what has been achieved fully justifies the general editor's aim of producing more than a synthesis of existing knowledge: in this volume, as in the period it covers, much new territory has been occupied and cultivated."

Economist 225:49 O 7 '67 550w

Reviewed by Eric Jones

New Statesman 73:444 Mr 31 '67 550w

TLS p1212 D 14 '67 2900w

AQUILAR, FRANCIS JOSEPH. Scanning the business environment. (Arkville press bk) (Columbia univ. Graduate school of business. Studies of the modern corporation) 239p $6 Macmillan (N Y)

658 Industrial management

67-11688

The author seeks to show how "information is obtained outside a company by managers for making strategic decisions and long-range plans. . . . The data was obtained principally through interviewing 137 managers in forty-one small and large companies in the United States and six Western European countries. The majority of the managers were employed by manufacturers of chemicals for industrial markets." (Special Libraries) Index.

"The title gives the erroneous impression that it analyzes the business environment; . . . instead, this book, based on original research, describes the communication process by which managers obtain information about competitors, technology, the economy, and other matters external to the corporation. . . . Aguilar treats solely information external to the organization, but which may come to the manager from internal and external sources and largely in an informal manner. Suggestions are made for improving the gathering of strategic information. Of value to managers and students of communication."

Choice 4:720 S '67 200w

Reviewed by W. E. Houk

Special Libraries 59:117 F '68 300w

AHARONI, YOHANAN. The Macmillan Bible atlas, by Yohanan Aharoni and Michael Avi-Yonah; prepared by Carta, Jerusalem. 184p $14.95 Macmillan (N Y)

220.9 Bible—Geography. Bible—History of Biblical events 68-10811

This work contains maps with integrated text depicting religious, political, military and economic events of the various periods of biblical and early Church history. Examples of costumes, tools, artifacts, coins, weapons, and inscriptions are also included. Chronological tables. Index. Originally published in two separate volumes in Hebrew under the titles Carta's Atlas of the Bible, 1964, and Carta's Atlas of the Period of the Second Temple, 1966.

Reviewed by David Stanley

America 119:595 D 7 '68 260w

"An excellent handbook. Through 264 maps—all of them clear and attractive, with pertinent captions and usually with an illustration or two—the reader is given an interesting and instructive guide to the significant events of the Bible from about [3000] B.C. to 200 A.D. This atlas is a necessary purchase for college, seminary, high school, and public libraries; neither would anyone disdain it as a personal gift." H. M. Orlinsky

Library J 93:2641 J1 '68 100w

"[This] book leads the reader from the earliest known cultures of the area to the war of Bar-Kokhba and the second-century Christian Church. The Bible, Josephus, and the Dead Sea Scrolls are among the sources summarized. . . . Routes of historic journeys and battle plans make the going easy. A key instantly locates the relevant map for any of 400 Old or New Testament passages. . . . An outstanding contribution to Bible comprehension and appreciation." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:62 N 16 '68 100w

AHMAD, AZIZ. Islamic modernism in India and Pakistan, 1857-1964; issued under the auspices of the Royal Inst. of int. affairs. 294p $6.75 Oxford

915.4 Islam. Pakistan—Religion. India—Religion. Islam and state. Islamic countries—Politics [67-96907]

The author summarizes "the contacts of Indian Muslims with the West from the time of Akbar to that of the Mutiny. [He] then discusses the thought of Sayyid Ahmad Khan and the Aligarh movement. Iqbal and Abul Kalam Azad as well as lesser figures and movements that surround these . . . landmarks of modern Muslim thought. About a quarter of the book is devoted to present-day Muslim thought, specifically that of Maudoodi and Parwez, with due attention to religious repercussions in political affairs." (Am Hist R) Glossary.

"Although [this] study is necessarily selective, it seems unfortunate that the Ahmadiya are discussed only in relation to the 1953 disturbances, on the ground that sufficient material has already been written about them, and that their modernist posture is little different from that of any other modernist group. . . . Aziz Ahmad has intended his book as an introduction. . . . He has surely succeeded in his purposes, although one wonders if he has not assumed a greater knowledge and understanding of Islam than exists among all but a very few advanced Western students. . . . This is a valuable volume that gathers together a mass of material, much of which is nowhere conveniently accessible in English, and which provides an essential insight into any understanding of the modern nation of Pakistan, or of the Muslim minority in India." Freeland Abbott

Am Hist R 73:1605 Je '68 360w

"With the publication of his Studies in Islamic Culture in the Indian Environment, Aziz Ahmad established a reputation as one of the most interesting interpreters of the historical experience of South Asia's Muslim community.

The present work confirms this reputation, and displays even more than the earlier book an ability to penetrate to the crucial problems in intellectual history. Professor Ahmad manages to combine a lucid, dispassionate, and sympathetic analysis with [an] eminently readable style." Fritz Lehmann

Pacific Affairs 41:322 summer '68 750w

AHMADJIAN, VERNON. The lichen symbiosis. 152p il $5.75 Blaisdell pub.

589 Lichens, Symbiosis

66-21101

This book discusses the isolation and nature of the algal and fungal symbionts, "techniques of study, the culture of lichens, problems of physiology and biochemistry, ecological considerations, the respective roles of the symbionts, and the relationships to other members of the biota." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Well done in every respect. The type is clear, the illustrations are excellent, and the paper is superior. Intended to fill the need for a modern reference source in experimental lichenology, [this] succeeds admirably. It is a compilation of current knowledge of a field to which Ahmadjian has made notable contributions. . . . Any biologist, who has not given special attention to the lichens in recent years will find the volume a storehouse of interesting and valuable information and comments."

Choice 5:365 My '68 210w

Sci Am 219:142 O '68 550w

AIKEN, MICHAEL. Economic failure, alienation, and extremism, by Michael Aiken, Louis A. Ferman and Harold L. Sheppard. 213p $7.50 Univ. of Mich. press

331.1 Unemployed. Packard Motor Car Company 67-25339

"This is a study sponsored by the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations of the University of Michigan and Wayne State University of the social, political, and psychological impact of unemployment on 305 blue-collar workers left jobless when the Packard Motor Company closed its Detroit plant in 1956. It is based on personal interviews conducted approximately 27 months after that . . . event." (Library J) Index.

"A number of potential concomitants of job displacement are examined from [the data collected]. One key variable is economic deprivation. . . . Emphasis on economic resources as an influence on workers' attitudes and social participation, an emphasis often neglected in sociological studies, is a strong point in this research. A second set of variables, representing miscellaneous political attitudes . . . is then investigated. . . . However, the associations observed among political attitudes and such explanatory variables seem disappointingly slight and inconsistent. . . . In particular, the omission of questions on union participation seems unfortunate. . . . Unhappily, the study loses power as an intensive, exploratory analysis not only through conceptual inadequacies but also through application of quantitative procedures that are often inappropriate for the purpose at hand. Many of the measures, instead of utilizing the full pattern of the workers' answers to the varied questions, are scores based upon arbitrarily assigned weights and averaged as if they were ratio scales." M. W. Riley and Anne Foner

Am J Soc 74:204 S '68 700w

"While there are a few surprises here, most of the findings are not unexpected. However, the confirmation of correct assumptions has its value. The book is recommended for libraries serving social scientists and labor specialists." David Cooley

Library J 93:1913 My 1 '68 170w

AINSLIE, ROSALYNDE. The press in Africa: communications past and present 264p $7.50 Walker & co.

079.6 Communication. African newspapers 67-23083

The author "examines the history of the African press and discusses the problems African newspapers, radio, and television face today." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Probably the most interesting chapter deals with the relationship of the press and government in various African states; Ainslie notes that in many states the 'independence of the press' is purely fictional. . . . The appendix listing broadcasting stations, news agencies, and daily newspapers as of June 1967 is incomplete; . . . weekly newspapers should have been included as well as the daily bulletins of national press offices, which often represent the only daily 'newspapers' in the country." Choice 5:760 S '68 120w

AINSLIE, ROSALYNDE—Continued

"Independent Africa is undergoing a vast program of communications development but its mass media are still 'largely at the mercy of foreign interests,' and foreign influence and control are increasing in those African countries where the governments have not intervened. . . . Miss Ainslie does not claim to be an expert, nor does she consider her survey a comprehensive one, but she has put together a book that will be useful to most readers who are seriously interested in Africa today, including both specialists in the field and the informed layman." Louis Barron Library J 93:2657 J1 '68 130w

"Miss Ainslie has collated and presented an extraordinary volume of information about the historical development of newspapers throughout Africa. She has added to the value of her book as a work of reference by summarizing the factual information country by country, in a table, correct at the end of 1965. . . . As an historical record this is an excellent and painstaking piece of research, and the facts in the catalogue are by no means dull. . . . Miss Ainslie well understands the importance and the limitations, of mass media of communication in the unsophisticated society of Africa, and she has some particularly pertinent things to say about the importance of sound radio in an age when the man in the bush probably owns a transistor set. . . . Miss Ainslie's political sympathies lie with the independent African states, and this is no bad thing; but she is at times perhaps too uncritical, particularly when discussing Ghana under Dr. Nkrumah. . . . In general, however, she has produced an admirable, workmanlike and valuable study." TLS p1065 N 24 '66 430w

AINSLIE, TOM. Ainslie's complete guide to thoroughbred racing. 493p il $10 Trident press 798 Horse racing 68-18312

This volume "deals with the tools of the 'trade,' including facts about newspapers, magazines, tip sheets, and so on. It outlines . . . factors regarding distances, condition, class, weights, speed, pace, stables, jockeys and other pertinent matters. There is a chapter on systems and how to evaluate them. [and] a section on the rules of racing." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"There is no book I know of that covers every aspect of racing as well as Ainslie's. There are enough statistics here to paper the mile-and-one-half distance of the Belmont Stakes. . . . The details are inexhaustible. [The] style is clear and simple to read but one wonders if the average horseplayer . . . won't be turned off by this wealth of information. The book seems to be geared to the dedicated, cool gambler. The average barber who spends his free Monday at the track might find the extensive handicapping more work than shearing the Beatles. . . . For those who might want to know what they're getting for their fifties or their deuces, there is no book that can compare with this one." Joe Flaherty

Book World p4 J1 14 '68 700w

Reviewed by S. J. Riccardi
Library J 93:4160 N 1 '68 140w

AIRD, CATHERINE. Henrietta who? 188p $3.95 Doubleday 68-14183

"Mrs. Jenkins and Henrietta, who believes herself Mrs. Jenkins's daughter, live quietly in a country village till Henrietta is off to college. Then Mrs. Jenkins dies in a road accident and it becomes clear she has never borne a child. Who then is Henrietta, and why is it so difficult to find this out?" (TLS)

Best Sell 28:185 Ag 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:2263 Je 1 '68 80w

"This is a shrewdly plotted story, and Miss Aird's telling is entrancingly crisp." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p38 J1 14 '68 60w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R p34 J1 27 '68 20w

"A nice puzzle and a nicely built tale with one good fat clue in it." TLS p380 Ap 11 '68 30w

AIRD, CATHERINE. A most contagious game. 192p $3.95 Doubleday 67-23570

"Thomas Harding, retired with a heart condition, [and his wife, Dora] had purchased a Tudor house in Easterbrook and found . . . [in] a priest's hiding hole . . . a skeleton of a 15-year-old boy dead since 1815. A murder in the village of a young wife is tied in with the old one because the suspected murderer uses the hide to escape arrest." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:310 N 1 '67 80w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 92:3450 O 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p78 N 19 '67 90w

"Catherine Aird is a shining new star. She writes extremely well about the kind of 'ordinary,' talkative, interested people no sensible reader can resist. . . . Thomas Harding is highly capable at his new game of detective work, and Miss Aird is a most ingenious lady." New Yorker 43:247 N 25 '67 140w

"Out of Josephine Tey's Daughter of Time [BRD 1952] by Kipling's 'A Habitation Enforced'. . . . [this] novel has many of the virtues of its parents. . . . The fault is old-fashioned stock-characterizing: 'young America', the lost bart, who is obviously going to cheer Thomas's old age; the villagers spilling over with ancient wisdoms; Thomas and Dora Beginning to Understand. Certainly the literary parents get in the way of sufficient originality, but . . . this child is heir to a fine tradition." TLS p583 Je 29 '67 150w

AKE, CLAUDE. A theory of political integration. 164p $6.65; college ed $5 Dorsey press

320.01 Political science 67-30065

This volume attempts to formulate a theory of the conditions of political integration, engineered large-scale social change, and political stability, and of the relation between the three phenomena." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

"Ake focuses on only one set of conditions, the political leadership factor. . . . This is a verbal statement of theory, drawn in large part from the literature on political integration. If the relationships between the variables were . . . scrutinized with systematic data, then measures, not suggestions of them, would have been provided and perhaps some of the conventional ideas on political integration would have been modified to bring together what is happening in the world with what political scientists are currently thinking." Henry Teune Am Pol Sci R 62:978 S '68 900w

"Suitable for undergraduate reading." Choice 5:554 Je '68 140w

AKIYAMA, TERUKAZU. Neolithic cultures to the T'ang dynasty. See Arts of China, v 1

ALANDER, KYÖSTI, ed. Viljo Revell: works and projects (Bauten und projekte) [tr. by Jonathan Fleming and others]. 119p il $10 Praeger

720.924 Revell, Viljo 66-20425

"Finnish Architect Revell is best known in this country as the winner of the competition for the design of the Toronto City Hall. . . . Alander (Museum of Architecture, Helsinki), in [his introduction] and in his discussions of the projects, presents Revell as the champion of rationalist architectural thinking in Finland, standing at completely opposite poles from Alvar Alto, the one Finn sure to be known to most Americans interested in architecture." (Choice)

"[Revell's] renditions of Corbusier's ideas of the 1930s . . . are probably more refined in planning and detail than any of the similar local interpretations scattered around the globe. This would be the reason that a book on Revell's work could be of value to students of the development of modern architecture. Unfortunately, the book was not designed with this kind of study in mind. The schematic plans and sections are reproduced in miniscule scale and most of the photographs are conventional picture-post-card views. Alander's brief introduction may have been useful in the original but, after a semitranslation into English, it disintegrates into a collection of somewhat obscure generalizations." B. P. Spring

Arch Forum 126:101 My '67 300w

"Clear handsome publications such as this one are always appealing. The text, photographs, and drawings give one the feeling of the architect's life-work. But for architects, there should be more information. They want to know more about what a building is like to be in and how it is really made. They need the details which would bore the layman. Just the same, architectural libraries will want to have the only available volume of collected works by Revell."

Choice 5:40 Mr '68 170w

ALBA, VICTOR. The Mexicans; the making of a nation. 268p il $6.95 Praeger

972 Mexico—History

67-20469

The author analyzes "the many peoples, problems, cultures, and foreign and private interests that have combined to produce the Mexicans of today. . . . He begins with the confrontation of the Spanish conquerors and the native Aztec civilization and analyzes the impact of three centuries of domination by Spain. He discusses the independence movement of the early 1800's . . . the nineteenth century, and the democratic Revolution of 1910 . . . describing [both] the dictators and revolutionary heroes. . . . Mr. Alba believes that the key to understanding the behavior and attitudes of the Mexicans—and the contradictions evident in their politics, economic system, and social behavior—is to be found in the transitional, fragmented quality of Mexican life and culture." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Alba, one of Mexico's intellectuals, writes about that country with an open view because he came there from Spain as an adult two decades ago. He gives a lively account of Mexico's political and social history—no easy thing when one must compress more than four centuries into a single volume. Alba is nothing if not balanced. He is neither a 100-per-cent indigenist nor a doctrinaire revolutionary, though he values highly the Indian's contribution to modern Mexico and sees the 1854 Reform and the 1910 Revolution as the reasons for the nation's progress toward greatness." E. K. Culhane

America 117:746 D 16 '67 200w

Choice 5:400 My '68 200w

Christian Century 84:1527 N 29 '67 30w

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 9 '68 350w

"The definitive book on the Mexican Revolution is still to come. . . . Mr. Alba's study is a chronological history which emphasizes men and events in the period after the presidency of Diaz. However, Mr. Alba also considers the role of geography, the Mexican character with its Indian and Spanish roots, and the ideologies of different eras. . . . Perhaps the most comparable book is Mexico and the Americans [BRD 1963] by Daniel James, [which] contains more information about United States-Mexican relations. It and Mr. Alba's book approach the questions raised by Mexican nationhood in similar fashion, with an essentially conservative viewpoint. Differences of details, emphases, and interpretation are great enough, of course, to warrant purchase of Mr. Alba's perceptive and informed volume. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." F. L. Cinquemani

Library J 92:3038 S 15 '67 200w

ALBA, VICTOR. Nationalists without nations; the oligarchy versus the people in Latin America. 248p il $7 Praeger

320.1 Latin America—Politics. Nationalism 68-13325

The author "argues that because no true national states exist, there is not, nor can there be, any real nationalism in Latin America. Instead, nationalism is merely a tool used by one interest group or another—the oligarchy, the Communists, and so on—to foster and/or protect its own particular position." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"As a whole the work is challenging and provocative. If at times Mr. Alba does not support his argument with sufficient data, permits factual errors to creep into the text, and tends to build hard and fast categories, the book still makes good reading and the main arguments contain sufficient merit to outweigh the defects. Recommended for libraries collecting Latin American materials." H. A. Spalding

Library J 93:3014 S 1 '68 130w

"In view of the present US policy in Latin America, [this book] provides a useful perspective on the futility of expecting those on top to carry out or permit a meaningful redistribution of political and economic power. . . . Alba skillfully unmasks the standard oligarchical ploy of using the threat of 'communism' to shake money out of the US. He also exposes the complaint that the disparity in prices between the raw materials Latin America exports and the manufactured goods which are imported is the prime cause of underdevelopment." J. A. Page

New Repub 159:24 O 5 '68 1600w

"The historical question confronting Alba is why Latin America . . . should have so belied its great promises. . . . Alba sits behind a machine gun that spews out belt after belt of quotations from Latin-American writers and details of political developments. . . . This goes on for seven of the eight chapters; all the shots sound pretty much alike. . . . Unfortunately, analysis gets lost in the barrage, and the author's noble indignation reveals a fundamentally emotional approach to Latin-American affairs. . . . He seems to wish to avoid discussing current Mexican problems . . . [or] the Spanish origins of Spanish America's social problems. . . . [He] fails to say a single word about the immense contributions the British made to the development of Argentina . . . [and has] swallowed quite uncritically the propaganda of Argentine nationalists. . . . It is Latin-American unity and not integration that Alba demands." Ronald Hilton

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ag 11 '68 1100w

ALBÉRÈS, R. M. Kafka: the torment of man, by R. M. Albères and Pierre De Boisdeffre; tr. by Wade Baskin; with an introd. by Margaret C. O'Riley. 105p $4.75 Philosophical lib.

838 Kafka, Franz

67-11570

This is "a study of Kafka's tragic vision of life. . . . The book discusses the historical setting, the literary currents, and the personal details affecting the development of Kafka's genius." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography.

"The reader with any knowledge of Kafka will be challenged by some of the formulations in this book; a new reader of Kafka, however, is better advised to read W. Sokel's essay or W. Rohner's short book [Franz Kafka] . . . instead. Arguing that 'internal criticism' alone will not illuminate Kafka's work, the authors' analysis stresses biography. . . . Kafka's 'consummate artistry' is taken for granted; his writing—especially the mature work—is dealt with synoptically. One of the authors' more fruitful insights is to link their comparison of Kafka's narrative method with the shape of a burrow to the theme in his work of a 'great unfinished construction.' The book's potential usefulness is much diminished by factual inaccuracies, by distortions, by an inconsistent and outdated bibliography, and by page references to French translations of Kafka."

Choice 5:730 S '68 160w

"A smooth translation from the French. . . . This book is distinguished by clarity and insight. It is particularly well suited as a first guide to this writer and is recommended for literature collections in large public and academic libraries." Edith Lenel

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 90w

ALBERT, HERMAN W. Odyssey of a desert prospector. (Okla. Univ. The Western frontier lib) 260p $2 Univ. of Okla. press

917.8 Frontier and pioneer life—The West. Mines and mineral resources—U.S. 67-15590

As a young man in the early 1900's, the author of these reminiscences "turned to a prospector's life, wandering for several years over wide stretches of Nevada. Inexperienced, he found little in the way of precious metal, but he did learn to know the ranching families, miners, prospectors, rangers, and the many odd characters of back country Nevada." (Choice)

ALBERT, H. W.—Continued

"Albert's reminiscences are in the same genre as Jesse Stuart's masterful representations of Kentucky folk culture, but unfortunately the presentation lacks Stuart's artistry and insight. . . . Only for libraries building collections of regional material."

Choice 5:1211 N '68 100w

"While Mr. Albert refers to himself as a charter member of the 'Desert Rats,' he was far more sophisticated than the average member of that unique den when he arrived in Nevada in 1906. . . . He writes with a charm and grace that waft through the reader's memory long after he has put down this man's odyssey." G. M. Gressley

Library J 93:179 Ja 15 '68 190w

ALBERTSON, CLINTON, ed. & tr. Anglo-Saxon saints and heroes. 347p pl $7.50 Fordham univ. press

920 Saints. Great Britain—History—To 1066 67-16652

Originally written in Latin by Anglo-Saxons, the works here collected and translated consist of the lives of Cuthbert, Wilfrid, Guthlac, Ceolfrith, Willibrord, Boniface, and Bede's abbots. Chronological table. Bibliography. Index.

"Apart from the translations (occasionally given in abridgment), what is most important about the book is the full notes and generous introductions. . . . The translations are accurate; and with the notes (carefully indexed), [this] will serve as an indispensable guide to the entire early period of the Northumbrian Golden Age. . . . At times perhaps Fr. Albertson visualizes his heroes too closely in the manner of the ancient Greek and Roman epics. . . . But no one surely would quarrel with his enthusiasm or, for that matter, with his occasional humor." Herbert Musurillo

America 118:163 F 3 '68 200w

"[Fr. Albertson's] introduction is a brilliant synthesis of current knowledge of this age, coupled with a genuine appreciation of its accomplishments in literature and religion. . . . Every college library and any collection serving religious purposes should have a copy." D. K. Fry

Library J 93:82 Ja 1 '68 90w

ALBRIGHT, WILLIAM FOXWELL. Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan; a historical analysis of two contrasting faiths; the Jordan lectures 1965 delivered at the School of Oriental and African studies Univ. of London. 294p $6.95 Doubleday

296 Judaism. Palestine—Religion 68-22541

The author "deals with the literary and cultural relations between Israel and her Canaanite neighbours, and while he emphasizes the literary and cultural influence of Canaan on Israel and the resistance of Israel's religious leaders to the pressures of Canaanite religious influence, he argues for the view that Israel exercised a religious influence on her neighbours and credits her with having encouraged the opponents of human sacrifice in Phoenicia." (TLS) Index to subjects and authors. Index to Biblical references.

"Albright compares and contrasts the two faiths through some five chapters ranging from verse and prose in early Israelite tradition to the periodic tension existing between the religious culture of Israel and Phoenicia. The study is carefully researched, thoroughly documented, and Mr. Albright is abreast of the latest archaeological findings. Especially recommended for college, university, and theological collections." W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:3007 S 1 '68 120w

"To a wide philological equipment and a first-hand acquaintance with the ever-growing volume of literature from the whole of the ancient Near East, [the author] adds archaeological experience and an intimate knowledge of the excavations at sites throughout the area, and also a competent knowledge of the critical study of the Old Testament which has marked the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. . . . [His] maintenance of a two-way influence [between Israel and the Canaanites] is something new, which gives particular importance to this volume. . . . Not every view that is set forth [here] will be accepted without question by all scholars. . . . Yet it can be said that this volume abounds in factual information, sometimes overwhelmingly so, and that the reader who can learn nothing from it must be singularly learned."

TLS p830 Ag 1 '68 900w

ALDERFER, HAROLD F. Public administration in newer nations. 206p $12.50 Praeger

320.3 States, New. Public administration 68-14156

"A study of the forms and functions of government agencies in those nations which have achieved independence since 1945. The author describes "variations in approach, objectives, procedures, and progress. . . . [He] records what has been done in recent years and covers, among other subjects, decentralization, personnel, finance, and management methods." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Likely to disappoint both specialists in public administration, and students interested in the developing nations. Experts will already be familiar with the data, while other readers will find little coherence in the potpourri of isolated facts about so many governments. . . . The title is misleading as many 'older nations' (Latin America, Soviet Union) are included, and the emphasis on formal institutions rather than on working processes will disappoint readers. An indiscriminate compilation of data has produced a mass of facts, some of which are inaccurate or misleading, and others of limited interest (e.g. the organization of the Turkish Ministry of Public Works). The book adds little to the existing literature on bureaucracy and political development."

Choice 5:1218 N '68 150w

"Many of the examples in this book are taken from Asia and in particular from India, Pakistan and the Philippines. The book has a useful bibliography, and its author shows acquaintance with the work of Heady, Presthus, Riggs and others. Nevertheless, it is profoundly unsatisfactory. There is too little about individual countries to show how their administration actually works. Nor is there any attempt to explain the nature of administration in developing countries generally. The closest approach to administration theory consists of proverbs and checklists. . . . Sadly, the author apparently has no doubts that administrative practices and techniques, and the methods of introducing them, ought to be the same the whole world over." R. S. Milne

Pacific Affairs 41:332 summer '68 150w

ALDING, PETER. All leads negative [Eng title: The C.I.D. room]. 184p $4.50 Harper

67-28823

"John Kerr, just through his stint as C.I.D. aide, and assigned to the Eastern Division in Fortrow, a busy seaport where the crime figures are mounting at an unexpected rate . . . is struck by the charge of blackmailing a petty crook. . . . [The plot revolves around Kerr's efforts to] help his chief get to the bottom of the gold case." (Library J)

"An intriguing plot neatly unfolded about theft of gold from a ship. There are many interesting characters, drawn realistically and, in a way, integral to the plot, so that this book rises above the average in the genre."

Best Sell 27:406 Ja 13 '68 50w

"The personality development is almost as enthralling as the personality clashes, and the expert distinction between professional and amateur in seamanship, in crime, and in police work, is exciting." M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4436 D 1 '67 100w

"There's good slogging and quite credible procedure in . . . [this novel] plus an interesting conflict in the police between an overzealous old pro and an over-erratic novice. There's the making of a very good story here, in a puzzle of the theft of jewelry from sealed cargo shipments; but Alding's reiterative and over-simple manner of telling fails to bring it off." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 14 '68 60w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat ■ 51:36 Ja 27 '68 40w

ALDRIDGE, ALFRED OWEN. Benjamin Franklin and nature's God. 279p $7.50 Duke Univ. press

200.1 Franklin, Benjamin. Religion—Philosophy 67-13409

The author seeks to study "the development of Franklin's credo as well as his direct personal contacts with the major religious currents of the eighteenth century." (Am Lit) Index.

"Aldridge finds [Franklin's] credo steadily deistic, akin to 'the benevolent philosophy of Shaftesbury and the English latitudinarian divines.' . . . Mr. Aldridge has assembled so impressive a range of literary and biographical information about Franklin and religion that students of colonial history and culture cannot afford to ignore this book. Indeed, most of them will find much in it that is of value." Bruce Granger

Am Lit 39:565 Ja '68 400w

"Aldridge's new book is the first full-scale study of the large and central problem of Franklin and religion. It should be said at the outset that the study is superior in almost every way, comprehensive, rooted in all the major texts, and remarkably perceptive. The overall effect of the book is completely satisfying and enables one to approach this great American writer with a richer knowledge of his writings and statements on the subject and with a deeper sensitivity to the many nuances that characterize his attitudes towards the questions of God, Christ, the supernatural, morality, worship, and a great variety of other issues." J. L. Mahoney

Mod Lang J 52:378 O '68 900w

"Much of Aldridge's interpretation of Franklin's thought proceeds from Franklin's preoccupation with the theory of philoprogenitiveness. . . . To Aldridge, Franklin's lifelong belief in a plurality of Gods, or Chain of Being, bears resemblance to ancient mythologies. . . . Citing Franklin's letters, as distinct from his public writings, [the author] argues that Franklin's ethic was essentially social rather than prudential and personal. He does not delve into the social philosophy of Franklin. . . . Franklin's contacts with the various religious sects, his admiration of Whitefield and religious exhorters in general, his parodies of formal religion, and his championing the right of freedom of conscience are analyzed." H. M. Ward

New Eng Q 41:138 Mr '68 400w

ALEXANDER, ARTHUR. The poet's eye; an introduction to poetry for young people; il. by Colleen Browning. 88p lib bdg $3.95 Prentice-Hall

808.1 Poetry—Juvenile literature 67-23507

The author's contention is that knowledge of the characteristics of poetry increases appreciation. He "explains how a poet gives expression to his feelings and thoughts about the world around him by means of imagery and rhythm. The fundamentals of poetry are discussed, e.g., meter, figures of speech, and the use of words for their sounds. [Glossary of poetic terms. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"A succinct and well-organized presentation with a number of appropriate examples and attractive black-and-white drawings. . . . this will be valuable as supplementary material in English literature or creative writing classes." Georgia Charleston

Library J 93:876 F 15 '68 100w

"For Junior High, having very few poems but a great deal of learned talk about poetic forms. [The book] moves rapidly from 'Two, four, six, eight/Who do we appreciate' to Allen Tate's 'Ode to the Confederate Dead,' and then informs the reader (who could he be at this point?) that though he 'may have difficulty reading "Ode to the Confederate Dead," it does illustrate the ode form very well.' Reed Whittemore

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p38 N 5 '67 80w

ALEXANDER, COLIN JAMES. See Jay, S.

ALEXANDER, GEORGE J. Honesty and competition: false-advertising law and policy under FTC administration. 315p $10 Syracuse Univ. press

340 Advertising—Laws and regulations. U.S. Federal Trade Commission 67-26213

This is an "appraisal of the Federal Trade Commission's efforts to enforce false advertising

ing legislation. . . . The inadequacy of common law remedies and the difficulty in making decisions of specific conditions are emphasized. . . . The 23 appendices are guides issued by the F.T.C. for various product promotion." (Choice) Index.

Choice 5:1006 O '68 140w

"Except for the three-page conclusion, this is a dry, legalistic volume apparently written for lawyers. . . . However, advertising personnel of the brighter variety and those concerned professionally with the welfare of the consumer will also have an interest in this book. The average consumer who tries to read it will no doubt fall asleep after the first two pages. . . . Recommended for large business collections." J. B. Woy

Library J 93:749 F 15 '68 160w

ALEXANDER, GUY. Silica and me; the career of an industrial chemist; prepared under the sponsorship of the Manufacturing chemists' association. 111p il $3.95 Doubleday

661 Chemistry as a profession 67-12889

The author describes "what it is . . . like to work in the chemical industry . . . and traces his own research into the development of several products derived from silica." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A DuPont research chemist tells [his] story . . . in a highly congenial, informal manner which to a fair extent captures the flavor of the 'everyday life' of the industrial chemist. Some knowledge of chemistry would be very helpful in reading the book. . . . Most appropriate to the high school chemistry student who is curious about a possible career in chemistry, but grade school teachers or prospective teachers will also find it worthwhile for background in instructing and guiding their students. . . . This is essentially a career description rather than an introduction to chemistry." Choice 5:814 S '68 160w

Reviewed by M. B. Wenger

Library J 92:4514 D 15 '67 90w

ALEXANDER, LEWIS M., ed. The law of the sea; offshore boundaries and zones; a publication of the Law of the sea inst. and the Mershon center for educ. in nat. security. 321p maps $12.50 Ohio state univ. press

341.5 Maritime law 67-16949

"This book consists of a series of . . . papers on matters relating to the control and use of the sea presented by specialists in law, marine science, business, government, and the social sciences to a conference of the Law of the Sea Institute held in 1966. The papers touch such technical subjects as fishery resources in offshore waters, international law and the law of the sea, offshore claims of the world, geological aspects of sea-floor sovereignty, mining in the sea, limits and conflicting uses of the continental shelf, freedom of navigation, international control of the sea's resources, and related problems." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The political geography of the sea is a complex of surface and subsurface spatial, geological, biological, economic, political, legal, and security considerations based upon insufficient scientific knowledge. International meetings have been held and many articles have appeared in the last two or three decades but books devoted to the subject are rare. . . . While illustrations and tables are few, valuable, largely primary bibliographic references are included with some of the papers. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:653 J1 '68 100w

"Of particular interest today is the discussion of the extension by 25 coastal fishing nations to 12 miles of their fishing jurisdiction to afford not only conservation of fishery resources, but also protection of the coastal fleets of small fishing vessels. . . . Actually, the papers read at the conference served as a point of departure for consideration of other than traditional uses of the sea, such as transportation and fishing. The dialogue that ensued reflected how unsophisticated some of the reasoning was on both sides. . . . Obviously, this is a technical presentation of highly technical sea-related problems. As a neophyte in these areas, your reviewer still found much of interest and concern. The papers by Professor

ALEXANDER, L. M.—Continued

Myres S. McDougal on 'International Law and the Law of the Sea,' and 'Law and the New Technologies' by Professor William T. Burke particularly intrigued him. Recommended for law libraries." J. J. Marke
Library J 93:768 F 15 '68 390w

ALEXANDER, LLOYD. The high king. 285p
$4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt

Fairy tales 68-11833

In this finale to the chronicles of Prydain, Taran, the assistant pig-keeper, "becomes High King of Prydain, Princess Eilonwy becomes his queen, the predictions of Taran's wizard guardian Dallben are fulfilled, and the forces of black magic led by Arawn, Lord of Annwinn, Land of the Dead, are vanquished forever. . . . Victory . . . means the end of all the powers of white magic and the predestined departure from Prydain of all the men of Don, who exile themselves to eternal life in the Summer Country, which Taran and Eilonwy reject to assume responsibilities and mortality. [For previous volumes in the Prydain Cycle, see The Book of Three, BRD 1965; The Black Cauldron, BRD 1966; The Castle of Llyr, BRD 1966 and Taran Wanderer, BRD 1967. Grades five to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:62 My 1 '68 140w

"In retrospect, the author's total creation is a remarkable achievement. . . vividly conceived, romantic in mood yet curiously contemporary in its immediacy and fast action. Perhaps less winning has been his weakness for operabouffé comic relief in the form of the subsidiary characters, a number of whom are little more than tiresome running jokes. The bald appeal to juvenile risibilities is, in the end, rather too calculated, and inconsistent with the eloquence and grandeur of the best episodes. A shame if this element should limit the story to a young audience, when there are riches here for every age." H. L. Maples

Book World p22 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 330w

Reviewed by M. D. Hamlin
Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 260w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:304 My 24 '68 100w

"More than a series of exciting adventures, the book has the philosophical depth and overtones of great fantasy. . . . Sad as many of the events will seem, most readers will recognize the rightness of the conclusion. The characters have all advanced. The nonsense of Gurgi and Ffleuddur has grown to humor. Eilonwy has developed in understanding but lost none of her quickness and spirit. Taran, whose character has at last completely evolved, finds the strength to do what he must in a land where 'all enchantments shall pass away, and men unaided guide their own destiny.' The heroic fantasy ends on a happy, triumphant note." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:171 Ap '68 200w

"This is a tremendously satisfying finish to what was so well begun in The Book of Three. . . . The author dedicates this book to the boys who might have been Taran and the girls who will always be Eilonwy and that takes in just about all the confirmed romantic readers today between the ages of 10 and 14 and all the readers to come for the strongest high fantasy written for children in our times." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:876 F 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Jean Fritz

N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 24 '68 200w

"For those who have learned to love the land of Prydain, reading this last volume in the cycle will be a bittersweet experience. All the marvellous and diverse characters appear again in the final struggle between good and evil. . . . The fantasy has the depth and richness of a medieval tapestry, infinitely detailed and imaginative." Zena Sutherland

Sat 51:41 Ap 20 '68 100w

ALEXANDER, NIGEL, ed. Elizabethan narrative verse. (Stratford-upon-Avon lib) 333p $8
Harvard univ. press

821.3 English poetry—Collections 68-2117

"This is an anthology of longer poems published in English between 1560 and 1610. It is an old spelling edition although the merely typographical features of that spelling have been modernized. . . . It has a critical introduction and textual and explanatory notes. . . . The classical model chosen by most of the poets selected here was Ovid." (Publisher's note)

"[This anthology] upon inspection of the 'Introduction' and footnotes turns out to be a document reflecting a renewed and long overdue interest in Ovid and the enormous influence the Roman poet had on the poets of the English Renaissance. Since this is an anthology, Mr. Alexander necessarily restricts his critical gloss, but what he does say in a brief space is always informative and often perceptive. . . . [He] has given to us in one convenient volume a library of Elizabethan Ovidiana set off by a useful, scholarly critical apparatus."

Choice 44:cxy summer '68 100w

"[The editor's chief concern] is with poems which either display or deliberately reject the influence of Ovid, and his title . . . must arouse no expectation of meeting with extracts from The Faerie Queene or The Civil Wars. . . . Some of his items are rarities. The first, an anonymous Fable of Ovid trefinge of Narcissus, is reprinted from a black-letter quarto of 1560. Petowe's Hero and Leander has only once been reprinted since 1598. . . . Two very odd poems are included. One is Ovid's Banquet of Sense, which contrives to baffle critics, though its right to appear in a collection of Ovidian poems is selfevident. The other [is] Willobie His Avis. . . . [Alexander] finds it interesting because it seems to him to be an attack on poems of loose love. . . . Finally Mr. Alexander recommends Christis Victorie because in it Fletcher, using techniques recognizably Ovidian, expressed yet another kind of love. He did not only moralize, he christianized Ovid."

TLS p374 Ap 11 '68 650w

ALEXANDER, THOMAS B. Sectional stress and party strength; a study of roll-call voting patterns in the United States House of representatives, 1836-1860. 284p $10 Vanderbilt univ. press

323.73 U.S. Congress. House. U.S.—Politics and government—1783-1865 67-21652

"Professor Alexander presents an historical analysis, made possible with the aid of the computer, of the forces of party cohesion and of sectionalism at work in the Twenty-fourth through the Thirty-sixth Congresses—forces which predisposed the nation for Secession and the Civil War. . . . The first part is a presentation of his conclusions, specific and general, about the patterns uncovered. . . . The second part is a collection of the basic input of the study—information concerning roll-call responses." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Seemingly enchanted with the ability to analyze pre-Civil War roll call votes in the United States House on the University of Alabama's computer [Alexander] neglects to tie his findings into any sort of meaningful interpretation of the politics of the period. Indeed, the bulk of the book—220 out of 280 pages—is devoted to presentation of scalograms, graphs, computer printout, and computer programs rather than text. . . . Far more could have been done in analyzing the more than a quarter-million roll call votes." J. J. Best

Am Pol Sci R 62:633 Je '68 650w

"One of the leading practitioners of the new quantitative history . . . presents a highly sophisticated study. . . . If Alexander's labors have led to no revolutionary reinterpretation, they have, nevertheless, provided a good deal of solid substance by which to test existing hypotheses. And Lee Benson may well be right when he says, on the dust jacket, that this work 'has methodological significance transcending its subjective matter.'" R. N. Current

Ann Am Acad 375:203 Ja '68 450w

"Not for undergraduate reading lists, but should prove invaluable to those doing serious research in pre-Civil War political history. . . . The book appears almost simultaneously with J. H. Silbey's The Shrine of Party [BRD 1967], which attempts to do much the same thing for the years 1841-52. . . . To a considerable degree the two books complement rather than duplicate each other. Alexander's is the larger undertaking. Most of his volume is in tabular form with only a minimum of textual explanation and commentary. A little more explanation would have facilitated deciphering the data, but the effort required is worthwhile, for historians will find this a major inspiration, guide, and resource for future research."

Choice 4:1437 F '68 180w

"The scores of tables, graphs, and compilations of responses should be studied carefully for the many insights they can yield. Although it may be argued that on the whole the data does not lead to startling new interpretations, it is in many ways more persuasive than the impressionistic or surface-scratching evidence with which scholars have previously had to deal. One could quarrel with Alexander over many crucial questions of methodology but if it is clearly understood what the data was and how the indices were constructed, the reader should be able to profit from this ambitious and intelligent work. A word of commendation is due the Vanderbilt University Press for undertaking the publication of this radically distinctive contribution to quantitative history." R. P. McCormick

J Am Hist 54:893 Mr '68 500w

ALEXIOU, STYLIANOS. Ancient Crete. See Matt, L. von

ALIKI, il. Hush little baby. See Hush little baby

ALLAND, ALEXANDER. Evolution and human behavior [by] Alexander Alland, Jr; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history. 243p il $5.95; pa $1.95 Natural hist. press

573.2 Evolution. Genetics. Adaptation (Biology) 67-12858

This book "is structured as an introduction to evolutionary theory and genetics for anthropology students. . . . [It presents a] view of 'cultural evolution' within the context of the biological model and offers both a criticism and an analysis of previous views of human behavior within the evolutionary framework. The book begins with a section on evolutionary theory and genetics. This is followed by a summary presentation of behavioral genetics and behavioral evolution. The second section is offered as a bridge between classical genetic and evolutionary theory and an analysis of culture. The last section examines social evolutionary theories and presents an extension of the biological model to human behavior." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The substance of this book is contained in the final three chapters. . . . The reader cannot but help being severely disappointed at the end of the book when Mr. Alland does no more than construct an analogous model between biological evolution and progressive changes in human societies. Without discounting the usefulness of the model, the amount of introductory material seems somewhat disproportionate." J. D. Buffington

Library J 92:2596 Jl '67 190w

"During the past decade, several younger anthropologists—among them Alexander Alland, Jr. of Columbia University—[have presented a new outlook]. . . . They believe human cultures may be fruitfully viewed as strategies by which groups maximize their adaptation. . . . Mr. Alland's enthusiasm for his subject and his broad background in subjects ranging from chemical biology to cybernetics have produced a book which should attract both interested novices and advanced students."

N Y Times Bk R p53 S 10 '67 250w

ALLEN, DURWARD L. The life of prairies and plains; pub. in coop. with the World bk. encyclopedia. 232p il col il $4.95 McGraw

574.9 Natural history—Great Plains. Prairies 67-15849

This book describes the grasslands of North America as they appeared in 1491 before the discovery of America. The variety of plants and animals that have adapted to the environment and their biological life cycles are discussed. The culture of the Plains Indians, their methods of hunting buffalo, and the changes made by the coming of the horse and the use of guns, are portrayed. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Library J 93:2136 My 15 '68 10w [YA]

Natur Hist 77:73 F '68 80w

"The text, clear and biologically knowing, does not omit the history of the land. . . . The book is explicitly an elementary ecology, tracing the energy fed into this 'empire of the sun' up from the first user, the grass itself, to man at the uncertain pinnacle of the pyramid. It stops short of any account of man's crops. . . . This is the true fabric of the American pastoral, here simply and factually woven out of science and the work of painter and traveler. The photography is rich and varied. . . . There is an excellent index, a helpful introduction to the collecting and identifying of grasses and a listing of grassland areas held by the Department of the Interior." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:146 D '67 370w

ALLEN, DWIGHT W., Jr. ed. The computer in American education. See Bushnell, D. D.

ALLEN, ELIZABETH. You can't say what you think, and other stories. 156p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton

68-13413

The author of The Loser (BRD 1965) explores the problems of adolescents in eight short stories about high school students at Hoover High school in the Southwest. Most of the protagonists "are accustomed to the comfort of their middle-class existence. Their problems are in establishing individual identity, in accepting the discrepancy of parental standards, in communicating with peers or adults, in maintaining status, in shedding conformity." (Sat R) "Age twelve and up." (Book World)

Best Sell 28:17 Ap 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by E. L. Buell

Book World p12 Ag 11 '68 140w

"[These] stories are sure to hold girls' interest as they portray believable characters and depict true-to-life situations, though the overall quality of the collection is uneven and some of the characters' speech is excessively groovy. The reading level is simple enough to encourage reluctant readers, yet good readers will not be insulted by the writing style." Bernice Levine

Library J 93:1317 Mr 15 '68 120w

"Some of these tales are about painful things: divorce, new schools, kids who are 'not with it,' and all the other distressing things one encounters in and around a fairly large high school. The book's outstanding feature is its dialogue. It is guarded, witty—and even though not loaded with fad-words, always fashionable." Max Steele

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p14 N 3 '68 160w

"Very good stories. . . . Realistic and thoughtful, the book is honest in approach and adeptly written." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 80w

ALLEN, EVERETT S. Famous American humorous poets. 127p il $3.50 Dodd

920 Poets, American—Juvenile literature. Humorists—Juvenile literature 68-16178

These brief biographical sketches of thirteen contemporary poets include quotations from and an appraisal of the work of: F. P. Adams; Richard Armour; Margaret Fishback; Arthur Guiterman; Oliver Herford; Samuel Hoffenstein; Don Marquis; Phyllis McGinley; Christopher Morley; Ogden Nash; Dorothy Parker; James Whitcomb Riley; and Bert Leston Taylor. Index. "Grades seven to nine" (Library J)

Best Sell 28:62 My 1 '68 70w

"Written in a light, easy style and liberally sprinkled with quotations and pertinent anecdotes to make a pleasurable survey to spur further reading." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:3330 S 15 '68 40w

ALLEN, JOHN M., ed. Molecular organization and biological function. 243p il $9; pa $5 Harper

574.1 Molecular biology 67-10112

"This volume presents papers derived from a lecture series sponsored, in the spring of 1965, by the Institute of Science and Technology of The University of Michigan. . . . [Beginning with] the molecular organization of 'simple biological systems, using virus particles as an example of molecular aggregates with a high degree of predictability in their organization, [the work] progresses through increasingly higher orders of complexity." (Pref) Index.

"A collection of eight reviews, all of which are good, none of which bear demonstrable relationship to one another, and few of which exhibit much connection with the title of the book. For example, Lehninger's section on the biology of the mitochondrion is a good statement of what is known about mitochondrial redox reactions and energy conservation, but says very little about matters having to do with molecular structure. On the other hand, articles by Anfinsen, Rich, and Anderson on protein structure, protein synthesis, and virus molecular structure are very close to the point of the book as expressed in the title and are, in any case, excellent. . . . In summary: the book is a hodge-podge of which all elements have considerable merit."

ALLEN, J. M.—Continued

Choice 4:862 O '67 200w

"In my opinion [this book's] chief value lies in the collection of these essays into one small volume which can be read as a unit. . . . The chapters are uniformly well written and profusely illustrated and provide something of value for each reader, be he a beginning student just becoming acquainted with molecular biology or a full-time research worker in one of the fields under discussion. However, it is likely that only the latter class of readers will be able to wring dry some of the more complex chapters. But I hope that most readers will go through the entire book, for only in this way does the impact implicit in its organization come through." P. H. von Hippel

Science 157:1428 S 22 '67 700w

ALLILUYEV, SERGEI, jt. auth. The Alliluyev memoirs. See Alliluyeva, A.

ALLILUYEVA, ANNA. The Alliluyev memoirs: recollections of Svetlana Stalina's maternal aunt Anna Alliluyeva and her grandfather Sergei Alliluyev; tr. and ed. by David Tutaeve. 222p pl $4.95 Putnam

B or 92 Alliluyev, Sergei. Russia—History 68-21917

Originally published in Russian in 1946 as two separate books, but combined and rearranged chronologically in this English edition, these are "the personal recollections of Joseph Stalin's sister-in-law and father-in-law, Svetlana's aunt and grandfather. The memoirs cover the . . . years prior to and during the Russian Revolution, and they provide . . . views of Stalin, Lenin and other notable figures of that pre-Revolution period." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. L. Earl

Best Sell 28:124 Je 15 '68 270w

"[These memoirs] are mainly Anna Alliluyeva's, as edited and expurgated by Stalin's censors. . . . Mr. Tutaeve, who is responsible for a translation that reads as spontaneously as an original, has managed to add notes that illuminate without irritating. In his introduction he explains why the memoirs angered Stalin so. . . . If historians ever get excited, it is memoirs like these that excite them. But to many of us this book's fascination has less to do with infamous names than with the small Russian family we see growing up with the revolution. . . . [Anna Alliluyeva] can imprint tiny complete episodes unforgettably on our imagination. And whatever it is that makes this book important, it is this gift that makes it memorable." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 25 '68 700w

Reviewed by H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:2490 Je 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:2740 Jl '68 130w [YA]

"The book itself seems to offer some clues to what must have aroused Stalin's anger after he had belatedly read it and after the censor had found it unobjectionable. To find these clues it is of course necessary to read between the lines.

The editor's preface contains interesting details about the tragic fate that befell most of the members of the Alliluyev family. This volume, in conjunction with Svetlana Alliluyeva's Twenty Letters to a Friend [BRD 1967], could serve as a storehouse of material for a whole cycle of novels by a Balzac or a Zola." Max Nomad

Sat R 51:32 My 11 '68 1500w

"Mr. Tutaeve has produced a useful preface to the book, and his translation reads well. His method of mixing passages from Sergei's book with passages from Anna's book and of linking them with short summaries in italics of unpublished passages or even chapters is, however, questionable. The text of both books, heavily censored by the Stalin bureaucrats, is of no real historical value, and is not even particularly interesting to the ordinary reader."

TLS p474 My 9 '68 750w

ALLINGHAM, MARGERY. Cargo of eagles. 233p $4.95 Morrow

68-12151

This thriller "involves Albert Campion with a problem from his cloak-and-dagger days during World War II, and the tragic dilemma of Elsie, his former chief. He finds a useful assistant in Mortimer Kelsey, an attractive young American history professor, in England to do research on London's approaches in the 17th and 18th Centuries. By himself, Morty found [the coastal village of] Salty, the funnel through which secret goods or people were smuggled in or out of East London, and the one place that Campion must quietly explore. Their joint arrival brings strange warnings and cryptic sayings by the local inhabitants." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:406 Ja 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:98 Ja 1 '68 110w

"I wish that I could express proper enthusiasm for Margery Allingham's last and posthumous novel. . . . But this does seem to me to be one of her lesser efforts—not because it was finished by her husband Philip Youngman Carter (his contribution is smooth and seamless), but because it was not a markedly interesting plot to start with and badly lacking in characters. There are good peripheral people; but the parties to the crime are vague sketches, and the action is slow." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ja 28 '68 130w

"[This] stands as a properly enjoyable literary memorial to a thriller and detective writer who will be much missed."

TLS p93 Ja 25 '68 100w

ALLISON, C. F. The rise of moralism; the proclamation of the Gospel from Hooker to Baxter. 250p $9 Seabury

234 Theology. Church of England 66-22996

A study of the disputes and positions held by a number of seventeenth century Anglican theologians concerning original sin and man's salvation. Two chapters are devoted to the works and thought of Jeremy Taylor. Bibliography.

"Specialists in the seventeenth century . . . are excited by any book which goes back to the sources themselves and shows a certain impudence concerning the accepted ideas. Professor C. F. Allison's book does just that. . . . [Its value] lies in the fact that it asks important and appropriate questions: Theological answers are demanded from theological books. Its weakness is that [Allison] bundles writers into pigeonholes, one of which is called good and the other bad, and then wonders why so much of a writer defies such classification." Paul Elmen

J Religion 47:356 O '67 1400w

"At the Council of Trent it had been declared that by faith a Christian receives from God a degree of righteousness; this was called inherent righteousness, which becomes as much a part of a man as his soul. . . . [Anglicans] postulated a second process through which righteousness was imputed to man by the merit of Christ, so that he ranked in the eyes of God as though he were sinless. This Dr. Allison calls the doctrine of classical Anglicanism; it was held and preached by such men as Hooker, Donne, Andrews, Ussher and Joseph Hall. In the middle of the century a new doctrine crept in, its most notable propounders being Richard Baxter and Jeremy Taylor. To the latter Dr. Allison devotes two chapters. In his devotional work Taylor implies that the cause of salvation is not imputed righteousness, but perseverance with faith in good works and repentance. . . . Taylor was not consistent. If his writings tended towards heresy, his voice, in his prayers, was orthodox. Dr. Allison must be the first to have pointed out this division in Taylor. . . . Unfortunately Dr. Allison strengthens the orthodox side of Taylor with quotations from an anonymous book called Christian Consolations. It might have been wiser not to call in a doubtfully attributed work. . . . [Dr. Allison's] book, lucidly written and with fine erudition, provides a fresh standpoint for examining English thought since the late seventeenth century."

TLS p203 Mr 1 '67 900w

ALLSOP, KENNETH. Hard travellin'; the hobo and his history. 448p pl $7.95 New Am. lib.

301.44 Tramps 68-15278

A study of "the migrant workers of the United States, ranging in time from the seasonal crop hands and drifters of today back to the . . . age of the railroads which the hobo labourers both built and rode (illegally) across the opening wheat plains and frontier lumber forests. . . . [The author] travelled 9,000 miles through America in his reconstruction of the old hobo routes." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. T. Reilly
America 118:512 Ap 13 '68 400w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 19 '68 700w

"[The author provides] a penetrating sociological study. . . . [He] graphically portrays life in hobo jungles, the hardships of Okies driven by despair from the Dust Bowl, and the perennial search for economic security by the harshly exploited agricultural laborers. Dozens of interviews reveal a variety of reasons for taking to the road. . . . [The] quotations from ballads and 16 fine illustrations help to make a very readable book and an important piece of Americana." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:764 F 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Marshall Sprague
N Y Times Bk R p28 Ap 21 '68 800w
New Yorker 44:194 Ap 20 '68 200w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman
Newsweek 71:92B Mr 25 '68 750w
Time 91:82 Mr 22 '68 550w

"[This] is coolly, ironically written by a visiting Briton who could view his subject with an outsider's detachment and who made the most of it in a briskly readable survey that is thorough enough to suggest the different reasons for rejecting American society at different periods in the hobos' history. Built more on research than on direct experience, it is good enough to avoid the smell of files and might even be read by a veteran hobo with some pleasure if not new insight into his profession."

TLS p33 Ja 11 '68 270w

ALLWARD, MAURICE. Safety in the air. 175p il $5 Abelard-Schuman

629.13 Aeronautics—Safety measures 68-10339

The author covers "the aspects of air safety, crash investigation, governmental regulations, and aircraft design." (Library J)

"Portions of the book are slanted toward Britain. . . . [This] is a superficial, but needed discussion of jet passenger travel. The lack of a bibliography somewhat hampers the reader in accepting Mr. Allward's conclusions. However, his general style does make the complicated subject rise from the morass of technical language, and he presents at least a general discussion of air safety for laymen. For small public libraries interested in generally informing their traveling patrons." J. B. Stankrauff

Library J 93:1643 Ap 15 '68 120w

Sci Am 218:154 My '68 800w

ALLWORTH, EDWARD, ed. Central Asia: a century of Russian rule; ed. by Edward Allworth [and others]. 552p il maps $12.95 Columbia univ. press

958 Soviet Central Asia 66-16288

This survey, ending in 1965 "includes a history of Russian-Central Asian contracts prior to 1865; a study of the people, languages, land and population; a . . . history of Russian and Soviet rule; Central Asian agriculture and industrialization; intellectual and literary developments; and the music, art, architecture and town planning of Central Asia." (Pacific Affairs) Glossary. Index.

"The literature on the history, lands, peoples, and cultures of Central Asia is as spotty as it is vast. In this light this volume, edited by Professor Allworth of the department of Middle East Languages and Culture of Columbia University, may be fully appreciated. He and his colleagues have produced an authoritative and informative work which is fascinating reading. . . . For anyone interested in Central Asia, past and present, Allworth's volume is indispensable." Hyman Kublin

Library J 91:4689 O 1 '66 130w

"Considering the size of this undertaking, one wonders why chapters on such important topics as social problems in Central Asia, present-day governmental structure and the role of Central Asia in the Soviet Union's foreign relations were not included. These would have significantly contributed to the completeness of the survey. The chapters dealing with history . . . are succinct, well written, and constitute about the best general coverage of the topic available in English. . . . The chapters on geography and economics . . . give a very clear, well organized presentation of assets and problems found in Central Asia. Climatic conditions and the crucial question of water resources are especially well handled. . . . Allworth's chapters on Central Asian intellectuals and Central Asian literature are probably the most interesting sections of this work . . . [which] is not a book for the general reader but a 'must' for the specialist." J. W. Strong
Pacific Affairs 40:156 spring-summer '67 900w

"Several of the contributors command both Russian and the pertinent Turkic languages, and thus enjoy access to a greater variety of sources than most other historians of this area. The overall tone of the book is 'anti-imperialist,' that is, anti-Russian. . . . The anti-Russian animus of some contributors, notably pronounced in Mr. Allworth's chapters, on occasion leads to an extreme romanticization of Central Asian Muslim life and culture." Richard Pipes

Pol Sci Q 83:444 S '68 750w

ALMEDINGEN, E. M. Tomorrow will come. 256p $4.95 Holt

B or 92 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921 68-11117

The author describes her "life from her birth in 1898 into one of Russia's leading aristocratic-intellectual families to her flight from St. Petersburg to England in 1922. . . . [There are] descriptions of turn-of-the-century St. Petersburg. . . . of Russian family life, and . . . of what it meant to be alive, young, and destitute during the Russian Revolution." (Publisher's note) For the first edition see BRD 1941.

"[This book is a] moving testimony to the sustaining power of faith and friendship and the endurance of the spirit. . . . Sensitivity and reticence keep Miss Almedingen's understatement from ever being hard or bitter. Her finely focussed early reminiscences . . . proceed through episode and reflection, truly probing yet with the impersonality of a finished poem."

The author, for many years now resident in Britain, is a distinguished lecturer and a medieval historian of note. But what comes through in these pages is not the harrowing eloquence of the refugee or the dry analysis of the non-political scholar. The reissue more than vindicates the early edition's Atlantic Monthly award. . . . [It] will live on its own merits and continue to fit that unclassifiable description of 'a beautiful book.'" Sister M. O. Weinig

Best Sell 28:34 Ap 15 '68 550w

"The first impact of this strange and heroic book is its realistic account of a revolution from the underside, wholly from the point of view of a young lady who knew nothing of it until it happened, and who had to survive it as a victim. The second is that it pictures the collapse of a civilization. . . . Miss Almedingen offers no political opinions, makes no passionate statements about civilization, extracts no conclusions; she is not writing that kind of book. . . . She chose rather to write a book in which one can feel page by page the anguish of the revolution and the loss of the civilization it destroyed." Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:1072 O 22 '68 1450w

ALMEDINGEN, E. M. Young Mark; the story of a venture; il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 177p $3.75 Farrar, Straus

68-13675

"Young Mark Poltoratzky left his Ukrainian home and set out on a long adventurous journey to the . . . city of St. Petersburg, determined to fulfill his ambition to become a singer. . . . Set in eighteenth-century Russia, this novel is based on notes of the journey undertaken by the author's great-great-grandfather." (Publisher's note) Glossary. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:657 D 21 '68 80w

ALMEDINGEN, E. M.—Continued

"This is the story of [Mark's] journey, two centuries old, but fresh as paint. It took him to farms and fairs, to encounters with peasants and merchants and pious pilgrims, to stays in little villages where sorcerers came out to cure sick animals when the priest's back was turned, to accidents and dangers and rescues that turned out to be almost more dangerous than the perils and adventures. . . . Patience, courage and help from his countrymen enabled him to reach Moscow, and finally St. Petersburg itself. There, after waiting, working and hoping, all ends well. A fine and exciting story." Elizabeth Janeway

Book World p3 (children's issue) My 5 '68 290w

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 80w

Horn Bk 44:327 Je '68 200w

"At first stiff and dusty, as if lifted from an ancient trunk, the story begins to loosen and brighten as it goes along, and the tone takes on the ebullience of the indomitable Ukrainian boy. Not for everyone, this piece of obscura from Old Russia can preface Gogol for some young readers." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:1317 Mr 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Naomi Lewis

New Statesman 74:600 N 3 '67 30w

Reviewed by Robert Ostermann

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 My 5 '68 70w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 100w

"It was a good idea of Miss Almedingen's to reconstruct, in fictional form, the story of the journey conducted in the 1740s from the Ukraine to St. Petersburg by her spirited ancestor, Mark Poltoratzky. . . . [Her] picaresque-eye-view of Russia in the eighteenth century is authentic and she has obviously done her reading assiduously. Particularly impressive is her description of Mark's arrival in St. Petersburg, which must certainly have appeared icily unwelcoming and alien to a young Ukrainian vagrant just forty years after its foundation. . . . [Mark's] story is arresting and unusual enough to speak for itself. It is a pity therefore that Miss Almedingen has laid on the ending quite so thickly."

TLS p1138 N 30 '67 310w

ALMEDINGEN, MARTHA EDITH. See Almedingen, E. M.

ALMGREN, BERTIL, ed. The Viking. See The Viking

ALPATOV, M. W. Art treasures of Russia; text by M. W. Alpatov; commentaries by Olga Dacenko [tr. by Norbert Guterman]. 178p col pl $25 Abrams

709.47 Art, Russian. Architecture, Russian 67-12683

This survey of Russian art from the year 1000 to the middle of the eighteenth century contains "color photographs of exclusively ecclesiastical objects: buildings, mosaics, paintings, embroidery, metalwork, and a few examples of sculpture. [Alpatov] draws a character sketch of Russian art, emphasizing its positive, joyful tendency, its humaneness and tenderness, and its lack of mysticism. He explains its mixture of organic and abstract elements, color harmonies, folk traits, and its absence of connections with science. . . . [He then gives an] historical outline based on the selected illustrations [and attempts to] show the influences on and individuality of the great masters." (Library J)

"The title of this book . . . is misleading. The book deals almost entirely with Russian icons, although the beautiful color plates do show both the churches for which they were made and a few of the other objects that go with them. . . . The text is not so satisfactory as one would like, for the author tends to ignore the religious importance of the icon. . . . Mr. Alpatov is at least able to give a most encouraging account of the care that is now being taken of these masterpieces. . . . and he has much of interest to say. In any case the text is of minor importance. The pictures and the notes on them make the book."

Economist 227:vii Ap 27 '68 280w

"Since Russian art is not widely known, this attractive book will bring new experiences to many general readers and will serve as a help for tourists to Russia. But even the scholar, familiar with art books in Russian, will enjoy the colorful pictures which include art treasures off commonly traveled roads." J. L. Dew-ton

Library J 93:65 Ja 1 '68 240w

ALPERS, PAUL J. The poetry of the Faerie queene. 415p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

821 Spenser, Edmund—Faerie queene 67-14405

"This book urges readers, critics, and scholars to turn their attention to the poetic surface of The Faerie Queene. . . . [Part I concerns] the right relation between the reader and the poem. . . . Part II uses a variety of historical materials . . . to ask what kinds of meanings are to be found in the poem. Part III contains a . . . discussion of Spenserian allegory and then shows how it manifests itself in Books I and III of The Faerie Queene." (Publisher's note) Index to the Faerie Queene. General index.

"Alpers questions certain traditional approaches to allegory and narrative championed by major Spenserian critics. His work is not meant to replace such standards as [H. S. V.] Jones' A Spenser Handbook [BRD 1931, or J. W.] Bennett's The Evolution of the Faerie Queene [BRD 1943]. . . . The materials on iconography provide a detailed analysis of Spenser's debt to Ariosto. . . . Footnotes and documentation excellent. Good indices for Faerie Queen and for general references. Should be in all college libraries, if not for the use of undergraduates, most certainly for consultation by their professors."

Choice 5:946 O '68 230w

"[This book] is lucidly written and consecutively argued. Still, it's a lot of close critical argumentation, which requires to be read as it was written with the text at hand for frequent reference. . . . An impatient student will perhaps find the pace a trifle slow, the examples numerous to the point of oppression; but such a student can hardly look forward to a happy life with Spenser on any terms. Mr. Alpers's is a rich and various analysis. . . . [Every student] will emerge from the book with . . . new insights, theories, and questions, as well as some new inhibitions and doubts about past enthusiasms. For the moment, at least, this is clearly the Spenser book for Spenserians to beat, a critical and scholarly achievement of the very first order." R. M. Adams

N Y Rev of Books 10:32 Je 6 '68 1050w

"The merit of Mr. Alpers's long new book is that it invites a reconsideration of The Faerie Queene and if at times it seems even more complex than the work it seeks to elucidate, this may be unavoidable. . . . Mr. Alpers's understanding of Spenser's poetry is generally so sensitive and intelligent that it seems surprising that he has little to say about his creation of character, and . . . the dominant theme of Love in the poem. . . . Yet, if these are examples of failing to see the wood for the trees, we may be grateful to Mr. Alpers for the luxuriant growth of his trees."

TLS p1049 S 19 '68 600w

Va Q R 44:clvi autumn '68 80w

ALPERT, HOLLIS. The claimant. 409p $5.95 Dial press

68-10829

"Three cases involving compensation to victims of Nazi anti-Semitism take Alfred Becker, an American lawyer, to Germany. Representing 60 former slave laborers for a German industrial firm, he attempts to get compensation for them by revealing the Nazi past of one of the firm's officials. He is also trying to trace a candelabrum looted from the synagogue of Erfurt, and to locate anyone who knew Sarah Stein, a woman whose experiences in a concentration camp have left her with no memory of her past and little hope for her future." (Library J)

"The Claimant' could be a big and important book of the year, for several reasons. In the first place it concerns the problem of guilt which affects every person with varying degrees of intensity. Then too it is something of an adventure story with the excitement of a spy chase. . . . This book attempts seriously to show something of man's capacity to hope in spite of despair. We learn about loneliness and companionship, and about the healing effects of time. The erotic passages in the book stand out ■ if put in to please certain readers. They add little to the interest of the story." C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 28:21 Ap 15 '68 600w

Choice 5:1128 N '68 100w

Reviewed by Barbara Pfrogner

Library J 93:770 F 15 '68 150w

"Despite his admirable wish to say something new about the tragedy of the Six Million and its weary aftermath, the author fails to lift his characters above puppet level. . . . Mr. Alpert has obviously worked hard on his story-line: his set speeches are carefully orchestrated; his obligatory scenes are well spaced. Regretfully, it must be added that 'The Claimant' is another picture book in search of a camera." James MacBride

N Y Times Bk R p45 Ap 28 '68 400w

"'Only the dead can forget,' says ■ character in [this book], and surely this is the essence of Hollis Alpert's absorbing and suspenseful fourth novel. . . . A search for a man, an object, ■ woman, or a past is dramatically effective in a novel. . . . and Alfred Becker's quest for these things and for his own identity is written with skillful plausibility. . . . In the story of Sarah Stein, however, [Mr. Alpert] seems to be repeating what he has said more effectively in another way. The inability of Becker's wife, Lottie, to recover from the horrors she lived through as a girl renders far more compellingly the tragedy of the young victims. . . . The conclusion is a contemporary one, based on the author's own experience of Germany and the German, his sensitive awareness of the psychological damage done to so many survivors (the 'claimants') and his hopes for the future." Hallie Burnett

Sat R 51:37 Mr 16 '68 600w

ALSOP, STEWART. The center; people and power in political Washington. 365p $6.95 Harper

973.92 U.S.—Politics and government. Washington, D.C. 68-15958

The author, a Washington columnist and political journalist, describes the political elements of the capitol's life and the people at the center of political power in the United States. Index.

Reviewed by R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 28:70 My 15 '68 600w

"[Alsop] offers the standard tour and inspects the usual institutions—the Presidency, the cabinet, Congress, the Supreme Court, the press corps, Defense, State, the C.I.A., and society—but in each instance focuses on what is permanent and characteristic, rather than transient and topical. For that reason, practically everything he writes, except for an incisive portrait of Lyndon B. Johnson, will be just as relevant and interesting next year as this. . . . The tone and character of [Alsop's] book are those of good dinner conversation: amiable, moderately serious, occasionally gossipy, a few good stories and some amusing second-hand witticisms worth repeating. Nothing is written here that would prevent the author from being invited back." W. V. Shannon

Book World p4 Ap 28 '68 700w

Reviewed by C. R. Sheldon

Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 4 '68 750w

"Since [the author] is ■ leading political journalist of more than 20 years' experience, he conducts an informative and pleasant tour through 'the Center.' The trouble with writing about Washington is that it is impossible to avoid familiar matter, but even the most knowledgeable reader will learn something from this book. Mr. Alsop may be too charitable toward our leaders and too optimistic about our future. . . . Recommended for general purchase." David Cooley

Library J 93:1639 Ap 15 '68 230w

"Nothing and nobody of recent importance in this vital center escapes examination. . . . The surface of Alsop's Washington is familiar: the mishmash architecture, horrible climate, the President's eccentricities, Congress's shortcomings, the preoccupying concern with the problems of race at home and the war in Vietnam. Some of the anecdotes, amusing ■ they are, are all too familiar. But the subsurface is not so familiar and its exploration by an experienced digger is consistently rewarding. While the tone ■ coolly detached, some of the interpretations will startle subscribers to currently fashionable opinions about Washington. . . . [The author] goes in neither for demonology nor for hero worship. . . . [He] penetrates the Pentagon, State Department and CIA headquarters at a depth impossible for journalists working against deadlines and, incidentally, evaluates the contribution of the working press, coming to the conclusion that, necessary as its function is in a democracy, its influence is overrated." Kenneth Crawford

Newsweek 71:90 Je 10 '68 900w

TLS p1226 O 31 '68 850w

ALTER, DINSMORE. Pictorial guide to the moon. rev & enl ed 199p $8.95 Crowell

523.3 Moon—Photographs

67-18396

The director emeritus of the Griffin Observatory has expanded the previous edition (BRD 1964) to include a chapter which "provides lunar photographs taken from various space vehicles including Surveyor I, Rangers VII, VIII, and IX, Lunar Orbiters I and II, and the Soviet satellite Luna IX." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"Alter's principal purpose is to provide the layman with information to understand our current space program. However, his book also contains data of definite value to the college student. Lunar observations have progressed at an amazing rate since the first edition in 1963. Until that time, all pictures of the moon had been taken from the earth. . . . There are more than two dozen [junior satellite] photographs in the Guide, bringing it thoroughly up to date. . . . It is an entertainingly written valuable work."

Choice 4:1262 Ja '68 150w

"[The first edition] was highly recommended for purchase by public and academic libraries. Note was made at that time of the excellent black-and-white photographs showing the surface of the moon under various conditions of illumination. [Other assets] were the historical introduction and a glossary of terms. All these features have been preserved in this revision edition. . . . The book is unreservedly recommended for all libraries which do not own the first edition; libraries which have the earlier edition are urged to purchase this one for its new lunar satellite photographs." J. K. Luckner

Library J 92:4425 D 1 '67 140w

ALTHOLZ, JOSEF L. The churches in the nineteenth century. 248p $6.50 Bobbs

270.8 Church history—Modern period

66-30446

"A history of Christianity from the late 18th century to World War I. . . . [The author] frames the historical antecedents and consequences of each movement while . . . placing it amid contemporary cultural history." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Altholz achieves sympathy without the odor of piety perhaps better than Latourette's Protestant scholarly works on the same period and certainly better than Daniel-Rop's or E. E. Y. Hales' Catholic apologetics. . . . On the other hand, the book has the faults of [a] survey. . . . Since there is no documentation and only the most basic—though up-to-date—bibliography, the book will be most useful for undergraduates or the general reader. The chapters on Catholicism seem more full than those on other churches. The churches in the U.S. receive one brief chapter. An excellent summary." Choice 5:68 Mr '68 130w

"A brief and not very original survey. . . . It will be of use as a text or primer for general readers: there are surprisingly few books on the subject in English."

Christian Century 84:1198 S 20 '67 40w

ALTIZER, THOMAS J. J. The new apocalypse: the radical Christian vision of William Blake. 226p $8.50 Mich. state univ. press

821 Blake, William

67-15436

"This book is an attempt, on the one hand, to understand the work of William Blake as the expression of a new, a radical, and an apocalyptic Christian faith, and, on the other hand, to derive from Blake's work a new form of dialectical and apocalyptic theological understanding. . . . The book is divided into four sections which are intended to present the four-fold components of Blake's vision; Fall, Redemption, History, and Apocalypse." (Publisher's note) Index.

ALTIZER, T. J. J.—Continued

"If this book is not to be misunderstood and rejected out of hand, it must be remembered that Altizer values Blake as highly as the New Testament. His purpose in treating the major prophetic works is therefore not simply to explain Blake's mythic and symbolic vision, but to appropriate that vision and make theological use of it. The professional scholar may well be infuriated by Altizer's method and conclusions, and the traditional theologian will be appalled by the authority accorded Blake. But the scholar may find Altizer's perspective uniquely rewarding, and the theologian will find in Blake one of the main roots of Altizer's own radical thought."

Choice 4:1373 F '68 110w

"In his attempt to explicate Blake's theology by way of Hegel's dialectic, and so link them ■ sharing a 'common radical and apocalyptic Christian faith,' Altizer only makes Blake seem more incomprehensible than ever. Blake's thought exhibits many opposing ideas but lacks a dialectical method. Altizer has remedied that defect by borrowing from Hegel and thereby qualifying Blake to be the first prophet of radical theology. The difficulty is that Blake was careful to deny the very position Altizer ascribes to him. . . . There is no attempt at a systematic presentation of the poet's position. He is simply a kind of diving board for Altizer to jump from. . . . Yet [this volume] deserves recognition as an interesting and valuable document for future historians of the death-of-God movement. For in this book (which seems to have been written several years before its publication date) we find Altizer enthusiastically proposing, under the guise of Blake interpretation, many of the major tenets of his own theology." M. S. Hall

Christian Century 84:1070 Ag 23 '67 500w

AMBLER, ERIC. Dirty story; ■ further account of the life and adventures of Arthur Abdel Simpson. 269p $5.95 Atheneum pubs. 67-25468

Simpson, the narrator, was introduced in The Light of Day (BRD 1963) "which won the 1963 Mystery Writers of America award ■ the best mystery novel published in America that year. . . . In the process of becoming ■ stateless person as the story begins, Simpson engages in a number of shady activities to raise money to buy a false passport to get himself out of Greece before the authorities arrest him. He is hired by a company to recruit talent for a blue movie being filmed on one of the less populated isles; and when that fails and he is forced to flee, he joins a mercenary army hired to fight a revolution in one of the emerging African countries." (Library J)

Reviewed by Dick Adler

Book World p10 Ja 14 '68 220w

"Although [Simpson] is a completely immoral opportunistic, crooked rascal whose 'life is nothing but a long, dirty story,' he is also one of the most engaging characters of current fiction. . . . Mystery fans will love it, but other readers may be disconcerted by a hero without a single redeeming virtue." O. A. Hagen

Library J 92:2600 J1 '67 150w

"[This] is the worst Ambler I have read. . . . Simpson's new story is more draggy than dirty. . . . [The main action] doesn't begin until about halfway through the 269 widely spaced pages. . . . The plot is neither complicated nor exciting and is hastily tied up. No Ambler book is entirely without its touches of casual worldliness. . . . [But] mostly it is humdrum huggermugger, literate but lackadaisical." Stanley Kauffmann

New Repub 157:24 D ■ '67 320w

"The dirty story of the title . . . also describes the actions of Ambler's favorite targets—the industrial cartels he has frequently attacked as manipulators of men and nations. . . . The protagonist's quest for formal identity in a world dominated by business ethics makes the novel a characteristically ironic comment on espionage—an account of the rude awakening of a squalid, frightened little man who has the decency to be outraged by criminals far worse but infinitely more respectable than he. . . . 'Dirty Story' is not only an exciting and entertaining chronicle of international maneuvering, but an instructive and timely parable for our age. . . . One hopes the author will use Arthur Simpson again." George Grella

N Y Times Bk R p58 O 8 '67 650w
TLS p1022 O 26 '67 60w

AMBROSE, LEE, Jr. ed. The Columbia University forum anthology. See Spackman, P.

AMBROSE, STEPHEN E. Eisenhower and Berlin, 1945; the decision to halt at the Elbe. 119p maps $4 Norton

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Germany. Eisenhower, Dwight David 67-15818

This study is an attempt to understand Eisenhower's decision "to stop his forces at the Elbe River and leave Berlin to the Red Army. What he did; why he did it, and what the results were—these questions are my primary concern." (Foreword) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Making no claim to uncovering new material, Professor Ambrose . . . offers an able and convincing brief defending Eisenhower's decisions. He has made it more appealing with bold, muscular views on the complicated issues and the numerous actors involved. . . . [He] might have given more weight to Churchill's arguments that had the Allies captured Berlin, and later Prague, they might have pressured the Russians to live up to their wartime agreements, especially those affecting Poland." Abe Bortz

Am Hist R 73:942 F '68 400w

"This well written essay is the most authoritative succinct statement of the argument that Eisenhower was correct in his decision to halt at the Elbe. . . . [It] belongs in every college and university with any interest in recent world history."

Choice 4:1427 F '68 230w

Reviewed by Carl Boyd

J Am Hist 55:428 S '68 150w

"Professor Ambrose shows that if the Western Allies had taken Berlin, they would have had to withdraw to previously accepted zones anyway. A well-presented little volume that libraries will find useful." John Buechler

Library J 92:2563 J1 '67 190w

AMBROSE, STEPHEN E., ed. Institutions in modern America: innovation in structure and process. 145p $5.95 Johns Hopkins press

338.973 U.S.—Economic conditions—20th century. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century. U.S.—Civilization. Industry and state—U.S. 67-16043

"The four lectures that comprise this book were given at the Johns Hopkins Center for the Study of Recent American History in the spring of 1966. The institutions discussed are: organized labor, by D. Brody; national politics, by W. E. Leuchtenburg; the large corporation, by A. D. Chandler, Jr.; and the military establishment, by T. Ropp. The general time period is from the late nineteenth century to the present. . . . The editor says: 'The retention of democracy within a society of gigantic organizations is the real American success story. How it was done is a primary concern of these essays.'" (Am Hist R) Index.

"There is a thoughtful introduction by the editor, who promises somewhat more than the book delivers. . . . The various subjects are treated in narrative form, which emphasizes certain aspects of 'process,' but tends, with some notable exceptions, to neglect innovations or changes in institutional 'structure.' Hence the behavior of the institutions in performing their major roles receives considerably more attention than do innovations caused by the pressures of the institutions on each other, such as the interaction of government and business or the military and government. As narrative history the essays are excellent summaries of important developments of the last three-quarters of a century, written with much insight and some contributions to new interpretation." T. C. Cochran

Am Hist R 73:1247 Ap '68 270w

"Chandler makes a strong case for the corporation as 'the most important single economic organization in the American economy' with influence more pervasive than the labor union, the regulatory commission, or other public bodies. . . . Brody subjects some familiar facts to fresh analysis. . . . Leuchtenburg reviews a hundred years of politics with incisive clarity, but he does little to analyze the structure of power within the parties themselves. . . . Ropp does not really analyze the defense establishment as an institution. His review of eighty years of military thought is a useful overview of a body of literature not very familiar to most historians, but is it institutional history as defined in Ambrose's introduction? These were good lectures, well above the average for such a series. But the problem of making the four essays fit comfortably within the confines of a book has been only partially solved." N. M. Blake

J Am Hist 54:932 Mr '68 600w

AMBRUS, GYÖSÖ, LASZIÓ. See Ambrus, V. G.

AMBRUS, VICTOR G. Brave soldier Janosh. unsp col il $3.50; 1lb bdg $3.54 Harcourt

398.2 Folklore—Hungary—Juvenile literature 67-8387

A familiar figure in Hungarian folk literature, the old soldier Janosh . . . describes to the people of his village the way in which he defeated Napoleon's army and so won Napoleon's gratitude for sparing his life that he 'turned into a very peaceable man and never started another war.' [Mr. Ambrus] won the Kate Greenaway Medal in 1965 (for the best-illustrated children's book published in the United Kingdom) [The Three Poor Tailors, BRD 1966]. . . . Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:178 N 10 '67 40w

"[Mr. Ambrus] has made another picture book as brilliant as his previous The Three Poor Tailors. The new book, however, will require some introduction to young children; for Janosh is none other than that swaggering hero of Hungarian folklore Háy János. . . . The book tells the story which is the basis of the fourth movement of Kodály's Suite." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 43:740 D '67 100w

"Although the story's ending is anti-climactic, the illustrations alone would justify the publication of this short tale [which] . . . provides the English artist with material for a dramatic picture book, vibrant with color and twinkling with humor on every page." Della Thomas

Library J 92:4601 D 15 '67 60w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat N 50:41 N 11 '67 120w

AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION. War: the anthropology of armed conflict and aggression. See Fried, M.

AMERICAN ASSEMBLY. Challenges to collective bargaining [ed. by Lloyd Ulman]. 180p $3.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

331.1 Collective bargaining 67-14836

These essays discuss "the structure of bargaining units, various insurance programs, bargaining in the public sector, employment problems of minorities, labor law, wage-price policy, and the future of collective bargaining in the U.S." (Choice)

"In keeping with the purpose of the book, the chapters are well written and the topics most timely. It is unfortunate that there is neither an index nor a bibliography." Choice 4:1141 D '67 170w

"The nine essays in this volume were prepared as background reading for participants in the 30th American Assembly program, 1966. They present a wide range of current bargaining issues and reflect the potentially explosive problems to be faced. . . . An outstanding compilation by leading authorities in the highly controversial labor-relations field, this book is recommended for college and all but the smallest public libraries and highly recommended for those special libraries serving industry or labor." William Gibelman

Library J 92:1160 Mr 15 '67 170w

Reviewed by Alfred Kuhn
Social Studies 59:133 Mr '68 420w

AMERICAN ASSEMBLY. Ombudsmen for American government? [ed. by Stanley V. Anderson]. 181p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

351.9 Ombudsman 68-14460

A collection of articles concerning the origins, functions and experiences of a citizens' grievance-handling institution. The authors, "political scientists and law professors . . . present the arguments both for and against the office of Ombudsman in our society. They explain special problems of transplanting the idea to our country, examine ways of protecting Ombudsmen from political influence, and propose a model Ombudsman statute. Especially at state and local levels, they agree, Ombudsmen could perform a valuable service." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is the latest and best of the books on the Ombudsman. . . . [The editor] summarizes the characteristics of existing Ombudsman institutions, rival and auxiliary procedures, and other aspects of the Ombudsman reform. . . . Although mindful of the validity of some of the arguments used by legislators against the adoption of the new institution—whether called Ombudsman, parliamentary commissioner, procurator, or citizen's review board—it is the opinion of Dr. Anderson and his colleagues that some kind of citizen's defender system ultimately will be adopted. An annotated Model Ombudsman Statute . . . should be of inestimable value to all legislators seriously concerned about the role of government in the twentieth century." R. V. Peel

Ann Am Acad 378:174 J1 '68 500w

"All that needs be said is: by all means, obtain a copy for the library. The authors are all well versed in the field. The interesting feature about this presentation is that attention is paid not only to the role of the Ombudsmen in the Federal government but state and local government as well. Compares favorably with Gellhorn's Ombudsmen and Others [BRD 1966, 1967] and represents the latest in a continuing series of books in this area."

Choice 5:867 S '68 80w

AMERICAN ASSEMBLY. The United States and Eastern Europe [ed. by Robert F. Byrnes]. 176p maps $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Europe, Eastern. Europe, Eastern—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-23502

In this book a group of "historians, economists, and specialists on international relations [attempts to] provide historical background and perspective on critical problems facing the United States today as it reviews its policies towards Eastern Europe." (Publisher's note) "The first four articles examine the historical and geographic aspects of Eastern Europe, its problems of economical and political development as well as the social and cultural similarities of the region. Three articles discuss external affairs affecting the region within the community of Communist nations, within Europe in general, and the relations of Eastern Europe toward the U.S." (Choice) Index.

"Scholarly and brief, [the book] summarizes judiciously and brings to the fore the chief problems and issues confronting the area. . . . In an opening chapter, noteworthy for the amount of material it contains in readable format, Stephen A. Kertesz gives a good description of the land and peoples. . . . There is some, but surprisingly little repetition in the essays. Readers, according to their interests and what they are looking for, will inevitably vary in their evaluations of the presentations, but the reviewer would single out the essay by [J.] Campbell [on Europe, East and West] as one of the best balanced and most stimulating." E. C. Helmreich

Ann Am Acad 375:202 Ja '68 390w

"[The authors] attempt to formulate possible policies aimed at the establishment of detente between Eastern Europe and the U.S. The articles included are generally well written, but their documentation is lacking; few sources are included for scholarly use. The book is aimed mostly at the academic nonspecialist [and] the level of the articles is simple. . . . There are currently no adequate works on Eastern Europe and the U.S. The first part of the book including the first six chapters, may be found elsewhere in better documented form: Communism in Europe, edited by W. E. Griffith [BRD 1966]; R. H. Osborne, East-Central Europe [BRD 1968]."

Choice 5:261 Ap '68 160w

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Science and the concept of race. See Mead, M., ed.

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION. Improving college teaching. See Improving college teaching

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE. The draft? a report prepared for the Peace Education Division of the American Friends Service Committee; report prepared by a working party of the American Friends Service Committee. 112p $3.50; pa $1.25 Hill & Wang

355.2 Military service, Compulsory. Conscientious objectors 68-18849

"This is a report of the antidraft position of the American Friends Service Committee presented in the context of the views of the Friends on international affairs, nationalism, and the community of man. It is précis of a position that places human values above nationalism and that rejects conscription for any reason because it limits the right of men to make free personal choice and interferes with moral responsibility. The first part of the report provides a history of conscription, a discussion of its psychological effects, and a review of conscientious objection as an individual protest and as an organized movement." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Carl Bangs

Christian Century 85:820 Je 19 '68 220w

"In an especially hard-hitting chapter there is a discussion of how the draft has increasingly been used in recent years, not as a means of national defense but as a tool in our foreign policy. This a well-written cogent plea for reappraisal and reaffirmation of the basic principles of American democracy. It is highly recommended to general collections." George Adelman

Library J 93:1908 My 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2551 Je 15 '68 70w [YA]

"[This] is a soul-searching document by pacifists and pacifist-sympathizers, attempting less to justify than explain their horror of any compulsory manpower recruitment system. One especially fine chapter is on the psychological effects of the draft. Among other things it cites the undisguised appeals to masculinity (with hints at sexual inadequacy) of recruiting literature, contains an interesting discussion of the authoritarian values instilled by basic training, and examines the psychiatric disorders which often develop in late adolescents who live in a forced military atmosphere." E. F. Sherman

New Repub 158:36 My 18 '68 480w

Reviewed by Paul Lauter and Florence Howe
N Y Rev of Books 10:25 Je 20 '68 850w

"The Draft? is a tendentious book, so singlemindedly rejecting of militarism that it employs every conceivable avenue of attack. Service, for example, is an 'escape from freedom,' an opportunity for 'other direction' and personal irresponsibility—a sick manifestation of an under-the-weather society." David Sanford

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ap 28 '68 370w

AMERICAN HERITAGE. The American heritage history of colonial antiques, by the eds. of Am heritage, the magazine of history; auth. and ed. in charge: Marshall B. Davidson. 384p il col il $16.50; de luxe ed $19 Am. heritage

749.2 Furniture, American. U.S.—Social life and customs—Colonial period 67-23439

The author covers approximately the first one-hundred-fifty years of furniture styles in America. He attempts to show "the variations which appeared in the different colonies, . . . how furniture, utilitarian household objects and decorations are related, and [to describe] the social, economic, and commercial situations which were factors in their production." (Library J) Glossary of terms. Style charts. Index.

"[This] is a rich, rhythmic counterpoint of color illustration and anecdote, tracing the steady convergence of comfort and culture through the various colonial periods that culminated in the ornate scrolls of Chippendale and the quiet curves of Queen Anne. A fine emphasis is put on the rewards resulting from the intermingling of stylistic influences that came to America through its bustling trade and busy immigration. . . . [The book] plots the progress of young America ■ [it] follows the changes in style . . . [and] documents the triumph of American originality and artistic independence." S. B. Oberbeck

Book World p6 D 10 '67 550w

"More than 800 excellently chosen examples show the skilled craftsmanship and understanding of design in this early period. The illustrations are superior. This book is as much American history as it is a book on antiques. Thoroughly readable, it is for general collections and special collections on American antiques." Paul von Krum

Library J 92:3988 N 1 '67 120w

Library J 92:4278 N 15 '67 30w [YA]

AMERICAN HERITAGE. The American heritage history of the thirteen colonies, by the eds. of Am. heritage, the magazine of history; ed. in charge: Michael Blow; narrative: Louis B. Wright; pictorial commentary: Ralph K. Andrist. 384p maps $16.50; de luxe ed $19.50 Am. heritage

973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period 67-23814

The "director of the Folger Library gives an account of colonial history from exploration to Revolution. . . . Quotations from original sources [are] scattered between chapters." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 118:614 My 4 '68 80w

"What may be lost in the brevity of the narrative is counterbalanced by many excellent illustrations. . . . [This book] will be useful and interesting to any public or academic library, smaller collections may want to consider carefully in view of the price." E. D. Johnson

Library J 92:3994 N 1 '67 100w

Library J 92:4278 N 15 '67 50w [YA]

"[Wright] knows how to turn colorful details and well-chosen quotations into effective narrative history. . . . Proceeding from episode to episode, he reveals the haphazard character of American settlement, ■ story that is steeped in failure as well as in success. . . . A section dealing with the non-English communities is one of the most engaging in the book.

The contemporary documents that enrich Wright's narrative reveal good taste and often wit. . . . The illustrations reproduced expertly include some familiar items and many more, that will be new even to specialists in the field. . . . The reader will quickly observe that the book deals with ideas only scantily and neglects the task of generalization. Notably missing also is a discussion reflecting recent scholarship on economic growth. . . . Nevertheless [this is] a broadgauged history full of vibrant people." H. F. Graff

N Y Times Bk ■ p6 D 31 '67 850w

AMERICAN HERITAGE. The history of the atomic bomb; by the eds. of Am. heritage, the magazine of history; auth: Michael Blow; consultant: William W. Watson. 150p il col il maps $4.95; to libs & schools $4.79 Am. heritage

623.4 Atomic bomb—History—Juvenile literature 68-23895

"The newest addition to the American Heritage Junior Library follows the pattern set for the entire series in that it makes as much use as possible of illustration in color and monochrome, photographic plates, diagrams, maps, and paintings. . . . The seven chapters [lead] from the . . . first successful experiments with nuclear fission to . . . [an] account of the nuclear blasts over Hiroshima and Nagasaki and [a discussion] . . . of the potential for peaceful use [of the atom] as a source of power and energy." (Best Sell) "Teen-age." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:226 S 1 '68 90w

Christian Century 85:1603 D 18 '68 40w

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 7 '68 130w

"Readers who will give [this volume] the concentration it requires and deserves will be well rewarded. Once the difficult physical and chemical groundwork has been laid, the narrative picks up dramatically with the story of the Manhattan Project. . . . The Editors do not disguise the grisly effects of the bomb—nor do they beg the questions President Truman faced. The result is a meticulously fair treatment of the 'sin' Robert Oppenheimer said the physicists had known they were facing. It is this balance—despite the difficulties of explaining particle physics and even more than the beautiful production and scholarship—that is the best thing about this excellent book." R. G. Abernethy

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p28 N 3 '68 170w
[YA]

The AMERICAN literary anthology/1; the first annual collection of the best from the literary magazines; sel. by John Hawkes. 495p $6.95; pa $2.95 Farrar, Straus

810.8

68-16884

This "collection of nine stories, ten essays, and twenty-nine poems, chosen by a group of . . . novelists, poets, and critics from American literary magazines, is the first of a series to be published annually under a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. The grant is intended to give greater exposure, through The American Literary Anthology, to work by American writers that originally appeared in publications with limited circulations; to offer individual grants to those writers selected for the Anthology; and to reward with grants the editors who . . . published the selections in the first place." (Publisher's note)

"Here is an exciting and promising new literary annual. The . . . sponsor of this valuable project assigned the task of selection from the 1966 issues of over 300 literary journals to an admirable panel of judges. . . . About half of the magazines represented are ones which enjoy national reputations and are, or should be, found in most libraries: Antioch Review, Partisan Review, Evergreen Review, Sewanee Review, and others; the other magazines represented are those with primarily regional or underground followings; these include Angel Hair, Nice, Hollow Orange, Mother, Niagara Frontier, Brown Paper, Spero, Vagabond, Salmagundi. . . . The quality and variety of this excellent anthology will be apparent from a brief mention of the better known among the 49 contributors: Auden, Ginzberg, LeRoi Jones, Koch, Levortov, McClure, Nemerov, Oates, Pound, Saroyan, Wieners, Zukofsky. The book is strongly recommended for informed and general readers." Arthur Curley

Library J 93:2007 My 15 '68 220w

"The three essays that impress me most come from three illustrious poets—W.H. Auden, John Crowe Ransom, and Howard Nemerov. . . . It is not surprising that the critical pieces have as a rule been taken from the larger and better established quarterlies. . . . [In the field of fiction] the only little magazine represented is Transatlantic Review. . . . and it is also the only magazine from which two stories have been drawn. . . . It is with the poetry that the little magazines come into their own. . . . It would be pleasant to report that the choosers of poems for the anthology . . . have found quantities of first-rate poetry in these ephemeral periodicals, but that doesn't seem to be true. Most, though not all, of the poems that can be read twice were published in the solid, reputable reviews." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:21 Je 29 '68 1100w

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW. The Vietnam war and international law. See Falk, R. A., ed.

AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES FIELD STAFF. Churches and states: the religious institution and modernization, by Victor D. Du Bois [and others] ed. by Kalman H. Silvert; with a foreword by Kenneth W. Thompson. 224p $7.50 The staff

291 Religion and sociology

67-22384

The papers in this volume are based on "a conference on religion and modernization sponsored by the American Universities Field Staff . . . [in October, 1966, which] focused on Judaism, Catholicism, and Islam as mediators and/or inhibitors of social change." (Am J Soc) "Judaism is treated by Professor Jacob Neusner, Catholicism by Dr. V. D. DuBois, Professor T. G. Sanders, and Dr. D. I. Rusinow, and Islam by Professor S. Schaar, Dr. W. A. Hanna, Professor C. F. Gallagher, and Dr. L. Dupree." (Library J)

"[This volume is a] worthwhile, if not particularly illuminating, contribution to the rapidly growing literature relating modernization and religion. . . . If some of these discussions substantiate the view that the 'faith' in a given society acts as a reactionary brake on development . . . then other articles demonstrate that in certain conditions traditional religious institutions . . . are able to align themselves with the forces of revolution. As Silvert points out in his lucid and regrettably brief Introduction, the critical focus for analyses . . . must be on the ideological and power relationships between religious institutions and other institutional systems involved in the general flow of economic change." J. C. Crocner

Am J Soc 74:101 J1 '68 480w

"[This volume] follows the practice of combining 'tentative theory, specific case studies and empirical conclusions.' . . . Any library interested in religions should consider purchase." Shlides Johnson

Library J 92:4162 N 15 '67 140w

AMERICANA Norvegica, v 1: Norwegian contributions to American studies; eds: S. Skar and H. H. Wasser. (Oslo Univ. Am. inst. Publication) $10 Univ. of Pa. press

917.3 U.S.—Civilization

67-62

"Americana Norvegica will appear at irregular intervals and contain 'shorter contributions to American Studies.' Particular attention will be paid to the history of 'Norwegian-American interrelations.' The inaugural volume is devoted chiefly to American literature and contains the following essays: 'Orestes A. Brownson's New Views,' by Per Sveino; 'Hawthorne and the Significance of History,' by Johannes Kjørven; 'Bartleby the Inscrutable: Notes on a Melville Motif,' by Otto Reinert; 'The Impressionism of Stephen Crane: A Study in Style and Technique,' by Orm Overland; 'E. A. Robinson: "Eros Turannos": A Critical Survey,' [and 'The American Studies Movement Problems and Prospects'], by Sigmund Skard; and 'The New Deal and American Literature,' by Henry H. Wasser; [as well as Petter Christian Steenstrup's Ludvig Kristensen Daa and the U.S.A.; Einer Boyesen's Hartvig Nissen and American Educational Reform; and Per E. Seyersted's Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen: Outer Success, Inner Failure]. (Am Lit)

"[The essays vary] in subject, length, and quality. . . . This volume testifies to the vitality of the American studies movement in Norway. It can be read profitably, by Americans, for these essays offer new perspectives on the development of American culture, giving us, among other things, a less parochial judgment of our past than is characteristic of native scholars." G. H. Knoles

Am Hist ■ 73:237 O '67 400w

Am Lit 39:257 My '67 100w

"The founder's scholarly introduction, which is a review of American studies from the age of the Enlightenment to the present in the United States as well as in Europe and elsewhere, has a programmatic importance. The essays that follow may be evaluated as products of a program as well as writings having intrinsic worth or faults. . . . The only essay which departs from traditional methodology is that on 'Bartleby,' where the sophisticated 'New-Critical' procedure of verbal word-spinning and value-juggling was obviously learned at Yale rather than at Oslo. Thus the volume is an excellent illustration of the soundness of and the possibilities for the broad-gauged international research of Skard's program. . . . All [the contributions] except the two already mentioned and the brief concluding essay by the American Henry Wasser could be described as monographs rather than as articles and as definitive studies in depth of the topics undertaken." R. E. Spiller

J Am Hist 54:625 D '67 750w

AMES, WINSLOW. Prince Albert and Victorian taste. 238p pl $12 Viking

709.03 Albert, consort of Victoria, Queen of Great Britain. Art—History

68-10867

The author "who is a member of the advisory council to the department of art history and archaeology, Columbia University, here presents a . . . study of Albert's work in the fields of arts and design [including] . . . his work at Osborne and Balmoral, the various industrial exhibitions, his private collections, and his work in recommending purchases and in classifying works of art for the Crown." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christlan Science Monitor p13 Mr 7 '68
750w

AMES, WINSLOW—Continued

"Prince Albert is often viewed as a stiff uncompromising martinet and an exponent of all that is most stultifying in Victorian life and art. In this book another side of the man emerges. [Professor Ames] presents a carefully documented study. . . . [His] style is scholarly without being dull and is a distinct contribution to the literature of the period. Recommended for all large libraries and for art and history collections." T. E. Smith

Library J 93:1129 Mr 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by Brian O'Doherty

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ap 7 '68 1350w

New Yorker 44:175 My 18 '68 200w

"[Recommended] to all who have an interest of any kind in the history of Victorian art and culture. [This] is art history, and most art history still remains at the level of gossip (except the Panofsky-Warburg school, for which one could wish greater theoretical strength). Gossip is its charm, as it is with most fiction; its curse is adjectives, from which Mr. Ames suffers less than most art historians. He recognizes the remarkable intelligence and character of the Prince, the seriousness of his interest in art and his awareness of its importance to the quality of a civilization, his capacity (so essential to an English politician) to form, inspire, and lead committees." Morse Peckham

Sat R 51:29 Mr 30 '68 180w

"Mr. Ames has used first-hand material—papers in the Windsor archives in particular—and he is also easy to read. But he plays down his research and tends to write just a little too colloquially, a little too eagerly light-weight (see, for instance, the sketchy bibliography). It is a pity; for Mr. Ames has worked on his book for many years, and the need for a serious and detailed account of Prince Albert and the arts was undoubtedly there. As it is, there is far too little, for example, on Ludwig Gruner, and hardly anything on S. S. Teulon and John Thomas. . . . The most interesting chapter in the book is that on the royal couple's collecting."

TLS p220 Mr 7 '68 650w

Va Q R 44:cxxviii summer '68 430w

AMIS, KINGSLEY. A look round the estate: poems 1957-1967. 49p $3.95 Harcourt

821

[67-113525]

Most of the poems in this collection have appeared previously in such publications as Spectator, the New Statesman and Encounter.

Reviewed by G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:3566 O 1 '68 100w

"These poems, always neat and dexterous, sometimes funny, belong in style to the 'down with Romance, even poets fart' manner of the early Fifties, when colloquial language was a useful corrective to Dylanesque rhetoric. But that isn't true now. The most successful poems here attempt least, [as in] the series called 'The Evans Country' about the lecherous sly avaricious Welsh, always after a quick bang or an under-the-counter fiddle. . . . Altogether a disappointment in style and treatment, although if we had a New Romantic movement I'd be shouting for Mr Amis back again." Julian Symons

New Statesman 74:780 D 1 '67 340w

"[The theme of these poems] is single, the theme of Lucky Jim [BRD 1954]; the poems remark simply that 'Art,' 'Love,' 'Religion,' 'Patriotism,' all the traditional values of the educated and cultured classes are rot. Sex, automobiles, and liquor are not only real but good. Anyone who thinks otherwise is a fool, and anyone who does not act on this knowledge, who does not provide himself with these real and good things, is probably a coward. . . . Deliberately flat and deflated in language, as simple as possible in form—quaterains, couplets, simple short-lined rhyming stanzas—the poems deny suggestion, mystery, feeling. They are amusing to come upon in the pages of The Spectator or the New Statesman because they are witty and because they do have a point. . . . This verse is something that works." John Thompson

N Y Rev of Books 11:33 Ag 1 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Julian Moynahan

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 22 '68 450w

"Behind the erotic, the hand of death; this emerges tacitly from the famous Evans poems which are accorded the focal position in Kingsley Amis's new collection, and is more explicitly (and doubtfully) explored in 'Nothing to Fear', where the poet himself waits trembling for his paramour. . . . The range of tone [in] . . . 'Out-Patient' shows Amis's ability to be laconic without dryness to full advantage. There are plenty of good poems in this manner in the new collection, and they all succeed by being cheerful, direct, dogmatic and unnerving; a kind of Non-Commissioned Larkin, less committed to the art, but more natural. Amis is not going to give up, but he is not going to be wise, either; he sends the ball firmly back into the reader's court. This is why his 'love poems' like 'Oligodora' or 'Green Heart' seem uncharacteristic: they are smug and assured in a way that the sexiest and most outrageous of the Evans poems could never be. Also less pure Amis are some poems that flirt more directly with religious myth."

TLS p1106 N 23 '67 800w

AMIS, KINGSLEY. For other books by this author, see Markham, R.

AMLUND, CURTIS ARTHUR. Federalism in the Southern Confederacy. 140p $4.50 Public affairs press

320.975 Confederate States of America—Politics and government. Federal government 66-29646

The author "believes that the most significant aspects of Confederate government was not the debilitating influence of states' rights as Owsley and others have argued, but rather a wartime concentration of national power in Richmond at the expense of state sovereignty." (Choice)

"This is a dull, pedestrian, and unrewarding synopsis of the activities of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Confederate government, of the relations between the state and central governments, and of the activities of the state governments. Many times retold, this story almost invariably has been written with more grace, depth, and sophistication. Some of the discussion is misleading, and many of the 'evaluations' are ridiculous or inane." C. C. Mooney

Am Hist R 73:926 F '68 420w

"[Amlund's thesis] is attractive and important, but the supporting argument gets lost in a general description of Confederate governmental structure and operations, which is the real subject of the book. In this connection, it provides a useful résumé of existing knowledge based almost entirely on secondary accounts. The book thus falls between two stools: a journal article, pared of extraneous detail, might better make the author's central point, while a fresh history of Confederate government would have required more extensive research. The book also suffers from poor editing: the style is sometimes turgid, there are too many typographical errors, footnote citations are incomplete."

Choice 4:574 J1 '67 150w

AMON, ALINE. Talking hands: Indian sign language: written and il. by Aline Amon. 80p $3.50; lib bdg $4.25 Doubleday

419 Indians of North America—Sign language —Juvenile literature 68-10123

Drawings of the sign language used by Indian tribes of the Western Plains followed by "sample sentences describe the life of a typical Plains boy, and also show how you can use signs today in your own activities." (Publisher's note) Index. "Ages eight to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by R. C. Bergenheim

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 7 '68 60w

Reviewed by Isadora Kunitz

Library J 93:4720 D 15 '68 130w

"Irresistible as a combination of fun and education, [this book] is a godsend to both harried parents and restless offspring. . . . It begins with a basic vocabulary of gestures; it then develops more complicated forms of communication through an extended narrative, in which each idea is worked out carefully in clear, precise illustrations." Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p38 My 5 '68 100w

AMRAM, DAVID. Vibrations; the adventures and musical times of David Amram. 469p il $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92

68-23627

The autobiography of the thirty-seven-year-old "composer who has come up the hard way. . . . He has been music director of the New York Shakespeare Festival since 1956, and was chosen to be the New York Philharmonic's first composer-in-residence for the 1966-1967 season." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:156 D '68 50w

"A hipster from a Vermont prep school and Oberlin, then a French horn player in both jazz and classical ensembles, Amram has composed a certain amount of respectable music for theatrical productions; but nothing in his life or work justifies the imposition of an autobiography. Except for the psychiatrically interesting fact that he sometimes feels 'hate rays,' Amram tells us almost nothing about himself or his background (though we meet a stupefying collection of school chums and Army buddies, neither father nor mother merit more than a few sentences)—and he tells us if anything even less about the few significant people he has known. . . . [The book] suffers most from a weakness for reporting old conversations, which Amram recollects through a tin ear." Martin Mayer

Book World p6 O 6 '68 330w

"A long, rambling account of all the experiences [Amram] has managed to pack into a relatively short space of time. . . . He does not offer any startling insights into the creative process—he is a good raconteur, but his attempts to philosophize about life in general and composing in particular are less than convincing. For musicians this will be pleasant reading, calling to mind many similar experiences. The general reader will come away with a greater understanding of how much plain hard work is involved in a musical career. For public libraries." B. D. Henry

Library J 93:3548 O 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Joan Peyser

N Y Times Bk R p60 N 17 '68 1050w

"[Amram] has several of the qualities necessary for the successful autobiographer. These include honesty, a desire for objectivity, a vigorous personality, and strong convictions about his calling and the world in which he lives. As a writer he fortunately reflects himself as a composer, bringing to Vibrations the same precision, clarity, and effectiveness that are characteristic of his music. . . . [Since he] has created some of the best incidental theater music of our time, his autobiography is guaranteed a certain interest from music lovers. However, there is a great deal in the book to attract others. . . . This is a success story in the best American tradition. . . . Neither a sell-out nor a cop-out, [Amram] is an anti-Establishment figure who has made it in the Establishment on his own terms. . . . His concern is not about himself but about music and life, which saved him from fatal compromises and saves his book from the taint of egotism." Victor Chapin

Sat R 51:46 N 16 '68 700w

ANDERSON, CHARLES R. The magic circle of Walden. 306p $7.95 Holt

818 Thoreau, Henry David

68-10098

The Caroline Donovan professor of American literature at Johns Hopkins University offers an analysis of Henry David Thoreau's Walden as a poem. Index.

"The tone and urbane style of Anderson's analysis . . . demonstrate a maturity of scholarship and a good sense extremely rare in Thoreau studies where biased and mannerist explanations are the order of the day. [The book] is too long, for the reader loses the thread of the argument (that Walden is a poem and should be so treated) in the sheer abundance of fascinating critical byways. . . . Many misunderstandings of long standing are dispelled with great tact; yet Anderson's subtle linguistic metaphor does not carry him entirely to the elusive center of his subject, which he admits lies beyond literature. This is a book for the specialist and the mature reader and one not likely to be displaced for some time."

Choice 5:619 JI '68 200w

"An ingenious and quite possibly sound book. If Anderson is right, we all have to reread Walden to capture its sense and be captured by its spell again."

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 50w

"Mr. Anderson wrote this book after a careful study of not only all of Thoreau's other works, including the voluminous Journal, but also the unpublished notebooks and even Thoreau's reading in Oriental literature. The result is enlightening. The reader comes away from Mr. Anderson's book with a much greater appreciation of Thoreau's artistry—the care with which he constructed his literature. Most rewarding is [the] study of such lesser chapters as 'Baker Farm.' But because Mr. Anderson . . . confines himself to a purely belletristic approach, he misses much of the strength and ruggedness of Thoreau. At times he becomes a bit precious, finding symbols within symbols that the reader doubts Thoreau ever dreamed of." Walter Harding

Library J 93:552 F 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Joseph Featherstone

New Repub 159:23 S 14 '68 1700w

"To make his case for unity and conscious artistry, Anderson must play down the spirited social protest and the active probing for meaning in Nature and human experience which give the book its more dynamic qualities. The result, for most readers, will be a somewhat emasculated 'Walden.'"

Va Q R 44:cliv autumn '68 160w

ANDERSON, CHARLES W. Politics and economic change in Latin America; the governing of restless nations. 388p $3.75 Van Nostrand 309.18 Latin America—Economic policy.

Latin America—Politics 67-2796

The three parts of this book attempt to reconcile comparative politics and developmental economics. The first part presents "a theory of the prevailing political and economic rationality of Latin-American decision making, which Anderson sees as both pragmatic and prudential. Part II is a test of his model, in terms of the postwar experience of ten nations, and the brief final part develops the type of political change likely to be most compatible with this pattern of decision making." (Choice) Index.

"[This] study is as well written as most academic books, and will be well received by scholars and undergraduates."

Choice 4:1285 Ja '68 170w

"Keeping his eyes firmly fastened on what is, rather than what ought to be, Anderson points out that the politics of development, like any other sort of politics, remain the art of the possible. In addition, he makes a convincing case for asking the economists to consider the political side before they go off proposing grandiose economic development plans. Unfortunately, too many of the author's incisive and refreshing observations are obscured in tedious banks of grey academese, a failing which will keep the general reader away from this otherwise fine and interesting book." J. B. Burnham

Nat R 19:760 JI 11 '67 110w

ANDERSON, CHESTER G. James Joyce and his world (Studio bk) 144p il $6.50 Viking

B or 92 Joyce, James

68-73573

This illustrated biography explores Joyce's life from his childhood and adolescence in Dublin to his self-imposed exile in Trieste, Zurich and Paris. "The text draws upon the many incidents in Joyce's life that he depicted in his works, and relies, . . . as Professor Anderson duly acknowledges, on Richard Ellmann's standard work [James Joyce, BRD 1959]." (Economist) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Anderson's biography is a neat introduction balancing life, pictures and work; but academic libraries need it not if they have [R.] Ellmann's biography."

Choice 5:30 Mr '68 50w

"[This] is a good text, careful, accurate and perceptive, again breathing life into these often resurrected bones. The 124 illustrations have in many cases an almost magical power of evocation of Dublin in 1904. Quite a number of them are unfamiliar, and in the midst of such riches a few old, bad ones can be tolerated. . . . An outstanding picture book."

Economist 225:iv D 2 '67 310w

"Undergraduates, the informed general public, and probably those specialists who have never bothered overmuch with Joycean iconography will welcome this biographical study. . . . Anderson, shows, if it needed demonstrating again, how clearly Joyce's surroundings and his own life are mirrored in his books. The pictorial record is full and most interesting. A good general purchase for all but the smallest libraries." L. W. Griffin

ANDERSON, C. G.—Continued

Library J 93:1134 Mr 15 '68 130w

TLS p1185 D 7 '67 320w

ANDERSON, EUGENE N. Political institutions and social change in continental Europe in the nineteenth century. by Eugene N. Anderson & Pauline R. Anderson. 451p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

940.2 Europe—Politics—19th century

67-21432

"The authors explore change specifically in the institutions of government and politics in the Europe of [the] period, in an effort to understand change in the structure of society. They give attention to such problems as central, local, and intermediate government, bureaucracy, civil rights, political parties, suffrage, and representation. Particular attention is paid to the differences between eastern and western European institutional development. . . . [The Andersons] study the relations among social groups and the relative social power of each group by determining and examining the place of each in the institutional structure." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The systematic investigation of economic, social, and institutional developments in [this] period has long been neglected; this comparative study by two veteran and authoritative authors truly breaks fresh ground. . . . The great powers receive primary attention, with less being given to the Scandinavian, East European, and Iberian states. . . . Some knowledge of European political history is assumed, and the dense, detailed quality of the style will discourage most undergraduates. But the Andersons have tapped a wide range of secondary sources in English, French, and German to produce a pioneering study that will interest political scientists and specialists in the developing states as well as historians. Should be in even the smallest academic library."

Choice 5:352 S '68 180w

"An interesting and well-documented view [of] the socio-political development in 19th-Century Europe. . . . Although the sources [the authors] used were limited by language (English, French, and German), and were sometimes restricted to rather biased views, for example, those of Professors Redlich and Jaszi on Austro-Hungarian affairs, their study is still unique in its topic, documentation, and style. . . . The informed layman also will find it interesting." A. H. Pogany

Library J 92:4511 D 15 '67 200w

ANDERSON, HUGH, ed. Jesus. (Great lives observed) 182p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

232.9 Jesus Christ

67-28396

A "book of readings selected . . . to illustrate critical thinking about the Jesus of history. It spans the period from Ernest Renan's Vie de Jesus (1863) to the present, covering . . . views from 19th-Century liberalism, social gospel exponents, Schweitzer's Quest of the Historical Jesus [BRD 1949], popular portraits of the 20th Century, Jewish views, and selections from contemporary scholarly reconstructions. . . . [An introductory essay by the editor traces] the development of [such] critical thinking." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Numbers of biographical source-materials are [here] brought together. . . . Names like Bornkamm and Bultmann from our time are well represented, while classic disturbances like those generated by Renan and Strauss in the 19th century receive their due."

Christian Century 85:114 Ja 24 '68 60w

"[The editor's] grasp of the critical literature in its historical context should do much to help the layman find his way through the often confusing 'quests' and 'new quests' for the historical Jesus. The closing word is encouraging: 'Biblical experts have no monopoly of knowledge of Jesus. . . . The plain man has a plain right, on reading the Gospels, to conceive his own 'image' of the man of Nazareth.'" R. V. Ritter

Library J 93:555 F 1 '68 230w

ANDERSON, JACK, jt. auth. The case against Congress. See Pearson, D.

ANDERSON, JEAN. Food is more than cooking; a basic guide for young cooks; with a foreword by Naomi G. Albanese; il. by Lee DeGrood. 367p $7.95 Westminster press

641.5 Cookery

67-17732

"The first half of the book . . . covers the facts and the lore of foods—table etiquette—holiday customs and celebrations—party planning—shopping—kitchen terms, techniques, and equipment . . . vitamins and calories . . . herbs and spices. . . . [The second section] contains 340 recipes, ranging from simple to gourmet and from foreign classics to old American favorites." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. General index. Recipe index.

"[This cookbook is] an excellent introduction . . . thorough in every way. . . . [The recipes are] carefully checked and well presented. . . . It might be noted that this book is not designed exclusively for girls."

Best Sell 23:298 O 15 '68 100w

Christian Century 89:1604 D 18 '68 30w

"A breezy informal style and an appealing format sparked with lively sketches should make [the first half of this book] a useful guide for teen-agers seriously interested in learning homemaking skills. . . . [In the second half] there is heavy reliance on convenience foods and an overuse of seasonings to the point that it begins to seem that many of these recipes evolved in the test kitchen of a spice company. The recipes given for a few classic dishes would make a purist cringe. While they include some new approaches and dishes to add menu variety for experienced cooks, the recipes are neither basic nor complete enough to hand over to rank beginners." N. Y. Orr

Library J 93:3975 O 15 '68 210w [YA]

ANDERSON, JOY. The pai-pai pig; with il. by Jay Yang. 46p $2.75; lib bdg $2.86 Harcourt

Pigs—Stories

67-17150

"Su-Ling Chen and Yang Yang Lo each had a pig to fatten for their Taiwanese village's Pai-Pai festival. Yang Yang was determined his pig would win the prize for being fattest, but Su-Ling, who loved his pet, remembered only that the prize winners were roasted for the feast that concluded the festival. Cleverly he schemed to save his pig while Yang Yang slaved to fatten his. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

"Mrs. Anderson's book is a treat and her description of the Festival is colorful and fun. The drawings by Jay Yang detail the busy life in the village of Shi-Lin and evoke the peaceful mood of the surrounding countryside." Elinore Standard

Book World pt 2, p45 (children's issue) N 5 '67 160w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:180 N 10 '67 40w

Horn Bk 43:747 D '67 100w

"This pleasant story will find sympathetic readers and will introduce them effortlessly and entertainingly to a foreign way of life." Elva Harmon

Library J 92:3845 O 15 '67 90w

ANDERSON, LONZO. Two hundred rabbits [by] Lonzo Anderson and Adrienne Adams. 32p col il $3.95; lib bdg $3.77 Viking

Fairy tales. Rabbits—Stories

68-16067

The unidentified narrator of this folk-based tale describes "the humble lad who yearns to participate in the Festival Day in the palace of the king of Jamais. Kind and cheerful but inept, the boy is given a magic whistle by a mysterious old woman. When he blows it, 199 rabbits appear and, in serried ranks, march with him to the palace gates. The king is enchanted until he sees that the last row doesn't come out even, but the day is saved by the commentator. . . . Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:655 D 21 '68 50w

"Beautiful soft color pictures create a complete medieval world with a traditional fairy story plot of the poor boy making good at the king's court. The surprise comes with the storyteller himself revealed in the last picture as the one missing rabbit necessary to make the rows of marching bunnies come out even. Along with the loveliness of the pictures there's fun too in the boy's struggle to find something to entertain the king." Anne Izard

Book World p7 (children's issue) My '68 80w

"Miss Adams's open-air scenes are in early summer morning colors, her closed forest ones in deep-water greens, displaying a skill she has practiced many times before in storybooks. But her 200 rabbits are something new. They stand there neatly in rows to be counted, and if there are not 200 individuals here, there is a distinction among an extraordinary number of them. They show the versatility of illustrators."

Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 2 '68 150w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:301 My 24 '68 50w

Reviewed by E. L. Heins
Horn Bk 44:407 Ag '68 90w

"A charming and humorous story which reads aloud well and is perfectly complemented by Adrienne Adams' delicate, lively watercolors."

M. L. Gardin

Library J 93:1781 Ap 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p55 My 5 '68 60w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:50 F 24 '68 190w

ANDERSON, OLIVE. A liberal state at war: English politics and economics during the Crimean war. 306p il $8.50 St Martins

942.081 Great Britain—Politics and government—19th century. Crimean War, 1853-1856 67-11670

The author examines "the impact of the Crimean War on the public life of England." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Mrs. Anderson's excellent monograph is a useful corrective to the racy exuberance of Cecil Woodham-Smith's The Reason Why [BRD 1964], and also provides important revisions of the usually accepted views of the effects of the Crimean War at home. By means of a skillful combination of material and techniques from political, social, intellectual, and economic history concentrated on a limited period and set of problems, she has produced a study in depth that provides new insights into mid-Victorian England . . . [and] provided an interesting gloss on the idea of the Age of Equipoise." J. F. C. Harrison

Am Hist R 73:1155 Ap '68 480w

Reviewed by Charles Mark

Am Pol Sci R 62:668 Je '68 850w

Choice 5:394 My '68 90w

"Allowing for immense differences between two countries, two centuries and two different kinds of war, there are curious and fascinating parallels between nineteenth and twentieth century experience on both sides of the Atlantic. Mrs Anderson is too austere an historian to venture into such issues. . . . All too frequently . . . she is more anxious to score points against other historians, whose views she describes as 'misleading,' than to round off her own picture. . . . [She] never quite provides the general picture of the domestic side of the war that we lack. . . . The perspectives are limited, particularly when she deals with such phenomena as the effects of war on class-consciousness. . . . [And] the pathology of the Crimean War is treated too reasonably in this book. The biggest omission is a full study of the reaction to the peace, the unimpressive peace, which, as Mrs Anderson says, 'was far more of a shock than the advent of war had ever been.'"

Economist 223:x Ap 15 '67 750w

"In eight crisply written chapters [the author] examines the effect of the war on constitutional government, on radicalism and reform movements, and on economic policy. With a sharp eye and a dry effective style Miss Anderson gently knocks one stereotyped generalization after another on the head, politely corrects the more unguarded dicta of eminent historians, and quietly reduces the smooth surface of the text-book picture to the recognizable chaos of real life. . . . This is a short book, based on long research, which deserves more attention than it has received."

Norman Gash

Engl Hist R 83:416 Ap '68 150w

"[A] failure to present adequate power structures spoils much of the argument which does appear in what could so easily have been a quite excellent book. . . . The context should have been more thoroughly and extensively delineated. . . . Equivocation is invariably a bad feature of academic writing, and on this occasion it renders the whole background of the work blurred and open to doubt. A similar imprecision comes out over other things—important and unimportant alike. . . . Many good things are, however, to be found in [these] pages. . . . With the isolated treatment of specialized subjects very little fault can be found. On bigger, more generalized themes, though, the situation is different."

TLS p 423 My 18 '67 900w

ANDERSON, PATRICK. The Presidents' men: White House assistants of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson. 420p $6.95 Doubleday

920 U.S.—Biography. U.S.—History. Presidents—U.S.—Staff
68-24832

"A free-lance writer who has worked for the last two Administrations describes and analyzes more than two dozen of [the men and women who were members of the presidents' personal staffs] in their relations with their 'boss,' each other, Congress, the press, and the Civil Service bureaucracy." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. H. Stringer

Christian Science Monitor p13 N 27 '68
650w

Reviewed by M. K. Landy

Commonweal 89:410 D 20 '68 1900w

"[The author's] analysis involves opinion and controversy, particularly about LBJ. But he has done his homework—his list of sources covers several pages—and many readers will agree with him. Some of Mr. Anderson's earlier work appeared in the New York Times Magazine. . . . A lack of footnotes makes it difficult to tell how much of the book is a synthesis of the literature and how much is the result of Mr. Anderson's own experience and research. . . . [His] style, the vigor of his judgments, the anecdotes, inside accounts, and the biting analysis should make this book a popular acquisition for libraries concerned with public affairs." W. C. Robinson

Library J 93:3146 S 15 '68 200w

"This sizable and conscientious labor comes across only as a sizable and conscientious labor—tidy, well organized and spiritless. . . . When you consider Anderson's access, his opportunities for pilfering and eavesdropping, it is hard not to damn him as a gentlemanly bungler. . . . The greatest defect, however, of the book is Anderson's semi-paralysis when it comes time to draw moral judgments. It is impossible to separate politics from ethics, or at least it is impossible to do so without falling into a pit of boredom. He talks about great national tragedies, and the men who cause them, as though they were the foibles of characters in a Victorian novel." R. G. Sherrill

Nation 207:571 N 25 '68 1300w

"As all these people pass by in a kind of procession in Anderson's book, one gets, I think, a better general sense of what actually happens in government than political books usually give. . . . A candid and independent person, Anderson tells tales on Kennedy's men or Johnson's alike. . . . An amiable, chatty writer, Anderson does not go deeply into the sources of these assistants' values, but his sketches are pointed and fun to read and since he has interviewed many of the men he writes about, he makes a contribution to the literature on the Presidency. Had he proceeded with more skepticism about the assumptions of the cold war and the sufficiency of the goals of the New and ensuing Deals to social reality in America, we might have received from him more pertinent assessments." Ronnie Dugger

N Y Times Bk R p3 S 29 '68 1200w

New Yorker 44:203 N 2 '68 200w

ANDERSON, PAULINE R., jt. auth. Political institutions and social change in continental Europe in the nineteenth century. See Anderson, E. N.

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Return to Winesburg; selections from four years of writing for a country newspaper; ed. with an introd. by Ray Lewis White. 223p il $5.95 Univ. of N.C. press

818

67-23499

In 1927, the author of Winesburg, Ohio (BRD 1919) became the owner, editor and publisher of the only newspapers in Marion and Smyth County, Virginia. This is a collection of nearly ninety newspaper pieces written by Anderson and published between 1927 and 1931 in the Marion Democrat and the Smyth County News. Bibliography.

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD—Continued

"[In his introduction the editor] has fully analyzed [Anderson's] reasons for turning to small-town journalism [and has] systematically evaluated his accomplishments within the genre. . . . But the accompanying collection of News and Democrat pieces is neither needed nor especially well done. One imposing obstacle prevents it from qualifying in either category: Hello Towns! [BRD 1929]. Anderson's own anthology of his newspaper pieces. Why this new volume should exist at all is therefore a puzzle. . . . Overshadowed by Hello Towns!, this anthology does little more than confuse the Anderson canon. . . . [However] this book should not be completely disregarded. Its introductory essay definitely deserves reading and so might the selections if—and only if—a copy of Hello Towns! is not available." W. D. Taylor
Am Lit 40:99 Mr '68 600w

Choice 5:192 Ap '68 170w

"[These are] personal essays in a portentously short-paragraphed editorial form. . . . A kindly melancholy fills the pieces. . . . As one might expect, 'characters' proliferate. A woman bootlegger dying of TB in the county jail, a printshop cat, a tobacco-chewing child catching fish, become projections of Anderson's moods. Although their simplicity seems somewhat artful, they are habit-forming."

N Y Times Bk R p44 O 22 '67 200w

"[These writings] are charming, bucolic, and humorous and they demonstrate what a broad experience of life a small town offered during those pre-World War II days. Anderson took advantage of the opportunity of entering into every level of the community, as it was then possible to do, and thus enlarged the base from which he enlarged his wisdom."

Va Q R 44:lx spring '68 100w

ANDERSON, STANLEY V., ed. Ombudsmen for American government? See American assembly

ANDERSON, THORNTON. Russian political thought; an introduction. 444p $9.75 Cornell univ. press

320.947 Political science 67-12902

Basing his analysis on "primary and secondary sources available in Western languages, [the author] argues that the forces of autocracy, isolationism, and dogmatism have guided the evolution of Russian political thought from Rurik to Brezhnev and Kosygin. . . . He [also] maintains that the Soviets have used . . . their Varangian-Byzantine-Mongol-Slavic heritage to produce potentially valuable answers to political and economic problems that still confound the compromise oriented West." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"There is great need for a comprehensive and clear history of Russian political thought. Unfortunately, Mr. Anderson's book does not fill it at all. . . . He winds up with an ill-digested summary of Russian history in the earlier parts and a superficial description of some political notions in the second half of the book. . . . Besides a superficial treatment of Tolstoi and Dostoevski that is unjustly negative because it misses the main points, there is no account of the formative role played by Russian literature in the history of political thought. Inadequate attention is paid to such vital institutional developments as serfdom, bureaucracy, imperial expansion in shaping political ideas. As for analysis, better leave it at the bland assertion that it is woefully inadequate: it bespeaks Anderson's incredible political naïveté and inability to think himself into a historical context not his own. . . . One really wonders for what audience Anderson was writing." Marc Raeff

Am Hist R 73:541 D '67 400w

Reviewed by R. V. Daniels

Am Pol Sci R 62:612 Je '68 650w

"[A] smoothly and intelligently written book. . . . Anderson (University of Maryland) approaches Russian history from the point of view of one learned in European and American political thought which, at times, gives him fresh perspective on Russian ideas and practices. The unity of theme makes the book pleasant reading, but the deterministic implications do not do justice to the richness and variety of alternatives inherent in Russian history. The benign conclusions, furthermore, seem unwarranted to one who has experienced Soviet life firsthand. This book is more valuable for its stimulating and perceptive ideas than as a standard source of information. It will not replace [T. G.] Masaryk's Spirit of Russia [BRD 1955] or Franco Venturi's Roots of Revolution [BRD 1961] for their periods. . . . Recommended for seniors and honor students."

Choice 4:1032 N '67 200w

Reviewed by Leonard Schapiro

N Y Rev of Books 11:25 D 5 '68 350w

"Professor Anderson's style is so uninspired and lifeless. Yet it is well worthwhile persevering; and the reason is largely the breadth of approach. To encompass the Novgorod veche, the polemics of Ivan IV and Kurbski, the Decembrists, and permanent revolution in one coherent volume is an impressive achievement. There is an evident compulsion to do justice to all points of view. One important result is to display Russian political thought in a more favourable light than usual. Its richness is striking and the fact too that it has a ready willingness to venture beyond the purely political. There are points of detail that one would like to see rectified. . . . But if one were asked to recommend a sound, middle-of-the-road comprehensive account of the subject . . . this is an obvious choice. Besides, the bibliography is excellent."

TLS p111 F 1 '68 220w

ANDERSON, WALLACE L. Edwin Arlington Robinson; a critical introduction. 175p $3.50; pa $2.25 Houghton

811 Robinson, Edwin Arlington 67-5760

"Against a background of Robinson's personal experience and philosophy and of period developments in literature and thought, Anderson discusses Robinson's career and contribution as poet, with interpretive analyses of the best short and medium-long poems and three of the long narrative poems ('Captain Craig,' 'The Man Who Died Twice,' and 'Tristram'). New material includes the influence of the Swedenborgian movement in Gardiner, Maine, and of Robinson's friendship with Dr. A. T. Schumann. Robinson's 'qualified transcendentalism' is linked to Carlyle, Swedenborg, Emerson, and a nondoctrinal Christian viewpoint and related to the symbolism of light and dark in the poetry." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. General index. Index to Robinson's works.

"A competent brief survey, accompanied by a selective bibliography which lists unpublished dissertations as well as published works on the poet."

Am Lit 39:501 Ja '68 20w

"Provides the most readable and useful introduction to Robinson the man and the poet yet published. . . . In an undeveloped concluding chapter, Anderson too readily ranks Robinson as a major modern poet equal to Frost and Eliot, superior to Whitman and Dickinson. The chronology and indices are adequate."

Choice 5:480 Je '68 200w

ANDERSON, WILLIAM MARSHALL. The Rocky Mountain journals of William Marshall Anderson: the West in 1834; ed. by Dale L. Morgan and Eleanor Towles Harris. 430p il $12.50 Huntington lib.

978 Rocky Mountains. Fur trade 66-25064

In 1834 William Anderson "set out for the Rocky Mountains with William L. Sublette's party. Anderson's journal is . . . [an] account of this trip to the mountains and of the trappers' rendezvous of that year. . . . [This volume includes] a biography of the diarist, an annotated printing of the diary . . . and of the narrative, or later the journal, which Anderson rewrote from his diary. . . . These are followed by a small section listed as 'Anderson Miscellanea,' and the text concludes with 140 pages of biographical sketches of mountain men." (J Am Hist)

"[The editors] had to deal with two documents: a trail diary and an expanded diary, written after Anderson had returned to Kentucky, now referred to as the 'Journal.' The latter is, of course, better written and supplied with explanatory details merely mentioned in the diary itself. Rather than present the documents end to end, the editors have placed them side by side, on facing pages. . . . They felt that the method would allow students to make comparisons between the two accounts with less difficulty. This is true, provided the work was intended primarily for students. Those who want to read the material for pleasure or for general background information will find the arrangement less useful. . . . Anderson's journals are an important addition to the field.

The word 'Morgan' on the product denotes, of course, the academic world's Good Housekeeping seal of approval." R. G. Athearn
Am Hist R 73:1640 Je '68 410w

"The journal sheds much light on the fur trade in a critical year. . . . As it is handled by editors Morgan and Harris, this volume is a superb, even brilliant treatment of a mass of information about the fur trade. The journal is intricately annotated; the thoroughness of the research is incredible. And physically, the book is an admirable display of fine graphic art." R. A. Bartlett
J Am Hist 55:393 S '68 410w

ANDRADE, J. M. PITA. See Pita Andrade, J. M.

ANDREANO, RALPH L., ed. New views on American economic development; a selective anthology of recent work; ed, comp. and with introd. by Ralph L. Andreano. 434p $8.95; pa $3.95 Schenkman pub.

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions. Economics—History 65-20307

"All but two of the nineteen articles presented here have previously appeared in print; the editor has reproduced three of which he was author and one which he co-authored. The articles are grouped under 'The Method of Economic History,' three chronological periods (colonial, pre-Civil War, and Civil War to 1914), and 'The Long View of American Economic Development.'" (J Am Hist)

"The 'new' economic historians are represented by Douglass North; the traditional role is developed through Chester Wright's classic of the 'thirties. Andreano, in his introduction and in a new essay, tries to point up the weaknesses and strengths of both schools; but in his well-intentioned attempt to show that the procedures of each are complements rather than substitutes, he glosses over some of the substantive differences which continue to this day to rend the profession. . . . The book is oriented toward the economic historian of the traditional school. In general, Andreano is successful in presenting this audience some flavors of the current work being done by economists; but some flavors are sorely missing. Nowhere is there an important example of an explicit model drawn from economic theory." H. L. Stettler

Am Econ R 58:228 Mr '68 1200w
J Am Hist 53:178 Je '66 80w

ANDREASEN, N. J. C. John Donne; conservative revolutionary. 249p $6.95 Princeton Univ. press

821 Donne, John

66-25417

In this study, Prof. Andreasen "concentrates on the paradoxes in the poet-preacher's approaches to love." (Christian Century) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Conservative refers to Donne's ideas on love. Revolutionary refers only to style, a subject barely touched. The major thesis is that in most love poems Donne reveals pitfalls of both lustful and idolatrous love while in the few later love poems he has become skilled and courageous enough openly to recommend the ideal love which, through dramatically conceived speakers, he has covertly been recommending. Andreasen's preparatory chapter . . . identifies and illustrates Ovidian, Petrarchan, and Platonic thought used by Donne. Useful to beginners, it is a black-and-white, stripped-down version. . . . Not an authoritative book, but the thesis, supported arduously by the author's own interpretations, deserves its day in court."

Choice 5:619 J1 '68 200w

Christian Century 84:1162 S 13 '67 20w

ANDRESKI, STANISLAV. Parasitism and subversion; the case of Latin America. 303p $5.95 Pantheon bks.

309.18 Latin America—Social conditions. Latin America—Politics. National characteristics. Latin American 67-12499

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by M. G. Varley

Engl Hist R 83:427 Ap '68 650w

Reviewed by R. della Cava

Pol Sci Q 83:332 Je '68 430w

Reviewed by D. E. Worcester

Social Studies 59:224 O '68 470w

ANDREW, LAYE. Creative rubbings. 96p il $5.95 Watson-Guptill

745.54 Rubbings

[68-10499]

The author describes the techniques of creative rubbing and shows examples of designs and pictures by students not specializing in art. This was first published in England in 1967.

"[The author describes this] craft medium with imagination and clarity. . . . The results, though practical enough for the novice to follow, still offer stimulation to the craftsman or teacher." R. R.

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 30w

"Recommended for art teachers, students, crafts leaders, and the libraries which serve them." Delores McCole

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 20w

ANDREWES, ANTONY. The Greeks; ed. and with introd. by J. H. Plumb. 294p pl maps $6.95 Knopf

913.38 Civilization, Greek

[67-95763]

After three chapters of prehistory, Professor Andrewes provides one chapter on "the outlines of political history from the seventh to the fourth centuries B.C. The remaining chapters—two-thirds of the whole book—are devoted to an economic and social survey of the Greek world by functional and occupational categories: landowners, peasants and colonists; traders, craftsmen and slaves; armies, navies and military leagues; and so on." (TLS) Chronology. Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This is] a very good book . . . in the series 'The History of Human Society.' It is primarily concerned with the classical period: it takes in the Homeric age with difficulty and ends with Alexander. It is highly readable, and remarkable among other such works for two things: first, the author's willingness to admit what is not known, even if it makes for untidy presentation; second, his ability to pursue each aspect of Greek life over the various parts of Greece and the various ages, without becoming overwhelmed by the excess of documentation from Athens. The illustrations are attractive, but very familiar."

Economist 224:418 J1 29 '67 150w

"Professional students of the subject will undoubtedly recoil at the unqualified generalizations found on nearly every page, but this seems hardly a criticism, since the book is clearly directed to the educated layman. As such it seems eminently successful, and can be recommended as a good, nontechnical introduction to its subject by a scholar of international repute." T. M. Robinson

Library J 93:71 Ja 1 '68 140w

"It would be hard to imagine a more comprehensive and readable modern account of the subject. . . . [Professor Andrewes] never draws conclusions involving speculative leaps beyond the evidence. As becomes the Wykeham Professor of Ancient History at Oxford, his work is sober, accurate and dependable. But it is also a remarkable act of creative evocation, which will stand unchallenged for many years."

TLS p676 J1 27 '67 950w

ANDREWES, C. H. The natural history of viruses. 237p il pl maps $8.50 Norton

576 Viruses. Contagion and contagious diseases 67-6921

The former deputy director of the National Institute for Medical Research in England describes the chemical make-up and nature of viruses. He "discusses the spread of viruses from animal to man, man to animal and other men, as well as the perpetuation of the virus species and how they survive under adverse conditions." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index. Index of virus diseases, viruses and other disease-agents.

ANDREWES, C. H.—Continued

"Presents an extensive background of up-to-date knowledge in the field of virology in an exciting and totally scientific manner. . . . This work is more scientific in scope and language than [Helen] Curtis' Viruses [BRD 1967], which seems intended more for the layman than the scientist. . . . It is a fascinating 'biography' of the viruses as a group and as individual entities."

Choice 4:1262 Ja '68 110w

"[Andrewes] has written an authoritative, contemporary, and descriptive discussion of viruses and the diseases they produce. . . . He presents a factual, intelligible, and rather extensive account of the epidemiology of a number of infections. The book is well documented and illustrated with new material." J. J. Taylor

Library J 92:4013 N 1 '67 80w

ANDREWS, ALLEN. The splendid pauper. 256p il $4.95 Lippincott

B or 92 Frewen, Moreton 68-13320[68-98925]

This "is the story of Moreton Frewen (who came to be called 'Mortal Ruin' by his unfortunate financial partners)—his fiscal acrobatics, his friendships with princes and presidents, his weird and wonderful ideas." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 93:3554 O 1 '68 180w

"Andrews had access to a revealing mass of Frewen private papers and he uses them to portray not just Frewen alone but the doomed and colorful society of landed gentry to which he belonged. . . . Frewen was driven all his life by a desire . . . to make a very large fortune to support family lands which had lost their ability to support themselves. . . . [His] schemes came to nothing. Their failure constitutes the tragic theme of the biography. It is hard to decide from Mr. Andrews's account why Frewen died in 1924 without ever getting his fortune. He worked hard all his life. Many of his ideas turned out well when someone else worked on them." Marshall Sprague

N Y Times Bk R p7 S 15 '68 900w

New Yorker 44:80 Ag 3 '68 180w

"[The author] has sized up both Frewen and the times delightfully. He is right to point out that though other adventurers have enriched both themselves and vast territories with wilder schemes, they are perhaps less interesting as people. Cecil Rhodes, the empire builder, died leaving Rhodesia and the Kimberly Mines. Frewen, an empire bungler, left only splendid material for a loser's biographer."

Time 92:84 Jl 26 '68 850w

"[Frewen] emerges from the story the most lovable of failures. He was incorrigible, but always kind. . . . Mr. Andrews tells it all in a style that is always lively, if never distinguished, and with just the degree of earnestness that the witty profligacy of his subject deserves."

TLS p501 My 16 '68 330w

ANDREWS, FRANK M., Jr. auth. Scientists in organizations. See Pelz, D. C.

ANDREWS, WAYNE. Architecture in Chicago & mid-America; a photographic history. 186p il $20 Atheneum pubs.

720.977 Architecture, American 68-23511

"Except for a ten-page introduction, . . . [this book consists] of photographs of the exteriors of buildings. . . . [The author] begins with the eclectic work of the early 19th century. . . . Nearly the entire central half of the book is given over to the commercial, public and residential work of the Chicago school. . . . The balance of the graphic section consists of examples of the new 20th-century eclecticism." (Book World)

"Andrews' handsomely bound and printed book is strictly a pictorial album calculated to offer little more than a pure visual experience. . . .

There are no plans, no functional and structural analyses, no details, no exposition of historical development. . . . If [the reader] knows the history of Mid-western architecture, he will find pleasure in the very familiarity of the works; . . . if he does not, he might well be a little confused. . . . There is a sprinkling of errors in the introductory text and in the captions which unfortunately catch the eye because of the brevity of printed material. . . . Beyond these minor weaknesses, however, . . . Andrews has put together a book that can only give pleasure to anyone with a taste for the building arts." C. W. Condit

Book World p4 O 13 '68 1000w

"[The] introduction gives interesting anecdotal descriptions (the sort not usually found in books of architecture). . . . The work of the Chicago School and Wright, plus that of Mies van der Rohe, create for this book a core of significant [architecture]. . . . Yet, Mr. Andrews compromises the apparent idea of historical objectivity in his book when he introduces a good bit of material that is not relevant and disregards much that is. . . . Andrews's great service has been to collect into one volume the substantially interesting Chicago material. . . . Satisfaction comes best when you decide to settle with the book for what it contains, . . . a photo collection of conventionally important architects of Midwestern America, with a photo roll call of a large number of Wright houses, and a set of picturesque views of mansions." William Alex

N Y Times Bk R p70 N 17 '68 1000w

ANDREWS, WAYNE. Architecture in Michigan; a representative photographic survey. unp $6.95; pa $2.95 Wayne state univ. press

720.9774 Architecture, American. Michigan—Historic houses, etc. 67-26428

This volume illustrates in "105 black-and-white photographs . . . the scope and character of architecture in Michigan since 1837. . . . Text consists of brief picture captions." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The virtue of this book is first and foremost the quality of the photographs. . . . No picturesque views or quaint corners, every image conveys the distinctive flavor of the architectural entity. . . . Readership audience will be limited to local and professional interest."

Choice 5:469 Je '68 110w

"[This is a] well-balanced selection of truly noteworthy structures. . . . [The author] has selected examples which are characteristic and interesting indeed not only for the architectural historian but also for the historian of aesthetics. The aesthetics of architecture are as clearly elucidated by these records of reality as in abstract dialectics." Paul Zucker

J Aesthetics 27:118 fall '68 210w

ANDRIĆ, IVO. The Pasha's concubine, and other tales; tr. from the Serbo-Croatian by Joseph Hitrec. 302p $6.95 Knopf

67-11137

A collection of thirteen short stories set in Yugoslavia which cover a span of three centuries, from the Ottoman empire to the Nazi occupation in World War II. These stories were originally published in Serbo-Croatian as part of the twelve-volume Sabrana djela Ivo Andrića (The Collected Works of Ivo Andrić) 1963.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:106 Jl '68 50w

Reviewed by C. P. Collier

Best Sell 28:157 Jl 15 '68 360w

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p4 Je 30 '68 650w

Reviewed by Donald Gropman

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 9 '68 750w

Reviewed by John Simon

Commonweal 89:360 D 6 '68 120w

"The chronicler records with melancholy detachment—or is it resignation—the unhappy destinies of assorted inoffensive human beings. Among these are the burly, saintly monk, undistinguished in the eyes of his fellows, whose spiritual crisis over the violence of his surroundings is described with rare power; the unspringing village baker's daughter raised to a petted concubine and discarded with equal ease in politically capricious times; the two well-bred Austrian sisters whose irreproachably good intentions are frustrated in the face of elemental backwardness; and the shabby out-cast Jewish barkeep overwhelmed by forces entirely beyond his ken. Familiar themes these may be, but in the hands of an acknowledged master craftsman winner of a 1961 Nobel Prize, they appear remarkably unhackneyed. . . . Recommended for public and academic libraries generally, and especially for those academic libraries with a particular interest in European literature." V. D. Newman

Library J 93:2686 J1 '68 230w

"It is in his stories rather than in his novels that Andric is at his best. . . . What happens in these tales of Bosnia through centuries of occupation by Turks, Austrians, Germans verges on the Conradian sense of horror and the Joycean concentration on sudden revelations, epiphanies. But Andric is his own man. The main themes of these 13 tales are three. First, the prevalence of evil; . . . secondly, the strange interweaving of human destinies; . . . thirdly, the borderline conflicts where different cultures, epochs, ideologies meet and clash. . . . [The translator] is a genuine writer in English, and thus easily our best translator of Andric. Nevertheless, he has a tendency to embroider or conventionalize. . . . More important yet, Hitrec has chosen his stories shrewdly." John Simon

N Y Times Bk R p4 J1 28 '68 900w

New Yorker 44:61 J1 '68 70w

"A few stories in this volume would be better understood were the reader familiar with other tales as yet untranslated. 'Confession' and 'By the Brandy Still' are the last in a sequence concerning Fra Marko Krneta, monk extraordinary. . . . Two of the selections . . . demonstrate the impact of Bosnia on foreigners, especially 'civilized' Westerners, a subject that found its fullest expression in the richest of Andric's novels, Bosnian Chronicle [formerly titled Bosnian Story, BRD 1960]. The arrangement in this book stresses variety and produces an exciting volume in its own right. . . . Ivo Andric's tales are closely knit and his style is taut. He is like the ancient seer mediating between two worlds. The struggles of which he writes are elemental—man against mortality and his own failings." Albert Lord

Sat R 51:22 Ag 3 '68 1250w

ANGLO-AMERICAN cataloging rules; prepared by the Am. lib. assn., the Lib. of Congress, the Lib. assn. and the Canadian lib. assn. [general ed: C. Sumner Spalding]. N Am text ed 400p $8.50 A.L.A.

025.3 Cataloging 66-29239

The present work represents the results of thirty-five years of activity in the codification of cataloging rules for American and British libraries. It supersedes the A.L.A. cataloging rules for author and title entries, and includes a revision of the Rules for descriptive cataloging in the Library of Congress. The work is divided into three main sections: Entry and heading, Description, and Non-Book Materials, and contains as appendices: Glossary; Capitalization; Abbreviations; Numerals; Punctuation and diacritics; Rules for entry and headings that differ in the British text, Index.

"The new code is . . . a marked improvement over its predecessor. . . . There are some problems in treating rules for choice of entry separately from those for form of entry, but the approach is basically sound. The index is not as good as it might be . . . but the work is physically attractive. Inevitably, however, reviewing the new code as an isolated document would be less useful than a consideration of that code in the context in which it appears. . . . [It seems a pity that these new cataloging rules deviate from the principles accepted nearly unanimously at the international level at the Paris Conference. . . . [and that] while the code makers did not ignore machine (i.e., computer) considerations, they did nothing about them. . . . Lubetzky's original effort toward clarity of principle has vanished, leaving behind significant traces of his mighty intellect in particular rules, but shattering the grand conception. . . . And yet—one is tempted to [ask] . . . if anything more was really politically possible at this time." T. C. Hines
Col & Res Lib 29:62 Ja '68 1000w

"[The North American text (under review) and the British text of Anglo-American Cataloging Rules] differ in many respects despite their common name. The differences are generally in favor of the British edition which is truer to the Paris principles of 1961, is frequently clearer in its formulation, and is more helpful in that it gives introductory notes preceding bodies of rules. It also gives the text of the North American rules when there is substantial variation, whereas the North American text only enumerates the sections in which the two codes differ. . . . The rules for descriptive detail did not come under the close scrutiny of the ALA Catalog Code Revision Committee but were worked up independently by the Descriptive Cataloging Committee without the searchlight of national and international publicity. These rules are reactionary to a disturbing extent. . . . Transliteration has been excluded from the AA Code. A separate volume is projected." A. D. Osborn

Library J 93:3523 O 1 '68 1000w

"The Anglo-American Cataloging Rules (AACR), as it makes its public debut, is a well-organized code. . . . But will it remain so? The history of American cataloging codes has a pertinent lesson to teach. . . . Let us hope that the AACR will not become 'a thing of shreds and patches' as a consequence of solving tomorrow's problems in terms of categories not principles. With its logical organization, the new code should be an effective tool for the cataloger to use, and it should facilitate both in-service and classroom instruction. The recombination of the rules for description with the rules for entry and the inclusion of the rules for special materials contribute to its effectiveness. The Appendix on punctuation and diacritics is a welcome addition, but the absence of the transliteration tables from this volume is regrettable. The index . . . seems to fulfill its functions well. . . . The AACR appears to be an improvement over previous editions of the ALA code as a systematic body of instructions for practitioners. But will the entries it prescribes improve the catalog? . . . Even though some improvement is probable . . . the catalog user need not expect to find all of his problems solved." E. L. Tate

Library Q 37:394 O '67 1250w

Reviewed by Audrey Smith
LRTS 12:368 summer '68 330w

ANGRIST, STANLEY W. Order and chaos; laws of energy and entropy [by] Stanley W. Angrist [and] Loren G. Hepler; drawings by Ed Fisher, Jr. 237p $5.95 Basic bks.

536 Thermodynamics 67-17388

Two professors at Carnegie Institute of Technology, in the course of explaining about the laws of energy and their application, describe the lives of some of the men who have contributed most importantly to the subject. "In addition to the technical applications that are generally associated with thermodynamics, we have written about cultural implications in such diverse fields as poetry and the origins of life." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The authors attempted an almost impossible task: to explain to the layman the very important laws of thermodynamics dealing with the relation of heat to other forms of energy. They were successful in presenting the subject accurately and in a manner that should serve as a model to all writers of textbooks and popularizers of science. . . . The biographical sketches, the cultural implications, and the humorous anecdotes heighten the reader's interest and enjoyment. The line drawings are well integrated with the text and are quite effective. The index is good. . . . Highly recommended for general education and physical science collections."

Choice 5:225 Ap '68 200w

"[This book] does not hesitate to use all the specialized language of the field—enthalpy and entropy, equilibrium and state function and randomness—but somehow manages to bring each term into the picture by making its meaning as clear as words can hope to be. The authors' claim in the last chapter to have avoided mathematics entirely is not quite correct by lay standards. The worst of the math, however, is little if any past eighth-grade level. . . . My chemistry students will be reading Order and Chaos this year, by fiat." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 43:767 D '67 260w

"[This book is aimed] at the intelligent non-specialist. Though the reader needs little mathematical knowledge, he will find much intellectual meat here. The three basic thermodynamic laws are explained clearly, but without oversimplification, and the vast importance of these laws in the history of man and of the universe is stressed. Occasional tongue-in-cheek asides and footnotes enliven the discussion. Humanists and scientists alike will enjoy this volume. Recommended for college and public libraries; any research library that welcomes good popular works should also consider this." J. W. Weigel

ANGRIST, S W.—Continued

Library J 92:2421 Je 15 '67 180w

Reviewed by B. B. Lane

Library J 93:298 Ja 15 '68 170w [YA]

ANOUILH, JEAN. The cavern; a play; tr. by Lucienne Hill. 86p $3.95; pa $1.75 Hill & Wang 842 66-26029

The setting is an aristocratic 1900 French home. The cavern "is the kitchen of the house where the murder takes place and where much of the action transpires." (Library J)

"Anouilh's disjointed 1961 drama is a mélange of early themes—purity and corruption, youth and age, idealism and reality, and the irreconcilable world of masters and servants—and a later interest in political history. . . . Despite gripping moments and a poignant death scene [this] is not one of Anouilh's more memorable works and falls between the sublime Becket [BRD 1961] and the ideologically fascinating Poor Bitos. Hill's translation is professional, except for some awkward Anglicisms. Indispensable for Anouilh admirers; merely interesting to students of French drama."

Choice 3:1131 F '67 250w

"This is a simple, somewhat romantic play, a detective (murder) story. . . . The causes of the crime, past and present, and the almost-beside-the-point dénouement, are set forth with Anouilh's deceptively easy style. . . . But the cavern is more than a locale: it is the hidden places of the heart where hurt has been overwhelming, anguish huge and pain frightfully realized. The plot, in all, is a sad, even ugly story, exquisitely realized. The climactic scene is wonderful, the work of a very gifted playwright. A fine play." Irving Wortis

Library J 91:3758 Ag '66 120w

ANTHOLOGIA GRAECA. See Greek anthology

ANTHONY, EDWARD, jr. auth. Jungle for sale. See Trefflich, H.

ANTONINUS, BROTHER. The rose of solitude. 125p $3.95 Doubleday

811

67-12838

"This book of poems, a love poem sequence, is a continuation of a spiritual autobiography begun directly in the last poem of Brother Antoninus's last book, 'The Hazards of Holiness' [BRD 1963]. In this book, he attempts a Christian meditation and confession, a revelation of the mystery of man and nature, of Me and the Not-Me, of man becoming Man through Woman. The rose of the poem is a woman, physical and real, and is as really Woman through whom man loses himself and finds himself and God." (Va Q R)

Reviewed by R. F. Deen

Commonweal 89:416 D 20 '68 500w

Reviewed by H. C. Burke

Library J 92:2163 Je 1 '67 210w

"Brother Antoninus is a poet capable of magnificence when he deals with nature. I do not say he is a 'nature poet'—but he is magnificent when he deals with nature. He is also magnificent when he prays. The trouble is that he is not magnificent when he deals with women. . . . [The book] is designed to be read as a single coherent section of a continuing spiritual autobiography. . . . When the poet addresses God in his anguish, his poetry is fresh and alive, for all its pain. When he attempts to deal with the woman, his language becomes as abstract as she." James Wright

N Y Times Bk R p16 O 8 '67 1050w

"The poems, as religious meditation often is and must perhaps be, are often abstract, but with a visionary abstraction which is unfamiliar to modern eyes and thus may seem wrong. It is not. The book has a religious and a human intensity that transcends its occasional failures and is often alien abstraction. It is the poem of a thinking and living man; more important, it is the poem of a praying man, in fact a prayer."

Va Q R 44:xvi winter '68 220w

APPEL, BENJAMIN. Why the Chinese are the way they are; with maps by Samuel H. Bryant. 164p $4.95 Little

915.1 China (People's Republic of China)—Juvenile literature. China—History—Juvenile literature 68-11109

The author attempts to explain contemporary China for American children. "The first chapter treats the Communist Long March of 1934-35; the next five deal with major historical events, and the remainder describe the Communist take-over in 1949 and subsequent developments to the present. Each chapter begins with a number of questions and statements asked or made by young people. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"[Similar to the author's] earlier book, Why the Russians Are the Way They Are [BRD 1966]. . . . In order to show his readers clearly and persuasively why Chinese policies, attitudes and values are what they are, the author attempts with some success to see the world as it appears through Chinese eyes. Mr. Appel, like many writers of children's history, tends to reduce complex processes to simplistic clichés. . . . There is also an unhappy mixture of intellectual levels in the book. Some passages are so naive and elementary as to imply a very young audience indeed, but other passages and aspects, such as the unannotated bibliography of adult books, are inappropriate for such a reader."

Book World p20 Je 2 '68 240w

"In 11 short chapters Mr. Appel attempts to provide a reasoned picture of China past and present. . . . This is a good, generally favorable picture which acknowledges the improvements made by the Red regime and closes with a plea for mutual understanding between America and China." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:1806 Ap 15 '68 100w

"Four of the 11 chapters explain—at least to Mr. Appel's satisfaction—how fruitfully 'As in the great dynasties, the 'Red mandarins' govern a vast land which has both rice and a sword, including the atomic sword, to protect her paddies and brand-new factories.' This is, of course, the picture that the Chinese Communists have carefully constructed for those European visitors who, during the 19 years of Communist rule, have been permitted to see [China]. . . . [It may be years before readers of this book] will have the knowledge and the perspective to judge how well [the author] has understood or how close he has gotten to the truth." M. E. Boorman

N Y Times Bk R p16 J1 7 '68 300w

APSLER, ALFRED. Iron chancellor: Otto von Bismarck. 189p maps $3.50 Messner

B or 92 Bismarck, Otto, Fürst von—Juvenile literature 68-25094

A biography of the Prussian statesman who "united nineteenth-century Germany, and laid the foundation for two world wars." Chronology Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"The author manages to weave so many anecdotes into this fascinating biography of Bismarck that he is able to create a real flesh and blood character. . . . This book will open new pages of history to the young reader."

Best Sell 28:322 N 1 '68 140w

Horn Bk 44:702 D '68 190w

"An emotional biography that does justice neither to the subject nor to history. Constant use of derogatory language and a refusal to grant any but selfish motives to Bismarck result in a biased portrayal. Bismarck's attitude toward the general populace is judged by 20th rather than 19th Century standards and his actual achievements are brushed aside. The use of slang . . . and stilted fictional dialogue underline the inadequacy of the book." D. Y. Shaffer

Library J 93:3975 O 15 '68 100w

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF AMERICA. Archaeological discoveries in the Holy Land. 220p il $12.50 Crowell

913.35 Israel—Antiquities. Jordan—Antiquities 67-23673

This is a "survey of pre-biblical, biblical, and post-biblical Palestinian archaeology as it has emerged from the last two decades of excavation. In 23 chapters the [authors] deal with such themes as 'The Dawn of History in Southern Palestine,' 'Jericho: Oldest Walled City,' 'Gibeon: Where the Sun Stood Still,' and 'The Hospice of the Knights of St. John in Akko.'" (Library J) Most of the material has previously appeared in the journal Archaeology, from 1948 to 1967. Index.

"The total absence of a bibliography makes the volume useless as a reference work, even on a very modest undergraduate scale. . . . Students interested in a brief but concise survey of archaeological achievements in the area should be directed to Albright's little book, The Archaeology of Palestine (rev. ed., 1960), which provides a much better survey of the overall accomplishments than the present volume. Not recommended."

Choice 5:392 My '68 130w

"Two dozen specialists have pooled their expert knowledge to make up an excellent survey. . . . An introduction, a chart of 'Archaeological Periods of the Holy Land,' a map of Israel-Jordan, biographical notes (on the contributors), . . . together with 200 illustrations, help make this volume a most useful reference work for college, high school, and public libraries." H. M. Orlinsky

Library J 93:188 Ja 15 '68 130w

"Serious archaeological anthologies are scarce, but this is one and a good one. The biographical data on the contributors reads like a 'Who's Who in Near Eastern Archaeology,' and the volume documents in a semi-professional style the astonishing progress in the field in the last few years. . . . The illustrations are black and white but clear and to the point. Interest in this five volume should not be confined to buffs and Biblical students."

Va Q R 44:cxxxiii summer '68 150w

ARCHER, JULES. The dictators. 179p il $4.95 Hawthorn bks.

920 Dictators—Juvenile literature 67-24002

The author covers the lives and rise to power of eighteen modern dictators in fourteen countries, "from Lenin, Ataturk, and Chiang Kai-shek to Castro, Tito, Sukarno, Nasser." [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Mr. Archer emphasizes the background and personal attributes of each [man] using rather trite phrases . . . in a journalistic style. Although the treatment lacks real depth, it is factually accurate, and each individual is depicted in terms of the contemporary political and social scene. Good introductory material, this book updates and supplements Albert Carr's Men of Power [BRD 1956] and will stimulate teen-age interest." Frances Fleming

Library J 92:3858 O 15 '67 120w

"Probably the easy way to teach the recent past is by way of the dictators. . . . As a crash course in fundamentals, [this book] has its distinct virtues. . . . The author has a wonderfully simple point of view: dictators who died poor are better than dictators who died rich. The Communist examples, even Stalin, are given a better image than is the general custom. Mao and Lenin are pretty fine here; Chiang is awful. And so is Ataturk, who was only the salvation of the modern Turkish nation. On the other hand, Franco and Salazar come off better than one would expect." David Cort

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p26 My 5 '68 220w

ARCHER, JULES. Science explorer: Roy Chapman Andrews. 191p $3.50 Messner

B or 92 Andrews, Roy Chapman—Juvenile literature 68-14945

An account of the career of the naturalist, explorer and author which "describes his wanderlust, his temperament, and . . . his enthusiasm for animal life. . . . The book traces Andrews' many expeditions for the American Museum of Natural History, from his early studies of whales to the collection of the first known dinosaur eggs. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"This is a fascinating account. . . . The author has captured the spirit of excitement and adventure that Andrews found in his scientific work." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:62 My 1 '68 60w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:446 Ag '68 190w

Reviewed by J. F. Waters

Library J 93:377 F 15 '68 80w

ARCHER, JULES. The unpopular ones. 200p il $3.95 Crowell-Collier press

920 U.S.—Biography—Juvenile literature 68-20746

This book examines the lives and beliefs of fifteen Americans, some famous, and some obscure, who were persecuted in their time for their minority opinions. They include Roger Williams, John Peter Zenger, Thomas Paine, Horace Greeley, Henry David Thoreau, Amelia Bloomer, Eugene Debs, Woodrow Wilson, Margaret Sanger, Robert Oppenheimer, J. William Fulbright, Anne Royall, Joseph Palmer, and Bethenia Owens. Bibliography. Index. "Ages twelve to sixteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"These Americans voiced their ideas by virtue of the precepts of the government of the United States bestowing this privilege on its citizens. Ironically, these unpopular opinions have become part of our way of life. . . . As demonstrating the importance of tolerance of free expression, this is recommended for all libraries."

Best Sell 28:373 D 1 '68 110w

"[The author] makes an admirable and timely plea for respect for the minority view. . . . History repeats itself, of course, but Mr. Archer's style of presentation does too, so that the book will be best appreciated if read in short takes."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p55 N 3 '68 80w

ARCHER, JULES. World citizen: Woodrow Wilson. 191p $3.50 Messner

B or 92 Wilson, Woodrow—Juvenile literature 67-21614

Biography of a war-time President of the United States who received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1920. Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"[This] clear and concise picture of . . . Wilson will help young readers to appreciate his progressive nature in the early days of this century."

Best Sell 27:391 Ja 1 '68 100w

"The fullness with which Latin-American affairs, World War I, the peace conference and the concluding months of the Wilson administration are treated distinguish this biography from previous books about Wilson for young people. Mr. Archer's political savvy and skill in pointing up areas of controversy add greatly to the value of his book." J. K. Meyers

Library J 92:3859 O 15 '67 90w

ARDIZZONE, AINGELDA, Jr. auth. The little girl and the tiny doll. See Ardizzone, E.

ARDIZZONE, EDWARD. The little girl and the tiny doll, by Edward & Aingelda Ardizzone. unp col il $2.75 Delacorte press

67-19770

"A little girl notices a tiny doll tucked away among the frozen peas in a grocer's deepfreeze; she worries about her catching cold, makes clothes for her, and is eventually rewarded by being allowed to take her home." (TLS) "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"Small doll-loving girls will be drawn to [this story]. . . . Edward Ardizzone's collaboration with his granddaughter (it's her first book) is a great success." Polly Goodwin

Book World p16 F 25 '68 100w

"The book is as cold and stiff as frozen foods with Ardizzone's illustrations alternating between purple and jaundiced yellow for color."

M. S. Shapiro

Library J 92:4241 N 15 '67 50w

ARDIZZONE, EDWARD—Continued

"The delightful drawings that accompany the text are in Edward Ardizzone's familiar, redoubtable style. Robert Benchley's description of the engravings in French newspapers—'presumably etched on pieces of bread'—came to mind as I tried to think of a way to describe Mr. Ardizzone's pictures." Janet Malcolm
 New Yorker 43:158 D 16 '67 280w
 TLS p1088 N 24 '66 40w

AREGGER, HANS. Highrise building and urban design [by] Hans Aregger and Otto Glaus [tr. by Maria Krohl]. 199p $20 Praeger

724 Architecture, Modern—20th century. City planning 67-18826

"The authors first present theories they have derived from their own extensive experience in all aspects of town planning. Their ideas are illustrated in a section which gives examples from the work of such leading architects as Wright, Mies van der Rohe, Kahn, Le Corbusier, Niemeyer, and Aalto. The third part of the book is devoted to an . . . analysis of twenty-two highrise apartment buildings and gives information about . . . acoustics, light, ventilation, and division of floor area. The final section of the book brings together theoretical and practical considerations in a discussion of the future role of highrise architecture in city planning." (Publisher's note) The text is given in English, with notes to the illustrations in German, English and French.

"Like many other questions discussed in the first 70 pages of the book, definitions depend on which side of the Atlantic they are made. . . . In spite of the solid good sense [the book] makes, it is only partially related to the American situation. The nine examples [discussed] under the part titled 'Documentations' are an extremely well selected group of buildings, all classical examples of the type. Most useful of all are the 22 buildings analyzed in the succeeding section. Each is systematically and completely presented in photographs, drawings, and statistical data."
 Choice 5:469 Je '68 170w

"This absorbing treatise of the problems and the obvious advantages of highrise buildings in the social and aesthetic context of the city will interest not only architects and planners but everyone concerned with urban problems. Hans Aregger and Otto Glaus, both Swiss architects, treat the subject comprehensively and with dispassionate intelligence and wit." Wolf von Eckardt

Library J 92:4402 D 1 '67 100w

"There are few subjects on which there is a greater divergence of opinions than on the role of high buildings in the townscape. Yet . . . [the authors'] arguments are full of commonsense which should help to clarify this complex subject. But even [they] make a number of sweeping assertions. . . . The twenty-seven attractive individual examples chosen by Otto Glaus . . . constitute only a minute and by no means representative fraction of the total high-building output in recent years which is unfortunately well below the standard of the illustrated examples. But even these . . . are largely shown in isolation and, in spite of the book's title, it is by no means made clear what contribution they make to the wider townscape."
 TLS p246 Mr 14 '68 500w

ARENDT, HANNAH. Men in dark times. 272p $5.95 Harcourt

920 Authors 68-24381

The author of On Revolution (BRD 1963, 1964) and other books presents a "collection of essays and lectures, written over a period of ten years, about men and women whose lives and writings have been a light in 'dark times.' [They range] from literary criticism to biographical sketches." (Library J) Contents: On humanity in dark times; thoughts about Lessing; Rosa Luxemburg; 1871-1919; Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli: a Christian on St. Peter's chair from 1958 to 1963; Karl Jaspers: a laudatio; Karl Jaspers: citizen of the world?; Isak Dinesen; 1885-1963; Herman Broch; 1886-1951; Walter Benjamin; 1892-1940; Bertolt Brecht; 1898-1956; Waldemar Gurian; 1903-1954; Randall Jarrell; 1914-1965. Some of the material in this book appeared previously in such periodicals as The New York Review of Books and The New Yorker. Index.

"One wonders why Miss Arendt, who writes English with facility, should not have translated or rewritten these essays if she felt they were worthy of republication in this form. That she hasn't furthers the impression that this is a hasty, if not opportunistic, collection." J. A. Maherty

Best Sell 28:408 Ja 1 '69 550w

"From the versatile pen of this brilliant writer we have a fascinating collection. Some [of the chapters] have been translated from the German. All are interesting, but I liked the essays on Luxemburg and Brecht best. For general collections." Jean Deuss
 Library J 93:3548 O 1 '68 90w

"The three most important essays, occupying half the book, are on Hermann Broch, Walter Benjamin and Bertolt Brecht. There are a lively portrait of Isak Dinesen . . . and a very interesting political analysis of Rosa Luxemburg and her tragic destiny based on J. P. Nettl's excellent 1966 study [Rosa Luxemburg BRD 1966]. Pope John XXIII's 'Journal of the Soul' [BRD 1965] offers Miss Arendt a point of departure for a characterization of the Pontiff that includes colorful reminiscences of contemporaries and anecdotes [she] heard in Rome. . . . These are intellectual, not psychological or literary, profiles, and although [the book] is designed as a book about persons and not issues, Miss Arendt is incessantly dealing with problems of ethics and political behavior, of social change and historical conflicts. This is the core of her discourse and the reason for her long and at times sententious digressions." Marc Slonim

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 17 '68 1150w

"It is a rare publisher (or author) who can pass up the opportunity to fill out such a book with lesser pieces, transient or specially directed essays that need never, in all justice, have been broadcast beyond their initial audience. In this category fall five of Miss Arendt's articles: a vulgar and vapid halo for John XXIII; two academic eulogies (for Karl Jaspers and Waldemar Gurian) in the sentimental, mock-Roman, lifeless style of that nineteenth-century genre; a gauche, informal memoir of Randall Jarrell, and an essay-review of Isak Dinesen . . . that is simply very badly written. But after subtracting these five we are left with more than 200 pages of substance." David Littlejohn

Sat R 51:51 D 7 '68 1200w

ARETINO, PIETRO. The letters of Pietro Aretino [tr.] by Thomas Caldecot Chubb. (Archon bk) 362p $10 Shoe String

856 67-12481

A selection of two-hundred sixty-one letters written by the sixteenth century Italian who wrote "plays, dialogues, [and] sacred and secular verse." (Library J)

"Much of [Aretino's writing] was scurrilous enough to win banishment for the author, or was shamelessly obsequious in pursuit of material favors. [The chief value of the] letters selected and translated by Mr. Chubb, an accomplished student of the period, lies more in their revelation of a popular Renaissance genre than in their literary merit. This is the only extensive collection of the letters in English and as such it is suitable for the medium-sized or large Renaissance collection." R. E. Stevens

Library J 93:80 Ja 1 '68 150w

"[Aretino was] the first successful hack writer, gossip columnist and literary blackmailer. . . . It is [his] tactful lack of principle that makes many of his letters unrewarding. To what self-aggrandizing purpose, the reader wonders, is this succession of platitudes and fine sentiments? More interesting are Aretino's letters about his love for fine foods, fine women and fine clothes."

N Y Times Bk R p28 N 26 '67 220w

ARGENTI, PHILIP P. The occupation of Chios by the Germans and their administration of the island; described in contemporary documents. 375p il maps $22.50 Cambridge

949.5 Greece, Modern—History—German occupation, 1940-1945. World War, 1939-1945—Chios (Island). Chios (Island) [66-10077]

"Argenti, Cultural Counsellor at the Royal Greek Embassy, London, . . . in the last 35 years has written a series of monographs on the history of Chios since the 11th century. . . . [This narrative describes not only the] German occupation and administration of this land in the Aegean Archipelago, but also its liberation by Anglo-Greek forces in 1944 and [the] Communist uprisings from 1944 until early 1948. The narrative is followed by a . . . section of Greek, German, and British documentary material." (Choice) Chronological table. Index.

"The present work is roughly one-third history—presented in the most painstaking detail—and two-thirds documentation, the documents being presented in the original language. . . . Text and documents are supplemented by maps, plans, and photographs. This careful and scholarly presentation is to some extent marred by a distinct royalist bias and a tendency to present events, such as the Communist rising of March 1948, without reference to their national context." R. V. Burks

Am Hist R 73:857 F '68 340w

"A highly specialized piece of scholarly work. . . . If this study were about an Aegean island of strategic importance during the war, such as Lemnos, even an expensive volume of such detail would have more appeal. It is the only major work readily available on the subject, yet only large university libraries and libraries with related special collections need purchase it. Helpful table correlating principal events in Chios with those in other theaters of war; excellent index."

Choice 4:1032 N '67 170w

"Thanks to Dr. Argenti . . . we know more about this large and in many ways exceptional island than about most parts of the Mediterranean east of Italy. . . . Dr. Argenti has assembled a collection of documents, mostly in Greek with some in German or English, concerning the military and civil government of these three years, conditions on the island, contacts with the outside world, resistance, &c. These documents are summarized and digested in a series of short prefatory chapters by Dr. Argenti, but maddeningly the documents themselves are nowhere indexed although they constitute two-thirds of the book."

TLS p290 Ap 6 '67 410w

ARGYLE, MICHAEL, auth. Social theory and economic change. See Seminar on the theory of economic change, University of Edinburgh, 1965

ARIETI, SILVANO. The intrapsychic self; feeling, cognition, and creativity in health and mental illness. 487p $12.50 Basic bks.

150 Psychology. Psychology, Pathological. Creation (Literary, artistic, etc.) 67-21804

A "professor of clinical psychiatry at New York Medical College and editor of the American Handbook of Psychiatry [v 1 and 2 BRD 1961, v3 BRD 1967] . . . has divided this book into three parts, 'The Evolving of the Self,' 'The Psychopathological Transformation,' and 'The Rise of Creativity: From Primary to Tertiary Process.' . . . He discusses such topics as instincts, protoemotions, 'exoccepts,' 'endoccepts,' teleological causality, unconscious phenomena of cultural origin, unifying theory of cognition, conation, and the aesthetic process." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"An extensive, clinically oriented presentation of various psychological conceptualizations related to the inner life of man. . . . Several case studies are reported to illuminate some of the pathological classifications. The overall framework of the text is philosophical and theoretical rather than empirical. The bibliography is comprehensive even though there appears to be a dearth of references later than the early 1960's. A useful text for professional reference and senior or graduate level courses. There is no previously published work with which to compare this monumental, integrative effort."

Choice 5:559 Je '68 200w

"Dr. Arieti's approach is comprehensive, for he depicts not only the continuum of man's psychological evolution but its 'vertical' detours during the entire history of its unravelling. . . . Throughout his effort at cohering the whole is evident. In all, this is a stimulating and very provocative study. . . . The reader will have much to decide for himself about the bases and the sense of these approaches. Numerous questions are opened which will make this a very challenging volume to the very serious thinker in the fields of psychology and psychiatry. Highly recommended for all special collections." Louis De Rosis

Library J 93:561 F 1 '68 200w

ARKIN, FRIEDA. The cook's companion; a dictionary of culinary tips and terms; drawings by John Alcorn. 172p $4.50 Doubleday

641.503 Cookery—Dictionaries 68-10546

The main portion of this book is "an alphabetical arrangement of foods with information about preparation, cooking, and storing. The second part . . . is a dictionary of cooking and menu terms including French, German, and Italian words." (Library J)

"[Frieda Arkin's] suggestions are equally useful in preventing kitchen disasters or for use after they have occurred." Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 My 12 '68 50w

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 16 '68 300w

"This is a handy book to have on the kitchen shelf to reach for easily and often. . . . Frieda Arkin has included interesting items for beginning cooks and for the more experienced. She tells how to store and freeze cheese, how to keep whipped cream in shape for later use, and gives other equally helpful hints. . . . A nice book to own; libraries should find it a useful item for quick reference." G. J. Kubal

Library J 93:79 Ja 1 '68 110w

ARMAH, AYI KWEI. The beautiful ones are not yet born; a novel. 215p $4.95 Houghton

68-19987

"The main character in this novel, the 'Man,' is a lower middle-class civil servant in the newly free country of Ghana. Oya is his wife. Koomson and his wife Estie are their friends, and Koomson is a minister in the government of Nkrumah. . . . [The 'Man'] is too honest to bribe and steal as . . . [other] men are doing, and . . . is scorned by his wife because she cannot have the things that Koomson gets for Estie. . . . The climax of the story comes with the coup that overthrew the regime of Nkrumah." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 119:564 N 30 '68 60w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 60w

"There is little plot, but much background and atmosphere. . . . In writing this moving account, Mr. Armah has . . . not successfully handled one detail: the images of filth, corruption, and decay. They are, understandably, the objective correlatives of what he is depicting. . . . But there are too many to be artistically satisfying. . . . Taken altogether this book presents a dramatic contrast between a single man of integrity and the many who sought luxuries. . . . Presumably 'the man' is one of the 'beautiful' ones, born out of his time, a flower amid filth." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 28:213 S 1 '68 600w

"Sociologists may read this book for its timely reflection of conditions in Ghana, but Ayi Kwei Armah's belief that realism comes only by spelling out every crude action, by rubbing the reader's nose in every vile smell, makes it impossible to recommend the book generally for library collections." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:2686 Jl '68 200w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:221 S 9 '68 150w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:1121 N 5 '68 390w

Reviewed by J. K. Sale

N Y Times Bk R p34 S 22 '68 430w

"Armah's handling of the clerk's ordeal is, to put it mildly, unusual. In fact, quite a few readers are going to find it revolting. . . . The extent to which Armah relies on human waste to symbolize the decay of personal integrity is all but breathtaking. . . . It calls for no small gift to expound on excreta and neither offend nor bore, even greater ability if this unlovely topic is to be made valid within the context of a novel. Armah brings it off. . . . Ordure and despair may set the tone of the story, but they don't dominate it entirely. Armah often utilizes a healthy sense of humor to underline his message. . . . [This is] a valid and uncommonly arresting view of the abuse of power." Charles Miller

Sat R 51:24 Ag 31 '68 1000w

ARMENS, SVEN MAGNUS. Archetypes of the family in literature. 264p $6.95 Univ. of Wash. press

809 Literature—History and criticism 66-19562

"J. J. Bachoven, Erich Neumann, and C. G. Jung provide the philosophic structure upon which Professor Armens builds his study of literary manifestations of . . . the tension between the maternal and the paternal worlds. These opposed worlds are presented in two symbols, the 'Physical Hearth' and the 'Sacred Fire.' Armens traces these two fires and the complex of antinomies they suggest through lyric poems from several literatures and through plays by Sophocles, Aeschylus, and Shakespeare." (Va Q R)

"Somewhat curiously, Agamemnon becomes a 'phallic hero,' Oedipus a 'solar hero' (shades of Andrew Lang!), Hamlet the 'archetypical child' and Lear the 'unwanted child.' Of Hamlet we are told that 'the entire play reflects a repetition of the Arunta puberty ritual.' Ernest Jones and Maud Bodkin did better. One wonders why Armens did not study the family in a more suitable body of literature: in the great Icelandic family sagas, in the Chinese novels, . . . or in studies of family dislocation, such as Cry the Beloved Country [by A. Paton, BRD 1948] or Nectar in a Sieve [by K. P. Taylor, BRD 1955]. In such works the hypothesis might prove usable."

Choice 4:812 O '67 160w

Reviewed by John Goode

New Statesman 73:656 My 12 '67 40w

"In the handling of large ideas, Armens is adept; in reading individual poems he is often careless. . . . Yet in spite of occasional obvious errors, [his] thesis is so masterfully argued that it compels assent."

Va Q R 43:ixix spring '67 150w

ARMOUR, RICHARD. A dozen dinosaurs: Paul Galdone drew the pictures. 32p $3.95 McGraw

568 Dinosaurs—Poetry 67-21593

A collection of verses about twelve different types of dinosaurs. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"[Armour] seems to be trying to stoop to what he has been told is the child's level. On the theory that every youngster is crazy about Brontosaurus and buddies, he has produced [this book]. . . . He has over-researched the subject, and [the] cartoonish illustrations cannot really offset the basic solemnity of the endless quatrains." Eve Merriam

Book World p10 D 24 '67 70w

"Exploiting small children's boundless enthusiasm for prehistoric animals, the author discusses in his lighthearted, breezy verse the habitat, physique, and food preferences of twelve North American dinosaurs. . . . Children will be delighted by the color-washed drawings of the fearsome monsters." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:52 F '68 100w

"[The dinosaurs'] curious shapes and polysyllabic names provide Mr. Armour with plenty of material for his playful but, in general, scientifically accurate verses. Typical Galdone illustrations in green and orange echo the rhymes' buoyant approach to natural prehistory." Janet French

Library J 92:4601 D 15 '67 60w

ARMOUR, RICHARD. Odd old mammals; animals after the dinosaurs: Paul Galdone drew the pictures. 36p $3.95 McGraw

811 Mammals. Fossil—Juvenile literature 68-24338

The author describes in verse "some of the mammals—Coryphodon, Glyptodon, Alticamelus—that appeared in the Cenozoic Era. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by A. D. Schweibish

Library J 93:3953 O 15 '68 60w

"The breezy, irreverent tone and spanking rhythm of Armour's verses make highly enjoyable the solid facts that are interspersed among nonsensical poems about assorted beasts of the Cenozoic Era. . . . The large pictures of ferocious creatures have just a wee touch of the antic." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:66 N 9 '68 90w

ARMSTRONG, A. H., ed. The Cambridge history of later Greek and early medieval philosophy. 710p $18.50 Cambridge

182 Philosophy, Ancient. Philosophy, Medieval 66-12305

This volume discusses "Greek Philosophy from Plato to Plotinus; Philo and the Beginnings of Christian Thought; Plotinus; The Later Neoplatonists, Marius Victorinus and Augustine; the Greek Christian Platonist Tradition from the Cappadocians to Maximus and Eriugena; Western Christian Thought from Boethius to Anselm; and Early Islamic Philosophy." (Library J) Bibliography, Index of ancient and medieval works referred to in the text. General index. Index of Greek terms.

"[This volume] will become a standard work of reference, but it is much more than a reference book. Although primarily concerned with philosophy, the authors do full justice to the intimate interrelations between philosophy and theology. . . . Recommended for every college and university library. . . . Excellent bibliography."

Choice 4:1391 F '68 190w

"This is not a history in the usual sense, nor does it deal with the panoramic vistas summoned up by the title. . . . it is rather a series of surveys and essays on the later Platonic tradition. The parts are very uneven—in genre, not quality. The most disappointing is Walzer's exceedingly brief sketch of early Islamic philosophy. . . . Chadwick's essays on Philo, Justin, Clement, and Origen are so slight as to be almost pointless in this context. Armstrong on Plotinus and Markus on Victorinus and Augustine are more substantial and beautifully done. . . . Merlan's informative survey of recent work on pre-Neoplatonism is worth having." F. E. Peters

Class World 61:70 O '67 230w

"This work of masterly scholarship . . . succeeds admirably in revealing not only the incredible variations within an apparently unified viewpoint such as Platonism, but also the divergent modern versions of what the Hellenists and post-Hellenists said and meant." William Gerber

Library J 92:1494 Ap 1 '67 120w

TLS p228 Mr 7 '68 2300w

ARMSTRONG, CHARLOTTE. The balloon man. 253p $4.95 Coward-McCann

68-17464

"Sherry Reynard becomes the helpless victim of forces she cannot identify. After her small son is hurled against the kitchen wall by his father who finds the drug [LSD] his only comfort in an unsuccessful struggle to be a writer, Sherry moves to Mrs. Peabody's boarding house to be close to the hospital where Johnny is recovering. The atmosphere there is friendly, if odd, until the arrival of Cliff Storm, an old friend of her husband." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 118:622 My 4 '68 40w

"[This] is less than we could expect from the author: it suffers from sheer verbiage, poor plotting and lacks credibility."

Best Sell 29:94 My 15 '68 20w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 22 '68 70w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1921 My 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:3994 O 15 '68 120w [YA]

"After reading [this novel] I wondered how best to define [the author's] magic. Part of it must be this: she writes so vividly, so intimately, that the reader is swept into the story, becomes an unnoticed player in each scene, becomes personally involved in the outcome. How else can her new novel, built of such familiar stuff as a young mother, her son, her failure-prone husband and his unyielding, unloving father become so unforgettable a reading experience?" A. J. Habin

N Y Times Bk R p51 My 26 '68 70w

"This mother-in-distress shocker . . . is written with the author's expected finesse." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 50w

ARMSTRONG, D. M. A materialist theory of the mind. 372p $8.50 Humanities press

128 Mind and body. Philosophy 67-28026

"Armstrong (Sydney University) divides his study into three parts. The first is a critical survey of important theories of mind (dualism, the attribute theory, behaviorism) and a statement of his own central-state hypothesis, which holds that mind is simply the central nervous system. . . . [Part II contains an] explanation of 'the concept of mind' in causal terms. . . . [Part III concerns] scientific proposals regarding mind." (Choice)

"[An] important book."

Choice 5:736 S '68 110w

"Scratch an Australian philosopher and you will find a central-state materialist. . . . [The author] is one of the leaders of this movement. He has now written a book in which he makes the most thoroughgoing attempt that I have yet seen to meet all the objections to which his doctrine is exposed. Although I do not think that he has been successful, he deserves credit for his honesty and ingenuity. His book is a marked improvement on Professor [J.] Smart's comparatively slapdash Philosophy and Scientific Realism [BRD 1964, 1965]. . . . As so often in philosophy, the strongest argument in favour of [Armstrong's] position is the difficulty of the alternatives to it." A. J. Aver

New Statesman 75:453 Ap 5 '68 800w

"[This book is] a systematic attempt to provide a philosophical analysis of mental phenomena consistent with the tenets of central state materialism. As such it is a most impressive piece of work. . . . There is no doubt, however, that Professor Armstrong frequently uses some very blunt weapons; the arguments tend to be presented in a 'take it or leave it' manner, and the reader may feel that he is being bludgeoned into acceptance of a position, if he feels like accepting it at all. . . . This book will not, despite the impressiveness of its scope, prevent the argument from going on."

TLS p899 Ag 22 '63 500w

ARMSTRONG, JOHN A. Ideology, politics, and government in the Soviet Union: an introduction. rev ed 173p maps $5.50 Praeger

320.947 Russia—Politics and government—1953-. Communist party (Russia) 67-20470

First published in 1962, this new edition contains "a great deal of revision. . . . insofar as inclusion of current material is concerned. While he largely keeps his previous framework, [Armstrong's] focus is on current politics in the U.S.S.R. The fourth chapter includes his article published in Soviet Studies (April 1966) dealing with the problem of elite interests. New material is also used in the sixth chapter where he applies functionalist theory to the question of nationalities." (Choice) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Chapters 4 and 6 are the best. Great emphasis is paid to the coercive nature of the system, as in the 1962 edition. Three up-dated organizational charts, a map of the nationalities of the U.S.S.R., and a table of the major nationalities of the Soviet Union are also new. Armstrong's book is seemingly more biased than [A. G.] Meyer's The Soviet Political System [BRD 1966]. . . . Nonetheless as an introduction it is up to date, and students will find it relatively clearly written."

Choice 4:1440 F '68 200w

"[The] professor of political science at the University of Wisconsin explains the Soviet ideology, the Party as the center of power, the apparatus with which this power is exercised and enforced, the nationalities in Soviet Russia, and finally the economic system. The book, intended 'as a useful elementary guide to the Soviet political system,' serves this purpose well because Mr. Armstrong's very clear presentation gives a careful, simple, but in no way superficial picture. Useful for pertinent collections of educational institutions and for larger public libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:4422 D 1 '67 150w

ARMSTRONG, MARJORIE M., it. auth. The indomitable Baptists. See Armstrong, O. K.

ARMSTRONG, O. K. The indomitable Baptists: a narrative of their role in shaping American history [by] O. K. Armstrong and Marjorie M. Armstrong. 392p $5.95 Doubleday

286 Baptists

67-20926

"In two introductory chapters, the Armstrongs sketch the origins of the Baptists in Europe; their approach throughout is biographical, with occasional statistical summaries and organizational surveys, brought down to the mid-20th Century. In addition to local church development and theology, they have written chapters on missions, women's work, social concerns, Sunday schools, hymnody, and ecumenical relations." (Library J) Index.

"The first of this series, The Congregational Way [by M. L. Starkey, BRD 1966], suffered from numerous deficiencies. . . . Alas, this book has less to merit purchase than the former had. The cataloguing of grievous substandard aspects of the book would try the reader's patience (among them, serious omissions, a singsong series of Baptist heroes to the neglect of the failures and renegades, a dated and very limited bibliography, theological ignorance). . . . Forget it."

Choice 5:208 Ap '68 200w

"Packed into the book are excellent accounts of missionary endeavors here and abroad, and of the Baptist emphasis on evangelism and religious education. This is indeed a valuable addition to our denomination's literature. It does not pretend to be an interpretation of the Baptist place in the world's ecclesiastical structure. It is not an encyclopedia. But it is unique in that it pulls together exciting incidents and notable personalities to highlight 'the Baptist story.'" Brooks Hays

Christian Century 84:1567 D 6 '67 430w

"[The authors] have violated every canon of the historical profession. . . . They have made very little use of scholarly monographs and the rich collections of source materials on Baptist history. [They] invent conversation and even thoughts for their characters, and they accept legend and 'reported happenings' as established fact. They have made no attempt at critical evaluation of their data. The fatal weakness of the book, however, is its distortion of the role of Baptists in the history of the nation. . . . The significance of Baptists is all out of perspective. . . . Baptists did have a part in shaping the nation, but this book does little to further an understanding of that role." R. B. Spain

J Am Hist 54:627 D '67 500w

"[The Armstrongs] relied on secondary sources in writing this popular history of the Baptists in the United States, characterized by strong human interest and an appreciative spirit. . . . Nearly every Baptist group is included, with geographical emphasis slightly on the South and little mention of the Far West. [There is] no other popular work of equal scope, and public libraries will certainly want to consider it." G. R. Kelly

Library J 92:2782 Ag '67 170w

ARMSTRONG, RICHARD. The mutineers: decoration by Rus Anderson. 181p $3.95 McKay

68-14116

"Fifteen delinquent British teen-agers, on their way to resettlement in Australia, manage to mutiny, escape in a lifeboat, and are marooned on a deserted island near Tahiti. The boys join forces only to evade detection during the rescue search, then split up into small mutual-interest bands. Chick, through violence and sadism, gradually organizes the majority into his slave-followers and becomes obsessed with the desire to dislodge the huge stone statues which lead to a primitive open-air temple. Stubby, with more potential for leadership but a strong feeling for solitude, refuses to exert himself in any way until the disaster brought about by Chick's obsession causes the deaths of all but three of the boys. . . . Grades eight to eleven." (Library J)

Reviewed by Tallaferro Boatwright

Book World p28 (children's issue) My 5 '68 80w

"In [William Golding's] Lord of the Flies [BRD 1955], the island struggle was between anarchy and civilization, and there was a general retreat before the heart of darkness. Here, in spite of the surface violence the book's underlying message is not so gloomy as William Golding's. True, the weak are swallowed up in a cataclysm they bring upon themselves by following a demented ringleader; but there is at least one who learns the fundamentals of survival—the loner who accepts involvement and responsibility, and finds that when compassion comes into the act the world seems not so hostile after all." M. W. S.

Christian Science Monitor p7 My 23 '68 100w

"With a theme similar to that of Lord of the Flies, Armstrong has fashioned a rousing adventure story for younger readers that is also strongly reminiscent of [Jules] Verne's A Long Vacation [BRD 1968]. . . . Teachers and librarians working with groups might use this book and A Long Vacation (same plot, opposing tents) to initiate discussion excitement." J. G. Russell

ARMSTRONG, RICHARD—Continued

Library J 93:2118 My 15 '68 140w

"It is characteristic of the often strained mechanics of the story that one of the boys recalls the existence of the island, and its exact whereabouts, from having once read the twelve volumes of an encyclopedia from beginning to end—and remembered, we are told, almost every page of it. . . . An ambitious story and a bold one—it more than hints that some of the bullying among the boys has a sexual edge to it—and a number of the scenes are compelling to the imagination. But Mr. Armstrong never quite convinces us that the original mutiny took place; it never seems more than an improbable contrivance for marooning delinquents of various types on an uninhabited island. The writing is sometimes heavy and occasionally might have come out of a comic."

TLS p588 Je 6 '68 300w

ARMSTRONG, WARREN. Fire down below. 218p $4.95 Day

614.84 Fires. Ships 68-11299

"In his retelling of stories about ship fires at sea and in harbors from clipper ship days to recent times, Mr. Armstrong discusses the causes of each fire, the failure to control it, and summarizes the resulting toll in life and property." (Library J)

"A fine account, interestingly told, of the many major fires at sea of ships that possibly should have been free of such hazard. Seaman Armstrong tells the stories of 14 sea tragedies, including such as the 'General Slocum,' 'Morro Castle,' 'Amazon,' 'Lakonia,' 'Normandie' and others which took a toll of death that might have been avoided. It might be a story that would frighten a number of young people from taking any cruises, but it also warns against the dangers of panic and lack of preparation for emergencies."

Best Sell 28:62 My 1 '68 110w

"A few of the disasters, especially the Morro Castle fire, have elements of mystery that are intriguing. The book is a disappointment, however, because the tales have a warmed-over flavor. Each tale is such a dismally similar sequence of initial stupidity followed by panic and holocaust that one's interest soon flags. None of the primary sources of Mr. Armstrong's information are mentioned in the text and there is no bibliography. The treatment is not sufficiently lively or original to make this book an essential purchase for most libraries." E. B. Hayward

Library J 93:1478 Ap 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:2551 Je 15 '68 50w [YA]

ARMSTRONG, WILLIAM H. Organs for America: the life and work of David Tannenberg. 154p il col il $5.95 Univ. of Pa. press

B or 92 Tannenberg, David. Organ 67-26221

An account of the professional career and personal life of a member of the Moravian community in Lititz, Pennsylvania. Discography. Bibliography. Index.

"Tannenberg (1728-1804) was probably the greatest builder of organs in the German manner in America. There is very little in this book that could be improved in any way (except for addition of text references to illustrations and a more uniform description of surviving organs); it is beautifully produced, carefully documented, well indexed, and thoroughgoing in every way. . . . A collection strong in early American musicology or the organ will need it; but for the general collection it is only appropriate as an exemplar of a nearly vanished art."

Choice 5:494 Je '68 180w

"Closely interwoven with the interesting account of [Tannenberg's] professional career is the fascinating story of his personal life as a member of the Moravian community. The author has successfully shown that Tannenberg's religious convictions strongly influenced his work, particularly during the earlier part of his career. . . . Armstrong's devotion to his subject is obvious and generally convincing, but he does reveal certain prejudices. . . . The opening sentence of Chapter I ('The story of David Tannenberg must also be the story of the Moravian Church') is somewhat extravagant. . . . In addition, more detailed information about the organs themselves and the European influences on Tannenberg's work is needed. . . . But it is presumptuous to dwell on certain deficiencies. Armstrong has written a fine book." D. R. M. Paterson

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:45 S '68 420w
TLS p1144 O 10 '68 250w

ARNOLD, MATTHEW. Dissent and dogma: ed. by R. H. Super. 614p $11.75 Univ. of Mich. press

824 (60-5018)

This sixth volume of Super's edition of "the complete prose works of Matthew Arnold . . . contains the first two of Arnold's major religious-theological works, 'St. Paul and Protestantism' (1870) and 'Literature and Dogma' (1873), plus three brief articles only recently attributed to Arnold, two by Fraser Neinan and one, somewhat tentatively and therefore relegated to an Appendix, by the Editor." (Va Q R) Index. For volumes three, four and five see BRD 1963, 1964, and 1966.

"The high standard of editing and annotation reached in earlier volumes and regularly remarked on in these columns is fully maintained."

TLS p826 Ag 1 '68 170w

"[This] is the longest and most expensive of the now eleven (previously ten) projected volumes in the edition, and shows Super's labors to be both Herculean and to an extent, Sisyphean. His notes, critical and explanatory and textual, are full and helpful, occupying 166 pages as against 417 of text, plus a thirty-page index. [In] 'Literature and Dogma,' much the biggest of the works here included . . . Arnold, having moved from the passionate pessimism of 'Dover Beach' to the more hopeful affirmation of 'Obermann Once More,' and having turned from poetry to prose, is . . . trying to salvage what he can of Christianity and the Bible from the onslaughts of science and historical scholarship. . . . He is a well-informed student and critic of matters theologico-religious. Though Arnold has much to offer the modern religious thinker, on the whole one is glad that he later returned to literary criticism."

Va Q R 44:cxiv summer '68 290w

ARNOLD, PAULINE. Food facts for young people [by] Pauline Arnold and Percival White: drawings by Gilbert Etheredge. 256p $4.50 Holiday

613.2 Food—Juvenile literature. Nutrition—Juvenile literature 68-3963

The author "writes about how food—and diet—affect growth and energy, diseases, weight; the value and source of needed minerals and vitamins. There is . . . a glimpse into the future of what our food sources will be—farming, the sea, synthetic diet supplements, domestication of wild animals, other ways of increasing food production for an increasing population." (Best Sell) Glossary. Bibliography. Index. "Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:111 Je 1 '68 90w [YA]

"This is a clear, competently written supplementary book for high school home economics or nutrition courses; it covers topics such as the composition of food, weight and calories, food fads, fallacies, diseases, world population and food supply, food management, and eating for pleasure. . . . A factual and instructive text plus useful charts and food tables make this title a useful acquisition for school and public libraries." Louise Spain

Library J 93:13310 S 15 '68 130w [YA]

ARNOLD, RALPH. A social history of England, 55 B.C. to A.D. 1215. 423p il maps $11 Barnes & Noble

942 Great Britain—History. Great Britain—Civilization 67-5578

Organized chronologically, this book "begins with the Celts, before the Roman conquest, and . . . includes political and constitutional history as a . . . framework into which is fitted information about social customs, art, architecture and intellectual and religious developments." (TLS) Bibliography.

"An extraordinarily good book. Interesting, well written, and abreast of the latest scholarship, it could be used either as a textbook or reference. . . . [A. L. Poole's] Medieval England [BRD 1959] deals with elements of social history treated according to different topics. The Celtic, Roman, Saxon, Viking, and Anglo-Norman periods are passed over rather lightly, however, and thus Arnold's new book is a welcome addition to the literature of the period. Since the length of the period covered forces the author to be somewhat general in his remarks, it is unfortunate that his bibliography does not contain more specialized monographs for further reading. This book is an excellent summary, however, and is highly recommended."

Choice 4:1162 D '67 170w

"The book contains a lot of interesting and amusing detail, and has relatively few errors in those sections where the reviewer is competent to judge carefully. However, the author displays little real depth or perception into the processes of history. Part of this is the fault of the genre of history he has chosen. Social history is a tremendously vague term. . . . Arnold tries to embrace [a broad] range with the result that he gives careful reportage of surface phenomena without really trying to comprehend what makes a society tick or what causes it to change." S. L. Dyson

Class World 61:163 D '67 190w

Reviewed by C. L. Tipton

Social Studies 59:342 D '68 250w

"Arnold admits that he has done no original research for [this book]. Moreover, he has no original ideas. This history is, as it were, a synthesis composed from standard secondary authorities. . . . However, the very fact that Mr. Arnold is not an academic gives his work a clear, objective perspective and an engaging sense of wonder at the panorama of the past. . . . On the whole [his] style is very readable, except that he is too fond of clichés. . . . The subject-matter of the book . . . has shortcomings. . . . [It] lacks causal connexions and does not associate facts sufficiently with trends of historical development. . . . His failure to draw historical conclusions is evident in a number of contexts. . . . Moreover, Mr. Arnold treats some important subjects too briefly, deals with some historical problems too superficially, and omits others altogether. . . . Although Mr. Arnold's own claims for his book are unpretentious, . . . it is likely to be widely read."

TLS p462 My 25 '67 1100w

ARNOLD, THOMAS. New Zealand letters of Thomas Arnold the younger; with further letters from Van Diemen's Land and letters of Arthur Hugh Clough, 1847-1851; ed. by James Bertram. 257p pl $12.50 Oxford

919.31 New Zealand—Description and travel. Tasmania—Description and travel

[67-88672]

The second son of Dr. Arnold of Rugby left England for New Zealand in 1847. "He landed briefly at Dunedin, moved to Wellington where he began to clear some land bought earlier by his father, moved again to Nelson to start a private school, then at the end of 1849 accepted an invitation to become a school-inspector in Van Diemen's Land. Within six months of his arrival at Hobart he was married to Julia Sorell, the 'belle of a small garrison society' and grand-daughter of a former lieutenant-governor of the colony. These sixty letters, mainly written by Tom to his mother, three of his sisters and his friend A. H. Clough (but also including in reply ten letters by Clough and other letters from members of the family circle at Fox How), cover the period outlined." (TLS) Chronology. Index.

"[Arnold] wrote with restraint but also with fullness of his impressions of the Colonial Office (where he worked as a precis writer before going to the Antipodes), of New Zealand and Tasmania, and of his spiritual quandaries. . . . Well-chosen illustrations, sensible and sensitive editing, and a brief but informative introduction help make this volume an extremely useful contribution to our understanding of the Victorians. It is regrettable that Arnold does not appear to have been especially thoughtful about the cultures of the people among whom he traveled." R. W. Winks

Am Hist R 73:892 F '68 460w

Reviewed by George Woodcock

Pacific Affairs 40:438 fall-winter '67-'68 300w

"[These letters] will have a special interest for all concerned with the early history of the Victorian settlement of New Zealand and Tasmania, but they should also appeal strongly to anyone who is interested in the passionate early Victorian temper and the moods and aspirations of the distant Oxford generation—Matthew Arnold, Clough and J. A. Froude were among its better known members—which grew up on a mixed diet of Goethe, Carlyle, Newman, Emerson, and George Sand. . . . The letters have been expertly edited. . . . The lively introduction frames and gives depth to the narrative of the letters and also describes succinctly Tom Arnold's subsequent career."

TLS p1058 N 9 '67 750w

ARNONI, M. S. Rights and wrongs in the Arab-Israeli conflict; to the anatomy of the forces of progress and reaction in the Middle East; introd. by D. F. Fleming. 191p il

Minority of One press

327.5694 Jewish-Arab relations 68-18700

"An expanded version of an essay entitled 'Rights and Wrongs in the Arab-Israeli Conflict,' published in a special issue [September, 1967] of The Minority of One, described as a journal of analysis and opinion of which Mr. Arnoni is the editor. . . . Contradicting her enemies' charges that Israel is a tool of Western imperialism, Arnoni seeks to prove that it is the Arab countries who are guilty of imperialism through their subservience to British and American oil interests. With her administration and technical skills, he writes, Israel 'could provide disinterested guidance that might eventually lead to Arab oil truly being Arab property.'" (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] parts company with other members of the left who follow the Communists and the Third World in denouncing Israel as 'imperialistic' and 'progressive'. Although such a view of the Middle East situation is ideologically sound, it is, to Mr. Arnoni, historically and morally wrong. In this book he aims to prove his point. Whether he will convince his comrades on the left that his facts and interpretation are the correct ones is difficult to say, but the book was written for them."

David Shavit

Library J 93:2667 J1 '68 120w

"Although he asserts that for years he has aligned himself with the Socialist countries and the revolutionary forces in the underdeveloped world, Mr. Arnoni here breaks ranks with the former, which, Rumania excepted, have been lined up behind the Arabs. . . . Much of the book emotionally recapitulates the thrice-told tale of pro-Nazi sentiment and collaboration in the Arab world during the Hitler régime. However, presumably to maintain his status as a Third World advocate, the author reaches from time to time into the Vietnamese conflict to excoriate America for 'nation-murder' and 'genocidal U.S. fury.' [This book] is in essence a flamboyant political tract." Emil Lengyel

Sat R 51:27 J1 20 '68 340w

ARNSTEIN, HELENE S. Your growing child and sex; a parent's guide to the sexual development, education, attitudes, and behavior of the child, from infancy through adolescence; in consultation with the Child study assn. of America. 188p $4.95 Bobbs

155 Growth. Adolescence 67-22223

This book discusses the child's physical and emotional development "from the cradle to college. [Included is] information on both the physical and psychological factors involved in the various phases of sexual maturation, with advice and suggestions for parents." (Library J)

"[This volume] would not harm a prospective teacher but it . . . would be more useful to parents. College libraries will not miss it."

Choice 4:1216 Ja '68 130w

Christian Century 84:1225 S 27 '67 50w

"This is a comprehensive, detailed, and authoritative discussion. . . . The section on the high school and college years is exceptionally comprehensive and reassuring. The book is one which should be read by all thoughtful parents and teachers. Recommended for both libraries and private collections." Lola Dudley

Library J 92:2791 Ag '67 110w

ARNSTINE, DONALD. Philosophy of education: learning and schooling. 388p $7.50 Harper
370.1 Educational psychology. Education—Philosophy 67-11653

A professor at the University of Wisconsin attempts "to examine the methods and practices of schooling and the psychological theories on which they are based; and second, to submit a set of . . . proposals for the improvement of school practices. . . . Theories of learning are reviewed, their weaknesses are noted, and an alternative conception of the learning process is presented." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Arnstine has produced a scholarly, well written text. . . . [He succeeds] in clarifying the role of the teacher within his frame of reference. He does not hesitate to take a position and prescribe what the objectives of education should be, and how these objectives can best be achieved. No traditional approach is followed, although he deals clearly with traditional problems such as curriculum, grouping, and decision making. The text appears somewhat sophisticated for undergraduates but has excellent use and reference for the graduate level."

Choice 4:1145 D '67 140w

"[This book] develops smoothly from considering learning as change in disposition, and mind as environmental interaction, to proposing a general method of schooling characterized by esthetic experience, curiosity, and problem-solving. No recluse, Arnstine relentlessly tracks down pertinent data at bridge tables, baseball games, and restaurants as well as in . . . laboratories, lecture halls, and schoolrooms. Graceful among many trophies of this intellectual chase are his treatment of classroom anaesthesia and his definition of thinking, as the pursuit of discrepancies. In scholarship, style, and design, here is a handsome volume."

John Calam
Sat R 50:82 O 21 '67 80w

ARON, RAYMOND. The industrial society: three essays on ideology and development. 183p $4.95 Praeger

338.9 Economic development. Social change 66-18887

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Kim Rodner

Am Soc R 33:302 Ap '68 650w

TLS p343 Ap 4 '68 500w

Va Q R 44:cxxv summer '68 90w

ARON, RAYMOND. Main currents in sociological thought [v] 2. Durkheim, Pareto, Weber; tr. by Richard Howard & Helen Weaver. 274p $6.50 Basic bks.

301 Sociology—History 65-13345

"In this, the second volume of lectures at the University of Paris, Aron focuses his discussion on three figures . . . who are presumed to be symbols of a major theme in European sociology during the early decades of the twentieth century. For Aron, this theme is the confrontation of religion and science in complex society. Consequently, each thinker is analyzed in terms of this objective." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliographies. Index. For the first volume see BRD 1965.

"At times, and particularly toward the end of the book, the reader may . . . wonder whether Aron is concerned with the actual work of the authors under consideration, or with a series of big questions arising from his thematic comparative approach. From an expository viewpoint, Durkheim gets by far the fairest deal. All his major works are discussed in some detail, and the argument is illustrated by ample quotations. . . . The discussion of Pareto is focused on one work only. The Treatise on General Sociology. . . . The specific nature of Aron's approach is best illustrated in the third part of the book, dealing with Max Weber. . . . Though close to Weber's major writings, Aron's interpretation is a model of free and creative rethinking." Z. Barbu

Am J Soc 73:771 My '68 1450w

"Unlike the first volume, [this volume] seems uneven in quality. This unevenness can be accounted for, I think, by Aron's unequal appreciation of the thinkers under consideration. . . . [He] presents a highly sophisticated overview of Weber's major methodological and substantive approaches that will be of considerable aid to beginning graduate students—that is, the type of audience to which Aron addressed himself at the Sorbonne. . . . [However, the author] has hardly any sympathy for [Durkheim's] program of study and underlying philosophy. Consequently, he fails to perceive Durkheim's greatness. We are offered a rather routine summary of Durkheim's major works and a number of barbed comments on his shortcomings, without being given a grasp of his genius and his seminal contribution to our discipline." L. A. Coser

Am Soc R 33:303 Ap '68 900w

"A lucid, readable introduction to three theorists. [Aron's] technique is understandably conversational and in general reliably casual, as he steers an intellectual course by reviewing each major work of Durkheim and Weber, and by confining his analyses of Pareto to the divisible portions of the overlong Trattato. . . . Few writers or lecturers, to my knowledge, have Aron's analytical skill and literary felicity; consequently, this volume is eminently usable for students in the social sciences and the humanities, as well as for the intelligent layman. . . . But I have several reservations about Aron's orientation to these theorists. . . . In my opinion, the comparison of these three thinkers is more biographical and philosophical than sociological—understandably so in the case of discussions from the lecture platform, but not to be highly recommended in published form."

Alvin Boskoff

Ann Am Acad 376:205 Mr '68 550w

"The contradiction between the need for scientific precision in the analysis of society and the conviction that scientific propositions cannot unite men since the coherence and order of every society are always maintained by suprarational beliefs requires a recognition of the historical and philosophical as well as the scientific basis of social theory. The problem thus presented as the erosion of traditional religious beliefs by the advances of science finds different answers in the works of Durkheim, Pareto, and Max Weber. Aron's synthetic analysis of the main views of these men, representing different academic, religious, and nationalistic backgrounds, and their agreements and differences on the central issue of their time is, at once, unique, lucid, and profound. A very valuable addition to Aron's first volume."

Choice 4:1285 Ja '68 170w

Reviewed by Donald MacRae

New Statesman 76:83 Jl 19 '68 1100w

ARON, RAYMOND. Progress and disillusion: the dialectics of modern society. 230p $5.50 Praeger

901.9 Social change. Civilization, Modern 67-22287

A study of the relationship in modern industrial societies between individuals and institutions. In the first part Aron "contrasts the unequal distribution of power, opportunity and prosperity in such societies with the pervasive belief in human equality; in the second part he examines the relationship between the uniformity conformism of the social order with the prevalence of ideals of individuality; and in the third part the relation between the specific and different conditions of different areas of life and the universalising tendencies of industrial progress, the movement towards the creation of a single social order." (New Statesman) Index.

"This is a work which unites a high degree of acuteness and banality, so that an extraordinary air of bafflement is lent to the entire book. Time after time one is led along a path of argument marked by insight and originality to be confronted finally with an unveiled platitude. . . . [The author] aspires to give us a total picture of the condition and direction of modern industrial societies. Perhaps it is this very aim of generalisation which traps [him]. For the movement towards generalisation turns out to be a movement towards facile and empty statement. . . . What industrial societies have in common is less interesting than that which distinguishes them." Alasdair MacIntyre

New Statesman 76:203 Ag 16 '68 1950w

"The title and subtitle excellently capture the book's main theme. . . . The style is somewhat conversational, the organization of material rather diffuse, and a sense of overall direction almost nonexistent. After all, Aron is Aron: one knows beforehand that he will, as always, deal intelligently, calmly, and evenhandedly with topics that greatly interest us all, constantly titillating us with estimates of how history will unfold, while constantly reminding us (as he does once again at the very end) that all such prediction is hazardous and ultimately invalid. What could be more judicious? If a reader with profoundly bourgeois attitudes would like to be beguiled by some perceptive, intelligent social analysis but does not wish in any way to be épâté, he could hardly find a more suitable fulfillment of his desires than this most recent book by Professor Aron."

Yale R 58:VIII O '68 1000w

ART IN AMERICA (periodical). The artist in America; comp. by the eds. of Art in America 256p il col il $22.50 Norton

709.73 Art, American—History. Artists, American 67-16609

A "history of 300 years of American art and American artists—recorded by the artists themselves in their letters, journals, notebooks, and in their paintings and sculpture. Commentaries on the major periods of American art have been written by Lloyd Goodrich; . . . Russell Lynes; . . . Wayne Andrews and Garnett McCoy; . . . J. C. Ewers; . . . Mary Black; . . . [and] Clement Greenberg." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The editors of Art in America magazine, who edited and compiled this book, apparently could not make up their minds whether they were catering to the Christmas book trade or to scholarship. The result is a potpourri that serves no one. There is a random selection of letters and memoirs, some very poor color plates which were obviously borrowed from various sources, some halftone reproductions of the artists' works, portraits and photographs, and, finally, facsimiles of letters and the like." M. E. Landgren

Library J 93:65 Jy 1 '68 180w

"[The introduction by Lloyd Goodrich] is the volume's greatest glory. . . . Any student of American painting who does not read this article will be the poorer. However, so it seems to this reviewer, Goodrich failed to discover 'what is American in American art.' . . . The main text of the volume under review varies widely in quality and approach from article to article. A major feature is the illustrations, which account for the high price and cover about half the pages. Picturing both the artists themselves and their work, the plates are interestingly selected to give a survey of American art. . . . Eighty pages of color illustration give the book a surface appearance of great opulence. However, quantity having been stressed over quality, the color varies from adequate to appallingly bad." J. T. Flexner

N Y Times Bk N p61 D 10 '67 950w

ARTHUR, RUTH M. Requiem for a princess; il. by Margery Gill. 182p lib bdg $3.81 Atheneum pubs.

67-2667

In this English story "set in modern Cornwall, Willow Forrester, 15, is shocked by the discovery that she is adopted. Unable to confront her parents, she remains for several weeks at Penliss, a resort on the Cornish coast. It is here that she becomes captivated by the portrait of Isabel, an adopted daughter of the 16th-century owners of Penliss. Willow relives Isabel's experiences in frighteningly real dreams. Her discovery of Isabel's fate helps the modern girl to cope with her own problems. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 3 '67 120w

Horn Bk 43:211 Ap '67 240w

"A delightful and wholesome story. . . . The mystery, the dream sequences, and the hint of a romance give this well-written, exciting novel wide appeal. A subplot involving the sinister Amalie tends to be a burden which is never well integrated or resolved, but it doesn't seriously detract from the novel." E. M. Guiney

Library J 92:1744 Ap 15 '67 130w

"A good enough conclusion but far too heavily achieved. Isabel, who takes so much of the tale with her Spanish ambience, is a pasteboard figure throughout. Her problems are those of circumstance, not of personality, and Willow's lose their edge along with hers."

TLS p1141 N 30 '67 370w

ARTS of China; 3v v 1. Neolithic cultures to the T'ang dynasty; recent discoveries [by] Terukazu Akiyama [and others] coordinated by Mary Tregear. 251p pl col pl $27.50 Kodansha

709.5 Art, Chinese 68-17454

"In this volume, five art historians who are also professors in Japanese universities have consolidated reports which have appeared in scholarly journals in China during the last 20 years. . . . This book is the first of a three-volume study; volume 2 will be concerned with Buddhist cave-temple art, and volume 3 with paintings in Chinese museums." (Library J) Contents: Neolithic, Yin and Chou; Han to T'ang; Painting; Monumental animal sculpture; Burial objects. Chronology of archaeological sites. Chinese chronology. Glossary in English and Chinese. Bibliography

"Essentially a picture book of many of the most interesting finds from controlled excavations undertaken in China since 1949. . . . The clear and informative text originally written . . . for a Japanese audience presupposes a general familiarity with Chinese culture and art. For the advanced student there are full descriptions, references, and additional discussion of the 96 color and 322 black-and-white photographs in the plate notes. In addition, there is an archaeological site map."

Choice 5:1122 N '68 130w

"The precise information contained in these reports on recent archaeological discoveries will be of interest to the art enthusiast, and the exactness of the dating of the tombs will provide information for the reappraisal of objects in private collections and in museums. . . . The reproduction of the black-and-white photographs is superior; the quality of the color reproductions makes one regret that all the illustrations are not in color. This volume is recommended especially for collections in the field of Chinese art." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:2867 Ag '68 130w

ARUNDEL, HONOR. The high house; il. by Eileen Armitage. 126p $3.95 Meredith

68-11911

"Orphaned, Emma and Richard are faced with the fact that they must separate since neither of their aunts can take both children. Richard decides on Aunt Laura, Emma going on to Edinburgh with Aunt Patsy. Emma is a careful, dependable thirteen-year-old who is used to suburban conformity; the slapdash housekeeping in Aunt Patsy's fourth-floor apartment is a shock, and so is the careless disorder of Aunt Patsy's life. But Emma comes to understand her aunt's nonconformity as well as she does the affection that pervades their life, and when she has a chance to go to Aunt Laura's ordered household, she opts for Edinburgh." (Sat R) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Emma tells her own story, frankly and objectively and should win readers' sympathy and interest as she shows how two divergent but attractive personalities work out their problems with a little give on each side and finally come together in love and understanding. A well-written story that is perceptive and honest." P. G.

Book World p12 S 1 68 150w

"Nothing notable here, but girls who can overlook or tolerate the occasional soon-dated slang will enjoy this novel." Peggy Sullivan

Library J 93:864 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:31 J1 20 '68 110w

"In the end Emma becomes reconciled—perhaps a little too facilely—to life in Edinburgh. . . . The narrator is the thirteen-year-old heroine herself, and the language is appropriately juvenile, but the contents seem aimed at a rather older readership . . . making it more suitable for those children of secondary school age who are not very fluent at reading."

TLS p456 My 25 '67 180w

ASCHAM, ROGER. The schoolmaster (1570); ed. by Lawrence V. Ryan; pub. for the Folger Shakespeare library. 167p $7.50 Cornell univ. press

370.1 Education—Aims and objectives. Classical education. Teachers 67-12307

This treatise, by the sixteenth century English scholar, which was first published two years after his death, discusses the value of classical education, argues in favor of inducing a child to study by gentleness rather than by force, and expounds a method of teaching Latin by double translation. The editor's introduction to this edition "stresses Ascham's concern with training a governing class, . . . his optimistic self-appraisal as tutor to Queen Elizabeth I, and his belief in the importance of extra-school education by parents and society at large." (Sat R)

ASCHAM, ROGER—Continued

"Ascham was not original for the time; his importance rests on an informed plea for education in the vernacular infused with the spirit of Renaissance humanism (not to speak of literary and dramatic criticism). Ryan has improved upon 20th-century texts . . . by intelligibly modernizing spelling and punctuation plus offering a generally informative introduction. He has based his work on Folger Library's first edition. . . . Ascham's value goes beyond education history to English letters, and all college libraries would benefit from this needed edition."

Choice 5:657 J1 '68 190w

"[This] adds a top-flight edition to the Folger documents from Tudor and Stuart times. . . . Skillfully modernized and generously annotated, Ascham's text will provide moderns with a rich source of speculation about promising social and political horizons and the question of educating leaders to guide men toward them." John Calam

Sat R 50:88 N 18 '67 110w

"[This book was] the rich harvest of a life devoted to good letters, sound morals, delight in young minds, and misplaced confidence in the longbow as England's first line of defence. The author must have the main credit for the quality of life in it, but it has kept its freshness partly because scholarship as such does not change much, and the university atmosphere is at once familiar. . . . Nobody conveys better the excitement of discovering Greek and rediscovering Latin [than Ascham]. It is a thousand pities that his manuscript was incomplete. It breaks off at the point where he is about to treat at length of his beloved Tully. . . . Ryan appends translations wherever Ascham himself does not translate. He traces his passing allusions to their source and finds them, as might be expected, less than pedantically precise. . . . Apart from this very useful service, the annotation is austere."

TLS p535 My 23 '68 500w

ASHBY, JOE C. Organized labor and the Mexican revolution under Lázaro Cárdenas. 350p $7.50 Univ. of N.C. press

322 Labor unions. Mexico—History. Cárdenas, Lázaro 67-26035

After surveying "the historical background from which Cárdenas' policies grew, Mr. Ashby narrows his focus to deal with several specific issues of the period. The theory of labor and the personalities involved in the revolution are closely scrutinized, all the while being related to the national issue. Major attention is given to the three chief areas of labor policy: the labor-National Railways difficulty; the labor-Laguna agricultural experiment question; and the labor-oil expropriations conflict." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by M. C. Meyer

Am Hist R 73:1691 Je '68 310w

"The narrative is well organized, free of jargon, and flows smoothly. Until the appearance of the present study, English speaking students interested in the development of Mexican labor were forced to rely largely on Marjorie Clark's Organized Labor in Mexico [BRD 1935]. It is no accident that Ashby takes up where Clark left off. The subject has now been surveyed adequately to 1940. . . . Highly recommended for those interested either in the middle years of the Mexican Revolution or the general development of the Latin American labor movement."

Choice 5:1356 D '68 150w

"In this scholarly study Mr. Ashby investigates an exciting period of the continuing Mexican Revolution in which Lázaro Cárdenas, President of Mexico from 1934 to 1940, effectively brought large numbers of peasants and workers into decision-making processes for the first time. [The author], professor of economics at Trinity College, San Antonio, elaborates on how President Cárdenas accomplished this and his reasons for doing it. . . . There is an impressive bibliography. Recommended for large public and academic libraries." Frank Cinquemani

Library J 92:4416 D 1 '67 100w

ASHE, GEOFFREY. Gandhi. 404p il $8.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand 68-17318

This new biography of Gandhi, "20 years after his death at the hands of an assassin, is an attempt to rediscover and reassess the contributions of the small, unassuming figure who was to be hailed throughout India as the Mahatma, the Great Soul. . . . [The author] is concerned with the personality of the man and with his influence upon his followers and the world. In tracing Gandhi's life from his childhood in Porbandar, his study in England where he was exposed to the beliefs of the Vegetarian Society and the Simple-Life movement, his years as spokesman for and defender of the Indians in South Africa, and his ceaseless toil in India for the achievement, through his program of nonviolence, of Home Rule, Mr. Ashe attempts to discover the individuals, philosophies, and books which had a great influence on the development of his subject's thought and attitudes." (Library J) Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by Paul Dent

America 119:47 J1 20 '68 200w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor p13 J1 18 '68 220w

"It is dangerously easy in retrospect to give [Gandhi] less credit than he deserves; to remark blithely that the transfer of power was 'inevitable' and to forget that the Congress demand for independence was indeed revolutionary at the time it was first formulated, while its methods appeared so for many years thereafter. But Mr. Ashe is in no danger. He accepts that British withdrawal was the doing of Congress and that the heart of the nationalist success was the theory and method of non-violent protest imposed on it by Gandhi. The first belief is questionable; the second is very questionable indeed. . . . Where this book is really valuable is in the personal light it throws on Gandhi, and particularly on his early years. This matter is not notably new, but it has not been brought together in a form readily accessible to English readers."

Economist 226:51 Mr 30 '68 450w

Reviewed by Francis Watson

Encounter 31:76 O '68 1400w

"Highly recommended for scholars, informed and general readers." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:2476 Je 15 '68 150w

"Ashe has a marked sensitivity to Gandhi's religious spirit; he does not try to make of Gandhi a more or less conventional western humanist. It is an intellectual relief to find a religious vision treated discerningly rather than reductively. On the other hand, . . . [Ashe] is alerted to the secular experiences and ordinary contingencies which figured so hugely in Gandhi's most intimate and important religious discoveries. Thus Ashe demythologizes both English humanism and eastern religion, and draws a portrait at once common-sensical and profound. There is a kind of genius in such modest work, though achieved in prose merely clear and serviceable rather than distinguished." Michael Novak

New Repub 158:23 Je 22 '68 600w

Reviewed by M. E. Marty

N Y Times Bk R p14 J1 21 '68 950w

"In spite of the stop-go of [Gandhi's] policy towards the British and Congress, the retreats, the fasts, the silences, the thinking aloud, one can detect the constant of a unique attempt at adherence to truth no matter what it cost in terms of popularity or practical political advantage. The biography that maps this constant clearly for the western conscience remains to be written; but at least Mr. Ashe persuades us he has marshalled the evidence for such a study. What finally is lacking is not the evidence but a convincing reading of it, which might not disappoint as it does had not Mr. Ashe at one stage seemed set on an interesting course which, followed up, would have transformed an excellent record of the life and the events into a notable—if controversial—addition to Anglo-Indian studies."

TLS p368 Ap 11 '68 1600w

ASHE, GEOFFREY. The quest for Arthur's Britain [by] Geoffrey Ashe [and others]. 282p il col il maps $12.50 Praeger

942.01 Great Britain—Antiquities Great Britain—History—To 1066. Arthur, King. Excavations (Archeology) 68-54498

This book "examines the historical foundations of the Arthurian tradition, and then . . . presents the results of excavations to date at Cadbury (reputed site of Camelot), Tintagel, Glastonbury and less-known places. . . . [It traces] what the romancers have said about Arthur and discusses both the origin of the Arthurian legend as a theme of European culture and the hold which it has had on the British imagination . . . [and] concludes with . . . a survey of the modern creative writing inspired by Arthur and of its relation to contemporary research." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index

"This intriguing and handsomely produced volume . . . [contains] color plates, monochrome plates, maps, plans and line drawings. . . . [Recommended] for library acquisition as well as an interesting gift item."

Best Sell 28:348 N 15 '68 150w

Economist 229:xviii N 9 '68 360w

"Four of the five contributors to this volume are members or founders of the Camelot Research Committee, a group founded to encourage and finance several digs of the Dark Ages. . . . [The plates] are uniformly excellent and closely keyed to the discussion. The volume closes with chapters on life in the Dark Ages (by a costume designer), and on a modern stage and movie treatment of Arthurian themes. This is an entertaining and imaginative collection. Recommended for academic and public libraries." D. K. Fry
Library J 93:4135 N 1 '68 140w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. The Egyptians. 256p il maps $4 Houghton

932 Egypt—History—Juvenile literature

67-20371

The author of The Greeks: a Great Adventure (BRD 1965) has written a history of Egypt from prehistoric times to the fall of the Roman Empire. A final chapter continues the discussion to the present day. Chronology. Index. "Age twelve and up." (Sat R)

"[Mr. Asimov] clarifies much of the confusion about the thirty or so dynasties and their rulers, sorts out centuries of foreign domination, of religious conflicts and contradictions, and compresses into an inordinately small space a treasury of knowledge." M. S. C.
Horn Bk 44:191 Ap '68 240w

"Written in a style which might be termed virile in its directness and lack of ornamentation, the presentation is factual, without digressions. It is only in those blank or hazy areas which dot Egyptian records that we encounter a more inventive spirit from the author. . . . [Mr. Asimov's] scientific approach lends great clarity to his detailed discussions of mummification, of the engineering feats found everywhere, and of Imhotep, the world's first doctor. His often wryly humorous asides on the consistency of human nature through the ages as well as on its inconsistencies will delight mature younger readers. Excellent line drawings in the Egyptian style accompany the text." E. M. Crawford
Library J 93:298 Ja 15 '68 180w [YA]

"The approach is broad, exploring Egypt's relationships with other countries or peoples as well as its long and complex history. . . . The table of dates, the many clear maps, and the index make the book valuable, but it is even more a source of pleasure than it is of information." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 90w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. Environments out there; foreword by Tad Harvey. 128p il $3.75 Abelard-Schuman

523.2 Solar system. Outer space 67-16837

Based on articles which appeared in Science World during the 1963-1964 school year, this book has been revised to include discoveries through 1966. The author "explains the conditions of surface, temperature, atmosphere, gravity—and . . . other factors included in the term environment—that, according to current theories, exist on other planets of the solar system. . . . [He also describes the] chemical combinations that have produced, or could produce, complicated living organisms and the environments within which each could exist. [Index.] Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"An interesting and informative account of the moon, Venus, Mercury, [including] some of the new knowledge gained about Mars as a result of the Mariner's 25-minute flyby in 1965. Besides a brief discussion on asteroids, the author tells something about the four giant planets: Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:17 Ap 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 11 '68 80w

"Asimov's gift for translating scientific gobbledegook into English is evident in this slim but excellent book. . . . His arguments are rational, his conclusions logical, and any speculations clearly labeled. . . . His estimate of the great number of possible life-supporting planets is well reasoned and conservative. The many illustrations, mostly photographs, are excellent." J. S. Pickering

Library J 93:1794 Ap 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Edward Blishen

New Statesman 75:697 My 24 '68 90w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 5 '68 80w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. The Near East; 10,000 years of history. 277p il maps $4 Houghton

956 Near East—History—Juvenile literature 68-13038

"Following the pattern set in his earlier histories—The Greeks [BRD 1965] and The Egyptians [BRD 1968]—Dr. Asimov turns his attention on the biblical lands of the Middle East. Covering some 9,000 years of history, from the time of the nomadic tribes to the days of modern Israel, [his] survey includes . . . reconstructions of legendary material to supplement and interpret the known history. [Table of dates. Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:154 J1 1 '68 80w

"Taken as a whole, this is a good, concise account. . . . Teen-age readers may experience some difficulty with the many proper names, but each individual and clan is so well identified and placed in time that no serious confusion results." Frances Fleming

Library J 93:2544 Je 15 '68 120w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. Stars; il. by Herb Herrick; diagrams by Mike Gordon. 30p $1; Titan ed $1.89 Follett

523.8 Stars—Juvenile literature 68-13033

This book "names, outlines, and explains the constellations, and puts them into the context of the universe." (Christian Science Monitor) "Grades three to four." (Library J)

"Veteran science writer Isaac Asimov takes readers seven and eight years old on a delightful romp through the heavens. It's not so much a book as a short, illustrated essay. . . . It's a kind of guidebook to the face of the night sky that should delight many young stargazers and make question answering easier for their adult friends." R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 7 '68 70w

"[This] book offers up-to-date, sophisticated astronomy for elementary grade children, augmented with good color photographs, vocabulary lists and 'Things to Do.' The fine maps . . . show constellations in a more defined manner than is usual in elementary books; the text, unfortunately, tends to skip abruptly from one subject to another. . . . Astronomical history is briefly treated. . . . The small (6 1/2" x 8") format . . . is easy to handle and . . . illustrations are attractive as well as informative." Rose Hennings

Library J 93:4400 N 15 '68 50w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. A whiff of death. 210p $3.95 Walker & co.

68-13442

"The police think the death of graduate student Ralph Neufeld in the chemistry lab is an unfortunate accident, but Lou Brade, associate professor of chemistry, has too much respect for Neufeld's ability to agree. He realizes it is up to him, and not Detective Jack Doheny of the local police force, to find the murderer." (Library J)

ASIMOV, ISAAC—Continued

Best Sell 27:446 F 15 '68 40w

"This is a tight, dangerous chase through the chemistry lab and through politics of high-powered research in a university."

Library J 93:98 Ja 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by Anne Kinkaid

Library J 93:2131 My 15 '68 30w [YA]

"A less merited revival is Isaac Asimov's A Whiff of Death published by Avon in 1958 as 'Death Dealers.' Asimov has written superb science-fiction detective stories, long and short (the latter were recently gathered by Doubleday as 'Asimov's Mysteries'). His only 'straight' mystery is ponderous and lifeless, although cleverly gimmicked." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 14 '68 40w

ASPINALL, A., ed. The later correspondence of George III, v3-4. See George III, King of Great Britain

The ASSOCIATION OF THE BAR OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK. Special committee on radio, television, and the administration of justice. Freedom of the press and fair trial; final report with recommendations; Harold R. Medina, chairman. 99p $3.75 Columbia univ. press

347.9 Trials. Freedom of the press 67-15897

This report is concerned with "the conflict between freedom of the press and the right of a person accused of a crime, or a party to a civil suit, to a fair trial and his basic constitutional rights. [The committee rejects] the idea of the public's 'right to know' all the facts concerning a crime. . . . The general recommendations are designed to control the flow of information emanating from [the court]. . . . A new Canon 20 [of the Canons of Professional Ethics of the American Bar Association], and a code for police and law enforcement agencies are proposed. This Final Report is based on the . . . collection of cases and materials in Radio, Television, and the Administration of Justice: A Documented Survey of Materials." (Choice) Table of cases cited. Index.

"Unlike the Reardon Report of the American Bar Association which seemed to assume that the less said about crime news the better, the Medina committee . . . seems to appreciate the problems and the needs of the press."

Choice 4:1139 D '67 280w

"The Medina report treats of four aspects of a fair trial: the contempt power of the court (which it is hesitant to use); control of out-of-court statements by attorneys; the role of police prior to trial; and the control of courtroom atmosphere. The Medina Report is not as stringent as the Reardon Report, issued in December of 1966 (tentative draft published by the American Bar Association Project on Minimum Standards for Criminal Justice and called Standards Relating to Fair Trial and Free Press). The Medina report will [not] bring about the millenium, but [does serve as a reminder] that out of this conflict of two legitimate interests it is better that we have a stalemate than an outlaw press or an inquisition. Public, law, and academic libraries should be interested in [it]." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:1505 Ap 1 '67 150w

ASTIN, A. E. Scipio Aemilianus. 374p $10.40 Oxford

B or 92 Scipio Aemilianus Africanus Minor, Publius Cornelius. Rome—Politics and government [67-82263]

"Scipio Aemilianus was a pivotal figure standing between the Rome of the traditional Republic and the new revolutionary situation that was to end the Republic. Austin has gathered together the evidence on his life and has attempted to see it in relation to the personality of the man and the events of his period." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This biography of one of the great figures of Rome in the second century B.C. is on the whole sound and judicious, the product of careful consideration of both ancient sources and modern research. . . . Some of the 111 appended pages are valuable, but some of the notes would not have been missed. Repetition in the text was considered necessary by the author, and he uses an inordinate number of cross references to point it out. . . . The book does not, unfortunately, consider at any length Scipio's relations with Greek and Roman intellectuals. . . . [However] the anti-Scipio attitude tends to fade before it becomes unforgivable, and the defects are minor in relation to the whole. Astin is to be congratulated on this generally excellent book." H. C. Boren

Am Hist R 73:448 D '67 420w

"The attempt to see Scipio as a personality is interesting, if conjectural and open to dispute. Astin stresses the popularis aspect of the man. The scholarship on the period is impressive and up to date. At times the author falls into the error of enlarging the constitutional technicalities and their importance in history and underplaying more basic social and political issues. Altogether a very useful study of an important period."

Choice 4:1428 F '68 120w

"[This] is a thorough and careful biography [which] . . . is also a shrewd analysis of Roman politics in the second century B.C. . . . [It] makes an important contribution to our understanding of the crisis provoked by the career of Tiberius Gracchus. . . . Mr. Astin's excellent study will be required reading for those who would understand the transition from senatorial rule to the chaos of the first century." Donald Kagan

Class World 61:253 F '68 280w

"[Scipio] was capable of devastating witticisms and had a genius for offending people, which this book brings out well. . . . Our trouble is that . . . we know next to nothing about him. Livy's account of him is lost; and so is Plutarch's. We depend chiefly on Polybius, whose judgment is a biased one, and even of Polybius's account only fragments survive. [Nevertheless] this is an extremely wise, interesting and readable book, and the criticism that it could have been a more exciting book is bad criticism. . . . [It] is further commended by the unpretentiousness of its author's style, which detracts nothing from the excitement of the story and which . . . foreign scholars will not be the last to appreciate."

TLS p676 J1 27 '67 600w

ASTON, MARGARET. The fifteenth century: the prospect of Europe. 216p il col il maps $5.50 Harcourt

940 Europe—History. Renaissance 67-27968

The theme of this study is "the emergence of Europe as an entity. . . . [The author describes] the plague, the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, the invention of the printing-press, the exploration of the world and the revival of classical studies [and shows how] each of these had a lasting effect on the fate of Europe. . . . [Citing] examples from the works of contemporary writers and observers. . . . [she tells of] the momentous changes which Europe underwent and the re-assessments which these caused. . . . [including] the challenge to authority which was to lead to the Reformation. . . . The author is Lecturer in History at Newnham College, Cambridge." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 119:568 N 30 '68 50w

"[Aston] wisely limits herself to a few strong themes. Europe was emerging, she contends, in the sense that 'Christendom' was shrinking—shrinking physically under the pressure from Islam, shrinking psychologically as men turned to mysticism, private devotion and, in the arts, searched into the pagan past for their models. . . . By giving as much space to heretics and preachers as she does to humanists, Mrs Aston restores to the intellectual background of the period a balance which it often lacks. The illustrations are as illuminating as the text."

Economist 227:iv Ap 27 '68 210w

Reviewed by Isaac Stone

Library J 93:2494 Je 15 '68 90w

"[The fifteenth] was the century of the Renaissance, of printing, of the Hussites and the Lollards, of explorations that culminated in the discovery of America, of the fall of Constantinople and the redirection of Europe from the East to the West, and of the beginning of the modern cast of mind. . . . [This book] is a first-rate introduction to the character of that rich and spirited century. . . . It is also an extremely handsome book—well made, well designed, and beautifully illustrated with some two hundred contemporary paintings, drawings, and maps, many of them in full color."

New Yorker 44:175 Ap 27 '68 190w

ASTON, MARGARET. Thomas Arundel; a study of church life in the reign of Richard II. 456p pl $20.20 Oxford

B or 92 Arundel, Thomas. Great Britain—Church history 167-894631

The author describes "the clerical and semi-clerical society of Cambridgeshire and the Isle of Ely, [including] the men who made up the social and domestic world of Thomas Arundel for almost twenty years. In addition, the later chapters take us with Arundel into the feuds and intrigues of the last decade of the reign of Richard II." (TLS) Index.

"Not really about the archbishop at all. . . . Arundel remains faceless as a churchman. The 'Church Life' of which Aston speaks revolves around the bishop's Official and the archdeacon's registrars. The description of the Official's holding of synods is important, the outlining of archdeaconal court proceedings valuable. As well, examination of suits in ecclesiastical courts concerning marriage will be of interest to all medievalists. The consideration of varied ecclesiastical institutions represents thus an advance on previous work in this area and is recommended on this basis."

Cnoice 5:395 My '68 150w

"One of the merits of the book is to remind us how rich in varied life and personalities the period was, and one of the difficulties that the author encounters and does not wholly overcome is to merge all the parts into a compact whole. . . . There must, we would think, have been something remarkably dynamic and resilient about [Arundel], . . . but his personality and his thoughts elude our scrutiny. The most attractive and valuable part of this able and mature study is the [picture] of fenland society which Mrs. Ashton, by deft touches of word and wit, brings to life. . . . The whole is excellently printed with unfamiliar and well-produced illustrations."

TLS p641 Jl 20 '67 600w

ATHEARN, ROBERT G. Forts of the Upper Missouri. (American forts ser) 339p $7.95 Prentice-Hall

978 Missouri River. Fortification 67-24466

This history of river forts "extends from the time of the early fur traders to the abandonment of Forts Pierre, Randall, Berthold, Sully, Union, and others because they had 'outlived their usefulness,' and because of the coming of the Northern Pacific Railroad." (Library J) Index.

"An authoritative and pleasurable book. [Athearn's] narrative of the years from 1818 to the late 1880's is peopled with altruists, jingoists, drunkards, cheats, martinets, trappers, whiskey runners, and famous generals. . . . [He] groups his characters into three main classifications: military, civilian, and Indian. . . . Although the photographs, end-maps, index, and chapter notes make this book easy to read, it is Athearn's style which makes it noteworthy. His narrative is crisp in itself, but he supplements it with memorable quotations from his source material." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 27:371 D 15 '67 1100w

Choice 5:549 Je '68 100w

"An exceedingly, but delightfully, detailed story of the river forts that General Sherman termed a 'Picket line of civilization.' . . . The book has the makings of hundreds of movies and TV programs with its encounters between the Cavalry and the Santees, Cut Heads, Yancktonois, Humulpapas, Assinboins, and others." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 92:3038 S 15 '67 160w

ATKINS, JOHN. Aldous Huxley; a literary study. new & rev ed 218p $5.95 Orion

823 Huxley, Aldous Leonard 68-18181

This revised edition of Atkins' analysis of Huxley's philosophy contains a thirty-page introduction bringing the study up to date. For the first edition see BRD 1957.

Reviewed by Leon Edel

Book World p1 14 '68 430w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 18 '68 250w

"More than lives up to the praises already heaped upon it." A. J. M. Fedley

Library J 93:2647 Jl '68 40w

Reviewed by Calvin Bedient

Nation 207:376 O 14 '68 430w

"Critic Atkins, in his short critical biography . . . provides a key thought when he describes Huxley as 'a displaced Victorian artist.' In the end, this is what connects Aldous I to Aldous II—the civil war that raged within a 19th century man who happened to find himself in the 20th century."

Time 92:72 Jl 19 '68 340w

ATTAWAY, WILLIAM. Hear America singing; il. by Carolyn Cather; introd. by Harry Belafonte. 187p $4.95 Lion press

784.4 Folk songs—U.S.—Juvenile literature 67-27292

"From the nature-dominated chants of various Indian tribes to the popular 'folk rock' of today, [the author] roams through every stage of American musical evolution, describing the contributions of the Vikings, the Spanish conquistadores, the French fur trappers, the Scandinavian and German farmers, the Pilgrims and Puritans, the Negroes, and the other peoples who left their mark on our national heritage." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Folk song, Harry Belafonte says in an introduction, 'expresses an emotional truth that the common man could embrace as his own.' It's a good definition and it covers a lot of ground—blues, spirituals, patriotic songs, to the current rock 'n' roll. Bill Attaway, an arranger for Belafonte and a composer, tells the stories of about a hundred such familiar songs, as sung by pioneers, soldiers, workers, city men and country men. The words, but not the music, of most of them are included. It is an interesting book, concise but with the narrative thread well developed." William Leonard

Book World p32 (children's issue)

My 5 '68 90w

"To hear America sing you will be forced to go elsewhere, unless you can call up from memory over 100 melodies of all types of American folk songs. . . . [Although the format] is attractive, the abundance of facts will keep all but the most motivated children from reading it through. School librarians may find it useful for its material on contributions of specific national or ethnic groups, but the reference value of the book is handicapped by an uninformative table of contents and the lack of an index." M. E. Ward

Library J 93:13311 S 15 '68 150w

AUBOYER, JEANNINE. The Oriental world: India and South-East Asia [by] Jeannine Auboyer; China, Korea and Japan [by] Roger Goepper. 176p il col il $5.95 McGraw

709.5 Art, Oriental 67-11795

This book covers the history of the art of "India (with her cultural empire in South-East Asia), China, Korea and Japan . . . from the earliest manifestations of art more than three thousand years ago up to the 20th century." (Publisher's note) Glossaries. Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors do] as well as can be done, but one has a strong sense of compression and some of disproportion; it would have been more satisfactory if a full volume had been given to the Far East."

Economist 227:viii Ap 27 '68 90w

"The illustrations, independent of the historical text, are of good quality, considering the price of the book. The general reader will be interested." R. F. Doi

Library J 92:3627 O 15 '67 70w

[The] chief curator of the Musée Guimet in Paris deals with [the] India section and [the] director of the Museum of Far Eastern Antiquities in Cologne . . . writes of China, Korea and Japan. To condense a history of East Asian cultures and their arts into a single volume of 176 pages is nearly inconceivable, yet the book actually succeeds in providing a useful introduction for the uninitiated. . . . The 228 illustrations are very well selected . . . even though the colored plates, of which there are no less than 112, are bright to the point of garishness." Gordon Washburn

AUBOYER, JEANNINE—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p5 D 24 '67 150w
TLS p888 Ag 22 '68 50w

AUBREY, HENRY G. Atlantic economic co-operation; the case of the OECD; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 214p $6 Praeger 338.91 Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. International economic relations 67-13868

"Planned as the first of two books on Atlantic economic cooperation, the present study . . . focuses on the problems that the industrial countries of the West, and Japan as a partner and new OECD member, have to face together." (Pref) Index.

"This book centers around the transformation of the O.E.E.C. (Organization for European Economic Cooperation) into the O.E.C.D. (Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development). Aubrey describes the setting up of several organizations and committees, e.g. Development Assistance Committee, European Nuclear Energy Agency. . . [He] discusses many desirable goals, but has to admit that the path to their achievement is bound to be slow. His treatment of these conflicts is mostly sketchy. Agriculture has been discussed more thoroughly by [M.] Tracy in Agriculture in Western Europe [BRD 1965] and by [J.] Coppock in North Atlantic policy—the agricultural gap, BRD 1964]. . . The book may stimulate further discussion of the difficulties of international decision-making, but it does not provide new information for the economist."

Choice 5:654 J1 '68 180w

"Aubrey, who is professor of economics at Sarah Lawrence, develops a comprehensive picture. . . Understandably present-day economic goals—full employment, economic growth, price stability, inflation, and many other related to these, e.g. international payment troubles, aid to underdeveloped countries, and trade policy—unavoidably come to the fore. Aubrey correctly stresses the fact that OECD includes (with the exception of the U.S.S.R.) the world's largest industrial and trading nations, which naturally lend it weight. . . [He also] presents numerous suggestions for greater efficiency. A good, clear presentation. Recommended for economists and informed laymen." H. H. Bernt
Library J 92:233 Ja 15 '67 190w

AUDEN, W. H. The orators; an English study. new ed 85p $4 Random house 828 67-22628

First published in England in 1932 this edition adds a new preface by the author. "The first part of the book is a prose section, the second is the journal of an airman in notes and jottings, and the third contains six odes." (Library J)

"[This] is not the restoration of a forgotten masterpiece, but rather a setting straight of the record. There are scattered poems here that one is glad to see again, but more importantly the book is a necessary link to be studied by those scholars . . . concerned with Auden's poetry. Here we have the poet in his mid-20s, hectically intelligent, deeply troubled, not sure whether the 'foe' is outside or within, but somewhat paranoid about him; we see Auden poised in personal and poetic uncertainty. . . This book is primal Auden, the brilliant and mad matrix and jumble out of which the separate components of his mature work could gradually emerge in growing clarity." Chad Walsh
Book World p1 N 19 '67 900w

"[This is] a slashing, often bitter attack on everything and everyone the English considered to be untouchable. Now . . . much of the book's acid is gone and many of the allusions are almost totally meaningless to an American. What does remain is a deft command of style, that is, in fact, a takeoff on the tricks and the methods of such notables as D. H. Lawrence and St. John Perse. . . [Auden's] short, new preface offers no help, but little matter. What still counts are the delightful number of satirical jabs." Bill Katz
Library J 92:2778 Ag '67 170w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith

N Y Times Bk R p54 N 12 '67 750w

"This new edition is more than 340 verse lines shorter than the [first edition]. . . There is some correction of misprints and wrong spellings, a very little rewriting of not much importance, and the names of friends in the first Ode are replaced by invented ones (as they have been since the poem's separate appearance in [Auden's] Collected Poetry [BRD 1945]). One regrets most of the omissions. . . It may be argued that these omissions do not make a great deal of difference to the work, and it is clear that Auden . . . has not gone out of his way to reslant its original message. . . [He] now supplies a preface which directly confronts the frequent charges of unconscious fascism. . . [Today] he looks upon the work with amused toleration."

TLS p918 O 6 '66 2600w

AUDUBON, JOHN JAMES. The imperial collection of Audubon animals; the quadrupeds of North America; original text by John James Audubon and John Bachman; ed. and with new text by Victor H. Cahalane; foreword by Fairfield Osborn; il. by John James Audubon and John Woodhouse Audubon. 307p $25 Hammond

599 Mammals—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-20565

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1406 F '68 190w

Natur Hist 77:73 F '68 70w

TLS p1068 S 26 '68 500w

AUSTIN, ELIZABETH A., ed. Frank M. Chapman in Florida. See Chapman, F. M.

AUSTIN, NEAL F. A biography of Thomas Wolfe. 212p il $7.95 Roger Beacham

B or 92 Wolfe, Thomas 68-14890

Biography of the author of Look Homeward Angel, BRD 1929. Bibliography. Index.

"This biography, written particularly for young readers, is interesting and well done, generally. The difficulty for the younger readers is the high price. . . But the book is worth the price for High School libraries, since it will introduce readers of that age to one of the most flamboyant and enduring writers of the 20th century in America. . . Excellent reading for the older among High School students, say grades 11 to 12."

Best Sell 28:194 Ag 1 '68 150w [YA]

"This latest biography of Thomas Wolfe contains well-known information. Apparently the book is not intended to be a contribution to Wolfe scholarship; no sources of information are identified except for works quoted; there is no documentation; and Mr. Austin has cast the biography as a narrative so that it frequently reads as a novel and leads to some unsupported conclusions about the thoughts of the characters. The volume is essentially only a sketch of Thomas Wolfe's life, seldom penetrating to the depth of his experience, as with Aline Bernstein, for example. . . Austin may have been attempting to produce a light, readable, novel-like biography which serves as a cursory sketch of Wolfe's life. . . Also, there are inaccuracies: the transcription of Wolfe's final letter, to Maxwell Perkins, contains at least ten errors." Duane Schneider

Library J 93:1999 My 15 '68 200w

"A valiant effort. But a reader of Wolfe's novels can learn more about this stormy, unhappy young novelist than he can from this biography, with its omissions of his insane rages, his violent hatreds and his cruel treatment of his mistress—who is mentioned as a good friend." G. W. Allen
N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 23 '68 50w

AUSTIN, PAUL BRITTEN, tr. A film trilogy. See Bergman, I.

AUSTRALASIAN ASSOCIATION OF PHILOSOPHY. The identity theory of mind [papers presented at the annual congress of the Association held at the Univ. of Queensland in 1964] ed. by C. F. Presley. 164p $6.75 Tri-ocan bks.

128 Mind and body

"Papers written by Australian philosophers dealing with the theory that mental states are identical with states of the brain." (Choice)

"While the papers represent different viewpoints, the book is weakened by Presley's failure to include some of the more important statements of the identity theory, e.g. papers by U.T. Place and J. J. C. Smart. This means that the reader must constantly refer to other volumes containing the articles being criticized in this book. . . . No index."

Choice 5:1140 N '68 90w

"This book is lively and rewarding reading and is highly recommended for scholars, specialists, and liberal arts college libraries."

Marvin Kohl

Library J 93:2506 Je 15 '68 130w

AUSTRALIAN dictionary of biography [general ed: Douglas Pike]; v2, 1788-1850 I-Z. 634p $23.50 Cambridge

920 Australia—Biography—Dictionaries

(66-13723)

This volume is the second of two for the period 1788-1850. Bibliographies. For volume one see BRD 1967.

"Any extensive reading of the varied essays gives a panoramic view of Australian interests and activities during the first sixty years of Australian history. The individual lives are the pieces from which the mosaic of Australian history emerges. There is some lack of consistency regarding the inclusion of British officials in the volume. Why is Lord John Russell included, and Sir Robert Peel omitted? Sir George Murray is mentioned as a Secretary for War and Colonies; T. Spring Rice and Lord Normanby are not. And the essay on Wakefield seems deliberately to underplay the influence of his ideas on Australian history. . . . Such lapses, however, are rare, and the work will be a solid and substantial aid to students of Australian and imperial history." D. C. Gordon

Am Hist R 73:1230 Ap '68 550w

"An impressively extensive nation-wide task force of historians, genealogists, librarians and archivists has produced an indispensable reference. . . . The editors have helpfully adopted the style of the Dictionary of National Biography and included authors and references [for each entry]. A random sampling reveals a background among the early colonists much richer and varied than that conveyed by the socio-economic labels of the period: convicts, officials, soldiers, squatters and the like." Robert Kubicek

Pacific Affairs 40:438 fall-winter '67-'68 90w

"Progress, most obviously detectable as increased crispness of style, may be found in the second volume of [this work]. . . . [It] includes particularly good accounts of such obviously notable figures as Governors King and Macquarie, and of controversial subjects such as W. C. Wentworth, Edward Gibbon Wakefield, Samuel Marsden, John Macarthur, Archbishop Polding and John Dunmore Lang. . . . It includes some excellent women, . . . some admirable Scots. . . . [and] bizarre characters like Jorgen Jorgensen, leader of a revolution in Iceland, and John Knatchbull, Captain R.N., transported for theft and eventually hanged for murder. . . . Professor Pike has chosen to include, with the obviously notable, names 'chosen simply as samples of the Australian experience'. . . . The reader will be grateful for the editor's wisdom in including them. It is the great merit of the Australian Dictionary of Biography that it offers a genuine cross-section of society. Perhaps inevitably, the quality of contributions is uneven; few reach the standard of excellence set by the article on Macquarie."

TLS p1263 D 28 '67 650w

AVERILL, LLOYD J. American theology in the liberal tradition. 172p $4.50 Westminster press

230 Theology

67-13164

This examination of a movement in American Protestant thought "begins with a sketch of liberalism's German and English antecedents, and their influence on the American scene. [The author] continues with a profile of American liberal theological and ethical thought summarized under 12 . . . motifs. . . . delineates the various types of liberal thought distinguishable within the general pattern. . . . [and] argues for the continuing vitality and relevance of liberal thought as it influences and is reshaped by contemporary theology." (Choice) Index.

"A valuable little book for undergraduates interested in American liberal theology. It compares favorably with [H.] Van Dusen's The Vindication of Liberal Theology [BRD 1964]. . . . Reads rapidly and interestingly; carefully documented."

Choice 5:208 Ap '68 120w

"The author's thesis is that an evolutionary world view provided the over-all framework of that complex of ideas and ideals constituting liberal theology. . . . Averill makes a standard distinction between modernists, primarily oriented to modern culture, and evangelicals, stressing the normative character of the Christian revelation. . . . [He] is a lover of liberalism but not an uncritical one. The gist of his evaluation is that while authentic notes were sounded by liberalism, they were somewhat soured by a careless accommodation to secular currents which obscured abiding biblical truths relating to sin and grace. All this is well done, but it is familiar fare. To my knowledge nothing new or different is contributed to previous accounts or evaluations of the liberal movement." Kenneth Cauthen

Christian Century 84:1286 O 11 '67 470w

AVERY, GILLIAN. Call of the valley. 229p $4.50; lib bdg $3.97 Holt

68-11837

Sam Williams, a Welsh farm boy in the 1880s, becomes exasperated by his uncle's cruelty and "accepts the post of boot-boy with the local gentry, who soon move to Manchester, where life in the servants' hall is sordid and claustrophobic. Dismissed for being more competent than the cook, Sam realizes he must return to his valley and face his problems. After an agonising journey he arrives to find he has been branded as a thief in his absence. He tries living on his own but discovers that the comfort which comes from the friendship and support of others is more necessary for life than the assurance of independence." (TLS) "Grades six to nine." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:17 Ap 1 '68 130w

"[This book] is lovingly written, perhaps too consciously so. . . . All the Victorian-style ingredients are here: the background of the 1880s, the cruel Scottish uncle, the helpless widowed mother, the sensitive sister, the new-rich Manchester industrialists, the corrupt servants in the Manchester town house where the hero slaves as a boot boy, the sympathetic 'teeny.' In fact, it strikes this reader as a rehash of many clichés, including the inevitable one of the Welsh boy's natural fine singing voice." Edward Fenton

Book World p20 Je 2 '68 130w

"Some children enjoy best a period-piece where they can see how grandparents might have lived. Victorian class divisions have much point in [this story]. . . . Books like this go beyond text-book accuracy to wake the imagination." Margery Fisher

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 3 '66 80w

Reviewed by R. H. Viguers

Horn Bk 44:425 Ag '68 220w

Reviewed by E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:2736 Jl '68 140w

"[Gillian Avery] has made the late Victorian middle-class world peculiarly her own in that her plots and characters, solid with authenticity, are also suffused with good-humoured absurdity. Her cast of thought is wholly adult. She has now drawn an equally convincing picture of a Victorian childhood. . . . This is a strong, vivid book."

TLS p1086 N 24 '66 700w

AVERY, GILLIAN, ed. School remembered: an anthology for young adults. 252p $4.95 Funk 370.9 Education 68-15420

Gathered here are "autobiographical accounts of school experiences, . . . divided into two sections, 'The Prison' and 'The Goal,' which are descriptive, respectively, of the anguish some of the authors knew in school and of the pleasures others found there." (Library J)

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:449 Ag '68 170w

"That the sentiments [experienced here] surmount time and space limitations is evidenced by the fact that the 25 excerpts date from the 16th through the 20th Centuries and are set in Asia, Africa, Europe, and the United States.

AVERY, GILLIAN—Continued

Although many famous people are represented—e.g. Orwell, Gorki, Booker T. Washington—perhaps the most effective pieces are by the writers little known to history. The anthology provides excellent source material for students interested in socio-economic history as well as for others to read for enjoyment." M. S. Bart
Library J 93:2118 My 15 '68 130w

"In the almost complete absence of new school stories [this volume] is very welcome. Secure in their present-day comforts, children are likely to relish some of the past horrors—sickly Augustus Hare copping it at Harrow in the 1840s, life in a Scots Dame School (nasty), and the experience of a Barnardo waif in 1871. To cheer everybody up there is the encouraging opening sentence of A. S. Neill's article on his famous co-education establishment: 'Lessons in Summerhill are optional.'" Anthony Marshall

New Statesman 74:599 N 3 '67 80w
TLS p1147 N 30 '67 650w

AVI-YONAH, MICHAEL, jt. auth. The Macmillan Bible atlas. See Aharoni, Y.

AVINERI, SHLOMO. The social and political thought of Karl Marx. 269p $8.50 Cambridge 335.4 Marx, Karl [68-12055]

The author, a lecturer in political theory at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, "discusses the various aspects of Marx's thought against the background of its intellectual origins, showing its ambivalent indebtedness to the Hegelian tradition. In bringing out the dialectical relationship between capitalism and socialism in Marx, Dr Avineri contends that the Hegelian legacy shaped both Marx's vision of future society as well as his view of the proletariat as a 'universal class.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by L. D. Easton
Commentary 46:114 N '68 1900w

"[Avineri's] Marx is the European philosophers' Marx, for whom any political application—indeed any attempt to 'programme' Marx for political purposes—is unwarrantable reductionism which cannot do justice to the sophistication and complexity of the master's intellectual stature. It is a very compressed book—no rosebushes, no Alice—whose philosophical categories are in the German tradition—i.e. in Marx's own. . . . The [author's] discussion is very well done, the illustrations selected from wide and perceptive reading, and interesting conclusions are embedded in the . . . excessively cautious comments on the texts—such as Marx's little known discussion of bureaucracy and equally little known disdain for technology. . . . The book is certainly one of the best of its kind." Peter Nettl

New Statesman 76:19 J1 '68 600w

"[This book] deserves commendation, if only because it is brief, lucid, scholarly, and infused with an undocinaire democratic socialism reminiscent of the earlier (and less embattled) Sidney Hook. . . . The central section of the book, and its most original contribution to the swelling literature on the subject, analyzes the link between Marx's anthropology and his economics. . . . These chapters provide a useful antidote to the standard view of Marx as a great economist in the Ricardian tradition who unfortunately bewildered his readers with a far-fetched Hegelian terminology. . . . [Moreover,] the link between the critique of classical German philosophy and the critique of liberal British economics . . . were related in fact before Marx took the trouble to relate them in logic. Why and how he did this is the subject of Avineri's best chapters." George Lichtheim

N Y Rev of Books 10:27 Ap 11 '68 1650w

"A new book on Marx needs defense against the charge of unoriginality. This one has several. For one thing, it is about Marx's political thought, something that has been neglected amidst the rash of biographical, economic, and philosophical studies. For another, it is resolutely impartial. . . . [Avineri's] interpretation is an argument for the unity of Marx's thought, despite the well-known differences between the early and the late Marx that have preoccupied recent critics. . . . The book is based on a very solid reading of the texts, makes many novel and arresting points, and should appeal not only to specialists, but to anyone familiar with modern political theory."

Va Q R 44:clxx autumn '68 130w

AVNERI, URI. Israel without Zionists; a plea for peace in the Middle East. 215p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

327.5694 Jewish-Arab relations. Israel—Foreign relations. Zionism 68-25221

The author, editor-in-chief of Ha'olam Hazeh (This World), an Israeli news magazine, "and the only independent member in the Israeli parliament, believes primarily that Israel should be a Hebrew rather than a Jewish state. He proposes the creation of an Arab state in the occupied territories of Palestine and its federation with Israel. He calls upon Israel to take the first step in solving the refugees problem, and to make Israel a part of a Semitic federation." (Library J) He "presents his proposals against the historical and political background of the generations-old war between Arab and Jew, the most recent outbreak of which was the . . . 'Six Days War' of June 1967. He examines the birth and growth of Zionism and the effect it has on the life of the new Israeli state." (Publisher's note)

"[The book is] well written. . . . There are certainly many people in Israel who would like to try the approach suggested by this author and those interested in the Arab-Israeli problem would do well to read [this book]." David Shavit

Library J 93:3792 O 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Nation 207:443 O 28 '68 130w

"[Avneri] is the author of a new Israeli magazine which is a mixture between the New Republic, Ramparts and Confidential. . . . [He] has propagated his ideas for a long time, and he obviously believes his hour is still to come. At present it is difficult to imagine that he will ever be more successful. His analysis and proposals could have been elaborated in a dozen pages. Instead, and in addition, the reader is treated to spy stories, a potted history of the Crusades, reflections about Mr. Avneri's white Mustang, revealing an original but not exactly profound or disciplined mind." Walter Laqueur
N Y Times Bk R p64 O 20 '68 1000w

"Almost the first thing a visitor to Israel and the Arab lands learns is that there are no quick or easy answers to a problem of staggering complexity. . . . [A virtue of Avneri's treatment is that he does not] discount the difficulties. . . . [His] book should contribute to American understanding of the situation in one important aspect. [It] explores with compassion and understanding the nature of the changing Arab world and the Arab case against Israel. Such exploration is long overdue. Avneri canvasses all the possibilities for settlement . . . advocating the creation of a Palestinian republic. . . . [He] put this proposal in the form of a resolution submitted to the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, earlier this year. . . . [His] vivid, readable, very personal book is in effect a long and in many places cogent argument for his proposal." Drew Middleton

Sat R 51:35 S 7 '68 850w

AVRICH, PAUL. The Russian anarchists. (Columbia univ. Russian inst. Study) 303p il $7.50 Princeton univ. press

335 Anarchism and anarchists 66-25418

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. D. Clarkson
Ann Am Acad 375:209 Ja '68 500w
Choice 4:1431 F '68 120w

Reviewed by Leonard Schapiro
N Y Rev of Books 11:25 D 5 '68 350w

AXELRAD, JACOB. Philip Freneau, champion of democracy. 480p $6.50 Univ. of Tex. press

B or 92 Freneau, Philip Morin 66-15699

A biography of the Revolutionary poet who was also a soldier, a sailor, a philosopher and teacher, a journalist, a pamphleteer and a politician. Bibliography. Index.

"The author generally writes well, but he fails to make the reader aware of Freneau as a person. Too much emphasis has been placed upon him as a literary figure, and not enough as a 'champion of democracy.' While Axelrad has made full use of primary material on Freneau, the secondary sources included in his footnotes leave much to be desired. This volume is much better as a treatise on the literary scene than it is on the historical approach for the period covered." O. T. Barck

Am Hist R 73:899 F '68 650w

"[Axelrad] weaves together—smoothly and readably but at times verbosely and melodramatically—the events in Freneau's life, descriptions of the figures and issues Freneau encountered, and illustrative quotations from his writings. Although the book is not intended to be a critical study, there is an occasional literary judgment. . . . Axelrad provides no comment on the textual problem, but any biography of a poet who frequently revised his work should make clear whether the passages quoted are from the earliest or the latest version—especially when the quotations are used as evidence of the poet's thought at a particular time. . . . What is unfortunate is that so dedicated an interest in Freneau on the part of a writer with the ability to re-create historical episodes imaginatively should have resulted in a book unlikely to satisfy either the scholar or the general reader." G. T. Tanselle
Am Lit 39:566 Ja '68 750w

"This work has no remarkable new material or interpretation to bear upon 'the father of American poetry.' . . . Axelrad is essential, however, as a 'Life and Times of . . . biography. No previous examination so extensively relates Freneau to the political jockeyings of late 18th-century America, in which the poet-journalist was deeply involved. Students of American history will find it almost as valuable as will students of our literature." Choice 4:816 O '67 160w

"Unfortunately, this warm and sometimes moving biography, superb in its treatment of the ideas and historical place of Freneau himself, fails utterly to provide an appropriate setting for its subject. In reconstructing the years (1752-1832) during which 'The Father of American Poetry' lived, the author relies heavily on dated monographs and sketchy history textbooks. This skimpy research often results in antiquated interpretations. . . . There are also many factual mistakes." C. E. Prince
J Am Hist 54:639 D '67 450w

AXTHELM, PETER. Tennis observed. See Talbert, B.

AYKROYD, W. R. The story of sugar. 160p il $4.50 Quadrangle bks.

641.3 Sugar 67-12352

The author "traces the story of sugar from the first recorded cultivation of cane and its crude manufacture into sugar in India in 325 B.C. He discusses the early Spanish and Dutch settlements in the Lesser Antilles and covers the English sugar industry of the 18th and 19th Centuries in more detail, [concluding] his story with 'Sugar from Beet' and 'Sugar in the Modern World.'" (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Popular survey of sugar's history. Emphasis is on the interdependence of slavery with the development of the West Indies. Ignores most of the rest of the world's cane sugar production and its history and there is little on beet sugar. No discussion of Cuba nor of the economics of beet versus cane. Bibliography suggests introductory material for more serious treatment of some subjects, but again omits much of sugar's story in other parts of the world. Not recommended." Choice 5:654 J1 '68 80w

"The Sugar Islands, rather than sugar itself, prompted [the] former director of the Nutrition Division of the United Nations to write this interesting little history. The idea and the framework for his account originated while he was on assignment in the Caribbean in 1963-64 as a special consultant to the World Health Organization. Students of nutrition and health should find this clear and serious survey useful. Recommended for consideration by university and large public libraries." D. L. Gustafson
Library J 92:2563 J1 '67 150w

AYLING, ALAN. A collection of Chinese lyrics. See Mackintosh, D., comp.

AYUB KHAN, MOHAMMAD. Friends not masters; a political autobiography. 275p il maps $7.50 Oxford

B or 92 Pakistan—Politics and government 67-25583

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Masood Ghaznavi

Ann Am Acad 337:184 My '68 800w

Christian Century 84:1162 S 13 '67 50w

Reviewed by Penderel Moon

Engl Hist R 83:812 O '68 1300w

AZCARATE, PABLO DE. Mission in Palestine, 1948-1952. 211p $6.75 Middle East

956.94 United Nations. Conciliation Commission for Palestine. Israel-Arab War, 1948-1949 66-30659

The author "was named by the United Nations, first as Deputy Principal Secretary of the Palestine Commission, and Head of its Advance Mission in 1948; from 1949 to 1952 he was Principal Secretary of the U.N. Palestine Conciliation Commission. These four years in Palestine and the Middle East are the subject matter here." (Publisher's note)

"Reading the memoirs of a principal participant in the efforts to mediate the first Arab-Israeli War is a sobering experience. . . . Unfortunately the least valuable sections of the book deal with the author's personal record of the Palestine Conciliation Commission. Palestine as an issue in world affairs has yet to receive fully impartial analysis; Azcarate's particular syndrome stems from his commitment to the United Nations. He criticizes the United States for not providing the 'indispensable' support to the commission that it needed to function effectively in its mediation effort. He castigates Britain for conniving at—even aiding—the creation of an embryo Jewish state under the mandate. . . . The entire record, in fact, is marred by the sort of petulance regarding personalities, conditions of living, and insufficient respect for official status that a public official might preserve in his diary, but scarcely transfer wholesale to a book. The story of Israel's evolution as a state, however badly presented, deserves every retelling if only in hopes that at some point understanding will bring positive action." William Spencer
Am Hist R 73:868 F '68 490w

"Dr Azcarate describes all the international futilities without prejudice as between Arab and Jew; he castigates the Arabs for their political incompetence and in-fighting as freely as he criticises the Israelis for uncompromising demands for their pound of flesh. . . . He is shrewd and interesting in his assessments of personalities. . . . [He] has made a valuable addition to the literature on the end in Palestine, the beginnings in Israel, and the then impotence of the Arab states. One of his book's merits is that he sticks to the scenes that he witnessed for himself; another is that his translators from the Spanish have served him well. But it has some defects. Work of this quality . . . merits better editing." Economist 223:51 Ap 1 '67 850w

AZIZ AHMAD. See Ahmad, Aziz

B

BA MAW. Breakthrough in Burma; memoirs of a revolution, 1939-1946. 460p maps $8.75 Yale univ. press

959.1 Burma—History 67-24504

A report on how the country achieved independence. The author "was prime minister of Burma from 1937 to 1939 under the British and again from 1943 to 1945 under the Japanese. Through the shifting sands of Burmese pre-independence politics Dr Ba Maw claims to have followed a consistent course. His aim was independence from Britain by no matter what means. . . . The book was written piecemeal over a period of years and the manuscript smuggled out of Burma while the author was politically detained by the present Burmese government." (Economist)

"Unlike U Nu's account, Burma under the Japanese [BRD 1954], which was written soon after the experience, Ba Maw's memoirs are the product of 15 years' reflection during his relegation to the political sidelines. . . . He presents an objective account of the heretofore unrecorded Karen-Burman clash of 1942, which he reconstructed from interviews with participants. Unfortunately, he never uses footnotes. . . . His work is an amalgam of historical study and memoir. As history it will interest those concerned with the ferment in Asia leading to the postwar independence movements. As memoir it has even wider appeal, presenting the mature reflections of a highly Westernized Asian on the political dilemmas of his day." Choice 5:849 S '68 240w

BA MAW—Continued

"This is a very personal document revealing great historical events through the narrow and all too often distorting vision of one man. . . . [However, it] lacks the unity and consistency it would have had if the author had revised the entire text himself. There is in the book too much of the politician's self-justification. . . . An outstanding example of the lack of historical perspective is the portrait of Aung San that emerges from these pages. He is a national hero and martyr and his memory dominates and inspires Burma twenty-one years after his death. . . . In this book Aung San is presented as indecisive and lacking political judgment. Aung San led Burma to independence while the author was in the wilderness. . . . This is not a book for the newcomer to Burmese history. But for the initiated it is a fascinating glimpse into the world of heroism, folly, passion, and self-deception that made up Burma's struggle for independence." Economist 227:53 Ap 20 '68 550w

"These memoirs of Ba Maw, who has been too often quickly dismissed as Burma's arch collaborator with Japan, will help immensely to fill in the broader picture . . . [of] the fight for independence from Great Britain. . . . Re-counting the organization of the Burmese Independence Army, [the author] also sketches the maneuvers which resulted in the establishment of an 'independent' Burma. His account of his relations with the Japanese and his notes about similarly motivated Asian leaders are of great historical value. This is an important book for all students of the history of Asian nationalist movements." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1998 My 15 '68 190w

"Anyone who knows and loves Burma—and that includes practically everyone who has ever lived there—will be fascinated by this firsthand report on how the country achieved its independence. It is written by a Burmese patriot [who] managed to ride out the gale of World War II first as a cooperator with the Allies and then as the leading exponent of collaboration with Japan. . . . [He] and his daughter have spent the past two years in a Burmese jail, where they are to this day. Dr. Ba Maw writes of all [the] ups and downs (until 1946, at least) with inside knowledge and considerable literary skill. The oratory for which he was famous as a Burmese politician and patriot is reflected in his vivid recounting of a varied life. One need not agree with all his reasons and conclusions—I certainly do not—to realize that this book is a considerable contribution to the history of Burma in our times." Eric Britter

Sat R 51:35 Mr 16 '68 900w

TLS p520 My 23 '68 1450w

BABBIDGE, HOMER D., ed. On being American. See Webster, N.

BACHELARD, GASTON. The philosophy of no: a philosophy of the new scientific mind; tr. from the French by G. C. Waterston. 123p $6 Orion

501 Science—Philosophy. Philosophy, Modern 68-15462

This "is the presentation of an open-ended philosophy whose principles, unlike those of classic philosophy, are not definitive, whose first truths are capable of constant revision. . . . [The author argues that] progress in contemporary scientific thought has determined a radical transformation of the very principles of knowledge; the scope of our understanding must be stretched and made flexible so that a philosophy of the scientific spirit can be constructed on an entirely new basis." (Publisher's note)

"[The] noted French philosopher who died in 1962 reviews the major philosophies of science, and finds that they are all fragmentary, that they focus on only one aspect of a given scitific concept. In addition, he finds philosophical thought regarding scientific activity characterized by a polarity between two extremes; empiricism and rationalism. Rather than rejecting one of them, he attempts to build a philosophy of science that takes cognizance of both extremes, but emphasizes rationalism. This is a treatise for informed readers with a special interest in the philosophy of science." George Basalla

Library J 93:1905 My 1 '68 110w

"Bachelard's concept of surrationalism is obviously inspired by the principle of complementarity, for he mainly emphasizes the theoretical (i.e., mathematical) coordination of seemingly or initially disparate meanings—the conceptual pluralism inherent, perhaps, in the growth of thought. Yet he certainly underestimates the spontaneous synthetic faculty of intelligence evident in the concepts he discusses: a taste for paradox does appear manifest in modern science, beginning with the theory of relativity, yet Bachelard's distinction between discursive rationalism and what he calls complete rationalism is probably exaggerated and imprecise." Martin Lebowitz

Yale R 58:149 O '68 650w

BACHMAN, JOHN, Jr. auth. The imperial collection of Audubon animals. See Audubon, J. J.

BACHOFEN, J. J. Myth, religion, and mother right; sel. writings of J. J. Bachofen; tr. from the German by Ralph Manheim; with a pref. by George Boas; and an introd. by Joseph Campbell. (Bollingen ser) 309p il $5 Princeton Univ. press

291.37 Symbolism. Mythology, Classical 67-22343

The purpose of the nineteenth century Swiss philosopher "in the three sets of essays which make up this volume was to discover, if possible, the universal law of history." (Pref) The selections are drawn from An Essay on Ancient Mortuary Symbolism, Mother Right, and The Myth of Tanaquil; Bachofen's autobiographical "My Life in Retrospect" is given in full. Translated and adapted from Johann Jakob Bachofen: Mutterrecht und Urreligion. Bibliography. General index and glossarial index.

"This is the first time that a selection of the work of Bachofen has appeared in English. An important . . . social philosopher, he was deeply concerned with the inner life of human beings. For his study he turned to the fertile symbolism of Mediterranean tombs and renowned legends of classical antiquity. The term 'mother right' refers to his theory of matriarchy as a phase of human history. . . . Bachofen's work deserves to be better known in this country, for he influenced more than one important European scholar. His subject matter requires close concentration, but in it one will find an exquisite balance of informative detail and thoughtful interpretation. For that very reason, the introductory essays by George Boas and Joseph Campbell are important for the neophyte. For larger academic and special libraries." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 93:998 Mr 1 '68

"More than Schelling or Hegel, it was Bachofen who in the late Romantic period stood as the precursor of modern theories (and meta-theories) of myth. . . . Not unexpectedly, therefore, the introduction by Joseph Campbell is sympathetic and illuminating, though one is saddened to observe that this sympathy extends even to the point of arguing for the modern empirical verification of some of Bachofen's boldest hypotheses. These are hyperbolic notions at a moment in anthropological studies when the structuralists have challenged the very concept of a permanent mythical content which transcends cultures. Bachofen's . . . writings betray some of the infectious freshness which is the indispensable and irreplaceable virtue of an intellectual pioneer. A valuable book."

Va Q R 44:lxvxi spring '68 200w

BACKMAN, JULES. Advertising and competition. 239p $5 N.Y. Univ. press

659.1 Advertising

67-17108

The author maintains "that advertising is frequently the means of entry for a product, encourages competitive brand-switching, fosters product improvement [and] is not the cause of higher prices. . . . [This] study was underwritten by the Association of National Advertisers." (Choice) Index.

"This heavily documented volume . . . bristles with charts, tables, and graphs. While the basic controversy is not new, this monograph makes a specific case for advertising and is a necessary addition to any library, to stand with relevant works by [N. H.] Borden [Economic Effects of Advertising, BRD 1942], and others, both pro and con, which are referred to in the copious footnotes." Choice 4:1141 D '67 190w

"A literate, well-written defense, supported by numerous tables and charts, but a defense it remains. . . . As the intelligent representation of a controversial point of view, this volume is recommended for large business collections." J. B. Woy Library J 92:2151 Je 1 '67 110w

Reviewed by M. Peterson
Nat R 20:563 Je 4 '68 180w

BACKMAN, MELVIN. Faulkner: the major years; a critical study. 212p $5.75; pa $1.95 Ind. univ. press

813 Faulkner, William 66-22438

"I have selected ten of [Faulkner's] novels (or collections of stories) to study both as individual works and as pieces of a larger pattern. . . . Moving chronologically from work to work, I have considered the relationships existing among the symbols, images, themes, characters, and situations of various books, following attentively the unfolding pattern of the novels of this period. But the primary emphasis has been on each novel as a separate work of art. . . . My purpose is to clarify understanding and sharpen appreciation of Faulkner's works of 1929-1942." (Pref) Contents: Satoris; The Sound and the Fury; Sanctuary; As I lay dying; Light in August; Absalom, Absalom!; The Unvanquished; The Wild Palms; The Hamlet; "The Bear" and Go down, Moses. Some parts of this book appeared as articles in Modern Fiction Studies, La Revue des Lettres Modernes, and the University of Kansas City Review. Bibliography. Index.

"The present book adds little to the standard interpretation as it addresses itself to each of the novels in the major period. It offers no challenge and very few extensions to criticism and scholarship. What it does do and do well is to convey one man's response to reading the novels of Faulkner, a man who is sensitive, literate, and informed. By his devotion to the texts themselves, he frequently affords us fresh and meaningful aperçus concerning individual images and symbols in Faulkner's works. . . . [The author] suggests as part of his overview of the major years that the recurring themes, symbols, and images are interwoven with the novelist's own psychological problems. . . . [Backman's] book offers a sensitive and unpretentious introduction to those novels that most casual readers wish to read." O. W. Vickery Am Lit 39:423 N '67 700w

"A sustained simplicity of style and tone and a profound appreciation for Faulkner's highest accomplishments make Professor Backman's study a valuable work. . . . His analyses of individual novels are revealing and easily understood, although he adds very little that is startlingly new. This study will serve well as an introduction to Faulkner's most difficult novels. The bibliography is extensive and useful for its contemporaneity." C. A. Raines Library J 91:4663 O 1 '66 100w

BACON, MARTHA. Sophia Scrooby preserved; il. by David Omar White. 227p $4.95 Little 68-21167

"Sold as a slave after escaping from her African village burned by the Zulus, the six-year-old daughter of a tribal chief is brought to New England where she becomes a part of the Tory Scrooby household. Christened Sophia, she serves as a companion to headstrong Prudence Scrooby whom she soon surpasses in the graces of the day. When the Revolutionary War levels the Scrooby finances, Sophia (also known as Pansy) is sold again as a slave to a Spanish pirate and begins adventures involving a Voodoo queen, escape to England and her successful search for the Scrooby family. . . . Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:275 O 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:288 N 22 '68 140w

"Readers who enjoy the books of Joan Aiken, Sid Fleischman, and Margery Sharp will be fascinated and thoroughly entertained by the adventures of the indomitable heroine. . . . All the fun and fantastic adventures of Pansy Scrooby are set against a serious and vivid portrayal of the conditions of life in colonial America and of the evils of slavery. A provocative book for the perceptive reader. The illustrations are properly satiric." D. F. Horn Bk 44:561 O '68 260w

"Dickensian in tone, style and characterization, this imaginative historical novel should appeal to pre-teen girls. David White's fine, cross-hatched line drawings add charm." Julia Losinski

Library J 93:3975 O 15 '68 140w

"Martha Bacon has a lively style and when she is sure of her scene, writes with wit and perception. Her story opens promisingly and is most appealing when it pictures life in an African village, the peculiarities of the Elect in a Connecticut town and the fashionable foibles of the 18th-century English upper class. But the possible strength and conviction of the story are repeatedly drained by Mrs. Bacon's contrivances . . . by her failure to examine more closely the black experience this side of the Atlantic. . . . [She] clearly wanted to show that the African child forced into slavery could be at least the natural equal of his American counterpart, that slavery could be kind, and that black people, too, could exploit their own. But her story is too thin: the themes obtrude." Jacqueline Bernard N Y Times Bk R p38 O 20 '68 300w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 110w

BADDELEY, V. C. CLINTON. See Clinton-Baddeley, V. C.

BADEAU, JOHN S. The American approach to the Arab world; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 209p $4.95; pa $2.95 Harper

327.56 U.S.—Foreign relations—Near East, Near East—Foreign relations 67-22494

The former United States Ambassador to Egypt suggests "that in recent years United States policy toward the Arab World has been extremely uneasy, and analyzes the situation in the light of American interests and the new forces at work in the Middle East since the end of World War II. . . . [He discusses] the various dilemmas involved in reconciling American needs to protect world security and to contain Soviet-Communist expansion, while the Arabs deal primarily with their own internal economic and social problems." (Library J) Index.

"[Badeau] stood for the helpful designs that activated Roosevelt, Truman, Dulles and Kennedy. But, read from inside the Middle East today, his book dates him as of their generation, because it ascribes his country's loss of power to control local events . . . entirely to circumstances within the area. The handicaps he names are Soviet intrusion, Arab disarray or America's peculiar and inescapable link with Israel. In fact, the loss of influence that the book describes is even more due to loss of respect for a nation that now seems no better, or surer of the difference between right and wrong than any in Asia or Africa. And a book that passes over this home truth is a book out of joint. . . . Nevertheless, how pleasant and illuminating . . . to absorb the wisdom uttered by an elder, and a knowledgeable elder, about past mistakes, and about future possibilities given the now limited range of gambits open to the United States on its own." Economist 228:43 J1 27 '68 750w

"Mr. Badeau gives one chapter to American policy in the Yemen Civil War which has gone on since 1962. In many ways this chapter represents in capsule form the problems, difficulties, and unavoidable inconsistencies in all our dealings with the Middle East. In his final chapter he offers many thoughtful and sensible suggestions for a more effective approach to future American policy in dealing with the Arab Nations. Mr. Badeau's matter-of-fact approach along with his language and style will appeal both to the informed reader and to the specialists in the field." J. C. Shipman

BADEAU, J. S.—Continued

Library J 93:558 F 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Enil Lengyel

Sat R 51:27 J1 20 '68 340w

BADGLEY, ROBIN F. Doctors' strike; medical care and conflict in Saskatchewan [by] Robin F. Badgley and Samuel Wolfe. 201p $6.50 Atherton

610 Medicine, State, Insurance, Health, Physicians 67-17147

"In 1962 organized medicine in Saskatchewan staged an unsuccessful twenty-three-day strike against the new medicare program of a reformist Canadian Provincial government, which had been re-elected in 1960 in a campaign fought specifically on the medicare issue. The authors in Part I present an historical account of that . . . confrontation. While attention is focused on the 1960's, the social background of Saskatchewan and the history of its medical services are also outlined. . . . In Part II, the Saskatchewan experience is placed in an international perspective. British, American, and Canadian health-service developments over the last three generations are described and [evaluated]." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

"It is clear from a reading of Badgley and Wolfe that the wounds [of the Doctors' Strike] have not healed. In their desire to establish a case for the government-supported program of 1962, the authors have perhaps sacrificed some objectivity. . . . [In its] description of the strike itself, the book ranks as passable journalism. . . . There is little here for the professional reader, since the evidence cited has already achieved a recognized place in the literature of medical care. . . . The story of the Saskatchewan experience needs telling, but it might have been a contribution of more significance if the storytellers had been able to wait even longer in order to reflect upon its consequences. . . . Nevertheless, there are important lessons contained more or less implicitly in [their book]." R. C. Buxbaum

Am Soc R 33:488 Je '68 800w

"Some hitherto undisclosed aspects of the 1962 strike are revealed . . . [and] many weighty and disturbing problems are discussed. . . . Why has the technically admirable and socially prestigious North American medical profession become a social isolate? What is wrong with modern medical education? Why do social-reform movements like the Saskatchewan Co-operative Commonwealth Federation fall victim in their later phases to 'hardening of the arteries'? How does the prevailing oligarchical and entrepreneurial organization of medical practice in North America militate against top-quality health services? . . . Some of these leading questions are tentatively answered in this book. The work is not definitive, but it is of lasting value: whatever it may lack in detail it makes up for by its sense of historical depth." A. K. Davis

Ann Am Acad 376:207 Mr '68 380w

BAER, GEORGE W. The coming of the Italian-Ethiopian war. 404p $9.50 Harvard univ. press 963 Italo-Ethiopian War, 1935-1936 67-14336

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by M. Salvadori

Am Hist R 73:856 F '68 400w

Reviewed by A. A. Castagno

Ann Am Acad 337:192 My '68 900w

Choice 5:251 Ap '68 180w

BAEZ, JOAN. Daybreak. 159p $3.95 Dial press

B or 92 68-29756

The young American singer "writes about her childhood, her mother and father, her relatives and friends and her dreams." (Book World)

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Atlantic 222:136 O '68 1600w

"[Miss Baez] does best when she maintains some distance between herself and her subject: a dialogue with fellow inmates of the Santa Rita Prison, . . . the experience of trying to teach blind children. These passages are evocative, and neatly controlled. . . . For the most part, however, the book is a kind of adolescent confidence—terribly earnest, open, ever wounded, ever young." Arthur Boehm

Book World p7 S 8 '68 750w

Christian Century 85:1109 S 4 '68 20w

Reviewed by David Sterritt

Christian Science Monitor p17 O 3 '68 650w

"Joan Baez speaks for a segment of today's generation and it is as if they were all together in a living room and she was answering questions about herself. She tells about her hangups particularly with her father and, despite a stiff-armed straightforwardness, one catches the mutual love and respect. There is an engaging honesty about her emotional conflicts and dreams. . . . [This] is an exploration into a talented woman's life of feeling and fear and love; it is recommended for both high school and public libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2647 J1 '68 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:3996 O 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:286 S 23 '68 150w

Reviewed by Margot Hentoff

N Y Rev of Books 11:23 N 7 '68 750w

"Perhaps [the book's] greatest value is as evidence of the quality which makes Joan Baez a superstar, and enables her to garner praise with the kind of writing for which a lesser mortal might be flogged. The persistent image in 'Daybreak' is of a brazen little girl, struggling for domination over her personal demons. Young men may find themselves seduced by that flirtatious quality into accepting her prose as real literature. It isn't; but as a rambling letter of self-introduction, [it] almost succeeds. . . . I'm not sure it's proper to expect truth from an autobiographical sketch. But I demand at least a very exotic lie. And 'Daybreak' conveys neither the distraction of charisma, nor the conviction of honesty." Richard Goldstein

N Y Times Bk R p64 S 8 '68 700w

Newsweek 72:62 S 2 '68 550w

"In a dozen pages [the singer] makes her mother so unforgettably vivid that any novelist could envy the artlessness. She writes about her relationships with her father and with Ira, her closest soulmate, so honestly, so profoundly, that the narrative would be embarrassing if it weren't incredibly delicate. . . . The loving memorial to . . . her brother-in-law proves not only that she has a sense of humor but that she can use it to create hilarious moments. . . . Towards the end Baez indulges a bit of heavy philosophy that slightly alters the book's general balance. Her non-violence is, after all, the moving force in her life. . . . Super patriots will continue to see her as a threat but Daybreak is a jewel of American folklore—it captures the America of our dreams." H. S. Resnik

Sat R 51:43 S 7 '68 600w

BAGWELL, ELIZABETH, Jr. auth. This is an airport. See Bagwell, R.

BAGWELL, RICHARD. This is an airport [by] Richard & Elizabeth Bagwell; phot. by Lee Balterman. 30p $1; Titan ed $1.89 Follett

387.7 Airports—Juvenile literature 67-21166

This book describes "the complicated pattern of necessary functions and services provided at the terminal, on the runway and in the flight tower. . . . Ages five to eight." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The strongest features of [this book] are Lee Balterman's excellent color photographs of planes and airport scenes. Unfortunately, the text is poorly written, with awkward and often nuclear sentences. The organization of the book makes it confusing and the choice of words is somewhat questionable for this level of reading skill." Trevelyn Jones

Library J 92:4630 D 15 '67 50w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 5 '68 60w

BAILEY, ANTHONY. The thousand dollar yacht; il. by Peter Tripp. 214p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

797.1 Yachts and yachting 68-10812

The author "an Englishman now living in Stonington, Connecticut, had a St. Pierre sailing dory (twenty-eight feet long, eight feet in beam) built in a New Jersey boatyard to his specifications for less than a thousand dollars [in 1963]. He here tells us about fitting her out, naming her (the Billy Ruffian, which was what British tars called the Bellerophon, the ship on which Napoleon was held captive after Waterloo), launching her, and cruising in her along the New England shore." (New Yorker)

"Mr. Bailey offers sailboat owners and habitués of Long Island Sound a book of local interest with descriptions of various ports that may not always charm the local residents. . . . In this rambling narrative [he] chronicles the daily events of his search for the ideal boat. . . . Interesting characters and salty yarns compensate for the author's literary deficiencies." Gail Hitt

Library J 93:93 Ja 1 '68 130w

"Dozens of books describing such matters appear every year, and a boring lot most of them are; Mr. Bailey's is different solely because he is a gifted writer who, without dramatics or any heightening of experience, can make everything around him come alive."

New Yorker 43:139 Mr 30 '68 140w

BAILEY, GEORGE, jt. auth. The experts. See Freidin, S.

BAILEY, PEARL. The raw Pearl. 206p il $5.75
Harcourt

B or 92

67-11963

The entertainer, singer and actress describes her life and career.

"This is not the usual 'story of my life' told by stars to someone, or ghost written in their names. This is the real Pearl Bailey. She has written her own story in her own inimitable way and it has all the direct simplicity and honesty and, one must add, deep religious conviction that have made her an almost irresistible performer and a truly human being. . . . Her unaffected belief in and reliance on God is manifest throughout. . . . For her story and the way she tells it thunderous applause!" R. F. G.

Best Sell 28:242 S 15 '68 290w

"In this frank story of her life, Pearl Bailey expresses her hard-driving ambition, aggressiveness, and never-say-die exuberance, coupled with her serious attitude toward her work, on every page. . . . [She] discusses race relations (much more universal love needed), marriage (her third, to a musician, is very happy), and how to bring up children (they adopted two), all with equal assurance and gusto. Much of the book derives from taped conversations. For this reason the account keeps the flavor of her speech. This interesting biography is recommended for general purchase and for theater and music collections." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:2648 J1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:4429 N 15 '68 100w [YA]

BAILEY, RALPH EDGAR. Fight for Royal Gorge; maps by James MacDonald; front. by Franz Altschuler. 192p $3.75 Morrow

B or 92 Palmer, William Jackson—Juvenile literature. Railroads—Juvenile literature 68-20659

This biography tells the story of William Jackson Palmer's career, "from his work on the first transcontinental railroad to the construction of his own line." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:275 O 1 '68 80w

"[This is] a plodding biography. . . . In presenting the enormous undertaking and the hazards encountered by the crews in spanning the continent with rails, the author fails to produce any spark to spur readers on." Patricia Dahl

Library J 93:4410 N 15 '68 60w

"[The author] tells Palmer's story well, recreating the man, his time and his exploits. This book abounds in Indian battles and recounts the fight for Royal Gorge. . . . No one who reads the book will doubt that Palmer was just about the best railroad builder ever."

Irving Werstein

N Y Times Bk R p62 N 17 '68 140w

BAILEY, THOMAS A. The art of diplomacy; the American experience. 303p $5.95; pa $2.50
Appleton

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Diplomatic and consular service. Diplomacy

68-11680

This book "is structured around two hundred-odd 'golden rules' that are laid down for the conduct of diplomacy. The 'rules' cover a wide range of subjects—from personnel problems to problems of peace. Each (rule) is accompanied by a commentary based on historical example as to what a diplomat should or should not do." (Best Sell) Chronology. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The present study is designed as a supplement to, not a substitute for, [the author's reader A Diplomatic History of the American People, BRD 1940]. . . . Prof. Bailey displays his faculty for translating history into the American idiom and entertaining the reader as well. . . . While [the book] could most profitably be read during a classroom survey of diplomatic history, . . . [it could also] be used by those already in the service of the State Department as a 'basic guide' to diplomacy. . . . [Though not] a 'scholarly treatise' on the subject like Sir Harold Nicholson's writings, . . . it is fairly well documented and has an excellent chapter-by-chapter bibliography, furnishing recent titles." J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 28:71 My 15 '68 600w

"While this book is a useful introduction to diplomatic practice, it is not so much concerned with the art of diplomacy as with thought about current international problems. . . . [It contains] trenchant historical essays, each of which illustrates a maxim or guideline as emphatic as any of the Ten Commandments. Bailey . . . bluntly declares that the only sensible basis for foreign policy is national self-interest . . . and he exposes myths which have been barriers to discarding outmoded policies. But this outspoken realist has high respect for the power of ideals in foreign policy. . . . This book should appeal to a wide reading public." C. D. Davis

J Am Hist 55:639 D '68 410w

"This manual of diplomatic practice is . . . a marginal piece of work composed of disjointed sections and Professor Bailey's editorial views of how diplomacy should be carried forward. . . . Supplementing the [cited] quotations are his captions concerning diplomatic practice, for example, 'summit diplomacy is inefficient diplomacy,' 'take calculated risks,' and 'great powers can afford to lose face.' This do-it-yourself style simply does not begin to cover the complexities of the vital and worrisome art of diplomacy. The book is interesting as a checklist of views and procedures but hardly one with which to train the journeyman diplomat." R. F. Delaney

Library J 93:558 F 1 '68 200w

BAILEY, THOMAS A. Democrats vs Republicans; the continuing clash. 179p $4.95 Meredith

329.973 Democratic party. Republican party 68-15202

"Bailey, Byrne Professor of American history at Stanford University, outlines the history of political parties in the United States. In the last chapters he estimates the current political situation, the prospective candidates for 1968, and the position of the parties on major issues." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A reputable historian has provided election year political spectators and activists with an interesting and very readable history of American political parties. Bailey writes in a lively and engaging style and captures much of the humorous and bizarre in the American political past. The political scientist and historian will enjoy the book as a crisp memory refresher—the author turns up little that could be considered new evidence or interpretation. The busy layman will find the book devoid of confusing jargon and short enough to read during an evening. It brings the reader right up to the brink of the 1968 nominating conventions, though fast moving events of recent months have eliminated some of the potential Presidential candidates whom he discusses."

Choice 5:679 J1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Dean Albertson

J Am Hist 55:384 S '68 300w

"[The author] gives us the historical background for the 1968 campaign on the most elementary level. Mr. Bailey is relatively unbiased, slightly favoring liberal Republicanism, but his selection and interpretation of material is commonplace, and his style, jaunty and colloquial, is suited to the ephemeral nature of this work." Muriel Weins

BAILEY, T. A.—Continued

Library J 93:758 F 15 '68 100w

BAILYN, BERNARD. The origins of American politics. (Brown Univ. The Charles K. Colver lectures, 1965) 161p $4.95 Knopf

973.2 U.S.—Politics and government—Colonial period 68-12665

"[The author] presents a sketch of [the] form of American politics [in the colonial period] and suggests its . . . importance in explaining the origins of the American Revolution." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This is] a reprint of the monograph first published in Perspectives in American History (vol. 1, 1967). . . . The book is concise and brilliantly argued, although on a high theoretical level, and it becomes the standard work on the origins of early American political systems. It is not sufficiently detailed to provide coverage of the systems of individual colonies, but it does offer an interpretative framework within which political development of particular colonies can be understood. A necessary purchase for all college libraries."

Choice 5:675 J1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Carl Ubbelohde
J Am Hist 55:632 D '68 370w

Reviewed by B. E. Marks
Library J 93:2507 Je 15 '68 150w

"Bailyn has made a major contribution in making sense of the legislatures' fears. . . . But is it correct to see [their] struggle . . . as one in which they are 'radical,' stand for 'popular interests,' 'popular forces' and 'an over-great democracy'? Bailyn's account of the conflicts of colonial politics is to an extraordinary extent a story of economic interests competing to divide the treasure of America; rarely has a scholar arguing for an 'ideological' interpretation presented so much evidence to delight economic determinists. . . . [However,] the conduct of the legislators among themselves, or even in conflict with the governors, really tells us next to nothing about democracy . . . in the case of colonial America, we must look to those outside of and below the legislature." Jesse Lemisch

New Repub 158:25 My 25 '68 2600w

"Bailyn is the Harvard professor who was recently awarded the 1967 Pulitzer Prize in history for 'The Ideological Origins of the American Revolution' [BRD 1967], an impressive study that established beyond question his credentials as an interpreter of the political history of colonial America. . . . [He] knows well how to clothe [his] analyses with document and color. This slim book is altogether fascinating and stimulates an appetite for more." R. G. W.

N Y Times Bk R p33 My 26 '68 200w

"[This] is one of the most intellectually sensitive books on American history to appear for some time. The work is a distillation of [Bailyn's] very important Ideological Origins of the American Revolution, but it goes beyond that book in its study of active politics and examines how the assumptions of men and their political actions combined. . . . [However, though Bailyn] takes the origins of American politics back to England of the late seventeenth century, there is need to push further back, for the extraordinary nature of English politics then lies at the root of American society." J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:23 Je 29 '68 180w

BAIN, CHESTER A. Vietnam: the roots of conflict. 184p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

959.7 Vietnam—History 67-18701

A foreign service officer with the United States Information Agency who was formerly stationed in South Vietnam, the author attempts to view Vietnam's present in the perspective of history. His aim is to assess "the influence of a complicated cultural heritage—a tangle of Confucianism, Buddhism, Catholicism, and native spirit lore; Chinese . . . political and social institutions; and western concepts of individualism, progress, and social mobility—on the course of events in modern Vietnam." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Tracing Vietnam's development from its earliest beginnings until the Franco-Vietnamese colonial war broke out in late 1946, the author presents a thumbnail sketch of the history of Vietnam to bring about a better understanding of the Vietnamese people and their tragic conflict. . . . The closing chapter, 'Efforts for Peace,' is valuable . . . because it outlines in documentary style the various proposals that have been extended by the Communists of the North, by the government of South Vietnam, and by the US. [The author] has produced not a profound treatise but an acceptable background book with which one can probe further into the problem that is facing the US and Vietnam today." Cecil Hobbs

Am Hist R 73:891 F '68 470w

"A welcome addition to the plethora of literature on Viet-Nam in the last half decade. Most of the publications so far, with the exception of Bernard Fall's The Two Viet-Nams [BRD 1964], have erred on one side or the other. . . . Bain presents a balanced study of the dimensions of the Viet-Nam problem in its historical context. Yet the work is not as exhaustive as Fall's inasmuch as the former is far shorter than the latter and is based on far less research. Useful for the layman and to the initiates in the history and politics of Southeast Asia at the college and university level."

Choice 5:107 Mr '68 120w

"After a somewhat muddled disquisition on the modern problem, [Mr. Bain] plods through centuries of legend and dynastic successions, at too great a length for the compass he has set himself, without ever making the relevance of historical events clear or finding the historical frame. He is more at ease when he comes to the French occupation, but his account of events 1939 seems carelessly compiled, and after 1954, when the United States replaced France as the main interested foreign power in Indo-China, it bears too clearly the stamp of the apologist. The chief complaint against this book is, however, that it is dull."

TLS p1208 D 14 '67 600w

BAIN, JOE S. Northern California's water industry: the comparative efficiency of public enterprise in developing a scarce natural resource, by Joe S. Bain, Richard E. Caves & Julius Margolis; pub. for Resources for the future. 766p maps $15 Johns Hopkins press

333.9 Water supply 66-26688

"The authors use the conventional tools of industry analysis to study the water industry of Northern California. . . . With respect to development, the authors conclude that the practices followed have resulted in excessive development. It appears the California Department of Water Resources has erred more in this respect than have the Federal agencies. The authors conclude that violations of allocative functions have, at times, in the sequence of development, assumed significant proportions. . . . [They] trace the cause of the above misallocations to the institutional framework, and develop policy recommendations to correct these evils." (Am Econ R) Bibliography. Index.

"Not only is the book long and technical, it is also rather poorly organized and written. Nevertheless . . . [it] is impressive because of what it contains in empirical information about the waters of Northern California and their development, allocation, and use. . . . [It] is somewhat less impressive in treating hypotheses resulting from market structure, conduct and performance theory. The reader is never quite sure just what hypotheses are being tested. . . . The policy recommendations are neither surprising nor especially original. . . . [but they] are impressive in this particular case because of the documentation. . . . Appendix A, entitled 'A "Pure" Theory of the Demand-Price Relationship for Irrigation Water,' appears to be a distinct contribution to the literature." E. N. Castle

Am Econ R 57:1403 D '67 1600w

Reviewed by C. S. Johnson
Library J 92:108 Ja 1 '67 240w

BAINBRIDGE, RICHARD, ed. Light as an ecological factor. See The British ecological society

BAINE, RODNEY M. Robert Munford; America's first comic dramatist. 132p $5 Univ. of Ga. press

812 Munford, Robert 67-13651

This study is the result of "searching of primary sources for the life of [the] subject and a critical appraisal of Munford's two known plays in the light of British backgrounds and models, local conditions, and the character of the author." (Am Lit) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This brief study] is one of the valuable first steps in the presentation of the colonial Southern literature and mind. Baine has sensibly gone to county and state records for information as to the personal and public career of Colonel Robert Munford, who emerges as a fairly typical planter of the William Byrd class, a justice of the peace, and a Burgess. . . . The book is a little marred by typographical errors. . . . It lacks the cultural backgrounds of the colony which would have explained the man and his work more completely. But it is one of those pioneer studies for which every student of early American literature should find use." R. B. Davis

Am Lit 39:404 N '67 550w

"Brief quotations from Munford's one comedy, The Candidates, and one farce, The Patriots, show Munford to be an imitator of 18th-century imitations of Restoration comic techniques. Baine believes, however, that the plays 'dramatize basically native characters and themes.' Much more interesting than the chapters on the plays are those presenting colonial life in Mecklenburg County, Virginia, and in Williamsburg when Munford studied law there and later served in the house of Burgesses. Since the literary interest is almost nil, this book is recommended only for collections of Virginia history. Scholarly efforts leading to this first book on the Virginia gentleman-planter were obviously excellent."

Choice 5:72 Mr '68 110w

BAKAN, DAVID. Disease, pain, & sacrifice; toward a psychology of suffering. 134p $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press

155.9 Suffering. Sacrifice 67-30126

A "professor of psychology, University of Chicago, explores three realms—the biological, psychological, and the existential—which bear on the matter of suffering." (Library J) Index.

"Bakan is an American psychologist who believes that the contemporary scientific enterprise is continuous with the folk culture of ancient times. In this book he carries forward his chosen task of wedding psychoanalytic insight with empirical verification. . . . He succeeds in uniting scientific language and folk culture. . . . The theological relevance of the book lies in its third and final chapter, which treats of sacrifice and the Book of Job. . . . [Here] Bakan reaches a neo-Freudian understanding of the emergence of Christianity. . . . For all his sacrificing Job must die: 'An immortal father-God who might spare man is a hollow fantasy, and to believe it costs man his maturity.'" T. J. J. Altizer

Christian Century 85:635 My 22 '68 550w

"Bakan does not view the origination of organisms as the outcome of the operation of chance factors but sees instead a purpose, a telos, not unlike Bergson's élan vital, or similar concepts. He tries to incorporate Selye's and Freud's notions of 'self-injurious mechanisms' and of the 'death instinct,' respectively. He writes thus of 'telic centering' and 'telic de-centering.' Disease becomes the latter and health the former, the so-called 'highest telos.' The work is useful in that Mr. Bakan presents some old ideas in new dress; it is recommended for special collections." Louis De Rosis

Library J 93:2511 Je 15 '68 120w

"Bakan assumes that his readers are persons of wide and high culture, equally at home in evolutionary theory, psychoanalysis, and theology. . . . In his first essay, 'Diseases as Telic Decentralization,' Dr. Bakan argues that disease can be conceptualized as a manifestation of disruption of the whole, as a failure in communication between the central, higher and peripheral, lower structures of complex organisms. . . . [His] hypothesis is not, I think, nowadays either remarkable or novel; his telos has, for instance, affinities with Koestler's holon. . . . Bakan is not so much a philosopher, or even a psychologist, as . . . an atheistic theologian seeking to preserve the traditional wisdom of Judaism and Christianity by transplanting it into scientific soil." Charles Rycroft

N Y Rev of Books 11:16 Jl 11 '68 1000w

BAKAN, DAVID. The duality of human existence; an essay on psychology and religion. 242p $6.50 Rand McNally

200.19 Psychology, Religious 66-13438

"A humanistic psychologist examines some ultimate human concerns from the standpoint of two concepts: agency and communion. Agency refers to processes involving the existence of the organism as an individual and includes self protection, self-assertion, and self expansion. It manifests itself in separation, isolation, urge to mastery, and repression. Communion manifests itself in the sense of being at one with other organisms. It includes contact, openness, union, and non-contractual cooperation. The split of agency from [communion] arises from the agency feature itself. The book is an exposition of these two concepts in terms of facts about man's behavior and thought." (Choice) Index.

"Although somewhat naïvely identifying Christian love with American foreign aid, the book ends on this harmonious note: 'What then is a "proper" way to die. . . . The proper way of dying is from fatigue after a life of trying to mitigate agency with communion.' This, after all, is a modern translation of the wisdom of ages into a somewhat esoteric biopsychological language. This book has much in common with some recent literature condemning technology, expedient utilitarian rationalism, and the acquisitive attitude (Erich Fromm, Herbert Marcuse, Norman Brown, Jacques Ellul, J. K. Galbraith, Kenneth Keniston, A. H. Maslow). . . . Bakan has made an important and original contribution to this tradition." W. A. Weisskopf

Am J Soc 73:368 N '67 800w

"Science, religion, sexuality, aggression, death, and disease are some of the areas explored. The discussion is at a high level of abstraction. The reader must find for himself implications and applications. This provocative essay should appeal to students at all levels in the behavioral sciences and humanities. It is scholarly, readable, well annotated."

Choice 3:1121 F '67 170w

BAKER, BETTY. The dunderhead war; a novel. 216p $3.95; to libs and schools. $3.79 Harper

67-18551

An historical novel which traces the adventures of 17-year-old Quince Heffendorf, who tells the story . . . and his martinet Uncle Fritz as they accompany a wagon train from Missouri into Mexican territory during the opening stages of the Mexican War. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Some thorny questions about freedom are posed here, and some rudimentary answers supplied. To Uncle Fritz, the volunteer army is a band of dunderheads doomed to defeat at the hands of Armijo, who knows how to enforce order. What he and Quincy discover in 3,000 miles of hardship, alkali dust and cannon smoke is that . . . order and polished buckles are no match for the independent spirit of the frontier. . . . It makes for a fresh and lively view of the Mexican War, not of why it was fought but how." Helen Renthal

Book World p14 Ja 14 '68 190w

Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 2 '67 90w

"This story lacks the moving quality of heroism which distinguished the author's Walk the World's Rim and The Blood of the Brave, but is equally interesting in its picture of the disasters and agonies of a long journey through Southwest Indian country. . . . Colorful speech and precise, homely details give immediacy to the story, while Uncle Fritz's excessive neatness and his demands for rules add considerable humor." V. H.

Horn Bk 43:599 O '67 170w

"Chalk up another winner for the author of Walk the World's Rim [BRD 1965] and Blood of the Brave [BRD 1966]. . . . There are many interesting sub-plots, and all are combined in a well-told story with action and suspense. Readers are given an honest picture of the grueling hazards of life on the trail. In spite of minor flaws (the plot drags a little at midpoint, and Quince's friend, Les, is too good to be true), this is a first-rate novel that should have great appeal for boys." John Gillespie

BAKER, BETTY—Continued

Library J 92:3859 O 15 '67 130w

BAKER, ELLIOTT. The penny wars. 255p $5.95 Putnam

68-21516

"The setting is the small-town lower middle class of the 1930s [in upper New York State], with everyone listening to The Major Bowes Amateur Hour on this side of the Atlantic, while Hitler is marching into Poland on the other. Tyler [aged sixteen and a half] feels that he ought to be fighting for democracy at the head of a squadron of Spitfires, but first there are battles to win at home—his endless struggle to unburden himself of his aching virginity; his ignominious attempt to get the best of an anti-British, professionally Irish teacher-bully; and his guerrilla war with the only person who is even more of a misfit than he, a German refugee dentist named Axelrod." (Sat R)

"In backing away from the exploding, high-powered absurdities of black comedy [in his earlier A Fine Madness, BRD 1964], which seemed so appropriate a few years ago, Baker has produced a novel with talented passages, but one that finally has no reach. The technique, as before, features light and dark, laughter and tears, in quick alternation. But the effect is muffled by a literary self-consciousness. . . . I wish [Tyler] were a fresher creation who could command our sympathies more strongly in his own right, and less obviously as an amalgam of his fictional predecessors, Huck Finn, Holden Caulfield. But mostly I wish he were not so conspicuous a vehicle for the author's message that the penny brutalities we inflict on each other are the other side of the coin of war." Lucy Rosenthal
Book World p10 Ag 11 '68 330w

Reviewed by R. K. Burns

Library J 93:2896 Ag '68 180w

Reviewed by George Merrill

Library J 93:13334 S 15 '68 210w [YA]

"It is hard to conceive of an enthusiast for the new who would find this book unrewarding, if he just grants it a little patience. Patience, not because it begins badly but because its style is traditional and its subject is conventional. . . . The events of the story, though set in [the] frightening ambience [of 1939], are seemingly the trivia of any adolescence. But Baker has made every sequence a bland-looking pellet that explodes and reverberates. . . . Suddenly . . . episodes tilt. We see the underside of the surface: the propensity to force new experience into old patterns; . . . the demonic jest, all the more demonic because those who are stabbed by it can now see the joke." Stanley Kauffman
New Repub 159:19 Ag 24 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Josh Greenfield

N Y Times Bk R p28 Jl 28 '68 850w

"[Tyler] is a delightful misfit who shows every sign of growing up to be the crazy poetic loser of Elliott Baker's earlier book, A Fine Madness. He is intelligent, callow, and at the same time both painfully insecure and sleekly self-satisfied. Between his personal one-boy generation and the rest of the world there is not just a gap but an abyss. . . . Dr. Axelrod is one of the finer bits of high comedy writing in recent years. . . . His absurd and inevitable end is as splendidly existential as his beginning. The book is extraordinarily well written and shatteringly funny. Elliott Baker has brought back the boredom and innocences and foolish joys of the Thirties with a wealth of background detail." Arthur Prager
Sat R 51:24 Ag 3 '68 350w

BAKER, ELSWORTH F. Man in the trap. 354p il $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

150.19 Psychology. Reich, Wilhelm. Sex
67-18449

A "presentation of Wilhelm Reich's theory that human character is based upon the movement and blocking of sexual energy. The author . . . analyzes in depth the causes and effects of these emotional blocks, and surveys at length the varying types of human character they produce and the general social and political behavior they influence. In the concluding sections of the book, he describes the treatment of these blocks and the prevention of neurotic development." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The first systematic exposition of Wilhelm Reich's organonomic theory of psychiatry. . . . Baker, former student of Reich and now a practicing organonomist and psychiatrist, presents a modified Reichian view of neurosis and its treatment. Mature students and practitioners will find this an unusual and interesting approach, though disappointing in organization and writing style. The case histories are not well presented and many theoretical points are not cogently argued. The chapter on 'The Adolescent Problem' will shock many, but deserves praise for its courageous honesty. Baker's discussion of character and politics goes beyond Adorno's The Authoritarian Personality [BRD 1950], but is flawed by his conservative bias. Perhaps this book would not have pleased Reich, but it will be an eye-opener for those unfamiliar with his long neglected ideas."

Choice 5:411 My '68 170w

"The brilliance of some of [Reich's] thought is undeniable, but organonomy has remained a limited cult. . . . The glossary is vital, since Reich adopted special meanings for common words, such as armor, core, and hook. Most library needs can be met by the 11-page article on Reich, with a good bibliography, in The Encyclopedia of Philosophy. For complete psychology collections." Sally Poundstone
Library J 92:2589 Jl '67 130w

BAKER, LAURA NELSON, jt. auth. Listen America. See Stoutenberg, A.

BAKER, LAURA NELSON. O children of the wind and pines; il. by Inez Storer. 56p $2.95 Lippincott

Christmas stories 67-7916

An account of how Jean de Brébeuf, Jesuit missionary among the Canadian Huron Indians, wrote North America's first Christmas song "Jesus Ahatonhia," and of an orphaned Indian girl, Atatase, who learned to sing the song. "Ages nine to eleven." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This book] is based on material drawn from records kept by Jesuit missionaries. . . . A flat, documentary style recounts the story of motherless Atatase, her fear of the black-robed priests, her awkward singing voice, the death of her father, her attendance at the Jesuit's school, and Father de Brébeuf's teaching her to sing the beautiful carol. The elements for a moving, unusual plot with a Christmas theme are here, but not a spark of inspiration to bring the story alive." Ann Currah

Library J 91:5137 O 15 '66 120w

"Around this interesting fact [of the composition of North America's first Christmas song] has been woven a brief, rather prosy story. . . . Inez Storer's illustrations, derived from Indian pictographs, are not too successful." M. F. O'Connell

N Y Times Bk R p68 D 4 '66 60w

BAKER, LEONARD. Back to back; the duel between FDR and the Supreme court. 311p pl $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

347.9 U.S. Supreme Court. Roosevelt, Franklin Delano. U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945 67-21244

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by A. H. Kelly

Am Hist R 73:1672 Je '68 450w

Reviewed by C. H. Pritchett

Am Pol Sci R 62:631 Je '68 340w

Reviewed by R. E. Burke

Ann Am Acad 337:195 My '68 550w

Choice 5:401 My '68 270w

Reviewed by D. G. Morgan

J Am Hist 55:425 S '68 460w

BAKER, LEONARD. The guaranteed society. 276p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

338.973 U.S.—Economic policy. Bounties
68-23628

The author, "a Washington news correspondent . . . [discusses] subsidy and guaranteed profit to airplane manufacturers, the merchant marine, users of government patents and oil shale lands . . . [and] the idea of guaranteed annual income. He suggests that in place of guarantees we substitute profit incentive plans to stimulate the economy." (Library J) Index.

"Each of these diverse cases raises distinctive issues, with which Baker deals in diverse, ad hoc, and mostly inconsistent fashions. . . . [He] should be given his meager due: He is a well-intentioned man . . . he dislikes private monopolies and self-serving bureaucrats and he is compassionate toward . . . [the] poor. A frontal assault upon the strongly institutionalized economic favoritism of American political life requires more than good intentions and nice tastes, however. A critic of this unsavory part of the establishment should have moral fervor, but Baker's miscellany of targets produces at most a diffused and rhetorical indignation." G. J. Stigler

Book World p28 S 8 '68 850w

Reviewed by H. S. Camenson
Library J 93:2651 J1 '68 120w

"It is perhaps inevitable that the book have some of the qualities of a debater's brief—or, more precisely, a series of them. Substantial documentation is claimed for Mr. Baker's point of view. But in fact this consists largely of quoted opinions of officials whose judgments happen to coincide with his. For this reason . . . [it] will not wholly satisfy the specialist in political science, or economics, or public administration. Nevertheless this is a well-written and valuable book. . . . It is in substance first-rate reporting in depth . . . [and] will add appreciably to most people's knowledge of the major issues discussed. . . . [Least satisfactory] is its final chapter, 'Toward a Creative Society.' Here . . . Mr. Baker offers little that is new." J. R. Fredland

Sat R 51:112 S 14 '68 1050w

BAKER, RUSSELL. Our next president; the incredible story of what happened in the 1968 elections. 108p $3.95 Atheneum pub.

817 Presidents—U.S.—Election—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. 68-23262

The editorial columnist of the New York Times has written in advance about the 1968 Presidential campaign and election, in which "neither President Johnson, running for reelection with Robert Kennedy as running mate, or the Lindsay-Tower ticket can get a majority. The spoiler is former Alabama Governor George Wallace, who, benefiting from a series of riots in the nation's northern cities during the summer of 1968, piles up enough electoral votes to throw the election into the House. The House wrangles from election day until January 20 and finds itself deadlocked. . . . [Thus] the Vice-Presidential candidate of the party which controls the Senate. . . . In this case Senator Kennedy, [becomes] acting President." (Book World) Portions of this book were first published in The Saturday Evening Post.

"I found [this] book thoroughly enjoyable. . . . It is how Robert Kennedy becomes President that makes Baker's book fascinating reading. . . . One immediate effect of [its] pre-publication in The Saturday Evening Post has been a study by the Senate of what it would do in such an eventuality as [the deadlock] described in [the book]. The view emerged that the Senate would have to do just what Baker suggests it do. . . . The other fascinating aspect of the book is how Baker uses the conversation alleged to have occurred when Lyndon Johnson told Bobby Kennedy he wasn't going to be a candidate for Vice President in 1964. Baker turns it around into a conversation between acting President Kennedy and President-elect Johnson. . . . Some have criticized Baker's dream for being too wild. My sole criticism is that the way things are going in reality, his opium may only turn out to be a stale cigarette." Pierre Salinger

Book World p5 Ap 7 '68 650w

"Russell Baker has written the story of the 1968 presidential election . . . delightfully. And in many respects, he could be right. In one or two details, the facts have already caught up with [him]. . . . [But] the crystal ball is bound to be clouded here and there. . . . Before [the] stern denouement there are many adventures. Perhaps the most acid is when President Johnson dismisses Dean Rusk and forces Vice-President Humphrey to become Secretary of State. That opens the way for the Democratic Convention to nominate Bobby Kennedy for a second place. . . . Mr. Baker may have performed what some will regard as a great public service. . . . [He] may have prevented the chain of events he so vivaciously describes." E. D. Canham

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 28 '68 470w

Reviewed by J. J. Fox
Library J 93:2227 Je 1 '68 180w

"I admire [Baker's] courage. . . . [He has entered] the field of political prognostication, and it is fraught with peril. . . . By the time the 1968 conventions roll around this summer, Baker will have been proven wrong so many times he will have the stature of the scientific polling organizations. . . . [His prediction of] a Johnson-Kennedy ticket . . . is an example of [his] shrewdness. He is familiar with the President's style. Once the President reads anything in advance, he changes his plans. . . . What is the secret of Russell Baker's success as a prognosticator? . . . A guiding principle in his work is that there is a predictability to American politics. . . . But some of Baker's predictions seem odd. . . . For instance, he predicts that Richard Nixon [will engineer] the nomination for John Lindsay. . . . This is so incredible . . . I can only assume there is something arcane at work here." Marvin Kitman

N Y Times Bk ■ p10 Mr 17 '68 950w

Reviewed by K. W. Thompson
Sat R 51:61 My 18 '68 310w

BAKER, SAMM SINCLAIR. The permissible lie; the inside truth about advertising. 236p $5.95 World pub.

659.1 Advertising. Business ethics 68-12317

The author "who left Madison Avenue four years ago to write fulltime, has four conclusions about advertising. First, the making of a profit is uppermost—public service is secondary. 'A lie that helps build profits is considered a permissible lie.' Second, much of advertising is based on the permissible lie concept. Third, this fakery undermines the attitudes and ethics of the adult, the child, and the family. Fourth, the above are not necessary to achieve improved sales and profits demanded by the advertiser." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:134 S '68 140w

"Slightly more than one-third of the book constitutes an effective attack on the deceptive advertising so commonly used in our society. . . . Baker's evaluation of the advertising industry provides an interesting introduction to some of the significant ethical problems in this field. The book has its limitations, however. Some of the most ominous aspects of advertising are never examined. . . . Baker's proposed solutions are inadequate. . . . To call for self-regulation by the advertising industry is naive. Such possible remedies as putting a tax on advertising or creating government-sponsored, ad-free radio and TV networks are not examined. Nonetheless, the book is worth reading if one is aware of its limited scope." R. H. Bolton

Christian Century 86:17 Ja 1 '69 550w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p13 S ■ '68 420w

"[Baker] points out how the consumer can improve the quality of ads—and products. Much of what he says has been said before, starting with V. Packard's The Hidden Persuaders [BRD 1957]. However, this book is well written and worth reading, regardless of which side of Madison Avenue you live on. Recommended for public libraries." R. L. Waters

Library J 93:1134 Mr 15 '68 150w

"[The author] strings together examples from the seemingly inexhaustible supply of deceptions, exaggerations, deceptions, and distortions of the advertising business. Mr. Baker's one-sided approach almost turns one's natural antipathy to Madison Avenue to sympathy. . . . [Moreover, his book,] drawn from more than thirty years of experience, adds up few benefits. Nor do his remedies seem easily realizable: the 'magazine' concept for the TV networks; product boycott to keep the advertiser honest; advertising men who are public as well as product-oriented. If there are serious flaws in the book, it surely does no great harm once again to catalogue the outrageous sins of the business." S. W. Little

Sat ■ 51:109 Mr ■ '68 270w

BAKER, TIMOTHY D. Health manpower in a developing economy: Taiwan, a case study in planning, by Timothy D. Baker and Mark Perlman. (Johns Hopkins Univ. The Johns Hopkins monographs in int. health) 203p $6.50 Johns Hopkins press

610.69 Medicine. Public health—Taiwan
67-22892

"The book's purposes are: to assess the present relationship between supply of medical personnel and the economic demand for their services; to project supply and demand into the future; and to propose practical solutions for any imbalances. . . . The authors present . . . information on the medical personnel position in Taiwan and on training facilities and competence. . . . They undertook 66,000 interviews to provide basic data, especially on demand for services." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

"This is an interesting report of a comprehensive study. . . . The descriptive passages on history, geography, education, the people, economy, and government introduced in Chapter 1 and references in various other chapters pertinent to health manpower needs and planning tend to hold the reader's interest. Another appealing, and sometimes frustrating, aspect of the book is the developing story of the study which sometimes takes off abruptly into statistical and research methods. The discussion becomes ecologic, descriptive (numbers and distributions), analytical, evaluative, predictive, and methodological in very close order. The sophisticated student of health manpower planning related to changing health care needs will find this approach to the subject a challenge." L. S. Goerke

Am J Pub Health 58:1125 Je '68 230w

"[This] is a valuable contribution to the growing field of health economics. . . . [The authors'] projection of effective demand is an ingenious as well as interesting effort, though one might want to debate their conceptualization of the fundamental relationship between health expenditures and total expenditures adjusted for health outlays. . . . Their multisort analysis—described in a special appendix by Dr. William Reinke—seems to be a useful variant of the analysis of variance for dealing with the irregular distributions characteristic of their data on demand for health services. On all these points, the study marks a new and original approach to the problem of changes in the medical personnel establishment." Wilfred Malenbaum

Ann Am Acad 337:180 My '68 950w

Choice 5:996 O '68 170w

BAKER, WILLIAM E. Syntax in English poetry, 1870-1930. 197p $4.75 Univ. of Calif. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism
67-64721

"This comparison of syntax . . . defines three fundamental kinds of syntactic variation in two groups of poets, one active in 1870 and the other around 1930. . . . Through a study of specific verse sentences in Yeats and Hopkins, Eliot and Browning, the author shows what special effects these poets achieve by syntactic innovation. . . . [He] discusses the aesthetic function of syntax in individual poems, showing how irony and psychological subtlety are achieved by conscious control of word order." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The study uses the concerns and insights of linguistic scholarship with discernment. . . . Occasionally typographical errors occur in quoted lines, so that one wonders if the elaborate table of syntactical structures found in 30 poets is entirely accurate; but few readers will demand that this study be scientifically accurate. This is a book for advanced students or instructors, and they will gain most from its general conclusions. Should be most useful for libraries with large linguistics or modern poetry collections."

Choice 5:772 S '68 140w

"Mr. Baker's study is brief and necessarily fairly technical, but he does manage to make a number of fascinating points in the course of proving that syntax has an aesthetic function in verse. . . . The business-like cover of [this book] may suggest that his extended essay is more restricted in scope and general appeal than in fact it is."

Economist 228:46 J1 6 '68 230w

BALAKIAN, ANNA. The symbolist movement: a critical appraisal; consulting ed: Haskell M. Block. 208p $6.95; pa $2.45 Random house

841 Symbolism in literature. French poetry
—History and criticism 67-12362

A "professor of French and comparative literature at New York University here traces the development of Symbolism as an ethos and as a technique, from its origins in Swedenborgian mysticism to its apogee in the 'decadent' nihilism of the fin de siècle. . . . [Following the author's examination of] the works of Baudelaire, Verlaine, Rimbaud, Mallarmé, and the Symbolist Cénacle, she concludes that the movement centered in man's confrontation of death amid the cosmic void, and that its characteristic mode was an indirect, visionary discourse of objective images which shunned the frank statement of personal emotion. In two chapters she discusses the influence of Symbolism on the theater, and on the works of Yeats, Eliot, Stevens, Perse, and their contemporaries." (Library J)

"A valuable introduction not only to Symbolism, but to the entire modern movement in literature." J. V. Brain

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 140w

"Professor Balakian is such a gifted commentator that both the specialist and the general reader will conclude that this book is the most useful reference work published to date in English. Chapter Two, an analysis of Swedenborgism, and Chapter Three, a study of Baudelaire's romantic poems in juxtaposition to his clearly pro-Symbolist tendencies in 'Les Fleurs du Mal,' are especially clear and helpful explications of the two poetic styles. The tenor of the book is always sound and urbane; [the author] has written an extremely skillful account of a complex position in modern literature."

Va Q R 44:clvi autumn '68 150w

BALANDIER, GEORGES. Daily life in the kingdom of the Kongo; from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century; tr. from the French by Helen Weaver. 288p il pl $6.95 Pantheon bks.

916.75 Congo (Democratic Republic)—History
66-11709

The author studies "the ancient kingdom of the Kongo from the time of its first contact with Europe until its decline under the first advances of Portuguese colonialism. . . . [He describes] aspects of life in the kingdom: ceremonies, tribal and family relationships, customs, art, music, technology, agriculture, and commerce." (Library J) This is a translation of La Vie Quotidienne au Royaume de Kongo, published in France in 1965.

Choice 5:1024 O '68 120w

"Although [the author] admits that most of the original documentation is of missionary origin, it can be translated, 'guided by modern sociological and ethnological knowledge.' He accomplishes this task and at the same time is able to place the available historical facts into a larger symbolic or ritualistic context. He displays a prodigious knowledge of the area and its peoples. . . . The translation is extremely fluent, making this a remarkably readable book on the early history of one part of Africa. It is recommended especially for libraries specializing in Africa and the social sciences." H. K. Flad

Library J 93:2652 J1 '68 150w

BALASSA, BELA. Studies in trade liberalization: problems and prospects for the industrial countries. 346p $11.50 Johns Hopkins press

382 Free trade and protection. Commercial policy 67-22889

"This book contains a series of nine studies on the problems of, and prospects for, trade liberalization among industrial countries. . . . Following a methodologically oriented introduction by Balassa, . . . the series contains six area or country studies: on the United States, by Mordechai E. Kreinin; Canada, by Ronald J. Wonnacott; the Common Market, by F. Hartog; the United Kingdom, by Sidney J. Wells; Scandinavia, by Staffan B. Linder; and Japan, by Kiyoshi Kojima. The final two chapters contain problem-oriented studies, the first on fiscal and social barriers to integration, by Douglas Dosser, and the second, by William B. Kelly, Jr., on nontariff barriers." (Am Econ R) Some of these studies have been published in economics journals. Index.

"With respect to the individual papers, it is rather easy to find theoretical confusions in all of them, although their primary function of providing information is not impaired significantly as a consequence. . . . [The Wonnacott paper is] the best of the lot—well organized, lucid, and on the whole theoretically sound. . . . Aside from a number of . . . theoretical slips in a generally nontheoretic approach, this book has much to recommend it to the reader who wishes to obtain some basic information about the possible effects of trade liberalization on the economic structures in the countries in question. The last chapter should also be of considerable use to those in search of a compact but extensive discussion of existing nontariff barriers." J. E. Floyd
Am Econ R 58:1018 S '68 1200w

"Libraries will definitely want to acquire this book and place it alongside Balassa's Trade Liberalization among Industrial Countries: Objectives and Alternatives [BRD 1968], as both provide some of the best available reading for anyone who is concerned with current efforts to liberalize trade."
Choice 5:836 S '68 130w

BALASSA, BELA. Trade liberalization among industrial countries: objectives and alternatives; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 251p $7.95 McGraw

382 Commercial policy. International economic relations 67-16296

An advisor with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development "provides an analysis of the economic and political prospects for and likely consequences of freer multilateral trade. He considers the possibilities of (1) an Atlantic Free-Trade Area, (2) an arrangement among industrial countries that excludes the Common Market, and (3) continuing tariff reductions under the most-favored-nation clause. The undesirable political and economic consequences of the first two alternatives lead Balassa to recommend the gradualism of periodic most-favored-nation tariff reductions as the best route to freer trade." (Choice) Index.

"[Balassa's book] is comprehensive, articulate, concise, and judicious. . . . The book was completed in the spring of 1966, nearly a year before an agreement was reached in the Kennedy Round. Balassa's search for alternatives reflects the then-current belief that the negotiations would not succeed. . . . This book involves empirical applications of customs union theory, together with an assessment of the political implications of some of the choices. . . . [However] in selecting among the choices offered by Balassa, more data and information are needed than he supplies. Clearly not all of the elements in the choice, especially the political aspects, can be quantified. Balassa, in attempting a quantitative economic utilitarianism for the nation-state, has pointed in a useful direction for policy oriented research." R. Z. Aliber

Am Econ R 58:618 Je '68 1000w

Reviewed by D. S. Ball

Am Pol Sci R 62:692 Je '68 490w

"Professional scholars, students, and interested laymen will benefit from a perusal of this work by a distinguished scholar of international economics."

Choice 5:92 Mr '68 100w

Reviewed by H. S. Camenson

Library J 92:1923 My 15 '67 190w

BALCHIN, NIGEL. Kings of infinite space. 264p $4.95 Doubleday

68-11792

"Lewis, the narrator and central character, a physiology don from Cambridge, England, tells . . . the story of his eighteen-month spell of training in the United States for a flight deep into space. . . . But then, with all his tests endured and all the simulations surmounted, Lewis is balked of his journey because he is seriously injured in a car-crash on his way to Cape Kennedy and the launching-pad. Julian, his luscious scientific female friend . . . tape-records his mind-wanderings in hospital during the critical stages before his recovery. 'If we are to be Kings of Infinite Space', says the play-back, 'we need more qualifications than a degree in engineering.' " (TLS)

"The expert handling of scientific and technical backgrounds which one expects of Nigel Balchin is present in this timely introspective novel. The scene is the National Aeronautical and Space Administration Center in Houston; the time, 1969 to 1970. . . . The personal and emotional entanglements of the characters are skillfully interwoven with the scientific and technical matter to produce an entertaining, revealing, and topical story. Recommended for large fiction collections." R. L. Hough

Library J 93:1914 My 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:811 Ag 13 '68 320w

"This is not a political thriller but an exploratory and reflective book, and, as always, Nigel Balchin writes extremely well. Apart from informing us of the physical rigours of astronaut training . . . he probes the philosophical and emotional reactions of the selected men, and the relationships between them, their wives and girlfriends." Gillian Freeman
New Statesman 74:440 O 6 '67 180w

"It's a world of limitless space and finite men that Balchin investigates in this curiously anticlimactic novel. . . . The author's earth-bound hero concludes that space exploration is conducted in a void of psychic purpose. ('Our technical skill has outrun our imagination.') Excellent deduction, Lewis." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 Jl 14 '68 100w

TLS p1029 N 2 '67 240w

BALDERSTON, MARION, ed. Letter book: London and Philadelphia, 1681-1684. See Claypoole, J.

BALDICK, ROBERT, ed. & tr. Monsieur Nicolas. See Restif de la Bretonne, N. E.

BALDRIGE, LETITIA. Of diamonds and diplomats. 337p $6.95 Houghton

B or 92

68-26055

The author "was social secretary at the American Embassy, Paris, at the age of 21. She served the same function for Ambassador Clare Boothe Luce in Italy. She directed publicity for Tiffany's while they were reshaping their old-fashioned conservative image. And she was with the Kennedys in the White House. Reminiscences of the . . . time with the Kennedys take up about half the book." (Publisher's note)

"Houghton Mifflin should really not have allowed Miss Baldrige to rewrite her earlier book, Roman Candle [BRD 1956]. What was funny first time round tends to be embarrassing the second. Besides, as in the memoirs of the other housekeeping ladies . . . things have a tendency to get chucked out of perspective. . . . [The author] suffers from undiluted hero worship and a vocabulary out of the Vogue vulgate. Everything is chic, creative, naughty or blasé—the most overworked adjective in the book. Plain words are avoided when fancier ones—repast, abode and utilize—will do." N. L. Magid

Book World p17 S 29 '68 850w

"George Struthers, vice-president of Sears Roebuck, said of Letitia Baldrige: 'What other girl has led the life you've led?' Words like fascinating, glamorous, hectic, describe the life of this supercharged female. . . . The enthusiasm, intelligence, and sense of humor that enabled her to carry out a heavy schedule are obvious. Every page of her book is full of interesting anecdotes told with humor, affection, and good taste, and without snobbery. She still manages to combine her career with marriage and a family—truly a life that is every girl's dream. The book is highly recommended for young adult collections and should be a first choice for public libraries." Gillian Olechno

Library J 93:2856 Ag '68 160w [YA]

Reviewed by Glendy Culligan

Sat R 51:80 S 21 '68 700w

BALDRY, H. C. Ancient Greek literature in its living context. 144p il col il maps $5.50; pa $2.95 McGraw

880.9 Greek literature—History and criticism 67-25806

In this survey of Greek literary history, the author "attempts to recreate the living atmosphere of a past civilization . . . [using] quotations from a variety of translations . . . [accompanied by] pictorial and archaeological evidence. . . . [The period covered extends] from Homeric times to the Roman conquest." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Baldry combines a thoughtful but vividly written text with an unusually fine selection of illustrations. . . . In the main he lets the Greeks speak for themselves. . . . In so brief a presentation it is impossible to explore in much depth any aspect of this fascinating culture, but if Baldry has presented few new insights, he has succeeded brilliantly in a convincing suggestion of how life may have seemed on the Greek mainland and islands. . . . This is a volume which could intrigue both laymen and teenagers, and yet would not lack appeal to scholars, particularly in its illustrative choices. Recommended especially for the smaller and liberal arts colleges."

Choice 5:1127 N '68 140w [YA]

"[A] pleasant introduction. . . . [Mr. Baldry] devotes five brief chapters to Homer, Hesiod and the lyric poets, the dramatists, the major prose writers, and the Alexandrians. He provides standard information brought up to date by the findings of recent scholarship. His critical comments are succinct and judicious. Moreover, he provides a carefully selected bibliography. . . . For high school students and university undergraduates, as well as the general reader." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 93:2873 Ag '68 210w [YA]

BALDWIN, ALFRED L. Theories of child development. 618p il pl $3.95 Wiley

155.4 Child study 66-26733

This volume is devoted to a survey-in-depth of seven major theories of child development. The chapters include: Fritz Heider and naïve psychology; Kurt Lewin and field theory; The theory of Jean Piaget; Sigmund Freud and the psychoanalytic theory of development; Stimulus-response theories; Heinz Werner—The organismic developmental point of view; Talcott Parsons and Robert F. Bales—The sociological viewpoint. Bibliography includes author index. Index.

"Baldwin (N.Y.U.), well-known author in the field of child-parent relations, presents a brilliant and well written survey of current theories of child behavior and psychology in broad, theoretical perspective. . . . Each theory is introduced by a statement of its philosophical and methodological background and the effect of this background on the development of the theory itself. The final part of each section is devoted to a critique of the theory. The concluding chapter attempts an integrated theory of child development. Excellent photographs of each of the theoreticians highlight a volume of unusual scope. A 'must' for advanced and graduate courses as well as for supplementary reading for the introductory course."

Choice 4:915 O '67 130w

"Early in the book the author provides an excellent account of the nature and methodological principles of scientific theory. [He] proceeds to critically evaluate each of the theorists in the light of empirical findings. On occasion, one can disagree with the appraisal of the studies which Baldwin discusses. . . . At other times, however, [he] is careful in his analysis of the theories and empirical research and expounds contrary evidence when it exists. . . . This book is one which anyone interested in the scientific study of the development of the child should read and examine carefully."

Judith Brook

Record 69:612 Mr '68 850w

BALDWIN, DAVID A. Economic development and American foreign policy, 1943-62. 291p $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

333.91 Economic assistance. U.S.—Foreign relations 66-20597

Analysis of the evaluation of "soft" lending (long-term dollar loans at low or no interest) . . . in the American aid program. In analyzing this phenomenon, Professor Baldwin divides the twenty years covered by this study into four periods and compares . . . the shifting attitudes toward various techniques of foreign aid and their relative effectiveness. [He draws] on the literatures of political science and economics in addition to contemporary sources." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"The distinction between conventional and soft loans [is] . . . a matter Baldwin analyzes with great skill. At times, the reader suffers some rather tedious repetition; occasionally, he could wish for concrete illustrations to buttress the argument; above all, he would appreciate more detailed statistical data than are provided on the various kinds of aid. But, in general, this is an informative and provocative book." G. T. White

Am Hist R 73:622 D '67 390w

"[Professor Baldwin] employs his rather traditional techniques with exceptional thoroughness and organizational rigor. . . . He analyzes policy inputs and policy outputs at successive stages of an ongoing process; what is missed most is the kind of detailed treatment of decision-making, differentiating individuals and agencies, that could better explain the conversion of the policy inputs to particular policy outputs. . . . Baldwin has thoroughly mastered the relevant political literature, including the voluminous Congressional documentation and most of the relevant economics literature. He uses his impressive learning aggressively to challenge particular judgments of senior political scientists who have ventured into this field before him. . . . This is a book that none of those specialists or would-be specialists can afford to overlook. . . . [It] is a book for scholars. Laymen are not likely to be excited by its somewhat disjointed substantive theme—that the tradition from emphasis on hard loans to emphasis on soft loans (rather than grants) was designed to baby congressmen along by giving them some blanket wool to pull over their eyes." H. B. Westerfield

Ann Am Acad 372:143 Jl '67 440w

"Baldwin takes a very narrow and fairly sterile self-conscious 'political science' approach and limits his book rigidly to a study of the mechanics of how the U.S. drifted towards a 'soft' loan policy in its foreign aid program between 1943 and 1962. Since the author makes no general critical statements of any significance on the 'soft' loan policy itself, but is totally absorbed in the side-issue of how the policy became accepted and respectable, the value of his book is greatly diminished for all but the most specialized readers. Not useful for any general or undergraduate library; recommended for graduate libraries only."

Choice 4:875 O '67 140w

J Pol Econ 75:775 O '67 250w

Reviewed by C. L. Harriss

Pol Sci Q 83:439 S '68 800w

BALDWIN, GEORGE B. Planning and development in Iran. 212p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

333.955 Iran—Economic policy 67-18377

From 1958 to 1961 the author "was a planner in the Economic Bureau of the Plan Organization of Iran, an organization backed by the Ford Foundation and the World Bank. In this book, Mr. Baldwin explains . . . how and why the attempt to introduce economic planning into Iran failed. Basically, he states that Iranian politics was against planning, and he predicts that until fundamental changes take place in the distribution of political power in Iran, there will be little growth of constructive social values." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by S. H. Wellisz

Am Econ R 58:982 S '68 700w

"Baldwin brings impressive credentials to his task. . . . Immersed in the minutiae of planning for Iranian development he has nonetheless retained a capacity for achieving perspective. . . . In addition to a wealth of little known details of Iran's politics and economy, the author provides some general considerations of planning for development which will be of relevance to those with no interest in Iran. While invigorated by personal experience, the work suffers from an absence of more general research and documentation. Numerous errors of fact and typography impair the work. But perhaps more disappointing is the author's failure to match his planning projections, made in 1962, with data on Iranian economic performance available for 1965 or 1966. The reader might then have had a better sense for at least the theoretical value of the planning effort in Iran and the developing world in general." Marvin Zonis

Am Pol Sci R 62:646 Je '68 430w

"This is a case study valuable in its field, but recommended only for specialists in economic planning." David Dorman

Library J 92:3634 O 15 '67 160w

BALDWIN, JAMES. Tell me how long the train's been gone. 484p $5.95 Dial press

68-18639

In this novel by the author of Go Tell It On the Mountain (BRD 1953) and The Fire Next Time (BRD 1963) the hero and narrator is "a very successful actor named Leo Proudhammer. As the story begins, he is thirty-nine years old, at the height of his career, and he is being stricken by a heart attack. As he lies in the hospital, he recalls his childhood in Harlem, his loving mother, his fierce father, his adored brother Caleb; he recalls his struggles as a youth, his love affair with a white girl [Barbara King], who, like Leo, goes on to become a great figure on the stage. . . . At the end, Leo Proudhammer leaves the hospital with his young protégé and lover, 'black Christopher.'" (Commentary)

Reviewed by Eugene McNamara

America 118:817 Je 29 '68 460w

Reviewed by Philip Toynbee

Atlantic 222:91 J1 '68 950w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 28:138 J11 '68 750w

"You get, in Baldwin's new novel, the sense of a man rummaging in his trunk for a theme. It has been six years since Another Country [BRD 1962], and the crowd back home is beginning to shift its feet and remember appointments. . . . The first section covers the early years in Harlem; and although Baldwin has been there before, and many writers have been there since, this is still his turf and we get some good pages. No one evokes the Harlem of the Thirties and Forties more convincingly than Baldwin—never mind the occasion. . . . But something seems to go wrong when he moves downtown. Baldwin's tone changes, he becomes shrill. . . . When he gets back to the family, he dispenses with this nonsense and really writes. . . . [However,] I think he has . . . batted out a careless book, alive where it touches his own interests, borrowed and mechanical where it doesn't." Wilfrid Sheed

Book World p4 Je 2 '68 1250w

"Like everything Baldwin writes, [this book] is beautifully formed. . . . Violence is ever present and very important in the book, but there is no relishing of it, no gory details. Still, the material is that of our present great social crisis; . . . [and the book is] filled with powerful protest, with hatred even, but it is not what Baldwin called, years ago, an example of 'Everybody's Protest Novel.' . . . [The author] is concerned with what moves his people. He is able to show us what moves them, on the very deepest levels. . . . [This] is a masterpiece by one of the best living writers in America. Which is not to say, naturally, that it will comfort or cheer you much. Very often, unless you are much different from me, the book will move you to tears." John Thompson

Commentary 45:67 Je '68 2550w

Reviewed by Nelson Algren

Critic 27:86 O '68 1100w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:104 J1 '68 450w

Reviewed by Eric Moon

Library J 93:2256 Je 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by R. E. Long

Nation 206:769 Je 10 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:701 J116 '68 320w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman

New Repub 159:27 Ag 17 '68 1950w

Reviewed by Stuart Hall

New Statesman 75:871 Je 28 '68 1400w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:11 D 19 '68 900w

"Tragedy calls out for a great artist, revolution for a true prophet. Six years ago James Baldwin predicted the black revolution that is now changing our society. His new novel . . . is his attempt to re-create, as an artist this time, the tragic condition of the Negro in America. He has not been successful; this is a simplified, one-dimensional novel with mostly cardboard characters, a polemical rather than narrative tone, weak invention, and poor selection of incident. . . . The construction of the novel is theatrical, tidily nailed into a predictable form." Mario Puzo

N Y Times Bk R p5 Je 23 '68 1400w

"The scenes of growing up in Harlem are largely devoid of compelling authenticity. The central emotional relationship of the boy's life is his love for his older brother, Caleb. . . . And when Baldwin says love, he really means it: the brothers make love in the novel's most intensely felt and lyrically written scene. . . . Phantoms slip in and out of Proudhammer's various beds like figures in an adolescent fantasy of omnipotence—someone named Steve, someone named Sally, others named and nameless, and impossible to tell apart. . . . But despite all of this erotic advertising, Proudhammer remains an unknown quantity. . . . Nor does the prose help. . . . There are some good passages, sporadic reminders that Baldwin is, after all, still a writer to be reckoned with. . . . But these moments, such as they are, are few and far between, while the unassimilated, ponderous and undramatized fragments are numerous and contiguous." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:92D Je 3 '68 700w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:23 Je 1 '68 1200w

Time 91:104 Je 7 '68 600w

TLS p697 J1 4 '68 550w

BALDWIN, JOHN. Contemporary sculpture techniques; welded metal and fiberglass; photographic supervision: Doug Stewart. 120p col pl $10 Reinhold

731.4 Sculpture—Technique 67-14152

"Part I gives a background and . . . step-by-step directions on how to work directly with metal, including sections on welding, brazing and cutting. Student exercises are illustrated and discussed. [There are also] explanations of the steps involved in the development of the author's own projects. Part II concerns fiberglass and reinforced plastic sculpture. A background on plastics is [provided] by diagrams. Methods of reinforcing materials, fillers, and additives are . . . explained and there are step-by-step directions for mixing and laminating fiberglass cloth and mat, armatures, coloring and finishing." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] clear and competent book written by a sculptor-teacher of broad experience in both areas. . . . The text is good and useful; unfortunately, the plates are not. There are many illustrations; the majority are of the author's work, which is not as good as his writing. The plates of finished sculpture are not used in relation to the text—so they are just there and usually irrelevant and distracting. It is too bad, since this could have been a sound how-to-do-it book if the illustrations had been well used. . . . A most useful list of suppliers and manufacturers."

Choice 4:1371 F '68 130w

"A 'how to do' book on the welding of metals and the handling of often toxic plastics in creating sculptures is a questionable thing. The learning of such techniques is more properly done in the workshop than by reading. . . . Insofar as a text can do it, the book offers an introduction and supplement to the practice of complicated techniques, and will serve in schools teaching these special processes which are currently the fashion." J. L. Dewton

Library J 92:4145 N 15 '67 130w

BALDWIN, MICHAEL. Miraclejack. 252p $4.95 Holt

67-10943

This novel, first published in 1963 in England, concerns "the story of Bertie Swale, an intemperate newsman, and of Francis Sym, a unique climber of heights who wraps mystery and mysticism about his person and performances. Swale, beset by a sad love affair and a losing battle on Fleet Street, happens to pick up Sym's story. Sym likes him, Swale becomes the chronicler of Sym's climbs, even climbing with him, while the rest of the press sneers or exploits as the day permits. Sym finally aspires to climb a Manhattan tower. Fleet Street runs it as a commercial triumph. Sym and Swale see mystical overtones. Sym climbs up and out of sight while two other men die frozen on the Empire State Building." (Library J)

"Sym, a man known to his small band of disciples as the 'Miraclejack,' a man seized with the single-minded determination, and possessed of the incredible skill, to climb any building in sight . . . calls himself the Spirit made Flesh. Swale, following Sym from one miraculous ascent to another (and halfway up one of them), gradually realizes, rather in spite of himself, that the whole thing is becoming a religious experience for him. . . . Baldwin has risked a good deal with this bizarre tale and the violent, nearly chaotic language he has chosen for telling it. He doesn't escape a few painful tumbles. At its best the story is compelling, but occasionally it is only madcap; at its best the language is beautifully poetic, but occasionally it is pretentious. Still, the book is original and daring and thoughtful, and that is a lot." Kenneth Auchincloss

BALDWIN, MICHAEL—Continued

Book Week p4 My 7 '67 550w

"An unhappy man and a strange man interact so esoterically and tangentially that the result is cloudy and pettish. English to the last degree and of limited appeal." J. M. Carroll

Library J 92:1640 Ap 15 '67 140w

"Baldwin writes firmly in the realistic tradition of allegory. . . . The idea of the story is good; its execution is breathtaking. Baldwin's style is at once terse and poetic. It achieves masterpieces of understatement and splendors of imagery at the same time. His metaphors are reminiscent of the extravagant early phase of Dylan Thomas, particularly the 'Altarwise by Owl' sonnet sequence. Miraclejack is the Jack of Christ making minstrel angles over steeples and towers, his faith challenging both the law of gravity and the gravity of the law. Through his swiftness of narrative and straightforward, no-nonsense English attack on his subject, Baldwin forces the reader to suspend disbelief and to accept final regeneration (sentimental though it actually is) of the skeptical Swale." Peter Buitenhuis

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ap 16 '67 1250w
Reviewed by Susan Lardner
New Yorker 44:170 My 11 '68 2400w

BALDWIN, RAYMOND P. The triumphs and trials of Lotta Crabtree. See Dempsey, D.

BALDWIN, SIDNEY. Poverty and politics; the rise and decline of the Farm security administration. 438p il $10 Univ. of N.C. press

353.81 U.S. Farm Security Administration. Agricultural administration 68-18052

The author "begins his study of the FSA by giving background material leading up to the creation of the Resettlement Administration in 1935. He traces this organization to its placement under the U.S. Department of Agriculture, then to its transformation into the FSA as a result of the 1937 Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, and finally to its disappearance into the Farmers Home Administration under President Truman." (Library J) Index.

"This excellent study shows the deep concern for humanity exhibited by several of the New Deal agencies and stresses the bitter inter-agency squabbles within the Department of Agriculture. It effectively dovetails with and supplements Dean Albertson's study of Secretary of Agriculture Claude Wickard [Roosevelt's Farmer, BRD 1962] and is a good adjunct to Richard Kirkendall's recent study of the social scientists in the New Deal agricultural program [Social Scientists and Farm Politics in the Age of Roosevelt, BRD 1967]. The author makes effective use of interviews and private correspondence collections. . . . The monograph's shortcomings are few, and it is an important contribution to an understanding of the complex nature of the New Deal." J. L. Forsythe

J Am Hist 55:682 D '68 600w

"Mr. Baldwin's study is not mere historical reporting; he examines the rise and decline of the FSA to 'understand . . . the interplay of forces—social, political, economic, ideological, and material—which condition and control the efforts of men and governments to cope with human predicaments.' His book is recommended as a thorough and thought-provoking study which should be of interest to readers in many fields—agriculture, social science, politics, and history." W. T. Johnson

Library J 93:2010 My 15 '68 200w

"One of the many merits of Sidney Baldwin's history . . . is to make clear that we are now paying dearly for our refusal to face up to rural poverty during the thirties. . . . The FSA had as its mission the mitigation of chronic rural poverty and had on its staff as determined a corps of reformers as could be found in Washington during the middle and late thirties. But . . . its goals were cut back drastically as it became a prime target of conservatives in Congress. On the other hand . . . Baldwin shows how de facto discrimination was practiced by regional and local staffs with the result that the people who were probably in greatest need of FSA programs were rarely touched by them." Paul Marx

New Repub 159:33 Jl 6 '68 380w

BALDWIN, WILLIAM L. The structure of the defense market, 1955-1964. 249p $8 Duke Univ. press

355.6 Ordinance. U.S.—Economic conditions. U.S.—Armed Forces. Disarmament 67-23730

The author "analyzes the structure of the defense market in a decade of Cold War, characterized by neither escalation nor disarmament." (Am Econ R) Bibliography. Index.

"The author has developed and analyzed a large and extremely comprehensive array of pertinent data on the structure of the military market in the United States. The result is not light reading but the reader interested in this important, but still relatively neglected, area of interaction between government and business will find much that is worthwhile. . . . Although much of the specific data and even findings developed by Baldwin may mainly become of historical interest, perhaps the major long-term value of his work is to demonstrate that the defense market is amenable to the traditional analytical tools of industrial organization and thus to encourage additional work in this area." M. L. Weidenbaum

Am Econ R 58:625 Je '68 1000w

"Although this is an industrial organization or market study, it is not one in quite the usual sense. Structure, behavior, and performance are considered—in fact form the analytical framework—but defense procurement provides the particular context. The size distribution of supplying firms, characteristics of demand, turnover and stability of firms, and state and improvement of technology are all discussed. . . . This study is of interest to microeconomists (as a market study) and to political scientists (as a study of government procedures and their effects). . . . Recommended."

Choice 5:526 Je '68 180w

BALFOUR, JAMES. The medicine men. 255p $5.95 Day

68-15245

This novel traces the careers of two doctors. "Parr is almost everyone's idea of a great doctor: an immensely attractive man . . . bursting with confidence, warmth and enthusiasm for his fellow men. Unfortunately, Parr seems to be unable actually to pass his exams for M.D., until fate finally intervenes in the form of Millett, a grateful patient. The very sight of the incompetent Parr, on the other hand, sends Dr. Parker up a tree. Brilliant Dr. Parker neglects his beautiful young wife to spend his evenings at the hospital trying to keep a monkey brain alive in a tank." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Stephen McKenna

Best Sell 27:470 Mr 15 '68 340w

"This story about doctors is another import from England where the author, who uses James Balfour as a pseudonym, is a practicing physician. His medical knowledge is a bit overpowering at times. He tends to hold up the flow of the novel with more medical jargon and expertise than seems necessary to the telling of a rather simple tale. Nevertheless, this is a novel of more than passing interest in that it poses the problem of the kind of doctor one should choose. . . . [The author writes] in a style somewhat reminiscent of the turn of the century but with a certain charm which is very British and a bit brittle. In all, the book is slowly paced despite some zany adventures. It is worth staying with to the end which evades the solution of the basic question, leaving this to the reader. It is a novel for the patient who is adult." H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 93:1160 Mr 15 '68 250w

"Parr's heroic exploits are narrated in the novel by a fellow student, Oliver Drew-Dawson, a belle-lettrist whose ambition is 'to write something as tough as steel and as delicate as lace which would be at once unbearably moving and exquisitely witty.' The reason that Drew-Dawson falls short in this excursion is that his hero has not got enough to do except to be contrasted with Dr. Parker, a soulless but efficient scientist. The author has witty observations that can make you howl, but they are more than likely digressions leading nowhere. Eventually, the reader begins to weary of Dr. Parr." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 25 '68 210w

"In spite of Mr. Balfour's stated interest in the need for humanity his novel really lacks serious content. It is a funny book, mainly for doctors... and possibly for middle-aged doctors at that. The style is jokey and laced with dated slang; wartime careers are a notable point of moral reference, and the inclusion of slightly suggestive medical mnemonics seems nostalgic in intention. The ethical problem posed is merely a distraction from the general fun: 'Be a good chap' is hardly an inspiring message."

TLS p381 My 5 '66 200w

BALIGH, HELMY H. Vertical market structures [by] Helmy H. Baligh [and] Leon E. Richartz. 260p il $9.95 Aliyn

658.8 Marketing. Economics, Mathematical 67-10931

"A mathematical analysis of vertically integrated firms." (Choice)

"This book has a good claim to rank as the most interesting and very possibly the most important contribution to the theory of markets that has appeared in the last ten years. Unfortunately, it is so lacking in literary and mathematical elegance and basic academic gamesmanship that its merits are likely to escape any casual examination. But on the two things that ought to count most in original research—choice of subject and choice of method—the authors are almost wholly successful. . . . [Their] critical observation applies to the mainstream writing in economics of the last 40 years that has shaped the present content of basic theory courses." Donald Dewey

Am Econ R 58:282 Mr '68 850w

"This work is an original contribution in the field of industrial organization. The level of mathematics means that it will be found useful by graduate students in economics . . . [and] will probably find very limited use among undergraduates."

Choice 5:381 My '68 60w

BALL, GEORGE W. The discipline of power: essentials of a modern world structure. (Atlantic monthly press bk) 363p $7.50 Little

327 International relations. U.S.—Foreign relations 67-28228

The former "Undersecretary of State for Presidents Kennedy and Johnson . . . examines the decisions and directions of American foreign policy. . . . [From his experience] in Europe with the development of the Schuman plan and the Common Market, and his . . . official involvement in American foreign affairs from January of 1960 until recently, he has drawn a blueprint for the future course of American foreign policy and that of its principal allies, the industrialized nations of Western Europe, and Japan. . . . [Among other things he] argues the need for a major reassessment of international foreign policies." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 118:610 My 4 '68 170w

"[This book] illustrates the developing maturity of American views of foreign policy. . . . Ball's analysis is informed by a sense of the precariousness of life in the 1960s. . . . More important than the rehearsal of past mistakes is the ability to learn from them in order to avoid comparable errors in the future. Ball suggests more forethought and hesitation. Yet he is aware that every situation is complex, that no course is free of risks, and that hard choices are always necessary. He offers no easy formula for success, only a set of helpful guidelines for picking our way through the perils of the future." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:110 My '68 1100w

"This book . . . is charmingly, persuasively, pleasantly, graciously, and skilfully written. . . . [It] will be of intense interest to students of international affairs, for its 'disciplined' approach and stimulating ideas are placed squarely and firmly in a fully realistic portrayal of the element of power. It should be fascinating for amateurs in world affairs, or for those people perplexed and troubled by the portrayal of the world situation in the mass media and commentary. . . . There is a movingly wise treatment of the White Redoubt of Africa whose members: Portugal, Rhodesia and South Africa are entrapped in their policies and economic conditions. . . . The description of the Vietnam situation is probably the best part of the book." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 28:35 Ap 15 '68 1000w

"[This book] is pungent and reflects the author's forceful and dynamic personality. Many of its analyses are convincing (especially when he deals with Germany). And yet, despite its apparent clarity and the simplicity of its main thesis—the need for a united Europe—he fails to provide the reader with an adequate new vision. . . . Although Ball denounces the myth of American world domination, he often sounds as if he thought that it was America's right and duty alone to define the conditions of world order, including the national interest of other states." Stanley Hoffmann

Book World p5 My 19 '68 650w

"Ball writes as an American liberal, and it is his liberalism which both insulates him against the effects of American foreign policy and which so thoroughly distorts his picture of political reality. . . . He wants no more Vietnams . . . because small weak poor countries are rarely worth 'defending' against Communism. In more general terms, Mr. Ball prophesies the end of nationalism, particularly that of Canada and of Western European nations. . . . It is difficult to take this elegantly-written book very seriously—except as a commentary on the way that liberalism functions as an ego-defence for the bureaucrat caught up in a network of pressures and interests that it is comforting to ignore. . . . America is tottering on the brink of ghetto uprisings and even civil war. Mr. Ball can offer only apologies, hopes, epigrams and witticisms." Andrew Wernick

Canadian Forum 48:77 Jl '68 1550w

Reviewed by Arnold Beichman
Christian Science Monitor p9 My 9 '68 1300w

Economist 227:50 Je 22 '68 1050w

Reviewed by John Lustig
Library J 93:2248 Je 1 '68 260w

Reviewed by F. J. Johnson
Nat R 20:454 My 7 '68 1450w

Reviewed by John Osborne
New Repub 158:27 Je 15 '68 3350w

Reviewed by Raymond Fletcher
New Statesman 76:144 Ag 2 '68 460w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
N Y Rev of Books 11:3 S 12 '68 750w

"[The author] is uninhibited in revealing the arguments he and his followers used in the debates within the Administration and the Alliance on key issues. Some of the major foreign policy errors of the Kennedy Administration also are discussed frankly, including the 1962 Kennedy-Macmillan Nassau Conference that provided the pretext for General de Gaulle's veto of British entry into the Common Market. The total effect is that of a stern indictment of much in the foreign policy of the United States and its chief allies in the sixties. . . . [The author's] intellectual depth, his broad grasp of history, and the vitality of his performance near the pinnacle of power leap from the pages of this incisive volume." Robert Kleiman

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ap 28 '68 2000w

Reviewed by Marvin Kalb
Sat R 51:41 My 18 '68 1100w

Reviewed by I. L. Claude
Va Q R 44:470 summer '68 1400w

BALLARD, HOYT B., jr. comp. C. Wright Mills and the Power elite. See Domhoff, G. W.

BALLARD, PHOEBE. The man who stole a university [by] Phoebe and Todhunter Ballard. 348p $4.95 Doubleday

67-10979

When the trustees of a bankrupt university in Ohio invited Emory Monck, a young alumnus, to use his wealth and influence as chancellor "to bail them out of a decade of financial disasters, they had no idea he and his oil-rich colleagues [ambitious for political power] would steal their thousands of students and their faculty and set up a new university on an abandoned military base. The villain of the trustees, rightist General Fenton, rigged the power company so Emory had no electricity. Emory's answer—incorporate as a municipality!

BALLARD, PHOEBE—Continued

And so Emory survives student strikes, a rigged bedroom plot, and even the perils of love." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. J. Maguire

Best Sell 26:429 Mr 1 '67 390w

"An informational novel, harmless and inconsequential. Clean Vidal trying to set up a conflict between big business and education. It is very carefully an anonymous university, anonymous state, etc. with everything properly yellow brick. Demonstrates knowledge of workings of high level educational administration, but remains as uninteresting. The conflict remains simple, the characters typically flat, and the style a 'cliché-studded hodgepodge.' The scope remains as limited as its subject and should attract little audience."

Choice 4:1238 Ja '68 70w

"The plotting is tight and ingenious as one would expect from the authors of more than 60 novels; and, if the hero seems to ride out of the West in the nick of time, what else from the authors of western and movie and television plays? Not a big one, but substantial entertainment." H. L. Leet

Library J 92:255 Ja 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p44 Mr 5 '67 150w

BALLARD, TODHUNTER, jt. auth. The man who stole a university. See Ballard, P.

BALSHOFER, FRED J. One reel a week, by Fred J. Balshofer and Arthur C. Miller; with the assistance of Bebe Bergsten; foreword by Kemp R. Niver. 218p il $6.95 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Moving picture industry. Moving picture photography 67-24119

Two cameramen present, in alternating chapters, "reminiscences of the early days of the motion picture industry. . . . They record 50 years of filming techniques, from Balshofer's employment with the Shields Lantern Slide Company in 1903 to Miller's filming of Losey's The Prowler in 1951. [Their account covers] commercial piracies in the cinema's days of infancy, the attempts to monopolize the making of pictures, and the methods used by independent companies to counteract these endeavors." (Library J) Index of proper names.

"[Miller and Balshofer] relate in an anecdotal manner their rise in the American film industry. Balshofer attempts to correct some misconceptions of film historians, in particular about the Keystone Company as well as the New York Motion Picture Company's feud with Universal, as does Miller to a lesser extent in his province as cameraman for The Perils of Pauline and with such directors as DeMille and Ford. While both authors give valuable primary material, they do not refer by name to those film historians and other authorities with whom they differ. The serious film historian, however, will find their proper name index useful."

Choice 5:362 My '68 160w

"[Written] in a simple prose that borders somewhat on naiveté, . . . [this book is nevertheless] important in the field. Early working scenes and a pictorial appendix of recent examples of the cameraman's art add to its usefulness." L. A. Rachow

Library J 93:204 Ja 15 '68 140w

TLS p1080 S 26 '68 80w

BALTER, BORIS. Goodbye, boys; tr. from the Russian by Felicity Ashbee. 284p $4.95 Dutton 67-20549

The setting of this novel "is a Black Sea spa just before the beginning of World War II, where three schoolboys, Volodya, Sashka and Vitka, are about to leave their youth forever for an officer-training school in Leningrad. A haze of nostalgia surrounds these three friends, as they go sailing, say many goodbyes to their girls and enjoy the subtropic flavor of the Crimea." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 27:398 Ja 15 '68 350w

"We have here a very good example of common, garden variety, Soviet kitsch of post-thaw vintage. It reads like a Crimean version of Andy, Pat and Mike Leave for West Point. Being Soviet, it is insistently didactic, purposeful, future oriented, class conscious, work-proud, patriotic, socialist realist, determinedly optimistic. . . . Being Crimean, it has some very good local color and smells. . . . There is not much Soviet reality here except a few tantalizing glimpses. . . . In short, this is a very good third-rate novel which in some passages comes close to the second rate. Some extensive modern Russian collections may feel a need for this." Oleg Iivsky

Library J 93:1016 Mr 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:2739 Jl '68 90w [YA]

"[This novel] is pervaded by the smell of the sea and acacias, by the universals of young love and parental melancholy, by devotion to duty and innocent hedonism. . . . Mr. Balter examines his characters closely but sympathetically, to show their warts as well as their humanity. The most memorable of them is the narrator, Volodya, whose 16-year-old sweetheart is right out of Chekhov. Vitka is killed in action in 1941 and Sashka dies in the anti-Semitic doctors' purge of 1952. But in this Crimean idyll, they live in pure bliss which Mr. Balter suggests with high artistry." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p68 N 25 '67 190w

"Several pages in this Soviet novel might have come from a wistful American tale of small-town boyhood. . . . Volodya, the narrator, recalls his happy adolescence (of the late 1930s) in a seemingly elegiac manner. . . . But what is the author's position? An underlying commentary, from the sad, middle-aged narrator, gently suggests doubt and self-criticism. There are the persistent references to Isaac Babel. There is Volodya's account of his friends' deaths, one killed in action in 1942, the other dying in prison, having been arrested in 1952, after the arrest of a number of prominent doctors in Moscow. The allusions and implications in this book are not always so easy for a foreigner to grasp. The purposes and principles of Boris Balter remain something of an enigma."

TLS p173 F 22 '68 550w

BALTHASAR, HANS URS VON. A theological anthropology. 341p $7.50 Sheed

230.2 History (Theology). Man (Theology) 67-29289

This volume "contains four studies more or less closely related to the topic of the theology of history. These deal with the Augustinian notion of time, with the perfectibility of man, with the end of history and with the theology of the Word." (America) Index of names. Originally published in German under the title Das Ganze im Fragment.

"[The title] is inaccurate, misleading and borders on the dishonest. The book is not a systematic, theological doctrine of man of the type done by Barth, Brunner and others. . . . [It does] exhibit the depth, the richness and the insight that one has come to associate with von Balthasar. He is one of the seminal theologians of the contemporary Church and is always read with profit. . . . Like much of [his] work, this book is difficult to classify. It is not a work of technical theological scholarship, and it is certainly not a piece of popularization. It is written in the meditative-poetic style of which von Balthasar is a master. . . . [It] will furnish many insights to the reader who approaches it with a knowledge of the type of theological reflection that it offers." W. J. Sullivan

America 118:416 Mr 30 '68 550w

"Steering with delicate theological acumen between the Scylla of secularized, God-is-Dead theologies and the Charybdis of a divinized social world, Von Balthasar opts for a Roman Catholic version of the Theology of the Cross. Beginning with a careful analysis of the concept of time in St. Augustine the author develops a theology of man as a being open to transcendence. One is reminded of Abraham Heschel's little gem, Who Is Man? [BRD 1965], but whereas Heschel is subjective, intuitive, almost poetic, this present study is analytic and scientific. Virtually no contemporary theological issue escapes attention. . . . Especially stimulating are the chapters on Christ and man as the language of God. The average undergraduate would find this book difficult but would be stimulated by many of its sections. It is a work of superior scholarship."

Choice 5:640 Jl '68 170w

BALTZER, FRITZ. Theodor Boveri; life and work of a great biologist, 1862-1915; tr. from the German by Dorothea Rudnick. 165p il $6 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Boveri, Theodor 67-21996

This book is concerned with the scientist who spent most of his life in Würzburg working with chromosomes. Bibliography. Glossary. Index. Originally published in 1962 in Germany.

"The style [of this book] is lively and the story is a fascinating one. Mr. Baltzer, a student and colleague of Boveri, presents a human picture of the man and a comprehensible account of his scientific work. For high school, college, and public libraries." W. K. Beatty
Library J 93:541 F 1 '68 110w

"The book has merit not only as a chronicle of the life of a man but as an account of his science. The second and more interesting half of the work describes many of Boveri's most famous experiments, demonstrating his extraordinary mastery of experimental design and objective scientific reasoning. Theodor Boveri was probably the greatest embryologist who ever lived and one of the most important geneticists as well. . . . The remarkable feature about Boveri's experiments is that they, by themselves, suggest experiments which could be performed today with the use of modern methods. . . . The book should interest scientists concerned with developmental problems, as well as historians. We owe Rudnick a debt of gratitude for translating this book." D. D. Brown
Science 160:653 My 10 '68 340w

BAND, ARNOLD J. Nostalgia and nightmare: a study in the fiction of S. Y. Agnon [pub. under the auspices of the Near Eastern center]. 563p $15 Univ. of Calif. press

892.4 Agnon, Samuel Joseph 67-22714

The author has made an examination of the major works of the Israeli 1966 Nobel Prize winner, "following the development of his literary themes as they combine the influences of classical Hebrew writings with the effects of recent history on the Jewish fate and, more widely, on man's fate. Mr. Band sees Agnon's work as an almost Proustian effort to recreate a way of life that has passed. When the memory of this ideal earlier world cannot be made real, the nostalgic effort melds with a kind of neo-romantic mysticism and becomes a nightmare of paradox and irony that is his only reality." (Library J) Bibliographies. General index and index of Agnon's works.

"This book by [the] professor of Hebrew at the University of California, Los Angeles, is the first in English on Agnon. . . . [It] is an excellent survey and reference source with exhaustive bibliographies; it is a scholarly but readable book and is highly recommended to modern literature collections." George Adelman
Library J 93:1484 Ap 1 '68 260w

"This long-awaited volume . . . is encyclopedic in its range and covers almost everything the master has written since the beginning of his career. Not only does [it] treat his poetry and prose in Hebrew and Yiddish through 1953, but it also provides an excellent cultural biography of the author, and more than 100 pages of invaluable appendices, including a bibliography of some 575 Hebrew articles and books dealing with Agnon (unfortunately no bibliography of critical articles in English is given), a list of his Hebrew works by year of publication through 1966, and one of translations into various languages. . . . [Band's] conclusion that Agnon is 'essentially a comic writer' [is] an astonishing assertion to appear in the epilogue of a book entitled Nostalgia and Nightmare, whose ostensible purpose was to trace these two major motifs through Agnon's literary career. . . . Despite the few reservations [however, this volume] with its all encompassing scope, is an important contribution to the growing literature on one of the world's finest writers." Curt Leviant
Sat R 51:34 Je 22 '68 1050w

BANHAM, REYNER. The new brutalism: ethic or aesthetic? 196p il $15 Reinhold

724.9 Architecture, Modern—20th century. Architecture—Composition, proportion, etc. [67-71362]

A survey and analysis of the work of the 1950s and early 1960s in which the author describes the "British contribution to postwar architectural and sociological thinking. . . . [Among the architects discussed are Peter and Alison Smithson,] Banham himself [and] Stirling and Gowan." (TLS)

Reviewed by Nathan Silver
Nation 204:629 My 15 '67 480w

"Reyner Banham's excellent new book is up to a point the definitive account of what he rightly calls 'the first consequential British contribution to the living body of architecture since the collapse of the English Free Building of Voysey and Lethaby around 1910'. . . . Jürgen Joedicke, for whose 'Documents of Modern Architecture' series at Stuttgart it was commissioned, evidently specified a coffee-table book with a commentary and not a Document. . . . [The book] though beautifully illustrated, is too short; another 'route-building' of the highest quality which should have appeared is the deceptively rustic Chichester College of 1963-5 by Ahrends, Burton and Koralek. Much more serious is the total omission of Aalto—the Smithsons have pointed to the MIT dormitory of 1949, with its roving staircase, as a major influence on them." Nicholas Taylor
New Statesman 73:334 Mr 10 '67 1750w

Reviewed by Colin Rowe
N Y Times Bk R p18 S 10 '67 600w

"[An] intriguing account of the rise and fall of the New Brutalism. . . . As [the author] himself says of an earlier article he once wrote in The Architectural Review under the same title as his book, it was tempting to father some of his own pet notions on the movement; in his book, however, he resists this temptation and conscientiously gives chapter and verse for every assertion or definition. . . . Dr. Banham offers his reader two choices—either to follow him in his minutely detailed account of the inner circle of personalities whose writings, meetings, buildings or gossip created the climate of intellectual protest out of which a recognizably Brutalist vernacular seemed to grow; or to join him in his admirable survey of the particular architecture of the 1950s and 1960s that, whatever one calls it, marked a distinct break with the standard international modern architectures of the prewar and immediately postwar vintage. Either reading of his book is rewarding." TLS p352 Ap 25 '67 500w

BANISTER, MARGARET. Burn then, little lamp. 314p $4.95 Houghton

67-10924

This is the story of "two neighboring families in Virginia. The principal character is [Norrie Armistead] who finds out that she is in love with an old friend [Wade Jeremy], but makes the discovery only after he is married to somebody else. Their affair ends in his suicide, and the woman lives in loneliness until, years later, she finally recognizes love as the basis for another of her old friendships [with Wade's brother, Derek]." (America)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 116:701 My 6 '67 90w

"The author's personal background of residence . . . is reflected in multi-faceted colorations of small town life which retain a general charm. . . . She understands her characters, even if the characters fail to rise to promised endeavours and expectations. Machinations are provincial and solutions are inept. Superficially, the theme that God is love wears thin despite the sometimes maudlin attempts to wring out real tragedy from which the heroine emerges, shining, cleansed, and grateful. . . . The author has captured a sensitivity in the opening chapters which is later dissipated tying the ends together. Divided into four sections, reflecting a chronological advancement, the first section retains a special charm of adolescence and its problems." Judson LaHaye
Best Sell 26:389 F 1 '67 350w

"The housewife with lots of time on her hands will find this . . . a pleasant interlude between television serials. . . . The book is easy, light, mildly inspirational reading and should give offense to no one." Marian Wozencraft
Library J 91:5995 D 1 '66 200w

"The author depicts readily recognizable folk caught in the grip of forces they sometimes do not understand and seem barely able to confront, but her very human characters behave rationally and effectively thus winning both sympathy and understanding in a comforting novel certain to please."

Va Q R 43:cv summer '67 90w

BANKS, LYNNE REID. Children at the gate;
a novel. 287p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

68-14832

The setting of this novel is in Israel. "Gerda—in her thirties, Jewish, divorced, torments herself with guilt for the death of her adored small son [and] for the wreck of her marriage. . . . She is saved by the patient, persistent care of an Arab friend who finds for her—virtually thrusts into her arms against her will—the two starving, terrified Arab children [Peretz and Ella] whose desperation calls to her own, and whom she illegally adopts." (Publisher's note)

"The principal defect of this novel is excessive length. Actually, the material could be more effectively compressed into a short story or, at the most, a novella. The book becomes frightfully repetitive, and Mrs. Banks writes in a ponderous, gnarled style which seems to slow the narrative even more and render it duller than it should be. Overall, freshness is badly lacking. While one respects the humanitarian theme, one concludes that the message is presented without artistry." P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 28:23 Ap 15 '68 500w

"This is an even better book than The L-Shaped Room [BRD 1961]. . . . Banks writes well and has a firm grasp of her material. Women readers will find it hard to put this book down." Marian Poller

Library J 93:1016 Mr 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Janice Elliott

New Statesman 76:116 J1 6 '68 210w

"We willingly let go of Gerda's sweaty hand at the last. She is not such a character as Saul Bellow's Herzog. [BRD 1964, 1965] similarly striving to climb up out of spiritual bankruptcy and collapse. She is not even as interesting as Doris Lessing's 'modern woman,' Anna Wulf of 'The Golden Notebook' [BRD 1962]. Miss Banks is no philosophical novelist. At most, we may thank her for a modest tale of occasional poignancy, rescued at times by humor, the saving quality that makes her Gerda endurable. And she has also 'given us a picture' of an old-new culture that seems both so accessible to the visitor and so remote from him." Millicent Bell

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 12 '68 800w

New Yorker 44:145 Je 8 '68 90w

BANKWITZ, PHILIP CHARLES FARWELL.
Maxime Weygand and civil-military relations in modern France. (Harvard Univ. Harvard hist. studies, v81). 445p $10 Harvard Univ. press

944.081 Weygand, Maxime. France. Army. France—History, Military 67-22860

"This study examines the growing distrust which characterized relations between the civilian government and the army in the France of the thirties. Weygand, Chief of the General Staff from 1930 to 1935 and leader of the French army in 1940, was a key figure in this development, and the author . . . focuses on his career, [arguing] that the events of the thirties, culminating in Weygand's disobedience to the civilian authorities in 1940, prepared the way for the influential rôle which the army has frequently had in French political history since the fall of the Third Republic." (Va Q R) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Bankwitz has produced a substantial and impressively researched work of history and it is highly recommended to students having an interest in contemporary French politics. Unfortunately, for those of us with a more far-ranging commitment to the general study of civil-military relations, it provides few new insights." J. N. Colas

Am Pol Sci R 62:1004 S '68 950w

"This is a work of impeccable scholarship and overarching significance. It will compel not only the historian but practitioners of other social disciplines as well to rethink fundamental twentieth-century questions of ultimate power. . . . Bankwitz sets [the events of 1940] . . . within the general continuum of a 'Government vs. Command' dialogue which he finds dating at least from the beginnings of the Third Republic in 1870. . . . [The] book is not to be skimmed lightly. Its substance is so tightly argued, from such a mass of primary materials, that the reader must pay close attention to the author's meticulous exposition of the successive crisis-stages in French civil-military relations of the 1930's, presented chiefly through the fully documented views of Maxime Weygand both in and out of office. What results is a unique study of the politicization of the French Command." J. T. Joughin

Ann Am Acad 378:158 J1 '68 490w

Va Q R 44:cxxiv summer '68 110w

BANNER, WILLIAM AUGUSTUS. Ethics: an introduction to moral philosophy. 175p $4.95 Scribner

170 Ethics

68-17349

This book "seeks to present morality as a realm of experience and knowledge, and to support the view of ethics as a practical science. Two introductory chapters [bring the reader] . . . into the context of moral philosophy. The following chapters deal with the representative moral philosophies: Greek Ethics (Socrates, Plato, Aristotle), Christian Ethics (St. Augustine, St. Thomas Aquinas, Reinhold Niebuhr), Immanuel Kant, the Utilitarians (Bentham, J. S. Mill), and Existentialism (Kierkegaard, Sartre, Camus). The final chapter . . . [considers] the concepts of freedom and responsibility." (Publishers note) Glossary. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Banner's [book] deserves to be appraised in its own light. The realms of the practical and of freedom are of most interest to Banner in his survey of past ethicists and present problems."

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 50w

"By a combination of the topical and historical approaches, William Banner, who teaches philosophy at Howard University, in this useful text makes amply clear the span of difficult problems with which ethical philosophers have grappled, the types of solutions they developed, and the evolution of their thinking on these matters over the centuries. . . . His choice of terms for the glossary at the end shows a good perception of what it is that is likely to puzzle some readers." William Gerber

Library J 93:2245 Je 1 '68 100w

BANTOCK, G. H. Education, culture and the emotions. 202p $6.75 Ind. Univ. press

370.15 Educational psychology 68-14595

A collection of essays by an English educator who argues against "teacher preoccupation with Freudian therapy, Sartre's view of emotion as magical transformation. . . . Dewey's rejection of hierarchical values among studies, . . . confusion of superficial with fundamental marks of adulthood, easy acceptance of 'pop' rather than high culture, and the temptation of universities to respond to temporary exigencies instead of pursuing truth." (Sat R) Many of these essays have been previously published in various journals, such as Educational Review and Universities Quarterly. Index.

"[This book] marks another stage in Professor Bantock's campaign of confrontation with 'woolly progressivism' in educational thinking. It is a spiky, prickly book, provoking by turns exasperation and admiration. His targets are widespread, ranging from a thinly veiled attack on the Holbrook school of teaching . . . to the 'well-meant sentimentality of the egalitarians.' Bantock's assault on current psychoanalytical notions in teaching . . . is timely and certainly rouses sympathy and support. . . . Despite his minority viewpoint (of which he is aware and relishes) one is tempted to use political analogies and call his stand one of massive confrontation with progressivism. . . . He is probably quite wrong, but at least we know where he stands."

Economist 225:752 N 18 '67 470w

"[This] is no mere sentimental endorsement of the good old days. On the contrary, Bantock's grasp of recent work by Walter J. Ong, Marshall McLuhan, and others concerned with the cultural impact of mass media, lends considerable power to an important work. Radical and reactionary alike will want to grapple with many of the ideas put forward in this critical commentary on the current educational turmoil." John Calam

Sat R 51:56 J1 20 '68 120w

BANTON, MICHAEL. Race relations. 434p maps $7.95 Basic bks.

301.451 Race problems

68-13937

A professor of sociology at the University of Bristol "examines typical patterns of racial contact, not just in our culture, but all over the world, and not just in contemporary societies, but also in the more distant past. . . . [The author attempts to] synthesize recent findings in biology, sociology, and anthropology." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Author and subject indexes.

Choice 5:1050 O '68 110w

"Professor Banton writes with great erudition and for this reason alone the student will find the book indispensable as a guide to further reading. But its structure does not make for easy reference. The book cannot be dipped into. . . . Even if one reads from end to end, the book is not organised in the best way to secure the author's purpose. Key chapters on prejudice and social distance are placed almost at the end of the book. . . . The chapter on the British situation that rather abruptly ends the book does not fit very well into any of its main themes and is thus perhaps the only one that can safely be read separately."

Economist 225:1293 D 30 '67 700w

"[The author] concentrates on relations involving Negroes and Caucasians, and devotes most of his discussion to race relations in the United States and Africa, with minor discussions of Brazil, Great Britain, the West Indies, and Southeast Asia. . . . Generally, this is a well-written book. . . . although Mr. Banton has little or nothing new to say on his chosen subject, his book is worthwhile, and is recommended for a place on the shelves of college and public libraries." H. I. Schotz

Library J 93:1911 My 1 '68 170w

"[This] is a mature work of scholarship tinged with hysteria. It reflects a human concern, of course, but a mature concern that chooses to operate through the intellect rather than through emotionally based moral attitudes. An earlier reviewer expressed disappointment with the author's procedure; he takes us so far and then just at the point where we expect him to tell us what to do about it all, he stops short. It is precisely this refusal even to suggest remedies that is the mark of the right kind of detachment needed in our present situation."

TLS p417 Ap 25 '68 1800w

BAR-ZOHAR, MICHAEL. Ben Gurion: the armed prophet; tr. from the French by Len Ortzen [Eng title: The armed prophet]. 296p $7.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Ben-Gurion, David

68-13398

The Paris correspondent of two of Israel's newspapers describes the first part of the Jewish leader's life through Ben Gurion's eyes. He portrays the second half from the viewpoint of "his own personal experience [which] has enabled him to watch events, or to cross-question Ben Gurion's critics as well as his admirers." (Economist) Bibliography.

"From [1942] on, the author often criticises his hero for his bulldozing tactics, his intolerance of opposition, and his inability to forget a hurt. He is shown warts and all. . . . The book is ungenerous [to Chaim Weizmann]. . . . Ben Gurion emerges as a lonely character. . . . The book is just as readable as M. Bar-Zohar's earlier book on the Suez crisis. Though useful to students on account of the unique nature of its source material, as well as of the author's candid judgments whenever he is writing from personal experience, it must be used with caution because it contains a reprehensible number of minor slips. . . . The translator has served his author ill by rendering the Bible quotations freehand. . . . This is a solid book."

Economist 225:861 N 25 '67 950w

"Whether David Ben Gurion was a paragon, a dictator, a great leader, or none of these, Michael Ben-Zohar interprets him as a man of the hour to bring the Israeli state into being. . . . There is information of current interest on the background of the 1967 war. Moshe Dayan, in the early stages of his career, is discussed as are other present-day Israeli leaders. The brisk style and timely subject make this a good bet for readers with an interest in the history of Israel." Laurie May

Library J 93:1335 Mr 15 '68 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1888 My 1 '68 180w

TLS p701 Jl 4 '68 340w

BARBER, JAMES. Rhodesia: the road to rebellion; pub. for the Inst. of race relations. 338p pl $6.75 Oxford

968.9 Rhodesia

68-92570

A "constitutional and political history of Rhodesia from 1960-65." (Choice)

"[The book] focuses upon European political parties, tracing only in broad outline the development of the African nationalist movement. Barber concludes that the Unilateral Declaration of Independence 'stemmed from fear and mistrust and suspicion,' in which racial barriers could not be overcome. The author's view that African leaders 'made a grave tactical error' in refusing to accept the 1961 proposal will arouse controversy. [The book] should be contrasted with [Nim] Shamuyayira, Crisis in Rhodesia [BRD 1966], which provides deeper understanding of African politics, and [C. T.] Leys, European Politics in Southern Rhodesia [BRD 1960], which covers the pre-1960 period in greater detail. . . . Suitable for specialized collections of history and African politics."

Choice 5:392 My '68 150w

"The extreme political attitudes now to be found in Rhodesia are well defined [here]. . . . It is the latter part of Mr. Barber's book that makes the best reading, being most relevant to present-day Rhodesian politics. As a whole, [the book] suffers rather than gains from its scrupulous detail. This does not, of course, invalidate it as a useful book of reference but it does make it rather too heavy-going as a political Baedeker for the layman interested in the current crisis."

TLS p18 Ja 4 '68 430w

BARBER, NOEL. A sinister twilight: the fall of Singapore, 1942. 364p maps $6.95 Houghton

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Singapore

68-16479

"Writing from diaries and notes, official reports and unpublished papers and records, Noel Barber follows a few individuals—the governor, a newspaper's staff, an American volunteer nurse, the . . . British manager of a rubber company, and some others—through the last British days of the trapped city. Through their eyes, he shows the . . . confusion . . . that gripped the people of Singapore, and the heroism, enterprise and stoicism which distinguished many. In spite of the good resistance plans of some of the men . . . Singapore was doomed because its defenses faced south, out to sea, while the Japanese came from the north, from land. The British administration . . . did not straighten out its intramural quarrels in time to revise the defenses." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Jl 26 '68

750w

"An impressionistic portrait of the fall of Singapore, largely as experienced by individual civilians who lived through that particular hell. As an impression, it succeeds. It builds up the atmosphere of order, counter order, disorder, of muddle and chaos. It holds the attention. It is based on a large number of unpublished papers . . . and the like, followed up, where possible, by personal interviews. As an ex-journalist, Mr Barber blends these skillfully together in a readable whole, well worth its price tag. The dirt is not swept under the carpets, though adroitly Mr Barber does not flourish his carpet-beater excessively. Rather he lets the corporate blunders and the personal shortcomings (as well as the sense and heroism of others) emerge as part of his narrative."

Economist 227:67 My 18 '68 340w

Reviewed by P. W. Filby

Library J 93:1896 My 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:1337 S 15 '68 90w [YA]

"[A] brilliant post-mortem. . . . A first-class reporter and writer, author of 'The Black Hole of Calcutta' [BRD 1966] and other books, recreates the tragedy of Singapore . . . as vividly and compellingly as though the story had never been written before, binding together and revitalizing the brutal historical and military facts with the correlated personal and human stories of actual participants. . . . He paints living close-ups of the characters on their doomed stage. . . . On the human side, Barber's faithfully documented chronicle recalls the heart-warming support of the Chinese for their divided colonial leaders. . . . [He] pays high tribute to the fighting "qualities of the Malay Brigade for reasons that have a peculiar appositeness in Vietnam today." Richard Hughes

BARBER, NOEL—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 30 '68 1100w

New Yorker 44:211 O 26 '68 140w

"Mr. Barber eschews formal narrative in favour of the now fashionable journalistic technique of presenting the great events of history as seen through the eyes of participants both humble and important. There is a great deal of direct speech. . . . This kind of thing, unless done with very great skill, all too easily irritates and serves but to obscure the development of the story. Mr. Barber, however, has on the whole pulled it off, no doubt in large measure because of the subtle selection of his cast of characters. . . . The choice of that leading Malayan journalist, Leslie Hoffman, as one of the 'eyes' of the narrative, as well as another journalist, George Hammond, has enabled Mr. Barber to bring in all sorts of views and bits of information which would not have been available, say, to a junior infantry officer or a rubber planter. By far the most interesting of Mr. Barber's characters . . . is Rob (now Sir Robert) Scott; and for the telling of Rob Scott's story alone Sinister Twilight would be worth its purchase price."

TLS p818 Ag 1 '68 420w

BARBER, RED. Rhubarb in the catbird seat, by Red Barber and Robert Creamer. 333p $4.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Baseball. Radio broadcasting

67-10365

An account of his career by a radio announcer. "His play-by-play broadcasts began in 1934 and continued until his dismissal by the Yankees in 1965. The highlight of his career, however, was the period between 1939 and 1953 when he broadcast the games [of the Dodgers] from Ebbetts Field in Brooklyn. . . . The book is divided into 18 chapters, each simulating the 18 halves of a normal baseball game. In addition to biographical information and personal philosophy, there are [descriptions of] . . . the characters of Larry MacPhail, Casey Stengel, Branch Rickey, and many others." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. B. Cullen

Best Sell 28:45 My 1 '68 550w

"Walter Lanier Barber, better known as 'Red' to baseball fans, has written a warm account of his career, with the aid of experienced sportswriter Robert Creamer. . . . Barber literally spoke millions of words into a microphone in advertising baseball. . . . [and] created fans with his factual, yet brilliant and colorful reporting. . . . Nostalgic reading for baseball fans, and in particular for followers of the Brooklyn Dodgers. Highly recommended for all libraries with sporting book collections." S. J. Riccardi

Library J 93:1158 Mr 15 '68 180w

"[The author] is not timid about lashing out. He calls Walter O'Malley the most devious man he ever met. He thinks Joe Garagiola, the former Yankee broadcaster, was discourteous to his colleagues while on the air. Neither Michael Burke, president of the Yankees, nor Ford Frick, the former Baseball Commissioner, comes off well. . . . Barber does not gloss over his mistakes, and, more than most people, he sees the other party's side of a conflict. . . . Ironically, after being fired by the Yankees, his last ball club, he never did a farewell broadcast. (He was rained out.) This book—frank, philosophic, spirited—in a sense is his valedictory. It is a splendid one." Rex Lardner

N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr 24 '68 850w

"The best of the book tells what it takes to broadcast a ball game, and Barber's dedication, professionalism, loyalty, and skill shine through. The season-by-season chronology is awkwardly interspersed with early biographical pieces, disconnected, but in themselves illuminating."

But the book fails to convey what it was really like to sit there by the hour following the ball, calling the play, re-creating the game for audiences that . . . would build to encompass all Brooklyn and most of New York. . . . What is best—even brilliant—in the book is its picture of baseball's managers, high policy, and politics" S. W. Little

Sat R 51:94 Ap 13 '68 450w

BARCIA, JOSÉ RUBIA. See Rubia Barcia, J.

BARCLAY, JOHN. A young people's guide to manners, by John Barclay and Leila Hadley; il. by Erica Merkle. 135p $2.95 Random house

395 Etiquette—Juvenile literature 67-8950

Concerned with gestures of politeness, this book "will tell you how you are expected to act in a restaurant, at a movie, a concert, a wedding. It will tell you the rules for behavior while traveling, visiting, giving or attending parties and dances." (Introd.) A concluding chapter discusses letter-writing. Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Useful and often wittily-phrased pointers on etiquette and behavior in the home, at school and in the community. (The authors have the temerity to suggest that young people say 'Sir' to their elders, thank sales-people for services and offer bus seats to ladies and elderly gentlemen.)" Ethna Sheehan

America 117:520 N 4 '67 50w

"Although the authors profess that consideration for others is the basis of good manners, their recommendations made in the second person center on long-range benefits for the well-mannered person himself, e.g., be a good guest and you'll be invited back. Heavy-handed doses of humor . . . will date the book quickly. This might be of limited use as a back-up to other etiquette books for young people who want to pool several authorities." Peggy Sullivan

Library J 92:4608 D 15 '67 110w

BARCUS, JAMES E., ed. The literary correspondence of Bernard Barton. See Barton, B.

BARDACH, JOHN. Harvest of the sea. 301p il $6.95 Harper

333.9 Marine resources. Oceanography

67-22536

The author discusses the present state of oceanography, gives an account of ancient and modern methods of harvesting the seas as well as future possibilities of "aquaculture." He also covers legal and political questions and the dangers of ecological imbalance. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Fans of popular science will enjoy this discussion of ocean ecology which balances the fantastic possibilities with the technical and economic difficulties. . . . A lucid treatment of present and future techniques and problems and a plea for careful conservation planning." Collin Clark

Library J 92:4637 D 15 '67 150w [YA]

"Quite without the overselling that has marred so many popular works on oceanography, Dr. Bardach describes the oceans' astonishing riches and how close they are now to mankind's grasp. He is a most sophisticated marine scientist. He is also a realist, quite aware that the resolution of political conflict and not technology is the key to unlocking the oceans' treasures. . . . [He] manages to cover every important aspect of oceanography in a succinct 300 pages. What is especially worthwhile is his detailed account of the actual harvesting of the seas themselves. . . . which provides up-to-the-minute explanations of the latest techniques of fishing, preservation, harvesting plankton, pearl farming, raising shrimp."

His introduction is a model essay on the central place of the oceans in the scheme of things, jam-packed with facts yet gracefully and imaginatively setting forth the main findings of modern oceanography." E. T. Chase

New Repub 158:26 Mr 30 '68 2100w

"[Bardach's account] is greatly enhanced by well-chosen illustrations. It is a sober, well-written and very informative book, but it holds out no hope that exploitation of the seas will solve all of our problems, though certainly we could get much more from them than we now do. The danger is that we may mistreat the seas as we have the land." Marston Bates

N Y Times Bk R p7 Mr 17 '68 700w

BARDESCHI, MARCO DEZZI. Italian villas today; ed. by Giulio Segoloni. 241p il col il maps $18.50 Transatlantic

728.84 Architecture, Domestic 67-31915

In this volume "which includes many photographs, some sections and plans, and short statements, recent works of a single architectural type are presented for their use by archi-pects and laymen. By 'villas' is meant (usually) single family suburban or vacation houses, usually expensive." (Choice)

"The brief Italian statements are shortened in translation; the statements by the architects, by far the most interesting material, are left untranslated. Almost no technical material is included. . . . [The photographs] are almost uniformly dreary. Architectural and public libraries will find the work useful; others hardly need bother."

Choice 5:762 S '68 100w

"In this well-written study all of the 27 houses are adequately presented with plans and with several good photographs of each, some in color. . . . But none of them inspires much confidence in the state of modern architecture Italian style." Wolf Von Eckardt

Library J 92:1918 My 15 '67 90w

BARFIELD, OWEN. Speaker's meaning. 118p $5 Wesleyan univ. press

149 Semantics

67-24113

"Based on lectures read at Brandeis University in 1965, Mr. Barfield sets out 'to consider what light the three subjects of history, language, and literature can be made to shed on each other.'" (Publisher's note)

Choice 5:38 Mr '68 110w

"Though [the author's] erudite yet clearly phrased observations will be of particular interest to students of history, semantics, philosophy, and literature, they owe their significance precisely to the interweaving of all these into a single fabric, which is in effect a survey of Western thought concerning expression and communication. In an age of compartmentalization, this is recommendation in itself!" B. H. Smeaton

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 140w

BARKER, A. J. The bastard war; the Mesopotamian campaign of 1914-1918 [Eng title: The neglected war]. 449p pl maps $7.50 Dial press

940.415 European War, 1914-1918—Campaigns and battles—Turkey and the Near East 66-27391

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Trumbull Higgins

Am Hist R 73:865 F '68 450w

Choice 5:660 J1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Douglas Gill

New Statesman 74:879 D 22 '67 200w

BARLOW, JAMES. The burden of proof; a novel. 254p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

68-25743

"Glittering public lives disguise sordid private vices and Vic Dakin, a successful mob leader, mingles with barristers, an M.P. or two, playwrights, and photographers. Only because inspector Matthews believes in justice . . . is there a final solution." (Library J)

"The Burden of Proof rests solely upon the police when it should include us all, author James Barlow implies in this raw and often brutal cautionary tale. He conjures up a seething London underworld . . . [where] the dirty hands of blackmail reach as high as Parliament. . . . Working to contrast a cowed citizenry with the honest toil of the police to bring the lunatic gangster to justice, Mr. Barlow occasionally falls into naked Tory ranting, but this is a sizzling, compelling book." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p14 S 8 '68 130w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3583 O 1 '68 60w

Reviewed by Constantine Fitzgibbon

N Y Times Bk R p33 O 13 '68 650w

"This wild and dizzy tale of crime, respectability, hypocrisy, vice, and downright, old-time British decency in modern London is told at Mr. Barlow's characteristic speed, which is furious. . . . There are weather and atmosphere and interiors and exteriors and street scenes, but the story is what matters—a crowded roller coaster at full tilt."

New Yorker 44:211 O 12 '68 180w

BARLOW, JAMES. The love chase; a novel. 287p $5.50 Simon & Schuster

68-11010

This is the story of Michael Deene, an art student, the son of a "modern" bishop, a young man in search of love. He embarks on a series of episodes "that take him into the world of modern art, that bring him to brief and hopeless affairs with Liz, a beautiful girl who lives, alas, for food, and Maraday, whose sophistication enchants and defeats him. Ultimately, he finds his goal in Faith, though not before he has been forced to work in a slaughterhouse to win the favor of her father." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 27:450 Mr 1 '68 400w

"The good do not often turn up in modern novels. When they do they are rarely as appealing as James Barlow's quiet young English rebel. . . . What Mr. Barlow has done—besides proving that he is an enthralling storyteller and an important novelist—is to show what it is like to be young, and honest, with all the right instincts. . . . [The] question of values, though it recurs again and again in Michael's words . . . keeps its proper subordinate place. On the other hand a certain earthiness in his language could obscure for some readers a painterlike vision for delightful detail, a witty summing up of people, a comic buildup to a near slapstick situation, and cruel tragedy movingly understated." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p15 F 15 '68 330w

"[A] highly perceptive story of contemporary youth in England. . . . The reader is soon involved with a cast of fascinating and very real people. In the unfolding of Michael's story, Mr. Barlow gets in many an oblique comment on the current scene; the world of art promoted by money-makers, class snobbery, young mods, and lonely old people. Quite wonderful is his portrait of Michael's father, the Bishop, who has written a shockingly liberal book, That Old Man, meaning God. . . . A fine novel, humorous, but with serious undercurrent." Maybelle Lacey

Library J 93:94 Ja 1 '68 150w

"If the calendar age of Michael Deene is only 19, his maturity quotient is at least equal to that of his author, who checks out at 46. Thus, while Michael frisks around after girls with youthful abandon, he carries a burden of wisdom and compassion usually acquired with heavy seasoning. . . . His ability to detect fraud is keen as a dowsing rod. Once the reader can adjust himself to these coexistent virtues, Mr. Barlow's hero becomes an instructive guide to life in a seaside town." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p46 F 18 '68 230w

New Yorker 44:64 J1 6 '68 220w

BARLOW, NORA, ed. Darwin and Henslow. See Darwin, C. R.

BARNARD, L. W. Justin Martyr; his life and thought. 193p $8.50 Cambridge

230.1 Justin Martyr, Saint 66-16665

"Justin's philosophical background is analyzed, as is his knowledge of the Jewish background of Christianity. Other chapters are concerned with the standard doctrines of the Christian faith: God, Logos, eschatology, the church and the sacraments, and so forth." (Choice) Bibliography. Index of references and general index.

"A scholarly yet readable study of one of the most important figures in second-century Christianity. There has been no book of this type written in English on Justin since the 1920's, so Barnard's work is a much needed addition to the field. . . . Barnard has few startling theories to advance; the book is rather a solid, well documented and straightforward commentary on and explanation of Justin's writings. Undergraduates, graduate and seminary students, and professors should all benefit from this book."

Choice 4:1394 F '68 130w

"[The author] presents the first full treatment in English of Justin's background and theology since E. R. Goodenough's The Theology of Justin Martyr. It is with Goodenough in particular that Barnard takes issue when he holds: 1) Justin's account of his contact with various Greek philosophies and final conversion to Christianity is historical; 2) First Apology is not based on any ancient literary artifice;

BARNARD, L. W.—Continued

3) Second Apology is not a fragment of a larger work; 4) Dialogue represents an actual debate with Trypho; 5) Justin's doctrine of God and the Logos shows influence from Middle Platonism rather than from Philo; 6) Justin regards the Holy Spirit as a person distinct from the Logos. Polemics, however, do not comprise the main purpose of Barnard, who presents a positive account of how Justin derives his tenets primarily from biblical tradition with only minor influence from Middle Platonism. . . . A comprehensive and clear study." R. G. Hoerber
Class World 61:28 S '67 210w

BARNES, C. H. Shorts aircraft since 1900. 510p il $12.95 Aero pubs.
629.133 Airplanes 67-26135

After a chapter on the origin and history of the British aircraft manufacturing company, the author covers each model that the company has built and gives performance figures.

"Short Bros. claimed to be the first aircraft manufacturers in the world when they acquired a licence to build Wright biplanes. They soon became designers too. . . . Forty chapters of this book are devoted to separate aircraft products with drawings and photographs. These chapters are not only for the technically minded; they provide a background of contemporary history as well."

Economist 225:1294 D 30 '67 300w

"[Mr. Barnes] has written an excellent book with a very readable reference. His chapter on the origin and history of the Short Brothers Company is particularly fascinating. . . . The photograph coverage and the three view drawings further enhance the volume. Highly recommended for specialized aviation collections." W. N. Hess
Library J 92:4514 D 15 '67 100w

BARNES, SAMUEL H. Party democracy; politics in an Italian socialist federation. 279p $7.50 Yale univ. press

329.945 Socialist party (Italy). Arezzo (Province)—Politics and government. Political science. Democracy 67-24489

In this "analysis of a single federation in the Italian socialist party, [the author] focusses on several . . . questions currently preoccupying political sociologists: How does democracy function in an organization? What are the structural and human conditions facilitating democracy? . . . [He concludes] that 'democrats can only win battles in a war that never ends.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by Frank Bonilla
Am J Soc 74:36 J1 '68 550w

Reviewed by Franco Ferrarotti
Ann Am Acad 378:154 J1 '68 800w

"An intelligent and well executed study. . . . The work takes as its departure the theoretical concerns of Michels, and to a lesser extent of Weber, and joins the contemporary work on the structures, processes, and properties of democracy by such writers as Dahl, Eckstein, Almond and Verba, and Eldersveld. Barnes' work is especially noteworthy because of the sensitive linking of theoretical concerns and empirical research. . . . [He] is concerned, most generally, to test Michels' Iron Law of Oligarchy. He concludes that democracy is enhanced by the existence of multiple autonomous channels of communication that both tie the parts of a unit, e.g. a party, together and permit the exercise of nonelite influence. . . . Highly recommended for college libraries." Choice 4:1442 F '68 230w

"It is unfortunate that books which are so exciting and important to academic political scientists find an otherwise limited audience. This study of democracy and party organization, participation and leadership, made by Professor Barnes of the University of Michigan, is a case in point. . . . His conclusions contribute significantly to an emerging theory of democracy among political theorists. . . . [and] should find a larger audience." H. J. Steck
Library J 92:4163 N 15 '67 150w

"Barnes has put in a lot of good work, but his thesis, as well as his confused categories, tend to lead him awry: thus in his description of the choice facing the PSI in 1963 he is blatantly biased towards the right; and similarly his eagerness to downgrade radical motives in general leads him to produce an arbitrary classification of reasons for joining the party, in which the influence of friends is categorised as a 'conventional' reason along with family ties and suchlike, while the influence of work and workmates is written off as virtually irrelevant." Jon Halliday

New Statesman 75:211 F 16 '68 500w

BARNES, WARNER, comp. Catalogue of the Browning collection. See Texas. University. Humanities research center

BARNET, MIGUEL, ed. The autobiography of a runaway slave. See Montejo, E.

BARNET, RICHARD J. Intervention and revolution; the United States in the third world. 302p $6.95 World pub.

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Politics and government. Revolutions 68-23846

The co-director of the Institute of Policy Studies "traces the development of the American commitment to oppose internal violence and radical political change in Greece, Lebanon, Vietnam, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, British Guiana, Iran and the Congo. The interference of our government in each of these countries is given a separate section. The author . . . concentrates on showing what various key officials actually did, how they explained their actions to the public, and the end results of those actions." (Publishers' Weekly) Chapter bibliographies. Index

"Whether the United States can transcend the rhetoric of anti-Communism and deal realistically with the domestic upheavals that are transforming the Third World is one of the most crucial issues of our time. Barnett . . . confronts this problem in a most sophisticated, well-documented critique of American foreign policy. . . . He concludes that Washington's nagging fear of the penetration of international Communism in revolutionary situations has led American policymakers to overlook the real causes of internal discontent and to overreact militarily. The thesis is a familiar one, but Mr. Barnett presents it in a restrained, articulate way that should appeal to scholar and layman alike." Charles DeBenedetti
Library J 93:3116 S 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by R. J. Walton
Nation 207:505 N 11 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington
New Repub 159:26 N 30 '68 1700w

"[A] brilliantly argued and devastatingly detailed study. . . . One of the great virtues of Barnett's splendid book is that it offers a devastating examination of the bureaucratic mentality that has led the United States on the path of intervention and counter-revolution. . . . [Barnet examines the counter-revolutionary impulse of postwar American foreign policy and analyzes key interventions . . . as well as efforts to subvert undesirable governments through such instruments as trade, aid, and the CIA. . . . [This] is an absorbing and revealing document of the highest utility, one that is likely to become a case-book for a new generation of Americans who are questioning the traditional explanations of the cold war and are rejecting the concept of an American guardianship over the world." Ronald Steel

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 S 12 '68 750w

"Barnet's strength is as a narrator; his book is fast-moving, witty, packed with useful facts. . . . The reader will find few unsupported generalities, a catalogue of careful distinctions, and a consistently thoroughgoing argument. . . . Rather patiently, Barnett picks apart the usual legal, moral, political and economic arguments in support of the policy of opposing revolution. (The book should be extremely useful to college teachers.) . . . [It] refrains from offering an explicit analysis of the historical sources of American policy. (Barnet promises a further study.) But by concentrating on the postwar period, and the 'National Security Managers,' it inadvertently suggests that, in the main, the imperial policy is to be understood as a modern phenomenon. Aware that this is not true and that his focus misleads some readers, Barnett offers repeated caveats. Nevertheless, this is the book's greatest weakness." Gar Alperovitz
N Y Times Bk R p20 N 24 '68 800w

BARNETT, A. DOAK. Cadres, bureaucracy, and political power in communist China [by] A. Doak Barnett; with a contribution by Ezra Vogel. 563p $12 Columbia univ. press

335.4 China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government. Communist party (China) 67-15895

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by B. D. Larkin
Am Pol Sci R 62:963 S '68 1350w

Reviewed by J. M. H. Lindbeck
Ann Am Acad 376:168 Mr '68 700w

Reviewed by John Israel
Book World p3 Mr 17 '68 200w
Choice 5:262 Ap '68 300w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo
Nation 206:613 My 6 '68 60w

BARNETT, LEO. Careers in computer programming, by Leo Barnett and Lou Ellen Davis. 117p il $3.75 Walck, H.Z.

621.3819 Programming (Electronic computers). Vocational guidance 67-19931

"The authors present the details of training, duties, job opportunities and working conditions; they also include a warning about the special schools recently set up specifically to teach electronic data processing." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Briefly the book explains the uses of computers and the elements of programming, then a little is offered about opportunities and educational requirements. More information should have been provided concerning schools that specialize in the area. The book is a necessary addition to the career shelf, but will have to be supplemented with other materials for complete career guidance."

Best Sell 27:429 F 1 '68 120w [YA]

"A concise, well written presentation of an increasingly important field. Slim enough to attract any reader's interest, the book has been so designed that the photographs and diagrams blend unusually well with the text. . . . This is a better purchase than [I.] Seligsohn's Your Career in Computer Programming [BRD 1968] because it gives a clearer presentation." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 93:1317 Mr 15 '68 150w [YA]

BARNETT, S. A. Instinct and intelligence; behavior of animals and man; il. by Stanley Wyatt. 224p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

591 Animals—Habits and behavior. Psychology. Comparative 67-15163

"The principal theme is the analysis of behavior by experiment. . . . [The] discussion of instinct . . . deals essentially with two aspects of behavior: species-specific fixed action patterns, and drive (impulse to act). Intelligence is treated according to its dictionary definition of 'the ability to adapt behavior to circumstances.' The examples of adaptable behavior given include trial-and-error learning, conditioning, habituation, reward and punishment, teaching, and imitation." (Science) Index.

"Barnett writes in lucid terms about the complexities of animal behavior, but he keeps his prose simple as if he were more interested in stimulating young minds than in impressing his learned colleagues with his erudition and understanding. Reasonably up-to-date and not overly biased towards European work (Barnett is a zoologist at Glasgow University). . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:76 Mr '68 100w

"[This] volume is not as scholarly as Mechanisms of Animal Behavior by [P.] Maler and [W. J.] Hamilton, and it does not cover such a wide range of topics. Yet these very characteristics may make [it] more appealing to the general reader. One serious flaw . . . is the inadequacy of the definitions given to words that have a special connotation to the ethologist. However, [the author] has avoided the 'We've named it and therefore explained it' approach that is characteristic of some workers in the area. He repeatedly voices his contention that man is a product of culture and not of the drives that the ethologist studies. In light of the popular interest recently expressed in views to the contrary, there may be many people inclined to read the book who formerly would have had little interest in it. [It] is recommended for purchase by academic and public libraries." J. D. Buffington

Library J 92:2424 Je 15 '67 130w

"There are moments when the book seems overly involved in semantics. . . . On the other hand, the erudition and critical appraisal that are brought to this work give it great integrity. The errors of fact are few. . . . For those who wish to satisfy a curiosity about animal behavior this is indeed a refreshing, authoritative, and provocative book. It is rich in examples. Barnett's vast knowledge of the field of behavior enables him to draw his descriptions from all phylogenetic levels so that one is left with a sense of the wholeness and integrity of the animal kingdom and its behavioral binding forces. Including man in the story, neither exalting his uniqueness nor denegating it, gives logical completeness to the story and at the same time imparts the relevance to events that some people require of their science." V. G. Dethier

Science 159:1089 Mr 8 '68 1250w

BARNWELL, WILLIAM H. In Richard's world; the battle of Charleston. 268p $4.95 Houghton

301.451 Charleston—Race relations. Negroes—South Carolina. Race problems 68-15032

The author "presents his diary kept during a summer of work in the Charleston ghetto in 1966. A white Charlestonian, he left Virginia Theological Seminary for the vacation period, determined to confront the problem of race relations, and volunteered to work in a Negro mission center in his hometown. By day he labored in the ghetto; by night he lived in what may be called 'the other world.'" (Library J)

"[This] is truly a balanced view. I like it and want to recommend this book as a factual, enjoyable peer into the mores and tragic-humor of Charleston, South Carolina and one man's work within the Negro youth community there within this summer of 1966. Richard is a retarded Negro child, one of the genuine people [whom] you will meet in this diary. Richard forms a backdrop against which the people of the book will act out their parts. Above all the author comes through well in his own major role." E. L. Linehan

Best Sell 28:46 My 1 '68 400w

Christian Century 85:594 My 1 '68 50w

"[The author's] attempt to rise above his native environment and his frank confessions of partial failure as he labored with and for the ghetto residents, mainly the youth, make interesting reading. . . . In the end he returned to the seminary and his interests shifted. He writes that he suspects the summer experience has changed him little. The reader, however, is never in doubt that it took courage to do what he did. Perhaps the greatest value of this enlightening and somewhat saddening book is its further revelation of the general lack of effective dialogue between the black and white races in America." Joseph Boromé

Library J 93:1132 Mr 15 '68 230w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2551 Je 15 '68 130w [YA]

"[This] is the story, not of the battle of Charleston, 1966, but rather of the battle in William's mind, summer, 1966. . . . What happened to [the author] in 'Richard's world' comprises a poignant learning experience. William saw smelled and tasted ghetto poverty. . . . Again and again, [his] agony is reflected in his journal. William is white; Richard's world is a black one. William wants to help, and be helped, and become involved. Yet always his whiteness, against the blackness of the other, cuts him like a knife. However, the William of this journal is a humanly segregated man even within the all-white 'night world' circles of affluent Charleston. . . . [His] journal provides a passionate and reflective work of self-examination." Malcolm Boyd

N Y Times Bk R p15 My 12 '68 750w

Reviewed by David Poling

Sat R 51:36 My 18 '68 280w

BARON, SALO WITTMAYER. A social and religious history of the Jews; v 11-12. Late middle ages and era of European expansion, 1200-1650. 2d ed rev & enl 422:359p ea $10 Columbia univ. press

296 Jews—Political and social conditions. Jews—History. Judaism—History (52-404)

"These most recent volumes in [the author's] multi-volume work on the history of the Jewish people] . . . cover the last three centuries of medieval Jewish history, in particular stressing economic and political history. The earlier volumes [on these centuries] stressed chronological and geographical matters. The themes of XI [Citizen or Alien Conjuror] are citizen or bondsman, outsider, demonic alien, and wanderer; of XII [Economic Catalyst] landowner and craftsman, professional and merchant, banker, and taxpayer." (Choice) For volumes one and two see BRD 1952.

BARON, S. W.—Continued

"Volume XI moves [close] to the internal life of the Jewish community with its treatment of the authority structure within the Jewish community and the effect of impositions from outside upon the community, including the ghetto, the Jewish badge, the oath more judaico, and libels like ritual murder, well poisoning, and host desecration leveled against them. It discusses as well the expulsions and wanderings of the medieval Jew. Volume XII concentrates on the economic activities of the Jews, including landowning, crafts and guilds, medicine, diplomacy, commerce, and money-lending, and, in general, the economic role of the Jews in strengthening the medieval polities to which they belonged. . . . The mosaic of these topics, skillfully woven, yields the most comprehensive work yet written on the Jewish Middle Ages. . . . General scholarship can profit by a greater understanding of the seminal role, active as well as passive, played by the Jews in nearly every sphere of medieval development." M. A. Cohen

Am Hist R 73:791 F '68 900w

"Very full bibliographical notes accompany each chapter. Baron is the greatest Jewish historian of this or any other age, and these volumes belong in every library, as the first item selected for a Judaica collection. No other work even approaches the magisterial perspective, the depth of insight into social and cultural history, or the ambition of comprehensiveness in research."

Choice 4:732 S '67 100w

BARON, VIRGINIA OLSEN, ed. The seasons of time; tanka poetry of ancient Japan; il. by Yasuhide Kobashi. 63p $4.50 Dial press

895.6 Japanese poetry—Collections. Nature in poetry 68-15254

This book contains seventy-eight "short songs" from two "Japanese anthologies, the eighth Century Manyōshū and the tenth Century Kokinshū, [which] have been collected and grouped according to theme: a section for each of the four seasons, and a final selection of musings on "This World." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 30w

"The five-line tanka is probably the basic Japanese form. . . . The poems, like haiku, effectively convey universal human emotion through acute nature imagery. . . . Freely translated by such experts as Kenneth Rexroth and Arthur Waley, these are direct, matter-of-fact versions. Some of the black, gray, and white wash drawings are too heavy and block-like for the poems' delicate imagery, but others are superb examples of restrained power, and the calligraphy at the beginning of each section is suitably strong. An editor's introduction explains the history and nature of tanka poetry, though, like haiku, the poems themselves transcend differences of time and culture and should be warmly received by American children. . . . Grade five and up." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:2118 My 15 '68 230w

"It is interesting to note that the sentiment expressed in these ancient poems are still the expressions of today. The illustrations contained here are brush and ink drawings. This is a charming book which is well worth the price." Makiko Doi

Library J 93:2875 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by Walker Gibson

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 130w

BARR, BERYL. Wonders, warriors, and beasts abounding; foreword by Thomas P. F. Hoving. 128p il col il $6.95; lib bdg $7.70 Doubleday

704.94 Art—Juvenile literature 67-9679

"Reproductions of various forms of art work from ancient Greek coins to a Matisse collage illustrate [this] primer on art and aesthetics. Concerned with works on four subjects —the sun, the night sky, warriors, and animals —the book shows . . . the ways in which artists of widely disparate cultures have portrayed them, outlining their universally accepted aspects and the uniquely individual features of each artistic conception and the means by which the artist has expressed his vision. [Index.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by Patricia Boozer

Best Sell 27:391 Ja 1 '68 80w [YA]

Reviewed by M. B. King

Book World p12 Mr 17 '68 190w

"This book should be taken as a model for books about art for young readers. The text is rich and meaty. . . . The imaginative wealth and placing of the plates is amazing in such a slender book. . . . This book is for 'young people'—to use the usual polite term—but also is bound to fascinate adults." Christopher Andreae

Christian Science Monitor pB12 N 2 '67 190w [YA]

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:308 My 24 '68 50w

Horn Bk 44:195 Ap '68 150w

"[Excellent reproductions]. . . . The pleasant, oversize, lavishly illustrated book will attract browsers, who will be prompted to further independent observations by the clear but uncondescending text which introduces such terms, techniques, and concepts as animation, stylization, realism, and abstraction. A stimulating, easy-to-take lesson in seeing, appreciating, and understanding the creative process of observation and transformation." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 92:4619 D 15 '67 160w

"It is both a shock and a pleasure to encounter some reproductions of actual works of art, especially works of great quality. [But] one's pleasure begins to fade slightly at the uneven quality of the plates. . . . The basic scheme of [Mrs. Barr's] book—dividing the material thematically . . . seems acceptable enough in principle, but in practice it proves rather boring. As a writer she cannot sustain our interest in the individual themes, and her faculty for visual observation is frail, to say the least. She cannot quite make up her mind whether the pictures should serve to illustrate her accounts of myths, animals, etc., or her words should serve the pictures. In any case, she takes refuge from the visual wherever she can—and it is all too often." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ja 7 '68 300w

BARRETT, E. C. Viewing weather from space. 140p il maps $6 Praeger

551.6 Weather forecasting. Meteorology in aeronautics. Meteorology 67-23367

The author provides "an explanation and analysis of the processes and data by which weather is forecast." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies.

Choice 5:804 S '68 150w

"The book deals in some detail with atmospheric circulation. In fact, Mr. Barrett, who lectures in geography at the University of Bristol, covers the subject of satellites and weather very well. Readers should, however, have a background in meteorology and satellite technology. Valuable for meteorology collections." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 92:2935 S 1 '67 210w

"This book presents clearly and readably many of the facts relating to the remarkable series of weather satellites which have been launched since 1960. . . . The author . . . describes the Tiros and Nimbus satellites and discusses their capabilities and methods of analysis. Although this material is nontechnical and very brief, it is instructive and interesting. Half of the book is devoted to elementary discussions of hurricanes, the general circulation, and other atmospheric features. The author stresses the application of satellite data to these topics, but it is doubtful if material of this complexity should be handled in this qualitative way. In this section the book is marred by numerous generalizations which are seriously misleading. . . . The book provides interesting information for the layman who wants to know what meteorologists are about; however, the serious reader should go on to more complete and more accurate sources." R. G. Fleagle

Science 160:179 Ap 12 '68 280w

BARRETT, JOHN. That better country; the religious aspect of life in Eastern Australia, 1835-1850. 213p pl maps $12 Cambridge

279.4 Australia—Church history. Australia—Religion 66-12956

The author examines some of the "relations between the Churches, the Governments and the people in eastern Australia during the years 1835 to 1850, which form a watershed between the era of penal colonies proper, and the expansion of Australia in the years of gold and responsible government. . . . Nineteenth-century religious provision in both Britain and Australia is examined, and a comparison is attempted between nineteenth- and twentieth-century attitudes and practices." (Publisher's note) Index of contemporary Australian historians and general index.

Reviewed by C. S. Blackton
Am Hist R 73:578 D '67 250w

"This book would be better subtitled 'the ecclesiastical aspect of life in eastern Australia,' for it deals with the development of church life, and the struggle to build and gain support for churches in the early years of the colony. Though well documented and with an excellent index, it is not likely to be of any use except in a specialized concern with Australian life and the development of that great country. The conditions there were so unique that no parallels can properly be drawn between developments there and elsewhere. Therefore, recommended only where resource material is needed on British Empire developments, or on life in Australia in particular."

Choice 5:357 My '68 110w

BARRINGTON, SIR JONAH. The Ireland of Sir Jonah Barrington; selections from his Personal sketches; ed. by Hugh B. Staples. 328p il $7.50 Univ. of Wash. press

914.15 Ireland—Social life and customs 67-21201

"Sir Jonah was both an active participant in the public and private life of late eighteenth-century Ireland and a keen observer of its idiosyncracies. . . . The society he depicted . . . was made up of men who combined lusty appetites for worldly pleasures with respect for learning, and bluff open-heartedness with indifference to cruelty. . . . Prominent in these pages are the 'hardgoers,' with their astounding capacity for liquid refreshment; the 'fire-eaters,' with their strict code of honor and requital; . . . and Irish leaders of various persuasions and loyalties—Henry Flood, Henry Grattan, Wolfe Tone, Archibald Hamilton Rowan, John Philpot Curran, the Duke of Wellington, among others." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Only libraries that do not have the Sketches in earlier, unabridged versions will want this condensation. . . . The Sketches are not important as a record of Irish society. . . . [Sir Jonah] was not a sociologist. He was a colossal liar, an undisciplined and incredibly repetitious writer who preferred fantasy to fact, triviality to seriousness, 'charm' and style to substance, and sensations to thoughts. But those very qualities make his record valuable as a representation of the mind and character of his class—Anglo-Irish gentlemen. In . . . cutting out the repetition, and . . . imposing an organization on Barrington's writing, the editor has, quite unintentionally, diminished our sense of how rambling, heedless, mindless, feckless, and incapable of discipline Barrington and the Anglo-Irish were. . . . The editor's introduction is uneven—sometimes thoughtful and sometimes trivial."

Choice 5:353 S '68 210w

"A lusty, fascinating world emerges from Hugh Staples's judicious selection of essays. . . . Barrington, who stood well with all parties, knew Ireland from the viewpoint of the Irish Protestant Ascendancy, enjoying access to practically all levels of society, and he reported his observations with the skills of a gifted novelist. . . . Mr. Staples has made available a delightful account of 18th-Century life." Bernard Brennan

Library J 93:76 Ja 1 '68 110w

"The society of which [Barrington] gives a close-up makes Squire Western seem a Chesterfield and Tony Lumpkin a Little Lord Fauntleroy. . . . [Mr. Staples argues] that his heavily reduced version 'will be found more readable' than the original. This complacency is unjustified. Barrington, tidily rearranged into sections by Mr. Staples, loses some of his racy tang. But his three volumes are hard to come by, and this dip into them does give many of the best stories. . . . He can be read for the enormous fun he is—and as a significant background to Fenianism."

TLS p314 Mr 28 '68 330w

Va Q R 44:cxix summer '68 90w

BARRON, JOHN N. The language of painting; an informal dictionary; written and il. by John N. Barron. 207p $4.95 World pub.

750.3 Painting—Dictionaries. Art—Dictionaries 67-21388

The terms "are restricted to those applying to Western painting. . . . The entries are of three basic types: first, those that refer to the actual materials and techniques of painting; second, those terms that appear in art, criticism, describing principles, personalities, movements, and schools of painting; and third, those miscellaneous words that relate to painting as a profession." (Pref) Bibliography.

"While there is much to recommend Barron's book (including its modest price) to the student, the amateur, and small public libraries, it cannot compete with reference materials that a college ought to have: P. and L. Murray, [Dictionary of art and artists BRD 1966], R. C. Haggart [Dictionary of art terms, BRD 1963], . . . and The Praeger Picture Encyclopedia of Art [BRD 1959]. These are more thorough and might as well be direct sources. Barron offers some peculiar definitions: 'Beatnik=Bohemian' for instance. The illustrations range from pedestrian to mediocre; the bibliography is spotty."

Choice 5:749 S '68 80w

"Barron, the author and illustrator, [is] . . . an instructor at the School of Visual Arts in New York. . . . [His compilation] will be useful for quick reference. Using some black-and-white diagrams, he has made some succinct and unusually clear definitions, for example, 'enlargement diagonal' and 'golden section.' His short definitions of some of the movements in painting may well be useful to students, who need a point of reference. People who use this book must be warned of a number of misspellings. . . . The book will be of value to smaller libraries, but it is not essential." Julia Sabine

Library J 92:4491 D 15 '67 110w

BARRY, ROBERT. Animals around the world. 32p col il $3.25 McGraw

811 Animals—Poetry—Juvenile literature 67-16297

Illustrations of "a miscellaneous selection of animals from different regions of the world arranged in alphabetic order [are] accompanied by verses. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"The condescending verses, some with forced rhythms, are interspersed with mediocre illustrations. Most libraries already have on their shelves many better picture books about animals." E. T. Dobbins

Library J 92:2443 Je 15 '67 100w

"Drawings of the creatures themselves seem adequate, but the smaller cartoons that accompany the quatrained verses are like the written lines, on the coy side." Eve Merriam
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p45 My 7 '67 40w

BARSAM, PAUL C., jt. auth. Adult health. See Reynolds, F. W.

BART, BENJAMIN F. Flaubert. 791p il $16 Syracuse univ. press

B or 92 Flaubert, Gustave 67-27410

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 118:618 My 4 '68 30w
Choice 5:200 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Matthew Hodgart
N Y Rev of Books 10:14 My 9 '68 500w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven
New Yorker 44:88 Je 22 '68 1250w
TLS p152 F 15 '68 380w

BARTH, JOHN. Lost in the funhouse; fiction for print, tape, live voice. 201p $4.95 Double-day

68-22615

A volume of short fictional pieces. "The book's creator-heroes are a small boy, a goat-herd minstrel banished from the court of Clytemnestra, and the author-figure himself. Their lives are seen as a giddily terrifying tour of a Funhouse, an isolated exile on an island, and a long meaningless swim in a vast 'night-sea.' In the fourteen short pieces, the heroes and their lives blend in and out of one another, but their identities merge almost totally in the boy Ambrose M—'s bittersweet conclusion on being trapped forever in a corner of the Funhouse." (Newsweek) "Though several of the book's items have appeared separately in [such] periodicals [as Esquire, The Atlantic Monthly and Yale Review], the series will be seen to have been meant to be received 'all at once' and as here arranged." (Author's note)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 119:563 N 30 '68 50w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:150 O '68 30w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 28:282 O 15 '68 900w

"This is pure folly. But, just to prove there is something powerful to be said for persisting in folly, Barth concludes this blitheringly sophomoric book with a dazzling 'Anonymiad.' . . . Some of the humor here has the mechanical flavor of forced anachronism—all too reminiscent of the Ribald Tales in Playboy magazine. But the sheer multiplicity of correspondences, reiterated and superimposed themes, allusions within allusions of the 'Anonymiad' dazzle and delight the eye. . . . A Punch and Judy version of The Tempest? I think that's all the 'Anonymiad' amounts to. That's wonderful. There are bushels of junk in this book, as there are in everything Barth has published thus far. There are also pinnacles of wit." R. V. Cassill

Book World p16 S 15 '68 600w

"The best of these semi-interrelated short stories and sketches by the author of Giles Goat-Boy [BRD 1966] and The Sot-Weed Factor [BRD 1961] are a group of apparently autobiographical sketches of his childhood in the Chesapeake Bay country 30 years ago. The title story and 'Ambrose, His Mark' are outstanding. They have all the verve and hilarity of The Sot-Weed Factor and the poignancy (I use that word advisedly) and charm of Mr. Barth's first novel, The Floating Opera [BRD 1956]. A series of experimental pieces on the art of writing will appeal to students of fiction. But a group of pseudo-Homeric tales are as bloated and overwritten as the worst parts of Giles Goat-Boy. In all, a mixed bag varying from some of the best works to come from Barth's very talented pen to some of the poorest." Walter Harding

Library J 93:3153 S 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Alfred Appel
Nation 207:441 O 28 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson
New Repub 159:30 N 23 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
N Y Times Bk R p4 O 20 '68 1150w

"At one of his most sterile and frustrated moments, the author-hero . . . chides himself bitterly for the very idea behind his project: 'Another story about a writer writing a story? . . . At that juncture, he seems to be correct. Wrestling with technical concepts, seeking out the counsel of literary acquaintances, meditating on the 'anguish' of his task, Barth's hero is momentarily depressing and a little dull. But dullness is always fleeting in the rich prose of Barth; . . . he goes on to produce a finely drawn, often funny and fascinating picture of, pardon the expression, the creative process. . . . [This] is billed on the jacket as 'experimental.' . . . A few sections should be read aloud to call forth the music of Narcissus's flight 'into the bimboed and bebuggered bush.' . . . But most of the stories, while brilliantly written, are more interesting as variations on a theme than as playful 'experiments.'" Pete Axthelm
Newsweek 72:108 S 30 '68 550w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:31 S 28 '68 1150w
Time 92:100 S 27 '68 700w

BARTHELME, DONALD. Unspeakable practices, unnatural acts. 170p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

68-14918

A collection of fifteen stories by the author of the novel Snow White (BRD 1967). "In 'The Indian Uprising' a modern city is attacked, and conquered, by Comanches. In 'Edward and Pia' a pair of nervous, self-conscious lovers wander about Sweden and Denmark. In 'The President' a tiny Chief Executive (only forty-eight inches high at the shoulder) mesmerizes the country with his 'magic charisma.' In 'The Dolt' a would-be author constructs a baroque tale missing one important ingredient, a middle." (Publisher's note) All but three of these stories were originally published in The New Yorker.

Reviewed by H. J. Cargas
America 118:777 Je 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by J. W. Aldridge
Atlantic 222:89 J1 '68 1700w

"His laconic style is maddeningly original, often obtuse. His puzzling prose is a potpourri of free-floating metaphor and enigmatic idiom. His plots meander like an acid-head's triptik. And most of his subject matter seems to have been collected from the aftermath of a psychiatric congress. But Donald Barthelme—with only one novel and two story collections—is fast becoming the most inventive, timely young author writing fiction in America today. . . . One discovers in his stories a disarmingly serious relevance to the realities of our anxious present. . . . Like all good satirists, Barthelme has an especially keen ear for the language of those he lampoons. . . . The consciously weird and meticulously truncated story is [his] forte." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p3 My 19 '68 850w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 360w

Reviewed by Martin Tucker
Commonweal 88:414 Je 21 '68 500w

Reviewed by J. G. Murray
Critic 26:74 Je '68 1350w

Reviewed by C. A. Raines
Library J 93:2687 J1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Calvin Bedient
Nation 206:703 My 27 '68 1150w

"Barthelme is essentially the prose muse of [the] communications chaos—chaos not confined, obviously, to the air, but as vigorously burgeoning in any magazine . . . in which a flick of the page takes you from famine in Bengal to tone-row theory. . . . [He] borrows the devices of the enemy—collage, montage, subliminal frames, double-take—but to some extent he is changing sides rather than turning weapons. . . . Probably this is rather unfair to a book that is still richer in ideas, and in laughs of all colors for that matter, than the combined collections of a dozen ordinary writers. But it is worrying to see even small indications that Barthelme may be turning into a mere seismograph for social neurosis." Hilary Corke

New Repub 158:34 Je 1 '68 1300w

"[This] is the third and best of Barthelme's books. . . . [He] habitually deals with unnatural apathy and violence—unnatural indeed, but not abnormal. . . . [and] has managed to place himself in the center of modern consciousness. Nothing surrealist about him, his dislocations are real, his material quite actual. . . . First he renders everything as meaningless as it appears to be in ordinary modern life by abolishing distinctions and putting everything in the present. He constructs a single plane of truth, of relevance, of style, of value. . . . [Barthelme] has the art to make a treasure out of trash, to see out from inside it, the world as it's faceted by colored jewel-glass. A seriousness about his subject is sometimes wanting. When this obtains, the result is grim, and grimly overwhelming." W. H. Gass
N Y Rev of Books 10:5 Ap 25 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard
N Y Times Bk R p7 My 12 '68 900w

"[Barthelme] has created a voice so clear and characteristic that the reader's ear, brain, nerves, react to it like an oscilloscope. It is the voice of the unspecialized mind of our time that sees nothing in the world but a duplicity so extensive that it has become the environment of human consciousness. . . . [He] has controlled, directed, shaped, colored, weighted and plasticized [the condition of hysteria] better than any current writer. . . . [All these] stories are, in one way or another, funny. . . . [But in Robert Kennedy Saved from Drowning] Barthelme says more about what has become of the whole concept of human personality (and its potential for meaningful life and action) than most writers say in their entire careers." Jack Kroll

Newsweek 71:111 My 6 '68 600w

Reviewed by A. Z. Silver

Sat R 51:81 My 11 '68 700w

Time 91:106 My 24 '68 550w

BARTHOLOMEW (JOHN) AND SON, LTD.

The Times atlas of the world [comprehensive ed]. See The Times (London)

BARTLETT, C. J. Castlereagh. 292p il $5.95
Scribner

B or 92 Londonderry, Robert Stewart, 2d
Marquis of, Great Britain—Politics and government—1714-1837 67-16525

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by David Owen

Am Hist R 73:1154 Ap '68 500w

Choice 5:395 My '68 160w

Reviewed by I. R. Christie

Engl Hist R 83:628 Jl '68 250w

BARTLETT, JOHN. Familiar quotations; a collection of passages, phrases and proverbs traced to their sources in ancient and modern literature; Emily Morison Beck, editor. 14th ed rev & enl 1750p $15 Little

808.88 Quotations 68-15664

This edition of a book first published in 1855 contains a "number of quotations that have become memorable since the last edition in 1955. . . . [The] range of reference [has expanded to include] . . . expressions and sayings from the cultures and literatures of Asia, Europe and South America. [with] greater representation from scientists and psychiatrists. . . . Besides Freud and Jung [who] have never appeared in Bartlett before [there are now] Confucius, Columbus, Chekhov, Bolivar, Brandeis, Bergson, Sir Thomas Malory, Cotton Mather, John Marshall, Pushkin, Flaubert, Ghandi, Lao Tzu, Kant, Kierkegaard. . . . Famous quotations [which] have been overlooked in previous editions [are included, and] some no longer familiar have been eliminated)." (Pref) Index of authors. Index to the quotations. For the thirteenth edition see BRD 1955.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:144 N '68 20w

"In the earliest editions, familiarity was 'the all-important question.' . . . Over the years, 'their own merits,' their 'literary power' [became] a criterion for inclusion of quotations until now, according to [the editor] 'restraint has been necessary to keep the volume from becoming idiosyncratic or growing into an anthology.' . . . Expansion into special fields like science and psychiatry has required special knowledge. For the first time the editor has had 'a staff of consulting scholars.' . . . Whatever the strengths of the other quotation books . . . a reference shelf would be incomplete without a Bartlett. And so would some summer vacations." Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 8 '68 600w

"[This edition] unfolds 1750 pages which seem to belie the descriptive title's claim that the quotations are familiar. . . . [However] writers, pundits, and men in public life who 'arrived' in the period from 1955 to 1965 have been assured that some of their most felicitous expressions will be enshrined, at least until the next edition appears. In this edition too it has been acknowledged for the first time that words worth remembering and quoting have occasionally been written or uttered by people who were reared in other than the Western tradition. . . . Yet because of the limited sources with which the editors and contributors worked, Asians, Middle Easterners, Africans, and Latin Americans may be expected rightly to accuse Bartlett of tokenism. . . . [A feature] worth noting is the improvement of the subject matter index, which runs on for almost 600 pages. Prepared with the aid of a computer it is far more detailed than ever before. This edition is for any library, large or small." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:4277 N 15 '68 270w

Reviewed by Robert Coover

N Y Times Bk R p8 D 8 '68 1850w

"Many old translations have been modernized, and some deadwood has been burned. Among the hundreds of new shoots are a) authors previously missed by Bartlett's (though not in other compilations), e.g., Chekhov, Flaubert, and Lao Tzu; and b) writers as recent as J. D. Salinger, John F. Kennedy, Pasternak, Mao Tse-tung, Einstein (his 'E=mc<sup>2</sup>' is the second shortest quotation in the book, beaten only by Euclid's 'Q.E.D.'), the Negro spokesmen, and the newer poets of America and Europe. . . . What good taste the editor shows by permitting the extracts from Emily Dickinson to grow to eleven columns—virtually an anthology! . . . The reference shelf is not the ideal spot for Bartlett's; it belongs with your bedtime reading favorites." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:58 N 16 '68 170w

BARTLETT, SUSAN. Books: a book to begin on; il. by Ellen Raskin. unp $2.95 Holt

655 Books—Juvenile literature 67-19060

A "narrative which introduces some of the innovators and luminaries of the book world; among them are the Sumerians, Egyptians, and medieval monks, Aldus Manutius, William Caxton, John Newbery, and Randolph Caldecott. . . . Grades three to five". (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p16 S 22 '68 90w

"This book, unfortunately, is more appealing to the eye than to the intellect. It is written in a 'me Tarzan, you Jane' style which is supposed to appeal to children in the early grades. But children don't speak in that manner, and they don't think that way either. For parents or adults who think they do, however, here is an offering that is at least way ahead of today's pre-dinner hour TV." R. C. Bergenheim

Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 2 '68 130w

Horn Bk 44:437 Ag '68 90w

"The author has created a consistently interesting narrative. . . . The illustrative material, printed in nutmeg and black, consists of original drawings and facsimiles, such as the title page of Little Goody Two-Shoes and woodcuts from a block book. From dust jacket to end papers, the design of the book is in perfect accord with the spirit and content of the text." Janet French

Library J 93:1307 Mr 15 '68 120w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p50 My 5 '68 110w

"An informational book for younger children as interesting as it is useful and as attractive as it is interesting. . . . Written with clarity, and kept—both in the level of difficulty and in the amount of material—within the understanding of the intended audience. The coverage is, therefore, not comprehensive, but it touches on all important points in the evolution of the book." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:50 F 24 '68 90w

BARTLETT, VERNON. Let's visit Italy [by] Vernon Bartlett and John C. Caldwell. 95p il lib bdg $2.97 Day

914.5 Italy—Description and travel—Juvenile literature 68-11302

"The first half of the book is devoted to a summary of Italy's history, while the latter section is given to geography, social and industrial life in the form of a travelogue. . . . Grades three to six." (Library J) This is a revised, adapted and reset edition of a book of the same title by V. Bartlett published in England. Index.

"Though necessarily condensed, the material is commendably free from misleading generalizations. Excellent photographs enrich the text, but the map fails to show some of the locations mentioned." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 93:3298 S 15 '68 90w

TLS p1097 N 24 '66 100w

BARTON, BERNARD. The literary correspondence of Bernard Barton; ed. by James E. Barcus. 154p $5 Univ. of Pa. press

821 65-28129

This volume of letters by a nineteenth-century Quaker poet includes correspondence with Charles Lamb, Robert Southey, Edward FitzGerald and James Hogg.

"[Barton was a] poet of negligible talent and limited literary interest. This volume is a fitting tribute. Although his correspondents included a few notable people, . . . and although he made incidental remarks on yet more important writers—Shelley, Byron, Tennyson—the remarks are not penetrating, and the correspondence is of little interest for the tradition of English criticism or English poetry. Barcus has provided a routinely informed, brief introduction. Of interest only to the graduate library that buys omnivorously."

BARTON, BERNARD—Continued

Choice 4:671 S '67 80w

"Many of the letters in this short collection show how carefully [Barton] cultivated the friendship of poets, critics and editors, in the hope of gaining favourable reviews in the literary periodicals. His interest in poetry was quite genuine. . . . The value of Barton's letters, however, does not depend principally on his critical judgment but on what he tells us about reviews and reviewers, the prejudices and popularities of the time. . . . His most pleasing letters are those written to his Suffolk neighbours, George Crabbe (Jr.), son of the poet, and William Fitch, a druggist of Ipswich. . . . [It is for] agreeable glimpses into the side-paths of literary history that Barton is chiefly to be enjoyed."

TLS p675 J1 27 '67 420w

BARTOS-HOPPNER, B. Storm over the Caucasus; tr. by Anthea Bell. 272p $4.50 Walck, H.Z.

68-11226

"This novel is based on the exploits of Imam Shamyl, the 19th-Century Moslem leader who struggled to free his native Caucasus of Russian imperialism. The story centers on Aliko, a young shepherd who at the age of 15 leaves his peaceful life to fight for Shamyl, and spans the next 30 years to the end of the war. . . . Aliko becomes one of Shamyl's trusted captains [and the best friend of his son Jamaluddin.]" (Library J) Glossary. Chronological table. Originally published in Germany in 1963. "Age twelve and up." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 23:194 Ag 1 '68 70w

"Although battles and sieges occupy the surface excitement of the story, Aliko becomes aware, even from his first facing of fear in combat, of the tragic meaning of the war. . . . The novel well portrays a little-known episode in Russian history and a young man's endurance of the uncertainties of life. The style is uncomplicated and vigorous; the relationships among the characters are deeply felt." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:425 Ag '68 270w

"While some of the characters are not developed . . . [many] are well drawn. Interesting accounts of Moslem beliefs and customs alternate with tense battle scenes for a good story which will also give thoughtful students a broader understanding of another culture and a look at a little-known part of history." J. S. Garvin

Library J 93:2736 J1 '68 180w [YA]

Reviewed by Geoffrey Trease

New Statesman 76:594 N 1 '68 50w

"Total disillusionment is not something which children accept easily, and this powerful and moving story leaves a bitter taste behind it. This is nevertheless a book to be received with gratitude. It is long, difficult, deeply disturbing, but there is wisdom in it and a fine understanding. The style is rather angular, which may come from insensitive translation, or equally from a deliberate matching of language with theme. The whole book is prickly with stylistic, historical and human problems. It demands considerable maturity in the reader; the gaudy jacket design is grotesquely misleading."

TLS p1106 O 3 '68 220w

BARTRAM, ALAN, jt. auth. An atlas of type-forms. See Sutton, J.

BARZUN, JACQUES. The American university: how it runs, where it is going. 319p $7.95 Harper

378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S. Education, Higher 68-15959

The author examines "our present institutions of higher learning, discussing these from a historical and sociological point of view." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. F. Donovan

America 120:26 Ja 4 '69 800w

"Those who are disturbed by student riots, the high cost of education and the power of the intellectual should read this book on the management and the future of the large university. Barzun may be a bit querulous at times, but he has insight and asks penetrating questions. . . . Nearly everyone involved in or touched by higher education will find [this] worthwhile to read." T. M. Garrett

Best Sell 28:340 N 15 '68 430w

"[This] book is a handbook for all university presidents, trustees and administrators, and not bad for professors; a remarkable combination of a do-it-yourself manual for all who want to build universities, and a philosophical analysis. The 'How It Runs' half of the book is intensely practical. It gives us the anatomy and physiology of the university . . . [and addresses itself] to a series of very practical problems. . . . The philosophical critique of the university—'Where It Is Going' is, as we might expect, shrewd, enlightened and persuasive. . . . Curiously enough, what this comprehensive and thoughtful analysis lacks is . . . a comparative approach to the nature and the function of the university in the Western world. . . . Professor Barzun confines himself pretty much to the American scene and takes for granted many things which other societies do not take for granted. . . . [His] strictures are inspired not by disillusionment or revulsion, but by admiration and affection." H. C. Commager

Book World p7 N 3 '68 2400w

Reviewed by Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p5 D 26 '68 380w

"Barzun has written an interesting, useful, and much needed book. As both an administrator and teacher at Columbia University, Mr. Barzun has important knowledge to share about the process and outcome of higher education in the United States. He has designed this book for the general reader with an interest in higher education, but I think that students interested in college teaching as a profession, and college and university faculty members will find it worthwhile reading. . . . Although [Barzun wrote this book] before the recent student uprisings at Columbia, he deals with many of the problems troubling students and faculty members at Columbia, as well as in other colleges and universities." Howard Ozmon

Library J 93:2992 S 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wagner

Nat R 20:1224 D 3 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Paul Woodring

Sat R 51:61 D 21 '68 1250w

BASHAM, A. L. The wonder that was India: a survey of the history and culture of the Indian sub-continent before the coming of the Muslims. 3d rev ed 572p 11 pl maps $13.50 Taplinger

913.34 India—Civilization. India—History

68-10737

"The second edition of this book was published in New York in 1963. . . . No drastic changes have been made in this edition, but a few notes on recent archaeological discoveries have been added. Small emendations and stylistic improvements have been incorporated, and additions have been made to the bibliography." (Pref. to the third ed) Chronology. Chapter bibliographies. Index and glossary. For the first edition see BRD 1955.

"The only recent work which merits comparison with this volume is [D. D.] Kosambi's The Culture and Civilization of Ancient India in Historical Outline [BRD 1966]. Kosambi is more readable and provocative. But . . . for the general reader and undergraduate, Basham's book still remains the best brief but comprehensive and simply written synthesis based on existing scholarship. In separate chapters on history, religion, politics, art, etc. and twelve appendices on subjects ranging from astronomy to the origin of the gypsies, it deals with all the important aspects of ancient Indian civilization. Copiously provided with illustrations, maps, and drawings; judiciously documented; very useful bibliography. The third revised edition incorporates recent developments in scholarship but, on the whole, the book remains practically unchanged. Libraries already possessing the second edition need not acquire the third. But for others its publication provides an opportunity to add an up-to-date version of an indispensable work."

Choice 5:667 J1 '68 150w

"Except for certain German- and Government of India-sponsored histories [this book] is the most comprehensive one-volume history in English. Professor Basham discusses practically everything, including village culture, native food and dress, languages, art and architecture, coins, family and military history, religion, caste, and metaphysics. . . . The romantic title indicates an apologetic attitude towards India, borne out by the epilogue. Glossy illustrations help to round out this survey which is highly recommended for smaller libraries without the larger standard histories." Peter Fingesten

Library J 93:2488 Je 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Peter Harnetty

Pacific Affairs 41:481 fall '68 50w

BASHŌ. See Matsuo, B.

BASSET, BERNARD. The English Jesuits: from Campion to Martindale; pref. by Terence Corrigan. 477p il $9.50 Herder & Herder

271 Jesuits. Catholics in England 67-29671

The author's "account of the history of his fellow Jesuits in England [is] based on . . . research in original sources. For three centuries, the English Jesuits were outlawed, often imprisoned, and many were hanged, drawn, and quartered. . . . [Father Basset tells of] their ministry to Catholic Recusants, living in hiding and disguise, and training [of] recruits in their colleges on the continent." (Library J)

"[The author's] evident familiarity with Jesuit source materials, published and unpublished, and with English secular history gives him a rare deftness of touch and breadth of vision. . . . Attention focuses above all on Robert Persons, the most controversial figure in the book. . . . The great mass of Jesuits is not overlooked, however. One excellent chapter reveals who joined the order, why they did so, and how they lived from novitiate days onward; and another, well entitled 'Underground,' emphasizes the obscure, anonymous careers of practically all Jesuits during the 17th and 18th centuries. Occasionally, as in dealing with the Appellant controversy and with George Tyrrell, too much is presupposed for most readers. . . . Unfortunately, the book peters out with the Victorian age. The 20th century is relegated to a mere 16-page 'Epilogue,' and stops at 1939." J. F. Broderick

America 119:166 S 7 '68 800w

"A fascinating account. . . . An unusual feature of the book is the author's reliance upon the original contemporary sources not only for his basic facts but also for illustrations which bring to life the various epochs. Much of the material is taken directly from the personal letters of the Jesuits themselves, for which Basset has provided an elucidating introductory chapter on the place and value of Jesuit correspondence. . . . Attention must be drawn to his well written account of the suppression of the Jesuits."

Choice 5:1144 N '68 230w

"An interesting story, well told, suitable for public and academic libraries." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:2877 Ag '68 110w

"Father Basset's admirable survey . . . marks a radical change from the conventional hagiography which lists the expected virtues and is silent on all that is awkward. . . . [His] intelligent candour, far from diminishing the record of faith and even sanctity, in fact enhances it. One thing that is certainly established by this lively and perceptive history is the falsity of the idea that Jesuits were or are men made to an inflexible mould, losing their individuality in the arduous cause to which they were committed with such military obedience. The book is in effect a gallery of highly diverse portraits; [including] the splendid catalogue of Victorian Jesuits, with endearing eccentricities and unlikely gifts. . . . [The book] has the merit of evident scholarship and provides for the reader who is bemused by the complexities of recusant history an intelligible narrative."

TLS p830 Ag 1 '68 800w

BASSETT, JAMES. The sky suspended. 326p $5.95 Delacorte press

68-12197

"Frederick Peter Cragg, former World War II naval hero, more recently a civilian malcontent, [is] now back at the only trade he truly knows and loves: war. His ragtag command includes . . . a blank-faced Asian colonel and his not quite trustworthy aides; a middle-aged French plantation owner . . . [and] a lovely young Frenchwoman. . . . With a reconverted PT boat of World War II vintage and a disguised armed junk, he is to sail up the terror-ridden coast of Southeast Asia, enter a heavily fortified harbor, destroy a Communist supply armada, and return to collect his money." (Publisher's note)

"The narrative is swift and the action is abundant; at the same time, the characters are very real, fully drawn, not exactly complex but, at the least, three-dimensional. . . . The story may not be so profound as it could be, . . . but it is lively and engrossing. . . . The roaring action is grim, even gruesome, awful, but in its own way magnificent. . . . Perhaps the novel is best described as old-fashioned. It tells, with perfect selection of detail, a straight story of heroic action, but it is not shallow or ingoistic in its approach to the complexities of war and to the characters of the men who survive or die but who act intelligently and bravely." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 28:82 My 15 '68 550w

"Basset's excellent novel combines raw realism and pithy characterization. . . . He achieves a high degree of suspense through his effective use of flashbacks. No less important is his highly credible Thietvanne and its people." J. B. Stankrauff

Library J 93:1651 Ap 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:[3334] S 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p38 My 5 '68 130w

BASTOCK, MARGARET. Courtship; an ethological study. 220p il $6 Aldine pub.

591 Animals—Habits and behavior 67-27325

An "introduction outlines the nature of courtship behavior and the problems it poses. These themes are developed in . . . three parts. . . . The first part presents a selection of descriptions of courtship behavior, drawn from fish, birds, and arthropods, which serves to illustrate ways in which patterns of courtship in different kinds of animals resemble and differ from one another. The second part is about evolutionary aspects of courtship: survival value, evolutionary antecedents, genetics. The third part is about the more immediate causal control of courtship: temporal and sequential patterns in courtship and what they imply or suggest, hormonal mechanisms, neural mechanisms." (Science) Bibliography.

Choice 5:518 Je '68 210w

"Behaviors and displays are described in a terse but nontechnical exposition. . . . This brief book will interest college students and educated laymen." Joseph Bosson

Library J 93:1010 Mr 1 '68 130w

"Neither the descriptions of facts nor the presentations of ideas are beyond the comprehension of the intelligent general reader, yet the book gives a scholarly treatment of its subject . . . [and] should also appeal to scientists whose business is the study of animal behavior. . . . They will find a concise, selective review that is representative of how European ethology has matured in Britain. They will also find clear thinking clearly expressed on topics about which there has been much muddled thinking and muddled writing. . . . Of the three parts, the one about evolutionary aspects is the longest and perhaps the most authoritative. . . . In her preface, Bastock points out that a short book cannot be comprehensive. Perhaps so. But one is surprised at some of the omissions. . . . In the meantime we should be grateful for what she has given us. The prose style may not be the most sparkling . . . and most of the drawing for the illustrations is embarrassingly bad. But this book is thoroughly sound." C. G. Beer

Science 159:1222 Mr 15 '68 900w

BATE, WALTER JACKSON. Coleridge. (Masters of world lit. ser) 244p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

821 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 68-12395

In this critical biography the author, a professor at Harvard, analyzes "Coleridge's works—from The Rime of the Ancient Mariner to his Magnum Opus—... in view of the circumstances surrounding their composition and in light of the spiritual pilgrimage that drove Coleridge in his efforts to reconcile the "dynamic philosophy" of nature with the Christian dualism of God and the created universe." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Bate makes two important biographical contributions. He draws on recent medical research for the terrifying effects of opium withdrawal. And he learns from the autopsy, only now being published, that Coleridge in his last years suffered from hypertensive heart disease. ... In the critical chapters Bate analyzes the three greatest poems with insight, learning and good judgment. He threads his way sure-footedly through the maze of modern interpretations. 'The Rime of the Ancient Mariner' is viewed primarily as a graphic picture of 'the sick soul' trembling 'before the vast unknown.' 'Christabel' becomes an expression of the 'multi-sidedness of evil' ... and 'Kubla Khan' symbolizes 'the hope and precarious achievement of the human imagination.' For many readers, interested mainly in Coleridge's poetry and literary criticism, the section on philosophical and religious thought may seem disproportionately long. At the same time, limits of space prevent much use of the wealth of anecdote which would have given more vividness to the definition of the man." F. E. Flaverty

Book World p8 Je 30 '68 550w

"[The length of this book] was limited by its being a part of a series addressed to the general reading public as well as to scholars. However, the [author] has made a virtue of this limitation by keeping constantly before the reader's mind a vivid and convincing picture of Coleridge's appearance, motives, and habits of thought. ... Bate is always worth reading, and this book is the best and most up-to-date introduction to Coleridge as a person—in many ways preferable to a full-dress biography. Due to its spatial limitations, its treatment of Coleridge's thought and poetry tends to be a bit sketchy though it provides a good introduction to both."

Choice 5:948 O '68 180w

"This highly informative treatment of an enigmatic English Romantic poet-critic-scholar exemplifies W. J. Bate's customary achievement—inclusive criticism tempered by responsible scholarship. Mr. Bate, who was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his biography, John Keats [BRD 1963], admits the difficulties involved in a critical biography of such a many-sided figure as Coleridge, and then expertly proceeds to place all sides of the man and his work in perspective. Condemning narrowly psychological interpretations, Mr. Bate summons psychological approaches and even medical details when they are pertinent and substantiated. Yet the theme of Coleridge's lifelong quest for 'a singleminded purity of doctrine' is always uppermost. ... This book should be purchased for academic and large public library collections." J. R. Willingham

Library J 93:1484 Ap 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by L. C. Knights

N Y Rev of Books 11:25 D 19 '68 4450w

BATES, DAISY. The passing of the aborigines; a lifetime spent among the natives of Australia; with a foreword by Alan Moorehead; and an introd. by Arthur Mee. 2d ed 258p pl $6.50 Praeger

572.994 Australia—Native races 67-12002

First published in 1938 (BRD 1939) this release is unchanged except for Alan Moorehead's brief introduction. Index.

"Similar in some ways to K. Stewart's Pygmies and Dream Giants [BRD 1954], Bates' book is valuable not so much for the anthropological data in it, although they must surely represent some contribution, but for what it says about her own unusual life. Bates was a strong, egocentric, and utterly unique woman, who spent 40 years with the natives of Australia apparently just because she wanted to. She was neither missionary, teacher, nor doctor, but she learned their languages and recorded their customs on odd bits of paper. One has the impression from this book that early in her experiences she saw herself as at the deathbed of a dying race and felt that it would, not be polite or compassionate to leave."

Choice 4:756 S '67 180w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

Pacific Affairs 40:427 fall-winter '67- '68 160w

BATES, KENNETH F. The enamelist. 246p il col il $7.95 World pub.

738.4 Enamel and enameling 67-13833

"In approximately one-third of the book, the [author] deals with methods of instruction, in another third with techniques, and in a final section with applied design and sources of design in nature." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"An irritating book—one third of its pages are wasted on a superficial survey of enameling, trite remarks about design, and praise of flowers. (Bates is also a horticulturist as well as an artist and teacher.) When he writes about the craft of enameling, he is generally clear and interesting. If the reader did not have to make his way through so many injunctions about art which are questionable and so many historical facts which are incorrect, this could have been a useful book. It could have been improved more if the author-artist had not used his own work to illustrate so much of the book. Many of his enamels are not very good. Bates' earlier Enameling: Principles and Practice [BRD 1951] is much more usable."

Choice 5:940 O '68 120w

"Bates, an instructor in design and enameling at the Cleveland Institute of Art for 40 years, has written this book for enameling instructors, designers and advanced hobbyists. ... He has chosen the illustrations carefully to show procedures and examples; he has not included step-by-step instructions. This is a book for the serious enameler and will make an excellent text book; it is not for the beginner nor for those whose attitude is casual. Recommended for all collections in the applied arts." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:3404 O 1 '67 110w

BATES, MARSTON. Gluttons and libertines; human problems of being natural. 244p $5.95 Random house

390 Manners and customs. Food. Sex 66-11978

A professor of zoology at the University of Michigan scans "our shibboleths about food and sex, feeding time and mating habits, insect-eating and cannibalism, incest, alcohol and narcotics, the use of clothing, the pursuit of gentility, human meanness and animal aggressiveness, the problem of being a crackpot, a phony or a square, and what. If anything, can be done about it all. ... [He seeks] to examine preconceived notions of what is natural." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"The main difficulty of the book is that Bates is forced by the nature of his subject to operate on two different planes at once. The book opens ... on a biological plane in which Bates is very much at home, but the momentum of his argument carries him farther and farther away from his professional base. ... In the process, [he] sometimes moves rather casually through terrains that have been more thoroughly explored by specialists in other disciplines ... and does not always warn us that the authorities he is citing are sometimes regarded as controversial in their own professional backyards. But it is a measure of Bates' engaging style and his balanced perspective that complaints from that quarter are likely to be dissolved in the general good humor and intelligence of the book. ... [Readers who] are approaching the subject for the first time will be informed, entertained and highly rewarded for their effort." K. T. Erikson

Am Scholar 38:150 winter '68 1100w

"Bates ... takes a light and delightful look at a serious subject. ... A very good choice for public and academic libraries." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 93:1014 Mr 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Lorus and Margery Milne
Natur Hist 77:69 My '68 700w

"Mr. Bates isn't as irreverent as he believes. He is far too inclined to the uncritical acceptance of the opinions of authorities. . . . Certainly some reference should have been made to dissenting views. Mr. Bates's ideas on cannibalism, incest, aggression and a fair number of other matters are open to . . . objection. However, if the reader will really think along with Marston Bates, and keep his critical faculties well-honed, he will find this a most entertaining, enlarging and rewarding book." Ashley Montagu

N Y Times Bk R p14 F 25 '68 550w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:91A Ja 22 '68 700w

"This is a book for musers. I kept it at my bedside, read a chapter a night, enjoyed every one, and fell asleep musing. . . . It is not really a book about gluttons and libertines . . . although it does have one chapter on gluttony and another on libertinage. Mr. Bates declares his subject to be the diversity of life, adding that 'serious subjects should be treated lightly.' His treatment has a lightness that both illuminates and charms. . . . The book makes a fine case for incest . . . and it describes how the author tried to teach his young son to use four-letter words in describing four-letter phenomena until his wife brought proceedings to a h-t. These and other matters of an unexpected sort are discussed by Mr. Bates with the detachment and discipline of a trained biologist and in the style of one who, by his own confession, 'has long had a not-very-secret desire to be a humorist.' I think he's very funny when he wants to be, and very interesting almost all the time. . . . But what is such a fine book doing with such an ugly jacket, such an ugly binding, and such an ugly and misleading title? It should have been called 'Vive la Différence, or the Spice of Variety.'" Nicholas Samstag

Sat R 51:35 F 17 '68 850w

BATHE, B. W. The great age of sail. See Jobé, J., ed.

BATTESTIN, MARTIN C., ed. Joseph Andrews. See Fielding, H.

BATTISTI, EUGENIO. Cimabue; tr. from the Italian by Robert and Catherine Enggass. 136p il pl col pl $22.50 Pa. state univ. press 759.5 Cimabue, Giovanni 66-25463

The author attempts to explain "Cimabue's reaction to his contemporaries, the influences he felt, and the clerical restraints causing him to revise earlier artistic innovations." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published in Italian in 1963.

"[This book] does not deserve an English edition. . . . It is much too eccentric and superficial to receive serious attention. Inconsistencies between listings in the heavily padded bibliography and the text and catalogue sections, and puerile attempts at 'cultural relations,' are some of the numerous obstacles against recommending [it]. A. Nicholson's earlier compact study of Cimabue [BRD 1932], upon which Battisti seems so often to depend but seldom credits, remains the standard in English."

Choice 4:1371 F '68 100w

"Mr. Battisti has worked with original documents, supplemented by a perusal of all writings about the artist. . . . The translation is a felicitous rendition. Printed in Italy, the book is a well-bound and handsome production. All but the smallest art collections will want this one." R. N. Van Note

Library J 92:4398 D 1 '67 80w

BAUER, ERWIN. My adventures with African animals; phot. by the author. 177p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Norton

591.967 Animals—Africa, East—Juvenile literature. Animals—Habits and behavior—Juvenile literature 68-11384

Based on the photographer-author's experiences on safaris in East Africa, this book tells of his encounters "with Simba, the lion; the nearsighted black rhinoceros; the elusive mountain bushback; the great 100-pound perch of the Nile River; the shy and furtive leopard; the cheetah; . . . wild hyena-dogs . . . and many more. . . . The author also discusses the evolutionary history, habits, and present survival problems of these great wild animal herds." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grade seven and up." (Best Sell)

"The book is interesting and replete with information on the various species that populate the plains and hills of East Africa. In addition to his fine photographs, the author offers young readers some basic information on the ecology of different animals, as well ■ the problems that some of the animals face of extinction through indiscriminate slaughter and hunting."

Best Sell 28:194 Ag 1 '68 80w

"This book is an example of the efforts of a man obviously well-versed in his subject, yet unable to adequately translate his experiences into words. Bauer's text is amateurish and condescending; only those with a limited background in the animals of Africa will find the book at all challenging, this at a time when most librarians are discovering that their juvenile patrons are demanding more advanced informational books. Bauer's knowledge of Africa is shown in the excellent quality of his photographs, which only serve to underline the text's regrettable lack of value." J. L. Buelna

Library J 93:[3311] S 15 '68 110w

BAUER, HANK. Championship baseball. 119p il $5.95 Doubleday

796.357 Baseball—Juvenile literature

68-11770

"Following a general discussion of what makes a good ballplayer, the manager of the Baltimore Orioles presents the fundamental requirements of each position. Supplemented by 52 photographs, the text also covers techniques of infield and outfield play, hitting and running. The concluding chapter emphasizes the most important ingredient in winning a game—teamwork." (Library J) "Grades seven to ten." (Best Sell)

"This is the type of book that will have universal appeal for the young ball player and baseball buff. It is full of practical advice on the various positions and the techniques of hitting and running. The illustrations are apt and bring out the elements of the text, often giving a summary of what has appeared in the text itself by way of caption. With the baseball season now open the book should have a large audience."

Best Sell 28:63 My 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by E. A. Morse

Library J 93:2740 J1 '68 70w [YA]

"This must be considered a generally unsatisfactory treatment . . . It will certainly displease those that demand a modicum of literacy from the printed page. Mr. Bauer's blunt, hell-for-leather prose is inappropriate. More important, there are omissions and inconsistencies . . . [such as] contradictory advice about how many hands a first baseman should use when taking a throw. There is approximately ■ score of books on the same subject in print today, several of which are more comprehensive and authoritative than the present work." N. E. Omelusik

Library J 93:2893 Ag '68 190w

BAUER, RAYMOND A. Advertising in America: the consumer view; a report and interpretation of the American association of advertising agencies' study on the consumer judgment of advertising [by] Raymond A. Bauer and Stephen A. Greyser; in collaboration with Donald L. Kanter and William M. Weilbacher; with the assistance of Alice E. Courtney and Christopher Gale. 473p $9; pa $5 Harvard univ. Division of res.

659.1 Advertising

68-18720

An examination, based on in-home interviews, "of what the American public thinks about advertising as an institution as well as what it thinks about individual advertisements." (Foreword)

"Each of the four parts (Looking at Ads and Advertising; Advertising, the Institution; The Public and Advertisements; Summary and Evaluation) contains its own introduction. Individual chapters are replete with detailed survey findings and end with a summary section. This organization makes the study easily adaptable to the needs and interests of undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate business students at several levels as an overview, for specific findings, or for insights into the meaning of the research. . . . Should be a 'must' reference for advertising and marketing students."

BAUER, R. A.—Continued

Choice 5:133b D '68 170w

"The conclusions reached by the advertising agencies and the Harvard Business School . . . seem remarkably unremarkable. 'It would appear,' says the report heavily, 'that ads which people like better are also more persuasive at least in one context and according to one measure of effectiveness.' Are the scholars or the persuaders responsible for the jargon-laden paragraphs that weigh down the prose?" Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 5 '68 420w

"The consumer view' of advertising certainly does not make for zippy reading. In fact, the effect of this rather sleep-producing volume is that, so far as consumer attitudes are concerned, everything seems pretty much O.K. with advertising in America—there are a few nasty guys around, but not many. Despite its innocuousness, serious students of advertising will probably enjoy rehashing the results of this study. Recommended for large business collections." J. B. Woy

Library J 93:3116 S 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by S. W. Little
Sat R 52:129 Ja 11 '69 80w

BAUM, GREGORY. The credibility of the church today; a reply to Charles Davis. 222p $4.95 Herder & Herder

262 Catholic Church 68-26509

This book was "prodded into existence by Charles Davis, who, having explained [in A Question of Conscience, BRD 1967] why he left the Roman Catholic Church, asked theologians to say why they were remaining in it. . . . [Baum concedes] things about the Church that Davis has observed, but rather than concluding to its non-credibility, he ascribes the problem to the pathologies that afflict all social institutions. . . . [He] uses up one chapter on what was wrong with the traditional via notarum, via historica, and via primatus and then another to develop his own apologetic for Roman Catholicism. . . . In his final chapter he seeks to understand a Church that is still future to us." (America) Index. . .

"Baum doesn't succeed as well as an apologist as he does in sketching the ever-widening landscape of his own attractive ecclesiology. That is what leaves Davis unconvinced; precisely because it is Baum's own ecclesiology it is too original to pass muster at Davis' 'objective criteria' reviewing stand. (See Davis' review in National Catholic Reporter, 6/26). . . . Davis had always done his theology as the Church's man and eventually refused the role. Baum, the theologian, is his own man—liberal, liberating. He will do more for the Church's self-understanding if he continues some of the creative probings he begins in this book." J. C. Haughey

America 119:82 Ag 3 '68 750w

Reviewed by Ellert Frerichs
Canadian Forum 48:171 N '68 1500w

"Father Baum agrees with [Charles Davis] that birth control is a matter of individual conscience, but since his book appeared before the Papal decision on birth control, many of his arguments seem weak: the Open Church, 'the outer-oriented movement,' is almost here. Still this book deserves to be added to libraries owning the Davis book for its author is imbued with a deep and sincere faith, and with charity toward the Church's honest detractors." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:4123 N 1 '68 170w

BAUMANN, HANS. Lion gate and labyrinth; tr. by Stella Humphries. 182p il col pl $4.95; lib bdg $3.99 Pantheon bks.

913.38 Civilization, Mycenaean—Juvenile literature. Crete—Antiquities—Juvenile literature. Evans, Sir Arthur John—Juvenile literature. Schliemann, Heinrich—Juvenile literature 67-20216

"In his first part, 'Schliemann and the World of Homer,' [the author] weaves together summaries of the Homeric epics, the biography and discoveries of the archaeologist Heinrich Schliemann, (particularly those at Troy and Mycenae,) with more recent finds. . . . In his second part, 'Evans and the Kingdom of Minos,' the same is done for the island of Crete, while the final chapters describe the decipherment of the Linear B script and the archaic Greek written in it. . . . [Throughout, Baumann gives] descriptions of the Aegean citadels and palaces, gay wall frescoes and ornate weapons, of the people themselves, their communities and religion." (Book World) Glossary. Chronology. Originally published in German in 1966. "Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:391 Ja 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by H. J. Kantor
Book World p11 Je 23 '68 240w [YA]
Horn Bk 43:761 D '67 150w

"Generously illustrated with color photographs and fine line drawings [this book] is in the tradition of Gods, Graves and Scholars [by K. Marek, BRD 1951] and other popular expositions of archaeology. . . . The vivid style of writing should catch and hold readers' attention. A slight tendency to romanticize and fictionalize, particularly in the account of Schliemann's life, is more than outweighed by the wealth of information included." E. M. Crawford

Library J 93:877 F 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 130w [YA]

"A beautifully produced and entertainingly written account. . . . The book is full of fascinating details about [Schliemann and Evans] and their methods of work and some of the difficulties they encountered as they pursued their obsessions. This is well-trodden ground but there can be few books for young readers on the subject which answer so many of the incidental questions usually ignored by scholarly authors. The legends on which Schliemann based his conviction that he would find Troy and the practical methods by which he set about achieving his ambition are dealt with equally fully. This is not a cheap book, but it offers value for money. A word of praise, too, for Stella Humphries's highly readable translation." TLS p1162 N 30 '67 120w [YA]

BAUMHART, RAYMOND. An honest profit; what businessmen say about ethics in business. 248p $5.95 Holt

174 Business ethics 67-12907

A survey of business ethics as seen by business executives themselves. Data was compiled from a cross section of 1,800 businessmen who participated either by completing questionnaires or in interviews. Index.

"Just about everybody ought to read this excellent book. Nonbusiness people, because of the image they hold of businessmen. . . . Religious people . . . because of two key findings: 'Businessmen not affiliated with a church or synagogue have attitudes as ethical as those of church-affiliated managers.' 'Although the churches and synagogues have provided some objective standards for business behavior, [clergyman] on the whole have failed to provide competent counseling for many current business problems.' . . . [Fr. Baumhart writes] sober facts and moral analyses with clarity, objectivity and good humor. . . . [The] book is a fascinating synthesis of information, not just data; of useful conclusions, counsel and precepts, as well as challenging ideas." F. C. and J. M. Dyer

America 119:190 S 14 '68 650w

"We know far too little about the ethical attitudes of American businessmen, even though these attitudes help make the world go 'round—and in combination with certain military schemes could help make it stop. . . . [Fr. Baumhart] proves that the purported gap between clergy-theologians and businessmen is real."

Christian Century 84:996 Ag 7 '68 70w

"Although Father Baumhart offers no single solution to the problem of unethical business practices, his work offers some rare insights into business ethics. He identifies those jobs and industries most plagued with unethical practices, and uses many true experiences to define attitudes. The book is recommended for business executives, intellectuals, social studies scholars, and professors of business." M. P. Jaquish

Library J 93:2651 J1 '68 100w

BAUR-HEINHOLD, MARGARETE. The baroque theatre; a cultural history of the 17th and 18th centuries; phot. by Heiga Schmidt-Glassner [tr. by Mary Whittall]. 292p $22 McGraw

792 Theater—History 67-24946

An "art historian who lives in Munich . . . gives a large portion of her book to extant theater architecture and structures that have since been destroyed or altered completely. She also interprets the development of the contemporary theater as a visual and living spectacle: tragicomedy and farce, classic comedy, fanciful ballets, extravagant operas, costumes and stage scenery, music, playbills, actors, designers, and directors." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published entitled Theater des Barock.

"Textually and pictorially, [this] is a mine of authentic material on royal court ceremonies, public marketplace performances, song-and-dance street festivals, magic and illusionistic acts, and high-flown dramatic spectaculars. The book is enhanced by copious research notes, sources of both text and illustrations, and Veronika Bauer's 'Chronological Tables of Drama and Opera.' [The] translation from the German should prove irresistible to theater buffs, professionals and librarians alike. The handsome color plates and black-and-white photographs are a joy to behold." L. A. Rachow

Library J 93:1158 Mr 15 '68 200w

"Most of the photographs are by . . . one of the best three architectural photographers in Germany. . . . Since the approach is so largely a visual one, some omissions seem strange. . . . The theatres proper include Vicenza, the recently restored Sabbioneta, the Teatro Farnese at Parma, Caserta, La Fenice, the Teatro Comunale at Bologna, the Opera House at Versailles; and the neo-classic grandeur of the Theatre at Bordeaux. . . . Gripsholm and Drottningholm, the Markgräfliches Opernhaus at Bayreuth and the Cuvillies Theatre in Munich; these are all lavishly treated. A number of pieces of religious and secular sculpture and porcelain are reproduced."

TLS p76 Ja 25 '68 850w

BAUS, HERBERT M. Politics battle plan [by] Herbert M. Baus and William B. Ross. 399p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

329 Politics, Practical. Presidents—U.S.—Election 68-11262

Owners and managers of a firm specializing in campaign management, the authors attempt to demonstrate that "winning requires desire for power, access to high finance, errorless strategy, valid research, vigorous volunteers, determined campaign professionals, propaganda, exposure and communication, mostly TV. . . . Most of the material comes from . . . recent campaigns for national, state, and local offices in California and Los Angeles county." (Library J) Index.

"[This] is in the great American tradition of the how-to-book. If you want to get elected, here is the complete list of nuts and bolts you will require, plus easy-to-follow assembly instructions. . . . On planning and running a campaign, Baus and Ross are limpidly explicit on every detail, from selecting the honorary chairman . . . and specifying his duties . . . to 'Headquarters Security'. . . . Occasionally the prose becomes smoke-filled . . . and there are some mistakes of fact . . . but the unhappiest thing about Politics Battle Plan is that the instructions are just too good." Mark Strage

Book World p3 Ap 21 '68 600w

Reviewed by R. L. Strout
Christian Science Monitor p9 Jl 16 '68 700w

"[The authors] have stuffed this long essay with facts and incidents to substantiate or bolster the arguments they present. There is some contradiction and much unedited repetition. Like the Bible, there is a quotation to rationalize just about any method or objective. . . . The fast-moving style and myriad facts may fascinate the general reader. The ambitious politician on his way to the forum may relish it, too, if he reads the correct chapters." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:558 F 1 '68 160w

"[This] is such a chaotic, overstuffed compilation of yarn-spinning that it is, in a way, an excellent introduction to campaign politics. Thousands of anecdotes, scraps of experience, dribbles of philosophizing, dizzying whirls of cause and effect are brought together here to make, consciously or not, the very sort of atmosphere that one will often find in the immediate vicinity of an important candidate at the height of his ordeal. . . . Some of [the authors'] explanations of old campaigns are irritatingly trivial. . . . Oversimplification is a basic brick of this book." Robert Sherrill

N Y Times Bk R p14 My 26 '68 600w

"Messrs. Baus and Ross are well known to California politicians. Among their clients have been Richard M. Nixon, in the 1960 primary and general election in California, and Barry Goldwater during his California primary campaign [in 1964]. . . . Although Politics Battle Plan reveals little not known to top politicians, it is a source of intriguing information to others. Through the book march the campaigns of Reagan, Brown, Rockefeller, the Kennedys, Johnson, and a host of less well-known politicians. Those trying to guess what kind Nixon will wage for the convention nomination will here find a goodly number of clues." L. L. L. Golden

Sat R 51:32 Ap 6 '68 450w

BAWDEN, NINA. The grain of truth. 206p $4.95 Harper

68-28222

"Emma and Henry Lingard and Holly and Felix Craven are neighbors, old friends. . . . Each thinks he understands the other well; better, perhaps, than he understands himself. All except Emma. She cries for help out of her private nightmares, but no one listens. Her recourse is a fantasy life written out in unsent letters. . . . [Then a] series of crises shatters the tenuous balance of Emma's life and the routine of their days." (Publisher's note)

"[This] cameo study of two couples working out their inter- and intrapersonal relationships in a rather ordinary setting fraught with shades of tragedy is brilliant. Not as intense as in Albee, nevertheless the involvement of [the characters] deepens as the novel moves on until the reader is quite caught up." Anne Keehan

Best Sell 28:230 S 15 '68 440w

"[The author] is a novelist whose gifts and intelligence always appear to be larger than the story she finally manages to tell. Here, line by line she is a pleasure to read, and her theme of childhood betrayal leading to adult corruption is an important one. But in [this story she] reproduces too faithfully the trivia of English life. Its suffocating ordinariness so paralyzes Emma that she cannot even exercise the restlessness which might have saved her, and the book. . . . The early pages and closing lines suggest what this book might have been. . . . [These are the] fragments of the good novel Miss Bawden didn't write, this time." Lucy Rosenthal

Book World p10 S 1 '68 320w

Reviewed by Barbara Pfrogner
Library J 93:3797 O 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by John Greenya
N Y Times Bk R p54 O 20 '68 600w

"[This] is smoothly and skillfully written but lacks vigor and substance. . . . Several characters comment on the unlikeliness of the friendship between Emma and Holly, and the reader shares their surprise. For Emma with her exaggerated guilts and self-blame is a ninny and a bore. Holly, far less important to the book, is a much livelier and more amusing personality. Miss Bawden tailors her story neatly, but it seems far removed from reality. There may be a grain of truth in all this, but not much more." Elizabeth Easton

Sat R 51:33 O 12 '68 490w

TLS p613 Je 13 '68 170w

BAWLY, DAN, jt. auth. The sandstorm. See Kimche, D.

BAXT, GEORGE. A parade of cockeyed creatures; or, Did someone murder our wandering boy? 209p $4.50 Random house

67-22672

"His unloved wife and son recently dead in a car crash, Max Van Larsen of the Missing Persons Bureau sets off on the trail of seventeen-year-old Tippy Blaney. This is where the cock-eyed creatures begin their parade, led by a teenage necrophile who lives at the local morgue, and including a couple of heroin addicts, a narcissistic sculptor with a yen for little girls, a Jewish actress with an ego only slightly smaller than her vast self, and considerate, comfortable Sylvia Plotkin, [Tippy's teacher]." (TLS)

BAXT, GEORGE—Continued

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 92:2944 S 1 '67 80w

Reviewed by David Haworth
New Statesman 76:262 Ag 30 '68 140w

"[In the past year and a half, the author] has published three novels, and become the very paradigm by which one measures the far-out reach of other novelists of the grotesque, the macabre, the absurd in crime. . . . Those who were revolted by early Baxt should try this new one. They will find the same unpredictably absurd invention, the same brilliant techniques in dialogue and narrative (plus some virtuoso cross-cutting), this time devoted to a warm and loving portrayal of people in all their improbable variety. [There is an] elaborately and shrewdly constructed plot. . . . If you have never suspected that the crime novel of the absurd could have charm, try this one." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p50 S 24 '67 260w

"[This] jokey novel is a little trite, sometimes funny, compulsive in the sense that one is reluctant to miss the punch-line in spite of the suspicion that the story has been told before. It contains the attributes of several kinds of joke, in fact—the sick, the slapstick, the schmaltzy—together with some pretty disastrous attempts to play it straight. . . . Van Larsen is emotionally involved with Sylvia and with the image of Tippy, affording them the love and concern he withheld from his own wife and son. This leads to a good deal of italicized soul-searching before the rather corny pay-off arrives and justice is seen to be done."

TLS p1069 S 26 '68 250w

BAYH, BIRCH. One heartbeat away: presidential disability and succession. 372p il $7.50
Bobbs

353.03 Presidents—U.S.—Succession. U.S.
Constitution—Amendments 68-28241

An account of the passage of the twenty-fifth amendment to the United States Constitution, which provides for Presidential or Vice Presidential succession procedures in case of death or disability. Index.

Reviewed by Paul Kiniery
Best Sell 28:223 S 1 '68 490w

Christian Century 85:945 Jl 24 '68 30w

"[Written by the] chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee's constitutional amendments subcommittee, and sponsor of the measure, [this] is a precise, detailed account of the strategy, the intricate negotiations, and the co-operation required to gain committee consideration, Presidential endorsement, Congressional passage, and State ratification. Apart from its substantial contribution to the history of constitutional development, this work gives an excellent insight into the workings of Congress. It is a valuable addition to the literature of the Constitution." H. M. Burns

Library J 93:2883 Ag '68 120w

"Read as a political science textbook, students will probably find the page after page of detail a valuable legislative history. General readers will find it dull, despite the significance of the issue." Mitchel Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p24 N 3 '68 230w

BAYITCH, S. A. Latin America and the Caribbean: a bibliographical guide to works in English. (Miami Univ. School of Law, Inter-American legal studies, v10). 943p $30 Oceana; Univ. of Miami press

016.918 Latin America—Bibliography 67-28900

This enlarged edition of the 1961 version entitled "Latin America, a Bibliographical Guide to Economy, History, Law, Politics, and Society, is a selective, unannotated bibliography of over 32,000 references to books and articles in English dealing with some aspect of the social sciences of Latin America and the Caribbean. . . . [It] is composed of six parts: Bibliographies and Reference Works; General Information; Fundamentals and Backgrounds; Guide by Subjects; Guide by Countries; The Caribbean. . . . The citations under each topic refer to journals, books, chapters in books, and documents." (Booklist and SBB) Index.

"Since parts 1-3 are contained in 27 pages, the bulk of the guide is devoted to entries arranged by subject or by country. . . . [This] edition is a greatly enlarged version of its predecessor . . . including not only additional references on the same topics but also the introduction of new subjects, notably foreign affairs, international law, urbanism, and population. Regional coverage has been extended to cover the non-Hispanic Caribbean, and Central America is treated separately. . . . [There are] some inaccuracies. . . . Format is good, with clear headings and legible print. Binding will withstand any foreseeable use of the volume. . . . Since the present edition adds new references on all topics and since the coverage has been expanded to include new subjects and wider regional coverage, libraries finding the 1961 edition useful will want to add the 1967 edition. The 1961 edition should be retained for its introductory material which interprets the arrangement and abbreviations used in the 1967 edition."

Booklist and S B B 65:73 S 15 '68 1150w

"A very valuable guide to material in English on the two geographical areas, with emphasis on economic, political, and legal matters. Persons interested in the arts will have to look elsewhere—to the Handbook of Latin American Studies [BRD 1937], for example. . . . [The book's] scope is well illustrated in the section on Cuba which is broken down under such headings as the invasion of 1961 and the missile crisis. [The] book deserves a prominent place on the reference shelf of subject collections in college, large public, and university libraries."

J. A. Boromé
Library J 93:1612 Ap 15 '68 190w

BAYNE-JARDINE, COLIN CHARLES. Mussolini and Italy; foreword by William J. Jacobs. 120p il maps $4.50; lib bdg $4.11 McGraw

945.091 Mussolini, Benito—Juvenile literature. Italy—History—1914-1946—Juvenile literature 68-15464

This, the author's first book, "follows the career of the Fascist dictator from his rise to power following World War I until his death at the hands of partisans after the fall of Italy to the Allies [in World War II. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.] Grade eight and up." (Best Sell)

"This short and interesting volume . . . [has] illustrations pertinent enough to hold the attention of young readers. With the passage of twenty years since World War II it is somewhat necessary for young people to be introduced to the man who ruled the fortunes of Italy for so many years."

Best Sell 28:111 Je 1 '68 90w

"A combination of history and biography, this book does justice to neither with its uneven, rather pedantic style and hard-to-follow chronology. In attempting to cover a great deal of material in too few pages, the author has omitted the background necessary for young readers to interpret the events of the period. A good juvenile history of 20th-Century Italy is needed, but this book is not it, and, for biographical treatment of Mussolini, Jules Archer's Twentieth Century Caesar: Benito Mussolini [BRD 1964] is a better choice at this age level." Frances Fleming

Library J 93:2544 Je 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by David Cort
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p26 My 5 '68 80w

BAYNES, JOHN. Morale: a study of men and courage; the Second Scottish rifles at the battle of Neuve Chapelle, 1915. 286p il maps $8.50 Praeger

355.1 Morale. Great Britain. Army. Cameronians (Scottish Rifles) 2nd Battalion. Great Britain. Army—Military life 67-26129

"The author is a professional military officer in the British Army, currently serving in the . . . regiment whose World War I experience provides the subject of this book. . . . Major Baynes seeks to explain the regiment's performance in the Battle of Neuve Chapelle [when the 2nd Battalion] . . . went 'over the top' some 900 strong, and—six days later—marched back with 150 survivors commanded by its sole remaining officer, a second lieutenant. . . . [The battalion was] able to return to the line as a functioning unit. Major Baynes' analysis of why these men performed the way they did is based on interviews with known survivors, and on examination of . . . books, reports, and private papers dealing with the battle." (Am Soc R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. C. Moskos
Am Soc R 33:490 Je '68 750w

Reviewed by A. S. Birkos
Library J 93:3132 S 15 '68 100w

"[Major Baynes] is concerned with a definition of morale, and an analysis of the factors which create and sustain it, in a military unit in combat. . . . [He] has chosen to make a close sociological study of one unit in the British Army, trained before 1914. . . . It might be thought that in his choice of a unit for a survey of this kind, the author has begged, or at least evaded, several questions. . . . [He] labours, outside his own chosen field, under some curious historical delusions. . . . [He asks,] with an almost childish air of innocence, 'why did the workers in the industrial centre not show resentment at their conditions of employment?' . . . A strange question to ask of the period from 1889 to 1913, under the skin one of the most turbulent in our history. . . . With all its limitations and contradictions, Major Baynes's exhaustive study is of considerable value in a field which few have even attempted to evaluate and in particular should remove a number of misconceptions and prejudices about Army training. Of course, with social development, not all his instances or conclusions remain relevant. But the main principles are immovable."

TLS p290 Ap 6 '67 2100w

BAZIN, ANDRÉ. What is cinema? essays sel. and tr. by Hugh Gray. 183p $5.75 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Moving pictures 67-18899

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1401 F '68 180w

TLS p17 Ja 4 '68 350w

Yale R 58:xxx O '68 950w

BAZIN, GERMAIN. The museum age; tr. from the French by Jane van Nuis Cahill. 302p 92il 49col il $25 Univ. bks.

708 Art—Galleries and museums. Collectors and collecting 67-26914

The author "traces the accumulation of art treasures by the wealthy and powerful Greeks, Romans, Italians, French, Russians, and English. . . . Most of the book . . . is on European collections. However, [some American collections are considered]." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Hans Huth
Art Bul 50:293 S '68 850w

Choice 5:186 Ap '68 180w

Economist 229:xxi N 9 '68 340w

"This is a remarkable book. Germain Bazin, curator at the Louvre, . . . here exercises his talents, for detailed exposition and learned analysis. . . . [He] presents his facts and argues his prejudices well. Because of its exhaustive detail, careful documentation, and outstanding reproductions, this volume is strongly recommended for academic, art history, and museology collections." Dolores McCollm

Library J 93:981 Mr 1 '68 150w

"Encased in a book which is as sumptuous as most museums, Germain Bazin has given us a text which is a compendium of the world's knowledge of museums. Having gathered this knowledge from many sources, M. Bazin has woven it into an enormously informative text which covers not only the Western world from classical Greece to the present, but also investigates the museum practices of the East. Faced with the richness of the information and the richness of the illustrations, one is delighted with the acuity displayed in the selection of these particular illustrations and these particular facts."

Va Q R 44:xxxx spring '68 150w

BEA, AUGUSTIN. Peace among Christians, [by] Augustin Cardinal Bea and Willem A. Visser't Hooft; tr. by Judith Moses. 236p $4.95 Assn. press

262 Christian unity 67-25877

This book consists of "interviews, articles, addresses, and reports of Cardinal Bea, president of the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity, and of Dr. Visser't Hooft, recently retired secretary of the World Council of Churches.

Cardinal Bea explains some of the basic principles of ecumenism in the light of the Vatican Council. Dr. Visser't Hooft, in his reports to the World Council of Churches from 1960 to 1966, outlines much of the history of the ecumenical movement and treats of current problems and progress." (Library J) Index of names.

"In his contributions to this volume, Cardinal Bea reviews the ecumenical importance of conciliar breakthroughs on such subjects as the laity, the episcopate, religious liberty and secular involvement. He also sets down the main themes of the Decree on Ecumenism. The open, fraternal spirit shown toward the observers at Vatican II is communicated in his warm talk to them at the close of the Council.

. . . In a perceptive concluding essay, Visser't Hooft explores the pros and cons of ecclesial pluralism. The wisdom and diplomacy of Bea and Visser't Hooft are evident in all their selections. These writings and talks speak eloquently of the World Council of Churches' remarkable accomplishments and of the modern marvel of Catholic involvement. But do the pace and approach of these two master minds of Protestant-Catholic relations suit the ecumenical problematic of the present and future? It is Eugene Carson Blake, in his introductory remarks, who highlights the problematic in ecumenism for tomorrow." E. C. Bianchi

America 118:127 Ja 17 '68 550w

"This may well be the most important book ever written about ecumenism, and it should become resource material for ecumenical classes in college. . . . It is narrated by ecumenical makers themselves and, as a result, authenticity, reliability, objectivity, precision, and certitude of related material can be accepted with a complete confidence by any sophisticated reader. This book should be in every library and should be read by all theologians and historians as well."

Choice 5:1144 N '68 170w

"An excellent collection which informed laymen will find worthwhile. . . . [Dr. Visser't Hooft's] final essay, 'Pluralism—Temptation or Opportunity,' is a particularly enlightening study of the current position of Christian churches in relation to each other and towards the secular world. For scholarly and informed readers." W. C. Heiser

Library J 92:2928 S 1 '67 140w

BEAGLE, PETER S. The last unicorn. 218p $4.95 Viking

68-16075

In this novel, a unicorn searches for others of her kind. "Enroute she is captured by members of Mommy Fortuna's Midnight Carnival, and then freed by a melancholy magician named Schmendrick. She and the magician, who joins her in her search for King Haggard and the Red Bull, encounter a fifth-rate Robin Hood, Captain Cully, and add to their party one of his followers, Molly Grue, who has recognized the unicorn. . . . When the unicorn is attacked by the Red Bull, Schmendrick . . . saves her by giving her a human form. Prince Lir falls in love with her in this form, and there are numerous complications before the unicorn frees all the other unicorns from the Red Bull." (Sat R)

Reviewed by W. H. Archer

Best Sell 23:1 Ap 1 '68 500w

"Will be added to the list of hippy-admired literature, along with Tolkien, Peake and Heinlein; but it will be received as a 'second novel'—disappointing after the splendid first one, A Fine and Private Place [BRD 1960. This novel] fulfills the vogue of questing literature, enriched with 'lore,' arcane, occult, new-minted. It may refresh palates jaded by pornography and paradox. Certainly Beagle's sense of humor is subversive to the genre. . . . [However, fanciful figures] charming as they may be, are upsetting and distracting when they are switched in with contemporary, medieval and prehistoric references. . . . [The book] is neither quite fairy tale, myth, dream or nightmare. But Beagle is much too original and gifted to be contained by familiar forms." Norman Stein

Book World p13 Ap 7 '68 280w

Christian Science Monitor p8 My 1 '68 360w

Reviewed by Harold Jaffe

Commonweal 88:446 Je 28 '68 800w

BEAGLE, P. S.—Continued

"Mr. Beagle lacks Tolkien's skill in describing nature and infusing it with a love and realism of its own. The characters show little development, depth, or excitement, but are often mere devices for Mr. Beagle's purpose, which appears to be the retelling of the quest theme. The best part of this book is a vignette in the beginning involving a butterfly, in which the writer shows a real ability to combine language and ideas. From this point the book deteriorates." F. M. Lauritsen

Library J 93:771 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:2131 My 15 '68 200w [YA]

Reviewed by Benedict Kiely

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 24 '68 1000w

"[This] is a fable, of course, as well ■ a fantasy. The unicorn is a symbol of the imagination, and King Haggard's country is an image of a world in which the imagination has been destroyed, a wasteland. . . . Mommy Fortuna's Midnight Carnival, which raises profound questions about illusion and reality, is a place most of us have visited in our dreams. Further interpretations are possible, but to me the fantasy is what counts. . . . The book is rich not only in comic bits but also in passages of uncommon beauty. Beagle is a true magician with words, a master of prose and a deft practitioner in verse. He has been compared, not unreasonably, with Lewis Carroll and J. R. R. Tolkien, but he stands squarely and triumphantly on his own feet." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:21 Mr 30 '68 650w

Va Q R 44:xcvii summer '68 160w

BEALS, CARLETON. The great revolt and its leaders; the history of popular American uprisings in the 1890's. 367p $6.50 Abelard-Schuman

973.8 U.S.—History—1865-1898. U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—Economic conditions 68-16745

"A study of farmers' revolts from [the founding of the] Grange to Bryan's first campaign." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Despite the subtitle, Beals . . . is nostalgically retelling the tale of a 'farmer class caught in the end squeeze of a closed frontier and a heartless transportation monopoly.' [His book] does not penetrate deeply, [and] has little apparent logic to organization except as a portrait gallery of agrarian leaders, thus somewhat covering the same ground as [D.] Kramer's Wild Jackasses. . . . Although rich in contemporary quotations, the omission of citations makes it difficult to use them. A 'selected reading list' in lieu of a bibliography and some carelessness of detail such as having Greeley convert to the Single Tax seven years after he died further impede usefulness. Style is colorful, lively, but given to hyperbole. General readers will enjoy it; college libraries might add it to collections to supplement standard works."

Choice 5:860 S '68 170w

"No period in recent years has received more attention than the era of the Populists, the 1890's. After all they were such an interesting lot, full of antics, radical notions, and imagery that produced an unceasing folklore. . . . It is a tribute to Carleton Beals, author of many historical and biographical works, that in spite of the well-packed historiographical ground, he has provided us with a well-written and interpretive analysis of this period. . . . The sharply delineated portraits of Jerry Simpson, Mary Lease and Ignatius Donnelly will linger long in most readers' minds." G. M. Gressley

Library J 93:1894 My 1 '68 270w

BEAN, LEE L., Jr. auth. A decade later: a follow-up of Social class and mental illness. See Myers, J. K.

BEARDMORE, GEORGE. Charlie Pocock and the princess [Eng title: Charlie Pocock's Indian bride]. 191p $4.50 Viking

67-26081

The hero of this novel "collects weekly rents in the slums of the London docks. He also collects problems: namely, Devi, a Hindu orphan . . . [who] fancies herself a dispossessed princess. Charlie marries her in a Hindu ceremony to save her from prostitution, and takes her to live with him, but not as a wife. He becomes a tour escort in order to send Devi to a fashionable school. After her graduation, Devi becomes an Italian movie star and whisks in and out of Charlie's life at her convenience." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:301 N 1 '67 190w

"Gentle humor and deft characterization make an appealing story out of what could have been a sordid tale." M. R. Kohn

Library J 92:3054 S 15 '67 140w

"Beardmore has invented a roster of characters that would have delighted Charles Dickens. . . . [He] is an accomplished stylist; he assembles a collection of Limehouse vignettes that catch the eye and strike the ear. . . . [But he] loses his grip on his protagonists, once they are off the drawing board. Before long Charlie and Devi vanish into identities whose motivation is inscrutable. A pity because the atmosphere created here makes one wish it were more habitable." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p67 O 22 '67 130w

"[The plot is] absurd and unbelievable, and that's the trouble with G. Beardmore's novel. Too bad, because he has a lot going for him, including an important sense of style and pace. His early scenes in London's East End sound authentic and shuddery; his portrait of Charlie's sister Agnes is filled with understanding and warmth. Mr. Beardmore knows them, and Charlie, the many-angled good guy with the big heart and the little tricks, he knows too. But Devi the devious he does not know, and because she is central to the book it is a fatal ignorance. Verdict: unstable, sympathetic, unlikely to rise." Margaret Parton

Sat R 50:57 N 11 '67 300w

BEARDSLEY, AUBREY. Aubrey Beardsley [prints and drawings; text by] Brian Reade; introd. by John Rothenstein. (A Studio bk) 372p 502il $16.95 Viking

741.9

67-9578

This book consists of a collection "of the graphic work of the . . . young English artist who died in 1897 at the age of twenty-five. Besides the reproductions of his work, there is an introduction by [a former director of the Tate gallery and biographical and analytical material by [the author,] assistant keeper of the Victoria and Albert Museum, who was responsible for the Beardsley exhibition in London in 1966 and who brought it to the Gallery of Modern Art [in New York City] early this year." (Harper)

"The splendor of this volume is a tribute to Beardsley's own elegance. . . . For one thing, it embraces 'all the most important' works, including the rarely reproduced early caricatures along with the full Lysistrata series in its bold and elaborate phallic jocularity. For another, we must constantly turn to Reade's highly informative critical notes on each of the plates—notes which are a text in themselves showing how deeply this editor has studied, for example, the Morte Darthur items. . . . The prefatory essay is by every odd the best definition to date of Beardsley's 'audacious' performance. . . . his idealism, his seduction, and his macabre overtones. . . . [Reade] reveals here in his summary essay some of the veiled circumstances of Aubrey's relations with his sister Mabel and their mother. . . . Yet Reade is not one to exploit scandal, for he is devoted to Beardsley's measured and immaculate art, not to pathology, and thus wisely concludes that 'if anything of a homosexual ideal goes into Beardsley's life, it seems probably it was cancelled by irony, and again irony—the very tension of his art.'" Wylie Sypher

Book World p4 D 10 '67 750w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 235:127 D '67 90w

"[Reade] writes a turgid but helpful summary of Beardsley's life and art, pointing out that this now very fashionable enfant terrible of the Yellow Book era . . . was more than a decadent illustrator of symbolist literature. The major portion of this heavyweight book is, as it should be, taken up with Beardsley's work itself—whiplash frontispieces, decorations and illustrations ranging from Tristan through Wilde's Salome to the polymorphous perversity of his notorious illustrations for Lysistrata. Lovers of line and plastic inventiveness will delight in this book, but it is not for puritans or their brothers, the prurient." John Perrault

Nation 205:697 D 25 '67 140w

"The trouble is that the book is too big for its subject. . . . The author has abandoned selectivity for all-inclusiveness, and the result is a plethora of drawings that strive ■ hard for the rococo, the allusive, and the vaguely erotic that they occasionally verge on the grotesque, while the really effective pieces—and there are many of them—are lost in the welter."

New Yorker 43:72 D 23 '67 150w
 TLS p651 Je 20 '68 600w

BEATTIE, JOHN M. The English court in the reign of George I. 306p $9.50 Cambridge

942.07 Courts and courtiers. Great Britain—Politics and government [67-10776]

In the introduction (chapter I) Beattie "notes that early separation of household and the departments of central government had not deprived the court of social and political importance. That of George I was the focal point of administration and society, as well as the most obvious source of patronage. . . . The department of the household, its finances, and the recruitment, tenure, and value of offices in it, are discussed in Part I. This provides the essential basis as well as the explanation for the author's conclusions. Part II deals with the public image and character of the court. An appendix to Chapter VII shows the size of the court group in Parliament; another, to Chapter VIII, lists offices in the reign of George I." (Am Hist R) Bibliography, Index.

"Mr. Beattie has done all students of eighteenth-century England a great service: he has made a valuable contribution to the lamentably rare literature about administration by greatly clarifying the role of the first Hanoverian king, and, thereby, he has illuminated the history of the monarchy. The bibliography reveals both the scarcity of available secondary monographs and the wealth of manuscript material utilized in this book, which is the scholarly result of very extensive research directed by an imaginative and comprehensive understanding of the general context and significance of the subject." Caroline Robbins

Am Hist R 73:1150 Ap '68 550w

"[The royal household] still wielded remarkable influence over the working of government in the 18th century, most obviously in the distribution of patronage. This study is a major contribution to the history of Hanoverian England. . . . It throws much useful light on the interaction of court, ministers, and Parliament and the early stages of the growth of responsible government. . . . [and] is a model of exhaustive scholarship and analytical skill. The careful documentation and remarkably complete bibliography provide easy access to the evidence underlying the argument and make the book indispensable to every serious student of the period."

Choice 5:395 My '68 120w

"[The book is] written in an unvarnished, conversational style. The greater part . . . is devoted to a detailed survey—not without glances back to Tudor times and forward to the age of reform—of the extraordinary convolutions of the court itself; but it concludes with two detached studies showing how this analysis can fruitfully be applied to the study of politics. These concern the use that was made of court patronage in parliamentary politics, and the use of the social influence of the court as a political weapon. . . . If one criticism of Mr. Beattie's conclusions may be ventured it is that he perhaps underestimates the political significance of court office."

TLS p1256 D 28 '67 1100w

BEATTY, JOHN. Witch dog [by] John and Patricia Beatty. 254p $3.50 Morrow

Dogs—Stories 68-11213

The hero of this novel is "Boye, a large white poodle [who] belonged to Prince Rupert, a nephew of King Charles I. When the English Civil War broke out, both dog and master earned reputations as enemies to be feared and the nicknames Witch Dog and the Devil. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:63 My 1 '68 80w

"As the authors say, 'the lives of the historical persons who appear as characters in this book are fascinating,' and quite unfamiliar to most young Americans. Prince Rupert is fine material for a hero, and boys will be interested in the accurate details of the battles. Young Hugh provides the treachery, for his jealousy of the dog, Boye, is greater than what he considers his love for his master. He sides with an unattractive Roundhead to bring about the dog's death, and ends up being killed himself, fleeing discovery of his disloyalty. Boy and dog die in the same battle, and Rupert never knows that he has been betrayed." Madeline L'Engle

Book World p35 (children's issue) My 5 '68 140w

Horn Bk 44:328 Je '68 160w

"Though the book may appeal to some because of its unusual approach, the writing is only average. The historical background is poorly integrated with the dog story, and the narrative is slow-moving and sentimental." Terry Myers

Library J 93:1807 Ap 15 '68 80w

"Historically, Boye's part in the bitter English Civil War is too meager to support a lengthy narrative centered on the creature. The point of view shifts confusingly—through Boye's eyes, at other times through Rupert's. The effect is to suggest the authors couldn't make up their minds who the hero was, man or dog. And the effort to keep the dog center stage leads to awkward and distasteful anthropomorphisms like 'Boye found Worcester an interesting place.' Or 'Boye did not know it, of course, but the battle had been truly won by Rupert's men.'" Robert Ostermann

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ap 7 '68 190w

BEATTY, PATRICIA, jt. auth. Witch dog. See Beatty, J.

BEAUFRE, ANDRÉ. 1940: the fall of France; tr. from the French by Desmond Flower; with a pref. by Sir Basil Liddell Hart. 215p maps $5.95 Knopf

944.081 France—History—1914-1940. World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives. World War, 1939-1945—France 68-70834

This analysis of the reasons for the French defeat in 1940 is written by the French general "in the form of an autobiography from his teen-aged reminiscences of World War I, through the French military academy at St. Cyr, his service in Algeria, and later his assignments to the French general staff and to the British-French military mission sent to the Soviet Union in the summer of 1939 to obtain the cooperation of Stalin and the Red army in opposing Hitler." (Library J) Originally published in French as Le Drame de 1940.

"This book is hardly an analytical or dispassionate account of the military collapse of France in 1940, but is a wandering and uneven autobiographical essay upon the reasons for that defeat. In short, it is a highly personal memoir by a politically conservative military idealist who was unusually aware of the shortcomings of his superiors and was well placed to observe them. . . . Basically, there is nothing new here; only a brief section is devoted to the actual events of 1940, and the theme—the failure of the French military to do anything innovative, fresh, and daring during the interwar years—is well known. . . . Valuable as a memoir and for its personal account of the Franco-British negotiations with the Soviets in the crucial summer of 1939. Should be added to any good collection of French history. Translation fair."

Choice 5:853 S '68 200w

"General Beaufre is bluntly frank. The inadequacies of British and French diplomacy in obtaining Russian support and French military leadership in the person of General Gamelin are tasked by this man who was in a position to observe both at close range. His narrative and comments have the convincing ring of fact and do much to explain France's unexpectedly poor showing in the 1940 war in the west. Some American readers may take exception to his admiration of General DeGaulle, and to his criticism of 'haphazard and useless' United States Army Air Force raids on France during the period of the German occupation in World War II. . . . [His] occasionally patronizing manner and sometimes florid style, however, should not be allowed to detract from one of the more penetrating insights into that fateful period." R. M. Kennedy

Library J 93:983 Mr 1 '68 300w

"It comes as no surprise to find the irony and bitterness with which General Beaufre writes of some of his fellow-countrymen between the two world wars. . . . The book is partly autobiographical and partly analytical. General Beaufre has acquired a well-deserved reputation as a strategic theorist with a somewhat abstract approach to defence problems. He has not previously written so personal an account of the nature of war. By abandoning at last the almost ascetic self-restraint he formerly imposed on himself in the interests of scientific precision, he has written a penetrating and moving analysis of the calamity of 1940 which could hardly be bettered. . . . [He] illustrates very cogently from his own experience the causes and symptoms of decay. . . . The details of the Anglo-French-Soviet discussions, which ended on August 24, 1939, are . . . fairly well known. But this is the first personal account of a participant to be published, and it is brilliantly done."

BEAUFRE, ANDRÉ—Continued

TLS p123 F 8 '68 900w

BEAUFRE, ANDRÉ. Strategy of action; tr. from the French by R. H. Barry. 136p $4.50 Praeger

355.4 Strategy

67-13562

The author of An Introduction to Strategy (BRD 1965) and Deterrence and Strategy (BRD 1966) now turns 'to the problem of 'Action'—governmental action in the field of international relationships. . . . General Beaufre shows that . . . with the specter of nuclear war ever-present in the background, coercion is no longer a function of the military alone; all forms of pressure, ranging from 'diplomatic' procedures through economic and financial measures to war . . . must be combined into one coordinated action. [He considers] that this is most likely to be achieved if the strategic method of thought is applied to foreign policy in its broadest sense." (Publisher's note)

"[Beaufre pursues] two main themes. First, he deplores any tendency to isolate the military from the political sphere of policy and strategy. . . . [Second, he believes] that to the implementation of all policy should be extended the meticulous planning methods of military strategy. . . . It is finally for 'a very precisely regulated method of thinking' that Beaufre appeals. His own argument for it is very precisely regulated, highly logical, and highly abstract; but it will repay the careful reading it demands." R. F. Weigley

Ann Am Acad 374:189 N '67 490w

"Beaufre combines a long experience in the French Army with an analytic and scholarly cast of mind. As such, he has produced a book which restates basic truths applicable to military decision making and to foreign policy as a whole. The statement is fairly interesting, and the case illustrations are apt, but most of the analytical points are not really original. . . . Beaufre's major argument is that rational and complete analysis is desirable when choosing foreign policy 'actions.' At times this is merely tautological and much of [the book] seems indeed to be a verbal taxonomy. Yet the need for analysis is forgotten often enough, and this book thus will have value for the decision maker."

Choice 4:1315 Ja '68 160w

Reviewed by H. W. Baldwin
N Y Times Bk R p62 N 5 '67 250w

"Translated by Major-General R. H. Barry, [the book] loses nothing of the lucidity and fluency of the original French. . . . It is the logical successor to Deterrence and Strategy. General Beaufre distinguishes the two themes with classic simplicity: 'When you wish to prevent something, that deterrence; when you wish to achieve something that is action. . . . Action and deterrence are the two components of strategy, which is now 'one of the major arts of government'." To summarize General Beaufre's well-articulated thesis in detail would be to betray it in a way that his translator has notably avoided. Not a single sentence is wasted: there can be no intermediate summary between the list of contents and the book itself read as a whole. English readers will find in it not only a model of vigorously logical thinking but also a key to the national strategy of President de Gaulle."

TLS p347 Ap 27 '67 230w

BEAUJEU-GARNIER, J. Geography of population. 386p il maps $10 St Martins

312 Demography

66-22495

This book has been synthesized from the two-volume Géographie de la Population, originally published in 1956-1958. The author, a professor of geography at the Sorbonne, "discusses population distribution and its evolution, migration, occupations, and the economic results as they affect various countries and peoples of the globe, plus their interrelationships." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has utilized data from disciplines such as demography, economics, and the cultural aspects of societies to present a synthesis of objectivity paraphrased with subjective analyses. The style enhances the readability. . . . Well illustrated with maps and diagrams. Excellent for outside reading assignments in several disciplines that relate to population. Also useful as a text for review and for graduate seminars."

Choice 5:88 Mr '68 150w

"There are sections of this book where the value remains high though the space is small, notably in the chapters dealing with the occupational structure of populations, but more commonly the attempt to synthesize and at the same time to compress has produced a gazetteer of fact without sufficient supporting analysis and argument to enlighten the inquiring mind. . . . [The book is] one in a series of advanced texts rather than of works of scholarship at the frontiers of present knowledge. Unhappily, [it seems] . . . inadequate since there are a rather large number of factual errors of the type which arise from careless preparation of material or poor proof reading. . . . There are also many inaccuracies in the maps and tables . . . [and the author] often handles statistical data in ways which leave the reader uneasy."

TLS p786 S 1 '66 850w

BEAUJEU-GARNIER, J. Urban geography [by] J. Beaujeu-Garnier and G. Chabot; tr. by G. M. Yglesias and S. H. Beaver. 470p pl maps $8 Wiley

301.3 Cities and towns

68-2591

This volume contains "observations on the cities of the world and an analysis of spatial organization, function, regional setting, and future development of cities." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"A major contribution. . . . There is an extensive bibliography of texts and articles written in English, French, or German, supplemented by carefully executed maps and a limited number of excellent photographs. Of particular importance for the undergraduate library because it can be used in a number of social science courses which are concerned with cities."

Choice 5:1173 N '68 90w

"[This book was] originally published in 1963. . . . The authors claim that their book represents a reappraisal of the field and, although its somewhat conventional contents make this an over-ambitious assertion, the volume covers most of the topics which have engaged the attention of urban geographers over the years and draws information from a wide range of authorities. . . . The various functions of cities are considered, although perhaps with insufficient attention to the essentially multifunctional character of most urban settlements. . . . [However] the book is marred by the number of slips and misstatements which it contains. . . . It takes an essentially fascinating subject and manages to make it remarkably dull. Partly the responsibility for this impression must rest with the translation, which is usually serviceable but rarely elegant."

TLS p856 Ag 8 '68 650w

BEAUVOIR, SIMONE DE. Les belles images; tr. by Patrick O'Brien. 224p $4.95 Putnam

Laurence, the heroine, is an advertising executive married to a rising architect, and the mother of two daughters. The novel considers her involvements with her parents, husband, lover and children. "The action consists of her gradual realization of the meaninglessness of her life and her decision to keep from imposing her own hollow values on her daughters." (Library J)

"[Simone de Beauvoir] has chosen to study chic Parisians . . . [who] exemplify the familiar failings of modern existence: cupidity, superficiality, banality. . . . The novel is short and simple. . . . Nothing is misty or inexplicable or nouvelle vague. Everything is clear in the strobe light of conscience—which allows the reader, generously enough, to look at the materials of Parisian success without ever feeling uncertain what to think of them. . . . One's disappointment . . . is short and simple too. . . . [Les Belles Images is] a perfect incarnation of its subject. . . . The general idea is as familiar as the specific means of its presentation. It is an ethical drama like an old flight of stairs: one knows exactly where all the squeaks and slivers will turn up." Mary Ellmann

Book World p3 Mr ■ '68 600w

"Part of the novel—the characters and the basic situation—is sound and well thought out, if not very original. If Mile de Beauvoir cannot make a good novel out of it, the reason is evidently that she does not really have very much force or flair as a novelistic technician. Furthermore—and this is the real difficulty . . . Laurence is too obviously a straw man, or straw woman, for Mile de Beauvoir's hostility to the French capitalistic class. She has a good many other hostilities too. . . . What Mile de Beauvoir has given us, as a matter of fact, has a considerable interest as a kind of document of the attitudes and emotions of one French woman intellectual—and a rather important one—in the 1960's." Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 29 '68 800w

Reviewed by Warren Coffey Commonweal 88:146 Ap 19 '68 750w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:149 Mr '68 320w

Reviewed by Dorothy Curley
Library J 93:95 Ja 1 '68 130w

"At first glance, this book has all been done before, and more intensely. But its final effect is cumulative and peculiarly moving. . . . Simone de Beauvoir has the true novelist's gifts of selecting detail and creating individuals whilst refusing to sum up situations. Laurence, seen in retrospect in depth across the platitudes that describe her experience, is a complex human being, questing and anxious with several qualitatively different relationships that shift and change her. Underneath the mockery of stereotyped Freudian and moral images and containing them, is a simple detailed picture of one individual's sexual and moral uses of her energy. Laurence's own language, the easy 'placing' of feeling, are inadequate and wrong, but her loves and hates are real and Simone de Beauvoir embodies them with grace and economy." A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 75:15 Ja 5 '68 750w

Reviewed by Anthony Burgess
N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 3 '68 900w

Reviewed by Dorrie Pagones
Sat R 51:44 F 24 '68 430w

"We [are so lulled] by all the belles images—it is part of Laurence's nightmare that [her advertising job] has invaded real life with its fake gloss—that the uneasy thoughts of Vietnam, hungry millions, the serious books unread, the guilt unadmitted, which are gradually to overwhelm Laurence with despair quite fail to jolt us into proper contempt for the bourgeoisie. [However] the actual shocks are well done. . . . It is with some surprise that, in Laurence's final, somewhat trivial bid for spiritual salvation, one discovers that she caught hold of one's sympathy. . . . [But this novel] is far too tame an exercise for Simone de Beauvoir [and] . . . seriousness becomes sentimentality."

TLS p29 Ja 11 '68 480w

BEAVER, R. PIERCE. Church, state, and the American Indians; two and a half centuries of partnership in missions between Protestant churches and government. 230p $6.75 Concordia

266.097 Church and state in the U.S. Indians of North America—Missions. Indians of North America—Government relations 66-27692

"Five lectures given at Baylor University in 1962 inspired this volume. In five . . . chapters, only one of which is in the original form of a lecture, [the author attempts to show the] affiliation between church and state in dealing with Indians from colonial times." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Written from the vantage of missionary organizations, with minor attention to tribes and the expansion of white settlement westward. A main contribution is evidence of the dependence of Indian missions and schools upon federal funds prior to the Civil War. The importance of missionaries in the acculturation of Indians is suggested, and particular attention is given to the Cherokee and Choctaw, known as the most advanced of the Five Civilized Tribes. . . . The author has neglected some important scholarly studies based upon manuscripts. . . . To credit Grant with 'idealism' and to attribute the appearance of denominational rivalry among Protestants to frontier influences is doubtful interpretation; to assert that 'the more cultured and intellectual denominations . . . wanted to exploit and even exterminate the Indians rather than civilize them' appears biased. At least the historian cannot accept such views in the absence of evidence." H. E. Fritz

Am Hist ■ 73:211 O '67 400w

"This volume will be valuable to historians of Indian affairs and of public administration, as well as to those concerned with church-state relations. The author's accounts of the role of missionaries as agents of governmental policy, of the activities of the denominations in promoting—and protesting—Indian removal, and of the relation of religious bodies to Grant's peace policy are especially illuminating. . . . Beaver's evaluation of the work of Indian agents appointed by religious denominations in the post-Grant period represents a significant revision of previous accounts of denominational failures. This extremely useful book suffers from certain limitations. Beaver makes it clear that he is not attempting a 'definitive' history, and his analysis rests entirely on published sources. He has used no monographs published in the 1960s." Mary Young

J Am Hist 54:881 Mr '68 400w

BEAVER, R. PIERCE. Reinterpretation in American church history. See Brauer, J. C., ed.

BECATTI, GIOVANNI. The art of ancient Greece and Rome, from the rise of Greece to the fall of Rome. 441p 385il col il $25 Abrams

709.01 Art, Greek, Art, Roman 67-12684

The professor of archaeology, University of Rome, offers "a conception of the ancient arts as a culture that endured from the 6th Century B.C. to the 4th Century A.D. In 20 chapters he covers the whole world of Western art, weaving into his . . . account the many currents and cross currents at work in the expansion of the classical style." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is an exceptional production not only because of the quality of the photographs but because the text is full of learning and the choice of works of art is far from commonplace. . . . The translation . . . is excellent. . . . The book may not find its way into every student's private library, but it ought to be on school and college reserve shelves." Cornelius Vermeule

Class World 62:51 O '68 300w

"Here is a superb, meaningful study which does its distinguished author infinite credit. . . . No point is so small to have escaped his attention. He consistently does justice to the human form in presenting not only masterpieces of the major sculptors and painters but also striking objects from the minor arts. The illustrations [are] admirably selected to complement the text. This is a magisterial work which will take its place among the great studies in the history of art and is enthusiastically recommended for many types of libraries." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 93:1992 My 15 '68 160w

"Professor Becatti shows that he has enough knowledge and understanding for [his] task. Admittedly his treatment of architecture is weak . . . and on Archaic and earlier art his account seems second-hand though well informed; but he is thoroughly at home with sculpture (which has been his principal field of research) and explains with unusual clarity the relationship between Greek and Roman styles. . . . Unfortunately, the planning and the execution of the book are less admirable. . . . The illustrations of excellent quality apart from the trimming of many black-and-white photographs and the tones of some colour plates, are not as representative as they should have been, too often give details where complete views are needed, and almost entirely ignore architecture. Similarly the bibliography, though classified under nearly fifty headings, contains something like 1,400 items set out alphabetically without comment and is likely to confuse anyone but a specialist. . . . [This] cannot be rated better than second class." TLS p634 Je 20 '68 440w

BECATTI, GIOVANNI—Continued

BÉCHERVAISE, JOHN MAYSTON. Australia, world of difference; the Australian transition. 263p il col il $7.45 Tri-ocean bks.

919.4 Australia—Description and travel. Natural history—Australia (66-21200)

The author "deals for the most part with the natural history of Australia while the final two chapters summarize the urban development of the capital cities." (Choice)

"Written by an Australian about Australia for Australians. . . . For one who has trekked into the coastal forests, this book will have great appeal. For one not familiar with 'Strine,' it can at least serve as an introduction to the physiography, geology, archeology, and ecology of the least known of the continents. Bécher-vaïse has personally explored all of the area he describes and writes with a sparkling and zestful style. He is not a scientist but does lean heavily on established scientific references. He does claim to have seen the Tasmanian wolf alive, which is something no scientist has ever done. . . . [This] can serve as a painless and delightful way to initiate a study of the ecology of Australia." Choice 5:518 Je '68 200w

"Bécher-vaïse graphically describes the beautiful as well as the bizarre. . . . He emphasizes geography and topography, but skillfully blends together history, explorers, flora and fauna, ocean, reefs, islands, cities, architecture, and related topics. His chapter on the Tasmanian lakelands is especially fetching, and that on 'the old Australians' (aborigines) is one of the best ever written on this subject. Warmly recommended for masterful descriptive writing and fascinating information. General and informed readers, scholars and specialists will find the book appealing." Clarence Gorchels

Library J 93:77 Ja 1 '68 120w

BECK, BARBARA L. The first book of fruits; pictures by Page Cary. 64p $2.65 Watts, F. 634 Fruit—Juvenile literature 67-10225

The author "tells what fruits are, how seeds are formed and describes [an assortment of] fruit—some common, some not-so-common." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Miss Beck includes some exotic fruits but does not mention the avocado or tangerine. The sterile illustrations in reddish purple do not add to the text. Fruits We Eat by I.C. L. Fenton and H. B. Kitchen [BRD 1961] is the better book on the subject." Dale and Arlene Luch-singer

Library J 92:2448 Je 15 '67 70w

"The fruits of this handbook are not only the technical fruits of the botanist but also those that are good to eat, from apple, peach, mul-berry and chestnut to breadfruit and cherimoya. The text is arranged systematically and gives a little botany, a little geography and a little history for each fruit. The pictures (in black and white) are handsome and full of meaning. The trail from commonplace experience to the far away and long ago is well marked here, and it becomes a lasting piece of proto-science for children who can read." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:145 D '67 70w

BECK, EMILY MORISON, ed. Familiar quotations [14th ed rev & enl]. See Bartlett, J.

BECK, JOAN. How to raise a brighter child; the case for early learning. 273p $5.95 Trident press

372.21 Children—Management. Child study 67-26451

"A staff writer on the Chicago Tribune with a syndicated column 'You and Your Child,' here interprets for parents [recent] scientific research on the growth of children's intelligence during the first six years of life. . . . [She contends that] it is possible, by changing our methods of child-rearing (by using new knowledge about a youngster's brain needs during the first years of life), to raise the level of intelligence of all children so that their mental development will come nearer to reaching its potential; and finally, mental development of small children may inadvertently be restricted by parents unaware of the needs of the developing brain. Following a discussion of these concepts, subsequent chapters give precise information about what can be done for children and how it can be done." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The] author writes with a conviction and an enthusiasm which gives her message a compelling urgency. . . . [but] sometimes tends toward oversimplification. [Her range] centers on the capacity for learning in early childhood. There is a pitfall here for unwary parents: learning to read and write before age six appears to be easy, but it may exact a high toll in emotional imbalance for some children. . . . Recommended for public library collections." E. P. Nichols

Library J 92:3036 S 15 '67 280w

"[This book] is addressed exclusively to the middle-class parent. [The author] has done her homework. Her bibliography almost duplicates Maya Pines's [Revolution in Learning, BRD 1968]. But her tone and approach are that of a Reader's Digest prescription: Do thus and such and you will have a brighter, happier child. Since the knowledge and techniques she presents are still largely in the experimental stage, this approach could be harmful. While Mrs. Beck is sensitive to the child as a person, her book is likely to become a tool for the envious parent who wants her little one to be the first on his block to read. . . . The book, used wisely, could be helpful." Bonnie Stretch

Sat R 51:79 Mr 16 '68 370w

BECKER, BERIL. Dreams and realities of the conquest of the skies. 276p il lib bdg $5.38 Atheneum pubs.

629.1309 Aeronautics—History—Juvenile literature 67-18991

"This book recounts the personal experiences of the inventors, engineers, adventurers, and writers, starting with Leonardo da Vinci and including over 100 others, who have contributed in some way, either as prophets or producers, to the development of aeronautics from balloons and imitation birdwing to gliders, Spads, VTOL's, and the XB-70. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"The material is not new, but aeronautic facts, ideas, and techniques both successful and unsuccessful are clearly explained in a well organized discussion of how the aircraft of yesterday and today were produced. The most coverage is given to pre-World War II aviation, with only a few short chapters on space age flight." B. B. Lane

Library J 92:4619 D 15 '67 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Roger Jellinek
N Y Times Bk pt 2, p30 N 5 '67 230w [YA]

BECKER, ERNEST. Beyond alienation; a philosophy of education for the crisis of democracy. 305p $6.95; pa $2.95 Braziller

370.1 Education—Philosophy 67-12951

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by A. M. Lee
Am Soc R 33:163 F '68 600w

Reviewed by Glenn Jacobs
Ann Am Acad 376:208 Mr '68 600w

Reviewed by H. L. Janssen
Harvard Ed R 38:203 winter '68 1400w

Reviewed by Anthony Nemetz
J Higher Ed 39:358 Je '68 750w

Reviewed by David Lawson
Record 69:610 Mr '68 900w

BECKER, ERNEST. The structure of evil; an essay on the unification of the science of man. 430p $8.50 Braziller

128 Man, Civilization 68-12890

"This book has two theses—one methodological, the other substantive. The first, positivistic in character and openly based on the work of Auguste Comte, has as its primary thrust the notion that 'the idea of progress must be reintroduced into the science of man.' . . . The substantive thesis propounds a concrete theory about the human predicament and offers specific advice for overcoming that predicament. In essence this 'anthropodicy' is naturalistic in the classic Rousseauian sense. Modern man's predicament—that of a meaningless, alienated existence—is, says Becker, the result of our society's being structured so as to negate the possibilities of individual freedom and growth." (Christian Century) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"[The author's] views are essentially activist and romantic, emphasizing the subjective and evading or denying traditional rules regarding logic, relevance, and consistency. . . . Many writers are consistently misrepresented, and there are incredible gaps in the bibliography. The essay becomes a parade of Becker's personal prejudices, badly written and even ungrammatical in places, not comparable to thematic and literate essays from a similar point of view such as N. O. Brown's Life against Death [BRD 1959]. Not recommended unless one is collecting samples of contemporary existentialist-romantic polemical material."

Choice 5:938 O '68 250w

"I have considerable sympathy with Becker's methodological thesis; nonetheless it seems to me that complete unification of fact and value has as many inherent limitations as does complete separation. What is needed is a contextual distinction between the two which will allow them to be related functionally. Becker's assertion that modern man's predicament lies in the rediscovery of autonomy is unexceptionable, but it is also a bit vague. Moreover, it has already been suggested by a number of well known thinkers, not the least of whom is David Riesman. I find it odd that a book on sociology which refers to more than 400 authors and employs autonomy as a crucial concept makes no mention whatever of Riesman." J. H. Gill

Christian Century 85:945 J1 24 '68 330w

"There are odd gaps in what almost forms a philosophical anthropology; no discussion of [M.] Heidegger's Being and Time [BRD 1963] or [E.] Husserl's [Phenomenology and the Crisis of Philosophy]. . . . But the sweep of the whole and the many fine passages, for example, those on love and perversion and on bad art, make this a feat of bravery that will hearten almost all readers but the 'laboratory managerialists.'" J. M. Perreault

Library J 93:564 F 1 '68 200w

BECKER, HOWARD S., ed. Social problems: a modern approach. 770p $8.95 Wiley

301 Social problems. U.S.—Social conditions 66-22835

A collection of fourteen monographs dealing with such subjects as poverty, inequality, housing, the adolescent, "the aged, delinquency, crime, and mental illness, race relations, population, and war. . . . the question of whether 'popular culture' is a problem or an asset (or both) in a pluralistic society; and the problems generated by changing social, political, and economic systems in new nations." (Am J Soc) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Subject and name indexes.

"One might hope that the organization of the book would reflect the socio-historical frame of reference ardently posited in the Introduction. . . . Careful reading reveals that, for the most part, the various authors have taken the hint, or at least paid lip service to it. But there is no evidence that this approach (is this the 'modern approach' suggested by the title?) serves as a theme for comparative and/or case analysis of the social problems presented. As for the general organization of the book, editor Becker has yet another idea, one apparently unrelated to the frame of reference noted above. 'We have chosen,' he states, 'to organize the problems we consider on a scale of increasing size of the group involved.' . . . Taken as a volume, one rich in social and sociological information and insight it nevertheless suggests yet another problem to the user—how to explain to one's students why the whole thing is hung together as it is." Richard Laskin

Am J Soc 73:123 J1 '67 950w

"Granted that there is no single theoretical framework which integrates the topics covered: there is, nonetheless, a shared and frequently reiterated conception of what constitutes a social problem (it is defined by the members of groups, not by outsiders looking in) which helps bind the work together. The more important binding, however, derives from the aforementioned commitment of most of the writers to the integration of social theory, empirical data, and policy implications. . . . Becker's introduction is quite good and appropriate in setting the tone for the volume as a whole. As one looks over the texts available for use in social problems courses, the fare is not particularly appealing. Almost any breath of life would have been an improvement; Becker and company have done more. Their book is not only better than a poor lot of competitors, but it is a text which captures the best of the social science effort, indicating how this effort can be both interesting and pertinent." W. J. Chambliss

Am Soc R 32:495 Je '67 850w

"Becker has performed an exceptional feat in his selection of material and his conceptual framework. . . . The treatment of concepts and dysfunctions in education, adolescence, delinquency, crime, poverty, mental illness, and problems of housing are excellent studies in depth. Unusual in its objective analyses and appraisals the book points to logical and rational means of coping intelligently. A welcome relief from the sophomoric and frenetic 'we've found a crack in the window; the building must be razed' approach by too many publications in this field. An ideal text for developing objective thinking on social matters. Suitable for both undergraduate and graduate levels of sociology, social studies, and social psychology. . . . A must for all college libraries."

Choice 4:351 My '67 160w

Reviewed by Alvin Boskoff

Social Studies 59:125 Mr '68 350w

BECKINGSALE, B. W. Burghley: Tudor statesman, 1520-1598. 340p pl $10 St Martins

B or 92 Burghley, William Cecil, 1st Baron [67-19278]

This biography "is divided into two sections. The first is a straightforward account of Burghley's career; the second is an assessment of it. . . . [In the second section, the author] evaluates Burghley as an administrator; . . . studies his patronage of learning and the arts; and discusses his discreet but effective accumulation of land and wealth. The author's conclusion is that Burghley's genius was essentially conservative." (Economist) Bibliography.

"Beckingsale's attempt . . . to make of Burghley a well rounded Renaissance type is somewhat strained. His tastes were broad, but as a patron he did no more than what could be expected of any man equal in wealth and proximity to the queen. This is superb, however, as an introduction to Burghley's world, and its bibliography and index will help many beginners over the hurdles to understanding the Tudors."

Choice 5:1027 O '68 160w

"The great modern biography is that of Dr Conyers Read, which appeared in two volumes [BRD 1955, v.1; BRD 1960, v.2], but its length and formidable scholarship make reading it something of a marathon. Mr Beckingsale has produced a shorter account, but one comprehensive enough to be of value to the student and of interest to the general reader.

It is the second section that is the most interesting, but also the most open to criticism.

[The author's conclusion] is altogether too simple and too conventional a view, and underestimates Burghley's originality of thought. In finance in particular Mr Beckingsale thinks Burghley was without any new or constructive ideas, and concentrated on economy of expenditure rather than expansion of revenue; yet the substitution of a direct levy by counties for the collection of the archaic feudal right of purveyance . . . was a constructive and revolutionary advance introduced at the end of Burghley's life. . . . Mr Beckingsale's estimate of Burghley as an enlightened but fundamentally conservative statesman must be modified to Burghley's advantage. He was far more than this."

Economist 225:xvii D ■ '67 600w

"A thoughtful, readable study of a great official who kept his head through two reigns (Henry VIII, Edward VI) when all about him were literally losing theirs. Beckingsale describes what Burghley did—how he met various problems and how he manipulated court factions, refractory Parliaments, and foreign ambassadors—and then goes on to ■ penetrating sketch of Burghley as the product of Cambridge's New Learning; as an influence on Elizabethan religion, architecture, education, and administration . . . and as a passionate believer in the middle of every conceivable road, a blazingly successful immoderate moderate."

BECKINGSALE, B. W.—Continued

New Yorker 44:158 Mr 23 '68 200w
 TLS p56 Ja 18 '68 450w

BECKWITH, JOHN. Coptic sculpture, 300-1300.
 56p 147il $9 Transatlantic
 734 Sculpture, Coptic 65-4407

In this survey the author "brings together works of sculpture from museums all over the world, in Continental Europe, England, Egypt, and the U.S. All the works were created in Greek Alexandria, capital of Hellenism, and its hinterland, later under the influence of Constantinople, of a style finally modified by the Arab conquest in the 7th century, and commonly called Coptic. . . . The text explains each single reproduction, [and] shows relationships between works of art physically very remote from each other." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The] deputy keeper of the Victoria and Albert Museum, a well-known expert on the art of the early medieval period, offers in a short scholarly essay a 'no nonsense' approach to Coptic art, seeing in it merely the last stage of a Hellenistic style which had been widespread all over the antique world. . . . In general, there is a debunking view of the wilder more fanciful interpretations of Coptic art and the 'Alexandrine' style. The book, though modest in size and scope, is important for an understanding of late Roman art as a whole. The style, direct, but laconic, is addressed to the scholar."

Choice 4:1232 Ja '68 140w

"In an excellent, compressed survey an authority on Byzantine art . . . gives an outline and detailed references in a field where inadequacy of documentation and lack of chronology make research very difficult. Recommended for art lovers and scholars in spite of the high American price of what is in England an inexpensive book." J. L. Dewton

Library J 91:4090 ■ 15 '66 160w

BEDFORD, JOHN. Pewter. 63p il $2.50 Walker & co.

739 Pewter 66-22380

The author "has the English collector in mind, although pieces made in other countries and pieces made for export from England are given attention. [Information] extends well into the 19th [century and] . . . even art nouveau ■ represented." (Library J)

"An introductory volume for the reader seeking a brief, enjoyable discussion of the subject. . . . However, this book is not to be compared with the standard works on pewter."

Choice 4:1232 Ja '68 60w

"Warnings on purchase are given which the collector would do well to read carefully. The series is intended for the serious collector but not for the museum; even so, more detailed information is presented than usually appears in books devoted to general antiques. Recommended for most public libraries." Paul von Khrum

Library J 91:4093 S 15 '66 30w

BEEBE, B. F. African elephants; il. by James Ralph Johnson. 150p $3.95 McKay

599 Elephants—Juvenile literature 68-25966

The author discusses the physiology, habits and history of the African elephant and finishes with a section on conservation problems and controversies. Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"[This book] includes more descriptions of elephants killing men, women, and children, as well as other elephants, than is necessary even for the most macabre-minded adults. But young adults who are fascinated by the king of the jungle might want to read the book for the other firsthand observations recorded." M. W. Storer

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 7 '68
 50w

"Writing about elephants for young readers is a highly competitive business. Other good books on the topic have already been written for this age group, notably Rennie Bere's The African Elephant [BRD 1967] which covers the same range of information as does this new book. . . . Although Beebe's book is written in a simple, interesting and informative style incorporating many anecdotes about wild elephant behavior, it lacks the excellent illustrations found in Bere's book, which is still preferable." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:4410 N 15 '68 100w

BEEBE, LUCIUS. The Lucius Beebe reader; sel. and ed. by Charles Clegg [and] Duncan Emrich. 398p $7.95 Doubleday 818 67-20914

A collection of writings selected "from the periodicals to which [the author] regularly contributed, from the newspapers where he was a . . . columnist, and from unpublished manuscripts left after his death. . . . [The contents range from] nostalgic pieces about his Boston and Wakefield boyhood to the Lucullan delights of the . . . restaurants and hotels of New York, London, New Orleans, and San Francisco." (Publisher's note)

"As a whole Mr. Beebe's florid, expressive styles, his accounts of life as it used to be, will have appeal if the reader, with him, regrets the passing of the early 20th Century. We might just recommend this wad of Beebe shots for the more urbane libraries that serve a sophisticated, blasé public." Marco Thorne

Library J 92:3041 S 15 '67 160w

"Rich with anecdote, brimming with the author's enthusiasms and prejudices, [this book illumines Beebe's] proper-Bostonian origins, his not-so-proper prep school and college careers, his jeune élégant tour of duty as cafe-society columnist for The Herald Tribune, and his last years as a newspaper publisher in Virginia City, Nev. . . . Purists have complained that this Pepys of Twenty-One and El Morocco expressed himself in prose on the purple side—but the Beebe style was always appropriate to the Beebe message."

N Y Times Bk R p14 D 31 '67 220w

"If you think of Beebe's writing in terms of his 'This New York' column, in which he chronicled for the Herald Tribune the flighty doings of Café Society, such a project as a Beebe Reader would appear to be faintly ridiculous. . . . But Beebe could write better than that, as this Reader reminds us. It opens with a section devoted to his New England childhood and youth—a charming, quasi-Marquandian family study in easy affluence, complete with eccentric relatives; his capers at Yale and Harvard; a hilarious chapter about his year on a now defunct newspaper. . . . The New York years, for all the lush junk he served up for readers panting to know how many Rolls-Royces Doris Duke owned, have at least the value of garish social history. . . . A lifelong railroad buff. . . . he launched the first of a series, written alone or in collaboration with Mr. Clegg, of affectionate salutes in text and pictures to the glorious days of rail travel, from obscure short-line carriers to mighty aristocrats like the Twentieth-Century Limited. . . . Nine excerpts are presented here." J. K. Hutchens

Sat R 50:27 D 16 '67 1800w

BEER, ETHEL S. Marvelous Greece; an appreciation of the country and its people. 272p il $5.95 Walker & co.

914.95 Greece, Modern—Description and travel 67-13233

"Greece and her islands are . . . described by [the author], who has traveled and lived through all of the seasons there. This is a guidebook of sorts and a kind of diary." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Beer's treatment is almost exactly coextensive [with Philip Deane's book, The Land and Isles of Greece], but much less systematic and complete, and the information is woven into a more or less continuous narrative-description in a much more personal vein. It is thus more entertaining, and more readable in some aspects, though Deane is also both, in his own way, and more handy. . . . For a person making his first trip to Greece . . . these would be worth perusing; . . . Beer to develop perspective; and Deane to lay out the trip, and for reference." R. L. Scranton

Class World 61:217 F '68 420w

"The style is colloquial and the amount of detailed, useful information is endless and timely. The book misses poetic warmth and will not be read solely for pleasure. However, it does present one woman's experience, and since it never discourages, it may be added to all collections that need one more book on Greece and the Grecian Isles." K. T. Willis
Library J 92:1833 My 1 '67 180w

BEER, GAVIN DE. See De Beer, G.

BEER, JOHN. Blake's humanism. 269p il pl $9
Barnes & Noble
821 Blake, William 68-92577

The author "traces the evolution of Blake's fourfold mythological system as his response to the political and intellectual crises of his time viewed through the terms of Milton's religious thought, a development climaxing in the poem, 'Milton'. . . . He explores two aspects of Blake's work . . . his connections with the English poetic tradition and the relationship between his poetry and illustrations." (Choice)

"This new survey of Blake, like Beer's Coleridge the Visionary [BRD 1959], is an informed, perceptive, and readable introduction to the poet's work, for graduate students and advanced undergraduates. Unlike many recent Blake studies, it presupposes no prior acquaintance with the special terms of Blake's aesthetic or myth, and is written not to proselytize but to explain. . . . The more metaphysical works—The Book of Urizen, The Four Zoas, and 'Jerusalem'—fall outside the scope of Beer's survey. . . . The notes and index are serviceable, and there is a well chosen set of 54 illustrations from Blake and his pictorial sources. A modest, intelligent, and illuminating book." Choice 5:1128 N '68 150w

"[Dr. Beer] is a University Lecturer at Cambridge and his book is evidently intended for students of the English Schools. . . . [He has] managed to say a great deal that is illuminating and true about Blake within present academic terms of reference. He gives proof of a discerning and unprejudiced mind . . . and readers wishing to follow up some special aspect of Blake will find Dr. Beer an impartial guide. . . . Two of his chapters are outstanding. His discussion of Blake's points of difference with Milton over the respective roles of God and Satan, and the Fall of Man, would surely have pleased C. S. Lewis and would interest William Empson. . . . In his exegesis of individual poems or groups of poems the limitations of Dr. Beer's terms of reference becomes apparent. . . . A learned reader will see very clearly Dr. Beer's blind spots and limitations; but an unlearned reader will, on the contrary, find much of real value in this book." TLS p680 Je 27 '68 900w

BEER, PATRICIA. Just like the resurrection. 47p $3.75 Dufour
821 67-30138

Some of the poems in this collection have previously appeared in such publications as London Magazine and New Statesman.

"[The poet] celebrates guile and death with a gently pessimistic humor that causes a rueful shake of the head." Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 20w

"[Patricia Beer] has always been an impressive poet in a traditional elegiac mode. . . . Now she seems more prepared to risk lack of resonance for a more glancing effect, using a looser line and sometimes syllables. She can still have a weightier motion, as in 'Lemmings' and 'Lion Hunts', but she is much readier to allow room for the casual, the trivial, and the whimsical. . . . [She] is a clever and elegant poet, usually quite in command of her odd insights and fancies." TLS p1059 N 9 '67 220w

BEGGS, DAVID W., ed. Nongraded schools in action; bold new venture; ed. by David W. Beggs, III and Edward G. Buffle. 270p $5.95 Ind. univ. press

371.2 Ability grouping in education. Education—U.S. 65-13374

"This volume presents a selection of articles by . . . educators and practitioners. . . . Part I presents the philosophical and psychological foundations of the nongraded program, and Part II [consists] of a series of authoritative reports on the operation of nongraded schools, both elementary and secondary, in situations varying widely geographically, structurally, and in the socioeconomic levels they serve" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"For school administrators and teachers who desire to implement a philosophy of nongradedness at the elementary and secondary levels. . . . The strength of the book lies in Part I which . . . develops a very useful series of steps in nongraded a high school [and] presents an overall strategy for the development of nongraded schools. . . . Chapter IV, 'The Delineation of the Strategy,' might be considered as a systems approach to nongraded and is perhaps the most useful because of the clarity with which it explicates the quality of an overall plan. . . . Though the quality of the accounts [about the efforts of 13 school systems] is uneven, valuable information is furnished. . . . Recommended as essential to any group of professionals considering an approach to nongradedness." Choice 5:657 JI '68 210w

"Mainly a post-World War II phenomenon, the nongraded school movement is intended, say the editors, 'to make individual methods of instruction a standard mode of operation.' . . . This pioneering work is not overafflicted by pedagogy and should be a useful reference for all education collections." E. M. Oboler
Library J 92:1829 My 1 '67 100w

BEHN, HARRY. Chrysalis; concerning children and poetry. 92p $3.50 Harcourt

809.1 Poetry—History and criticism—Juvenile literature 68-13367

The compiler of Cricket Songs (BRD 1964), has written this book "based on lectures given at universities and libraries. [The] essays present the author's beliefs concerning the reading, writing and value of poetry, particularly for children. Most of the material has appeared in The Horn Book and other publications." (Library J)

"The essays have been revised and arranged to give the little book cohesiveness and variety. The author reminds us of so many things we are glad to be reminded of, and his reminders are perfectly expressed. The chapter on words emphasizes the richness of the English language and is especially important at a time when the nuances of words are being forgotten in jargon, and words themselves are being replaced in many people's minds by gaudy pictures and raucous sounds. . . . A book for everyone who enjoys books, poetry, children." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:336 Je '68 260w

"Musing upon his childhood, colors, words, Zen and haiku, aesthetic appreciation, and the magic of childhood, the author demonstrates his philosophy of creativity, including his own poetry and analysis of other poets. Young adults seriously interested in writing will find this intellectually stimulating and valuable. Adults, especially librarians, will find it rewardingly informative." Julia Losinski
Library J 93:1299 Mr 15 68 100w [YA]

"[The subtitle] should go on to say, 'and the adult world that excludes both children and poetry.' For Behn indicts those adult values that have made our world uglier and cheaper than it once was. If we are to rescue the world, he argues, we must regain something of our childhood wonder and delight. . . . Poetry is one consequence of . . . a perception of the 'rightness' of the natural world and the good people in it. Because Behn believes this strongly, he is at his best in recollections of dusty days and moonlit nights when . . . boys like Charlie Long Beargrass (a memorable Indian whose schoolmistress taught him to speak with a Boston accent) recited poems." John Unterecker
N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 31 '68 300w

BEHRMAN, A. S. Water is everybody's business; the chemistry of water purification; prepared under the sponsorship of the Mfg. chemists' association. 229p $4.50; pa $1.45 Doubleday

628 Water—Purification. Water—Analysis 68-2841

"After a description of common water impurities, processes for their removal, treatments to make the chemical composition of water more suitable, and procedures for making water safe are reviewed. [The author] concludes by making a few predictions regarding the future of water supply and water purification." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

BEHRMAN, A. S.—Continued

"This book should be of interest to the high school and college chemistry student. . . . Written by an industrial chemist, the book presents in a simple and direct style the basic principles of various chemical treatments to make water safe and pure. . . . [It] gives the interested layman a small part of the vast interdisciplinary field of water resources."

Choice 5:814 S '68 150w [YA]

"In this volume for the general reader . . . there is also a chapter on possibilities of desalting the oceans. The book should be of value to most public and school libraries." Phillip Rochlin

Library J 93:1910 My 1 '68 90w [YA]

BEHRMAN, S. N. The burning glass; a novel. 396p $6.95 Little

68-17266

The author of Portrait of Max (BRD 1961) and Four Plays (BRD 1955) has written "a novel about the world of the theater, laid in Salzburg, Hollywood, and New York, in the years from 1937 to 1940. It is . . . about the love affairs of a young [Jewish] dramatist from Ohio on the way up, Stanley Grant. . . . [It is also concerned with] the effect that the triumph of Nazism has on Grant and on his world." (Sat R)

Reviewed by J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 28:177 Ag 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by Robert Cromie

Book World p3 J1 21 '68 900w

"Stanley is more nonhero than antihero. . . . Wretched, mixed-up, susceptible, clumsily amorous Stanley. It seems that all he has is talent. Despite his romantic and marital failures, he doggedly pursues his craft (which is often the way writers survive). And Mr. Behrman does make the reader feel what it can be like to be a writer. With the launching of his second Broadway hit . . . Stanley has matured sufficiently to take a first step from self-doubt to self-confidence. His gesture of self-liberation is neither spectacular nor particularly surprising. But it convinces. The finale suits a novel whose ring of truth derives from Mr. Behrman's thorough knowledge of his field based on long experience as a successful dramatist, screen playwright, and biographer. . . . From his Hollywood sojourns, Mr. Behrman has re-collected several highly amusing episodes of the film colony at work and play." John Beaufort

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 8 '68 700w

Reviewed by R. R. Gambee

Library J 93:4305 N 15 '68 200w

"Strive as one will to resist it, S. N. Behrman compels us to see his first novel as an infinitely extended version by other means of a Behrman play. . . . Off-stage, indeed, is where the action is—gales and maelstroms of action, all of it invisible. . . . History is an accident of the novel's time; the characters and actions are in no important way affected; the pathos is superimposed, does not solemnize the events even retrospectively. . . . The novel is not without its pleasant moments. Behrman is Behrman: he can and does write elegantly. He is a composer of deft, and sometimes witty, dialogue; but the lines, which fade from the memory a moment after they are uttered, are disembodied mots spoken by spectres. The purling, ingratiating tone flattens everything to the same level." Saul Maloff

N Y Times Bk R p31 J1 21 '68 750w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliyen

New Yorker 44:240 D 7 '68 900w

"The serious question . . . is whether Behrman has succeeded in conveying 'the atmosphere of the time.' . . . Indeed, it is the casual, thoughtless anti-Semitism of the 'upper classes,' American and European, that Behrman renders most successfully. . . . Dramatist that he is, Behrman makes considerable use of dialogue, and his lines are often amusing. . . . Grant has possibilities enough so that I wish Behrman had concentrated on him instead of devoting so much space to other characters and introducing so many episodes that have no bearing on his life. As a result of this diffuseness, Behrman treats Grant's ultimate reversion to Jewishness in so summary a fashion that it is not convincing, though we have known from the beginning that it was bound to happen. Behrman felt, I suppose, that his experiences had been rich enough to make an interesting novel, and to that extent he was right. . . . The book will probably sell reasonably well, but he has not conveyed 'the atmosphere of a time.'" Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:21 J1 20 '68 1200w

Time 92:66 Ag 2 '68 650w

BEICHMAN, ARNOLD. The "other" state department; the United States mission to the United Nations—its role in the making of foreign policy; foreword by Leland M. Goodrich [and] James T. Shotwell. 221p $5.95 Basic bks.

353,008 U.S. Mission to the United Nations.

U.S.—Foreign relations 68-29923

"This is a study of the relationship between the Department of State and the United States Mission to the United Nations (USUN) during the period 1946-1968." (Pref) Indexes of names and of subjects.

"Those who understand [the points made here] will never again follow a General Assembly or Security Council debate as a simple contest by a field full of players. . . . This is not so much an anecdotal as an analytical book, but Beichman the reporter breaks through often enough to live things up." R. C. Hottelet

Book World p6 S 15 '68 800w

"Here is an overdue study of a vital public agency. . . . Beichman, a former journalist who covered the UN for 15 years, has provided a history and a look behind the scenes. This book is richly documented from correspondence, personal interviews, and newspaper accounts. The running, unresolved, internal tensions between the Mission and the State Department are dramatically presented. The biographical details alone on the important men who have been United States ambassadors to the United Nations make this book an important addition to collections. To students of United Nations affairs it is indispensable and most welcome." George Beebe

Library J 93:3014 S 1 '68 110w

"Mr. Beichman might indeed be able to write with authority about some of the work of USUN, but certainly not about the aspect of USUN which he has chosen to study, which is precisely that aspect most closed to journalistic investigation. . . . [His book] is the sad record of the diversion of a knowledgeable man from an important subject which he must know intimately to a less important one which he cannot know intimately, and about which he presents in a misleading way even what is known." C. C. O'Brien

N Y Rev of Books 11:8 N 21 '68 1500w

"Beichman's stories about clashes between strong-minded U.N. ambassadors and stubborn Secretaries of State are more compelling than his quasi-political-science analysis of the built-in institutional frictions between Washington and New York. His main fault is that he views the State Department as a monolith irrevocably cut off from the U.S. Mission. Had he taken a more flexible view he might have discovered that the U.S. Mission and its ambassador frequently serve as a kind of shadow foreign office for those State Department officials who regularly write the minority reports at Foggy Bottom. . . . Yet what Beichman does tell, he tells well enough to make this book an essential primer in the politics of conflict within the U.S. Government itself." T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:102 S 23 '68 600w

BEIER, ULLI. Contemporary art in Africa. 173p il col il $9.95 Praeger

709.6 Art, African. Artists, African

68-19132

An "account of the artists I knew while living in Africa and whom I met in various capacities as critic, editor, director of an art gallery. . . . My choice was of course dictated by my personal preferences, but also by my particular limitations. . . . I have a closer knowledge of art in Nigeria than in, say, Kenya. . . . In Part One of this book, therefore, I have tried to give a . . . picture of the renaissance of African art as exemplified by those artists whom I know best, whom I exhibited in the Mbari galleries of Ibadan, Oshogbo, and Lagos, and whose work I discussed in the magazine Black Orpheus. In Part Two I have given a more personal account of the artists in one particular town [Oshogbo, a Yoruba town in Western Nigeria]." (Pref) Index.

"In this unusual and useful appraisal of Neo-African art and the work of individual artists Ulli Beier . . . evaluates the influences of tradition and environment on contemporary expression in all visual or plastic media. He considers the material benefits of foreign culture on the development of African artists, and counterposes the self-consciousness of local native inspiration in various geographical areas, noting the differences of effect and materials on art forms. There is a good deal more about specific personalities in this book than one finds in most volumes on the subject, and Mr. Beier's personal immersion in the field adds much to our knowledge. Although the topic is not discussed specifically, it is interesting to compare the values and motivations of African artists' expressions with those of contemporary American Negro artists." Lee Ash

Library J 93:1886 My 1 '68 220w

"A European who has spent nearly two decades . . . in West Africa—[the author] describes sympathetically and clearly the impressive art renaissance in Africa during the 1960s. . . . He deals first with the work of three transitional artists, Yemi Bisiri, a traditional Yoruba brass caster, Ovia Idah, a Benin wood carver, and Lamidi Fakeye, a Muslim wood carver trained in a pagan tradition and working for a Catholic Church in Western Nigeria. He then describes . . . the establishment at Zaria in the Muslim north of the western-style Nigerian Art school . . . [and the] Mbiri or 'creation' clubs for writers, actors, dancers, musicians and artists. He describes the work of the impressive artists who emerged from these clubs and their summer schools. . . . [A] beautifully produced book with . . . excellent illustrations—eleven of them in color."

TLS p645 Je 20 '68 900w

BEINERT, FREDERICA L. The art of making soufflés. 264p il $4.95 Doubleday

641.8 Soufflés, Cookery—Eggs 67-19066

Beginning with a description of the tools and techniques necessary for success, the author presents "recipes for main dish, dessert, hot, cold and accompaniment soufflés. In later chapters, she gives recipes for pseudo- and time-saving soufflés [and recipes proportioned for two or three servings]." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by Gloria Levitas
Book World p6 D 17 '67 50w

"The imaginative cook will find both beauty and sense in this new book on the elusive soufflé. In her introduction and first chapter, Miss Beinert, well-known food consultant, sets the stage for an amazing number of recipes. . . . All collections of cookery books should have [this volume], and large libraries should order duplicate copies." K. T. Willis

Library J 92:2775 Ag '67 100w

BEISNER, ROBERT L. Twelve against empire; the anti-imperialists, 1898-1900. 310p pl $6.95 McGraw

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Politics and government—War of 1898. Imperialism 68-13087

This book "studies the protest movement that twelve prominent . . . Americans launched, not only against [the Spanish-American War] . . . but also against this nation's impulse toward empire." (Publisher's note) Considered are: William James, Andrew Carnegie, Carl Schurz, E. L. Godkin, Charles Eliot Norton, Edward Atkinson, Charles Francis Adams, Senator George F. Hoar, George Boutwell, "Czar" Thomas Reed, John Sherman and ex-President Harrison. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Artfully constructed and skillfully written, this is a welcome and meaningful addition to the literature on America's impulse for empire. It is also a study of dissent that gains significance in the light of today's crisis over Vietnam, even though meaningful parallels are difficult to draw, since the anti-imperialism of the 1890's received precious little support from American youth. More important, this book signals the arrival of a writer capable of writing great biography—that most difficult and challenging of all the historical arts." W. F. Kimball

America 118:676 My 18 '68 850w

Reviewed by E. R. May
Book World p11 Ag 4 '68 800w

"That turn-of-the-century confrontation between American will and American conscience was one of those moments of national self-definition, and Robert Beisner has brilliantly recreated not only the choices but the minds and hearts of the men who faced them and said: no. . . . [This book] becomes a study in the classic self-divisions of American character." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 28 '68 700w

Reviewed by J. W. Pratt
J Am Hist 55:668 D '68 420w

Reviewed by M. A. Hecker
Library J 93:1895 My 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by I. F. Stone
N Y Rev of Books 11:8 Ag 22 '68 70w

"It would be easy to draw numerous parallels between the debate of 1898-1900 and the crisis of 1968, but many of them would be false. Rather, Beisner's thoughtful and interesting analysis . . . is well worth reading for what it tells of this earlier turning point in foreign policy. It is a worthy recipient of the Allan Nevins History Prize. The leaders of thought he has chosen to write about were all Republicans or former Mugwumps (Republicans who had supported Cleveland). [William Jennings Bryan] and some of the others discarded from consideration were either opportunistic and shifting, the author explains, or they did not develop a detailed line of argument. Mr. Beisner has chosen an impressive dozen. . . . [He] does not seem to think that if they had won their battle the course of American history would have been much altered." Frank Freidel

N Y Times Bk ■ p6 Ap 7 '68 700w

BEISSER, ARNOLD R. The madness in sports; psychosocial observations on sports. 241p $4.95 Appleton

796 Sports—Psychological aspects 67-18041

"By analyzing case histories of a number of athletes who developed psychiatric symptoms of such severity as to require treatment, . . . [the author attempts] to identify the common psychological background of the athlete and to investigate the nature of psychological issues underlying sports. Here he discusses such problems as the effect of personal conflict on the athlete's performance, factors influencing choice of a sport, success and failure in sports, and the relationships between coach and player, and father and son." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[Beisser] discusses the role of the spectator in sports. . . . [There is also] a discussion of the changing role of the male in modern urban society—if somewhat sparsely noted. There is the typical criticism of cultural factors and an overemphasis on biologic origins. The last chapter is worth reading by students of personality and abnormal psychology for its summary and description of any underlying dynamics. . . . The publisher should have used the services of an editor to organize what could have been a well written and interesting commentary on a significant part of our culture."

Choice 5:379 My '68 190w

"Setting his study in the context of contemporary American society, Dr. Beisser, an athlete and sports reporter before becoming a practicing psychiatrist, points out that: 'Through repetitive experience in sports one may find personal solution, at least temporarily, to some of the generic problems of our culture.' This book makes a major contribution to understanding contemporary American society. It should be of interest not only to psychiatrists and sociologists, but also to coaches, fathers, and others." M. A. Forslund

Library J 93:88 Ja 1 '68 210w

"Victory in sports, Dr. Beisser says, is psychologically tantamount to destroying the loser—which explains such phenomena as the winning player who continually berates himself or denies that he is indeed winning, to expiate or cover up his guilt. It also explains why athletes treasure a sympathetic coach and enthusiastic fans: they share his guilt, thus enabling him to go all-out for victory. Dr. Beisser offers many similar, often uncomfortable insights. He also ponders the dangers to a society in which the games people play are sometimes more important than the responsibilities of mature adult life."

N Y Times Bk ■ p21 D 17 '67 270w

BEKKER, CAJUS. The Luftwaffe war diaries; tr. and ed. by Frank Ziegler. 399p pl maps $7.95 Doubleday

940.54 Germany. Air Force. World War. 1939-1945—Aerial operations 68-19007

A history of the German Air Force in the second World War. The "narrative is based on the collated Luftwaffe war diaries, none of which have been published yet outside Germany, the personal papers of leading officers, official archives and collections. . . . These documents have been sifted, evaluated, and compared with Allied statements. In addition, the author has questioned hundreds of former German airmen about their personal impressions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. First published in German under the title Angriffshöhe 4000.

BEKKER, CAJUS—Continued

"Military and aviation historians have long wished for a definitive book on the Luftwaffe during World War II. Whether or not this shall ever be written is a moot question. In the meanwhile, this book will have to suffice as the best one to date. [It is] an excellent account. . . . The chapters covering the Battle of Poland, the sudden thrust into the Low Countries, and the fall of France are particularly interesting and contain much new material. . . . It would have been well if Mr. Bekker had elaborated more on the [Battle of Britain]. . . . However, he does very well on the little publicized air operation that brought about the fall of Crete and he writes at length of the activities in the Mediterranean and Russia during 1941 and 1942. . . . This well-written and profusely illustrated book is a vital addition to general collections of World War II." W. N. Hess

Library J 93:2239 Je 1 '68 230w

"This view of the war in the air from the Luftwaffe side confirms most of the conclusions already reached by Allied historians; . . . but on a few points this German picture is illuminating."

TLS p226 Mr 7 '68 350w

BELENITSKY, ALEKSANDR. Central Asia; tr. from the Russian by James Hogarth. (Archaeologia mundi ser) 250p il col il $10 World pub.

915.8 Soviet Central Asia—Antiquities. Archaeology 68-31973

This is a "review of archaeological findings in Central Asia. The coverage is from the Stone Age to pre-Islamic times. . . . [The author gives an account of the historical data for each period followed in turn by a . . . description of the pertinent archaeological remains." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"The influence of the Greek conquest under Alexander, of later Roman penetration, of Mongol invasions and Persian cultures, of Buddhist forms, and of the most early primitive art is well described and illustrated."

Best Sell 28:193 Ag 1 '68 150w

"Since most of these findings have been made by Soviet scientists in the last several decades, the material is especially important because of its graphic description of the early cultures of an area . . . largely unknown and of strategic importance as a center of diffusion. The book is . . . replete with excellent photographs, many in color. The writing and the illustrations make the book of special value to college students and the intelligent lay public. However, the specialist will also find advantage in this useful summary."

Choice 5:1024 O '68 180w

"The specialist on this complex area will find in Mr. Belenitsky's work information on some of the recent explorations. . . . The lay reader will consider this book overburdened with minute details and geographical names. He may impressionistically enjoy the magnificent color plates, but will hardly be able to relate their contents to their historical context. . . . [The book] is a useful contribution to specialized library collections." Joseph Bram

Library J 94:74 Ja 1 '69 80w

BELGUM, DAVID, ed. Religion and medicine; essays on meaning, values and health. (Iowa studies in religion and medicine) 345p $6.50 Iowa state univ. press

261 Medicine and religion. Psychology, Pastoral 67-26060

A collection "of essays engaging the minister and physician in a . . . dialogic analysis of their respective conceptualizations of illness. Both traditional and contemporary movements of thought are present in . . . these critiques on the nature of man's illness in terms of his physical existence—physical, emotional, spiritual. . . . [The papers] emphasize the interdependent factors of organic dysfunction, emotional conflict, and religious doubt operating in the life of man today." (Choice) Some of these essays were previously published in such periodicals as Mental Hygiene, Journal of Pastoral Care, and Journal of Religion and Health.

"An excellent anthology. . . . Meaninglessness, guilt, and peptic ulcers are all equally significant in the diagnosis and therapy of the patient. This lucid anthology on psychosomatic illness is perhaps more challenging than many of its peer publications because it deals more openly with the inadequate position of either religion or medicine alone. It will challenge the educated layman as well as the religio-medico professionals to reevaluate their concepts of illness in terms of the whole man in his life situation. It ought to be required reading for any student of the behavioral sciences."

Choice 5:525 Je '68 200w

"The articles present many controversial ideas and suggestions which tend to stimulate and challenge the reader. . . . Recommended especially for college, public, and theological libraries." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:1636 Ap 15 '68 150w

BELL, ALDON D. London in the age of Dickens. (Okla. Univ. The centers of civilization ser) 184p maps $2.75 Univ. of Okla. press

914.21 London—History 67-64446

This history examines various factors of life in nineteenth century London—"its historical background, the influence of crown and councils, theater and music, institutional and institutionalized culture, its letters and literacy, and the effect of metropolitan culture on the nation at large." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Although he repeatedly asserts that the years he has selected were particularly significant, [Bell] fails to relate the history of London to the events of the period. . . . The title arouses expectations which are almost completely unfulfilled. The love affair tends to make the author breathless, but we get very little appreciation of the object of his affections. The book is printed on paper with an effective life of at least 300 years. The quality of the paper is, unfortunately, not matched by the book. Dickens, Rasmussen, Ford Madox Hueffner (Ford), and Henry Mayhew . . . offer more interesting and more instructive reading."

Choice 5:1205 N '68 150w

"[This] may at once be characterized as a good book on an impossible topic (or an impossible book on a good topic, depending on your point of view). Asa Briggs' Victorian Cities [BRD 1965] has set a high standard for students of British urban history, and, while Bell falls somewhat short of the mark, he has produced a fairly readable account of life in Dickens's London from 1812 to 1870. But as Mr Bell admits, his study is no substitute for a tour of the metropolis conducted by the master himself. Recommended for college and university collections." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:749 F 15 '68 170w

BELL, QUENTIN. Victorian artists. 111p 231l $9 Harvard univ. press

759.2 Painting, British. Painters, British [67-109899]

Based on Professor Bell's "Slade lectures at Oxford in 1965, the book deals with English artists in the period from the death of Constable (and William IV) in 1837 to Roger Fry's Post-Impressionist Exhibition in London in 1910." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index of names and titles.

"This critical survey is broadly stated, forthright, and brief. It is intelligently and charmingly written, rich with information and anecdote, scholarly but in no way ponderous. Individual pictures are not discussed in detail. . . . The choice of plates is fascinating, their quality just adequate. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:614 Jl '68 140w

"On the whole this book will please the revivalists less than those who still persist in the view that for the most part Victorian painting is not for this age. Moreover, one should add that although Mr Bell notes some artists who have been almost forgotten, this is not a talent-spotting book. But these essays do provide fascinating comment on the development of Victorian painting and taste—on the passion in the nineteenth century for art and design, the prodigious output of illustrations, engravings and decorated articles of every description."

Economist 225:xxii D 2 '67 450w

"Clearly, very little has been rewritten [from the lectures]. Though no one could do it as well as [Professor Bell], here, one feels, is a book that some obliging fruity-voiced friend should be persuaded to read out to one. Which would suit the book's method very well: it might disguise the elisions of argument, the blurring of problems, the interdisciplinary doodling that characterise Professor Bell's meandering course through 19th-century English art. As art history, the book displays a serious lack of balance. . . . By far the best part of the book is the long description of the Pre-Raphaelite technique of painting into a wet white ground, where Professor Bell speaks with the authority and loving knowledge that remind one that he is a practising painter himself. But the historical importance of this is underplayed." Timothy Hilton

New Statesman 74:721 N 24 '67 450w

"Joining wit and erudition with ■ felicity of style that entirely becomes a nephew of Virginia Woolf, Mr. Bell charts an entertaining course through a jungle of conflicting influences, from the early German School and the anti-slosh Brotherhood of hard-edge Pre-Raphaelites to the elegance of the New English Art Club and the genius of Sickert. Historian rather than apologist, Bell never once resorts to the art critic's armory of platitudes. If a picture is silly or detestable, he says so. . . . The only serious complaint about this charming book is that, at $9, some at least of the 123 plates should have been in color."

N Y Times Bk ■ p24 Mr 17 '68 340w

TLS p771 J1 25 '68 700w

Va Q R 44:clxxviii autumn '68 90w

BELL, WENDELL, ed. The democratic revolution in the West Indies; studies in nationalism, leadership, and the belief in progress; with ■ foreword by Vernon L. Arnett. 232p pl $8.95; pa $3.95 Schenkman pub.

320.9 West Indies, British—Politics and government. West Indies, British—Social conditions 67-31921

"This volume is the first in a series, 'International Studies in Political and Social Change,' under the general editorship of Wendell Bell. Several of the chapters in this volume represent summations of books that [will be] subsequently published as part of the same series. The major focus of this work is the exploration and delineation of the attitudes of West Indian leaders, particularly as these bear upon the Enlightenment beliefs of egalitarianism, progress and democracy. Various contributors also have related the leaders' general beliefs to their background characteristics and positions on different political and economic issues." (Am Soc R) Name index. Subject index.

"A major drawback to the book is that the background of the West Indies receives very little attention. . . . Also, since this book is primarily concerned with the beliefs and attitudes of the leaders, more information would have been appropriate concerning the social context from which they emerged. . . . The sample consists of formal and reputed leaders with no independent verification to ascertain whether they are, in fact, the most important decision-makers. The authors make a somewhat puzzling decision to ignore, for the most part, regional variation among the leaders. . . . Despite the book's many drawbacks, it does provide insight and information." Arthur Liebman

Am Soc R 33:146 F '68 1200w

"The studies do not tell us a great deal about recent events or current problems. There is ■ good chapter by Mr. Oxaal on the background of the independence movement in Trinidad, and one would like to have a similar chapter on Jamaica. . . . [However] there is little discussion of the problems of the smaller islands."

D. G. Munro

Ann Am Acad 376:172 Mr '68 500w

"Most of [the authors] have collected and analyzed data over a four-year period (1960-1964). . . . [Among] matters treated in the book are the factors of race and class in Barbados, morale among sugar-factory workers in Antigua, and the general tendency of Jamaican secondary-school and university students—future educators and government officials—to favor economic and social equality. A volume for scholarly collections." Joseph Boromé

Library J 92:1498 Ap 1 '67 300w

BELLAMY, EDWARD. Looking backward. 2000-1887; ed. by John L. Thomas. 314p $5.95 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

67-14337

This reprinting of the utopian novel first published in 1888 is attended by the editor's re-evaluation of the novel. "The time is 2000; the place, Boston. Julian West, a young man of inherited wealth, awakens from a 113-year hypnotic sleep. Revived by Dr. Leete, one of the cultivated, high-minded citizens of the new age, and solaced by Edith, the doctor's beautiful daughter, Julian West comes to in his native city. The way it is, explained by Dr. Leete, the way it was, recounted by Julian West, and a romance developing between Julian and Edith—this is the gist of the plot." (N Y Times Bk R)

"As long as men aspire to ■ better scheme of things they will wish to read Edward Bellamy. . . . [To] Bellamy, and to many contemporary readers and followers, 'Looking Backward' seemed ■ veritable blueprint for building the good society. That is where psychological naïveté came in. One no longer reads it for literal guidance, but rather for its large and expansive ideas, as well as the light it throws on still unsolved social problems."

Walter Teller

N Y Times Bk ■ p2 D 31 '67 2250w

"In viewing Looking Backward as a reflection of Bellamy's private demands for an ordered life, Professor Thomas has quoted liberally from the author's unpublished notebooks ■ well as from his earlier work, particularly an essay, assembled in 1874, entitled 'The Religion of Solidarity,' which Bellamy himself acknowledged as containing the germ of his philosophy. The essay, Thomas believes, forms the focal point on which all of Bellamy's fiction converges and describes in detail the psychological substructure on which utopian society in Looking Backward is built. . . . Certainly, one would be hard put to quarrel with Professor Thomas's interpretation in view of the impressive evidence he has marshaled."

Sat R 50:54 Je 10 '67 700w

BELLECOMBE, L. GREYFIÉ DE. See Greyfié de Bellecombe, L.

BELLORI, GIOVANNI PIETRO. The lives of Annibale & Agostino Carracci; tr. from the Italian by Catherine Enggass; foreword by Robert Enggass. 122p il $5 Pa. state univ. press

759.5 Carracci, Agostino. Carracci, Annibale. Paintings, Italian 67-16194

A biography of the two brothers who "were the dominant figures in initiating the academic revival of Italian painting during the latter half of the 16th Century. Their aim was to return the art of painting [away from the Mannerist school back] to that of classical realism." (Library J) This is ■ translation from Vite de' Pittori, Scultori ed Architetti Moderni, published in Rome in 1672.

"[This translation] clearly will benefit the student of the Baroque, for Bellori's detailed yet human accounts of the two Bolognese painters enrich our conception of many aspects of their art. Bellori is the best 17th-century source on Annibale and Agostino. . . . Unfortunately, there are no notes, indices, or reproductions of the paintings at all."

Choice 5:614 J1 '68 100w

"[This account] is a beautiful, perceptive piece of writing as important in the literature of art history as were the paintings of the Carracci in the world of the art object. This is a sensitive translation; the foreword provides the needed background information about the painters and the author, and the book itself is handsomely bound and printed." David Gebhard

Library J 93:2849 Ag '68 150w

BELLOW, SAUL. Mosby's memoirs, and other stories. 184p $5 Viking

68-31395

The six short stories in this collection are: Leaving the yellow house (1957); The old system (1967); Looking for Mr. Green (1951); The Gonzaga manuscripts (1954); A father-to-be (1955); and Mosby's memoirs (1968). These stories have appeared previously in such publications as Esquire and Playboy.

"The title story, about ■ diplomat trying not to draw misanthropic conclusions from a

BELLOW, SAUL—Continued

recollected life, is a smallscale Herzog [BRD 1964, 1965], so sketchy as to seem the rehearsal of some future book. 'The Old System,' in which a Jewish scientist reviewing the history of his venal-vital family concludes that untidy life may be the best available, seems the pale ghost of [The Adventures of] Augie March [BRD 1953]. 'Leaving the Yellow House,' in which an impoverished alcoholic affirms existence at its lowest ebb, is a more sentimental, less truly observed 'Seize the Day' [BRD 1956]. . . . [The book] does contain one item that can never lose its freshness: 'Looking for Mr. Green.' About an educated man forced during the Depression to work for the Welfare Department, this story traces his attempt to deliver a relief check to the elusive title character. In the course of his adventures . . . the hero begins really to feel for his clients, so that he is no longer a worker for personal survival but a seeker for human betterment." C. T. Samuels
Atlantic 222:126 N '68 1150w

Reviewed by W. H. Archer

Best Sell 28:312 N 1 '68 270w

"Three of these six stories—'Looking for Mr. Green,' 'A Father-to-Be,' and 'The Gonzaga Manuscripts'—. . . were printed in a volume with the short novel Seize the Day. . . No one questions the authority and impact of Mr. Bellow's novels. But these stories will be of greatest interest to those academics whose job it is to measure a writer for greatness. . . . 'Mosby,' as far as I'm concerned, is a slice of action at the beginning, a slice of action at the end, and a fat slab of recollection in the middle—a flashback sandwich. It is my feeling that Mr. Bellow and/or his publishers wish, with this volume, to assure the reading public that post-Herzog Saul Bellow is calm—and collected. . . . Despite flashes of irony and humor, there is something leaden about these stories: a sensibility gap exists between their conception and their execution. . . . I find them neither great nor significant." Robert Lasson

Book World p6 O 20 '68 1150w

Christian Century 85:1374 O 30 '68 20w

"[Here are] six short stories about people who by design or by fate try to make it alone. None succeeds, particularly the memorable Hattie, an old lady dying in the Utah desert, and Mosby, a wasted intellectual. It is significant that nothing is resolved in any of the portraits, that Mr. Bellow is more fascinated with the individual than with the plot. And while two stories are relatively weak, the four main entries are in the best Bellow style. In fact, Hattie well deserves a place with Herzog and Henderson as classic characterization. A book for any library anywhere." Bill Katz

Library J 93:3797 O 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by D. J. Enright

Nation 207:725 D 30 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Theodore Solotaroff

New Repub 160:21 Ja 11 '69 2650w

Reviewed by Ivan Gold

N Y Times Bk R p4 N 3 '68 2000w

New Yorker 44:247 N 16 '68 90w

Reviewed by Pete Axthelm

Newsweek 72:122 O 28 '68 550w

Reviewed by J. K. Simon

Sat R 52:86 Ja 11 '69 1000w

Time 92:118 N 3 '68 800w

BELSHAW, MICHAEL. A village economy: land and people of Huecorio. 421p il $10 Columbia univ. press

309.172 Huecorio. Villages. Mexico—Economic conditions. Peasantry 66-28489

An associate professor of economics at Hunter College "has used the tools of the economist and of the anthropologist to probe the causes of developmental impasse in a typical Mexican village. He has chosen Huecorio as a model of rural life in a search for the factors which are symptomatic of entrenched poverty in the widespread underdeveloped regions of the world. Huecorio, with its population of some 850, lies on the shores of Lake Pátzcuaro, 240 miles west of Mexico City. . . . [Belshaw examines] production methods and entrepreneurship, social structure and traditions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Although Belshaw appears at times to have wandered without map or compass, the pages of his travel record are filled with fascinating detail that will provide indispensable reference points for future social scientists. . . . The best sections of the book deal with the facts of rural technology at the subsistence level, the importance of the steel plow (and advantages of imported over domestically produced plows), the relative receptivity to new techniques, frustrations of rural extension workers, attitudes of individual farmers to change (described in detail), and comments of those who, after leaving the village as braceros, chose to return. . . . [The author] has provided a wealth of source material which cannot be ignored by any student of rural development." C. W. Reynolds

Am Econ R 58:585 Je '68 1300w

"The book is an interesting attempt to collect and analyze data on economics of a type not familiar to most economists of modern countries. It could have been improved if the author had given at the start a comprehensive sociocultural sketch of the community and its people. Those familiar with the region know that most of the people are probably Indians or at least have some Indian ancestry. But the reader is not told this; are there any mestizos or mixed-bloods? . . . Much work is on a family basis, but what is the typical family like? And so on. I am afraid that many readers will have trouble visualizing these people whose economics the author has so skillfully dug up and analyzed." J. P. Gillin

Am Pol Sci R 61:1165 D '67 480w

"[In this study of] a rural Tarascan Indian village the small society is treated as a microcosm of underdeveloped areas. Policy recommendations are made throughout in commenting on things as they are and could be. Extensive tabulation of data provides useful bases for comparisons, but the author rarely makes concrete comparison with other such studies, as the book jacket claims. His dismissal of anthropological interest in the economics of peasantry is not justified since he does not refer to even the Mexican community studies by anthropologists which have stressed a quantitative approach and the use of concepts developed by economists. . . . Would be a useful study in course work on peasant economies at an undergraduate or graduate level."

Choice 4:1323 Ja '68 190w

Reviewed by A. L. Stinchcombe

Pol Sci Q 83:499 S '68 550w

BELSON, W. A. The impact of television: methods and findings in program research. (Archon bk) 400p $10 Shoe String

384.55 Television broadcasting 67-8664

A former member of the Audience Research Department of the B.B.C. reports on "the British people's interests, attitudes, and availability for viewing television. Most of these surveys were conducted in the greater London area." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Based on research conducted . . . in England from 1950-63, the book details research processes that can be replicated anywhere. It delineates techniques for conducting television program research from planning stages to measurement of particular and general effects. Written especially for readers with professional interest in television program research, the book is geared to reach students, teachers, educational broadcasters, program directors, and market researchers. It is a valuable introduction to mass media research for lower level college students."

Choice 5:640 Jl '68 140w

Reviewed by Edward Mapp

Library J 93:995 Mr 1 '68 210w

"[Dr. Belson's] broad, bland study appears to be based on an extraordinarily simple view of television as a commodity which satisfies, well or badly, certain existing and ascertainable public wants. . . . But television is not merely fed into the public's desires, interests, prejudices and values; it helps to create them. The 'creative pleasure' of working in it is the chance to alter society, not to find new and ingenious ways of tickling the public palate." Francis Hope

New Statesman 75:245 F 23 '68 230w

"[This is] an important entry to the literature. [It] is the best and most enlightened account of techniques and progress in audience research. The devilment in this field till now has been a professional reluctance to consider methods involving value premises or indeed anything much more sophisticated than head-counting. Dr. Belson is aware of this limitation and he discreetly challenges fellow workers to greater enterprise. He is also rightly concerned that television people do not use research enough."

TLS p1107 N 23 '67 360w

BEMIS, SAMUEL FLAGG, ed. The American secretaries of state and their diplomacy; v17, John Foster Dulles, by Louis L. Gerson; [ed. by] Robert H. Ferrell and Samuel Flagg Bemis. 372p $7.95 Cooper sq.

353.1 Dulles, John Foster. U.S.—Foreign relations 67-24039

A study of the career of the late Secretary of State. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A third of the book is devoted to Dulles' pre-1953 career. . . . Although these introductory chapters are valuable, the reviewer would have liked to have read more details on Dulles' last two years as Secretary of State when dramatic events culminated almost in the fashion of Greek tragedies. . . . The presentation in short compass of Dulles' colorful personality and the many foreign political changes under the Eisenhower administration is no small achievement. The narrative is dynamic and vivid. This excellent volume is essential reading for all serious students of American diplomacy." S. D. Kertesz

Ann Am Acad 378:167 J1 '68 500w

"This study, the first to draw on the Dulles papers at Princeton, enjoys an advantage over the many others [which] have surveyed Dulles' career. Regrettably, however, Gerson has chosen to plod through innumerable conferences and conversations without balancing his narrative with analysis or evaluation. While [he] hints occasionally that Dulles was a controversial figure, he seems to identify with the secretary's moralistic anti-Communism and is usually uncritical. An adequate account of Dulles' activities; a sensitive study remains to be written."

Choice 5:402 My '68 80w

"This volume could have been a significant study of a commanding personality, but regrettably it is only a handy summary of Dulles' secretaryship and affords neither sophisticated evaluation nor keen analysis." Milton Plesur

J Am Hist 55:430 S '68 420w

"[This volume] presents an honest, readable, scholarly, and complete account of its subject. Value judgments are few. . . . The biggest surprise to this reader is the disclosure that Eisenhower had a good grasp of foreign affairs. Mr. Gerson, who heads the department of political science at the University of Connecticut, was able to interview him, Mr. Truman, and other noted contemporaries, and he has made good use of many primary sources. Some may attack this book for appearing too soon for historical perspective. I believe it is extremely timely and, in spite of some organizational shortcomings, is an essential purchase for libraries that own the rest of the series and have collections on foreign policy." C. P. Armin

Library J 93:1473 Ap 1 '68 160w

BENCHLEY, NATHANIEL. Welcome to Xanadu. 304p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

68-16866

Doris Mae Winter is a farmer's sixteen-year-old "daughter whose life has been [one] of boredom and frustration. [She] is abducted by [Leonard Hatch] an escapee from a mental institution, and in the few days in which he holds her prisoner he opens her eyes and teaches her to think." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens
Book World p6 Ag 4 '68 700w

"The title warns you, as in many of Mr. Benchley's novels, that you are about to forsake the world of reality, and once you've accepted the terms of this preposterous tale (if anything based on violence can be preposterous these days) of a kidnapping in New Mexico, you're ready to sit down and be entertained. . . . [Doris Mae] has known nothing but work and a few brushes with sex until her erstwhile poet-actor-kidnapper opens up to her the unlikely worlds of poetry. (Kubla Khan is her favorite with the Odyssey a close second.) The author treads—not always successfully—a tightrope between melodrama and sentimentality but he keeps the thrills coming to the very end."

Harper 237:77 Ag '68 160w

"The story is suspenseful, not without humor, and is recommended for fiction collections. . . . Mr. Benchley's portrayal of Hatch is superb. Less realistic is his portrayal of Hatch's victim, Doris Mae. Product of an unhappy home environment and naïve, although at times 'dumb like a fox,' the likeable Doris Mae does not exhibit reactions typical of a person in her predicament. It is as though Mr. Benchley were not sure whether suspense or humor should predominate. In spite of this, the book will be enjoyed by his many admirers." D. W. Cloudsley

Library J 93:2520 Je 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p33 J1 21 '68 190w

"It's an old gimmick but a good one, the story of a woman kidnapped and held prisoner by an escapee from a mental institution. . . . [The] kidnapper, Leonard Hatch (whose name she never learns), is as erudite as Doris Mae is ignorant but a man so mixed up in his sex life, which Mr. Benchley shows in flashbacks, that he has never had a satisfactory relationship with anyone. . . . Why he takes Doris Mae to Xanadu, as he calls his shack in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, is never quite explained. But Mr. Benchley . . . is not content to make this simply a chase-and-suspense story. He tries to keep the dialogue drily amusing, and succeeds. Unfortunately, he also tries to add depth to the novel through the understanding Doris Mae and Leonard come to have for each other. It doesn't work." Elizabeth Easton

Sat R 51:65 Ag 6 '68 440w

Time 92:70 J1 5 '68 310w

BENDICK, JEANNE. The emergency book; written and ill. by Jeanne Bendick. 144p $3.95 Rand McNally

614.8 First aid in illness and injury—Juvenile literature. Accidents—Prevention—Juvenile literature. Safety education—Juvenile literature 67-18895

The author provides "information on what can and should be done in various situations which demand quick thinking. [The] scope covers accident prevention; first aid; fires; emergencies in the home, on the road, and with animals; and weather, sports, and community disasters, [as well] . . . as baby sitting, getting lost, and getting locked in or out of some place. [Index.] Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:78 F '68 30w

"In her usual clear style Jeanne Bendick provides a wealth of information. . . . There are many checklists, and a good one on the first aid equipment that should be in every household." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 92:4619 D 15 '67 150w

"Parents should give this book a hearty welcome, and children will probably feel the same way, since the writing is informal and direct, and the cartoon-style drawings are informative and amusing. . . . All of the material is carefully organized and cross-referenced." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:17 N 11 '67 90w

BENEDIKT, MICHAEL. The body. 77p $4; pa $2 Wesleyan univ. press

811

68-27539

Poems by the associate editor of Art News. Some of these poems have appeared previously in such periodicals as Poetry, Transatlantic Review and Art and Literature.

"Benedikt, whose writings on the theater are well known, turns out to be a poet of exceptional merit. His verse is surely a near equivalent of a Chagall painting. In both, curious unrealities and soaring abstractions combine with mundane recognizable fact, and both have an emotional appeal that just about takes the breath away. Mr. Benedikt engages in out of the way, and even arcane, expatiations on what he sees about him. . . . One or two of the poems in the collection are of the new concrete sort, but these do not . . . wander aimlessly about the page, and are, in fact, more nearly shaped poems of the old sort than concrete. The book is highly recommended for poetry collections in public and academic libraries." Peter Gellatly

Library J 93:3566 O 1 '68 220w

"God and death are equally remote from the common themes of Mr. Benedikt's unfortunate book. . . . By letting some fairly free associations carry him along, he has managed to compose some dozens of apparent poems. His surrealist images ought to distract one from the tedium of his work; but the successive lines are linked primarily by a dull determination to be unpredictable. Once in a while a moderately appealing whimsy supplies a moderately pleading effect. But Mr. Benedikt's continual effort to make cheerfulness do the job, while thought, feeling, and verbal texture go hang, strips his fantasy of the charm essential to the genre."

BENEDIKT, MICHAEL—Continued

TLS p1172 O 17 '68 150w

BENESCH, EVA. Master drawings in the Albertina. See Benesch, O.

BENESCH, OTTO. Master drawings in the Albertina; European drawings from the 15th to the 18th century, by Otto Benesch in collaboration with Eva Benesch. 379p $32.50 N.Y. graphic

741.9 Vienna, Albertina. Drawings, European—Catalogs 67-16948

"A revised translation of the German edition of 1964. . . . [included are] documents relating to the early history of the collection, printed in their original languages. The individual drawings, 236 in all, are organized by nationality and then more or less chronologically so that developmental patterns within each national grouping are also apparent." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Benesch's book fills an important gap for the English reading connoisseur of drawings. . . . It is in reality a pictorial history of drawing styles. The opening text deals with the origins of the Albertina and is a welcome addition to our knowledge of the formation of this great collection. . . . Turning the pages of this book it becomes obvious that quality and not only well-known names was the key to selection. The book closes with a short but balanced scholarly discussion of every drawing reproduced. The plates are all of excellent quality."

Choice 4:1232 Ja '68 160w

"While there have been publications relating to the museum's collections, this first volume conceived as an introduction to its drawings is of the highest quality available in English. . . . [The] section of reproductions is followed by a catalog that includes necessary information on provenance, bibliography, and so forth. . . . With the rising interest in the drawing for its charm, a book like this is a joy. Recommended for all large art collections and for smaller ones which will find it expensive but worth it, and for the informed." Julia Sabine

Library J 92:2915 S 1 '67 200w

BENEVOLO, LEONARDO. The origins of modern town planning; tr. by Judith Landry. 154p il maps $5.50 M.I.T. press

711 City planning 67-17494

The author examines the origins of town planning—"ideological and technical—in nineteenth-century France and England, and discusses the two factors that made town planning both urgent and possible: the economic and social upheavals of the time, and the changes in political theory and public opinion. The work of 'Utopian' reformers, such as Owen, Saint-Simon, Fourier, Cabet, and Godin is considered, as is that of the specialists and officials who supervised the new regulations." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of Le Origini dell'Urbanistica Moderna, published in Italy in 1963. Index.

"Benevolo's historical interpretation of the origins of the detachment of town planning from the political forces striving for a transformation of society shows the fundamental errors committed in the past 200 years. . . . The book makes its point in a low keyed, scholarly, and well documented manner with copious illustrations."

Choice 5:940 O '68 180w

Economist 223:viii Ap 15 '67 650w

Reviewed by Nathan Silver

New Statesman 73:550 Ap 21 '67 750w

"Though it might be possible to quibble with [some points] . . . or to suspect that royal or aristocratic patronage gets a stiff scrutiny from Mr. Benevolo's leftwing standpoint, [his points are] well made. What he . . . [does] very lucidly and with much effective quotation is to look at the ideas from which our present-day town-planning has descended and to expose its inadequacies. . . . One might question whether the political distinction Mr. Benevolo makes between the earlier utopian tradition and the later developments of enlightened capitalism . . . means as much in forming the character of the town as he would suggest. . . . The sceptic can nevertheless recommend this [book] . . . without sharing the conclusions that Mr. Benevolo draws."

TLS p592 J1 6 '67 750w

BENNET, E. A. What Jung really said. 185p $4 Schocken

150.19 Jung, Carl Gustav 67-13153

The major topics covered in this book are: "background and development of Jung's thinking, personality classifications, analysis of the components of personality, the unconscious dreams, active imagination, alchemical symbolism and philosophy, psychotherapy, and Jung's relationships to Freud." (Choice) Index.

"The style [of this book] is clear, appropriate for the intelligent layman, unencumbered, and yet not pedestrian. The author's choice of material is judicious and the exposition of it shows deft craftsmanship. The work is directed toward the general reader, but even Jungian experts may find some interesting tid-bits in it."

Choice 4:1446 F '68 100w

"Mr. Bennet, a psychotherapist and friend of the late Dr. Jung . . . has produced a well-written book . . . that can be highly recommended for the general and the subject collection." George Adelman

Library J 92:3049 ■ 15 '67 210w

BENNETT, JEREMY. British broadcasting and the Danish resistance movement, 1940-1945; a study of the wartime broadcasts of the B.B.C. Danish service. 266p $10 Cambridge

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Denmark. World War, 1939-1945—Propaganda. British Broadcasting Corporation 66-17533

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Harold Graves

Am Pol Sci R 62:298 Mr '68 460w

Reviewed by M. R. D. Foot

Engl Hist R 83:434 Ap '68 130w

Reviewed by Erik Barnouw

Pol Sci Q 83:289 Je '68 900w

BENNETT, JOHN W. Hutterian brethren; the agricultural economy and social organization of a communal people. 298p il $8 Stanford univ. press

309.171 Hutterite brethren 67-17299

"The Hutterian Brethren, an Anabaptist sect that practices strict communal living based on religious principles, is here studied through a detailed examination of six colonies in southwestern Saskatchewan. . . . The Hutterians do not reject modern technology. Organized in colonies of 130 to 150 people on communal farms, they have flourished economically in the forbidding natural environment of the Great Plains area. The author's objectives are to show how one group of typical colonies found their land, established their agricultural economy, and worked out relations with the local inhabitants, and to discover why the Hutterites have been so successful. Among the topics discussed are family and kinship, instrumental organization, agricultural management and decision-making methods of production, and patterns of change in Hutterian society and technology." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Bennett . . . analyzes the Brethren primarily as entrepreneurs and administrators rather than as religious sectarians. A major theme of the book is the ability of Hutterite colonies to adapt to a variety of environments, both natural and social. . . . Competently written, with a number of useful tables and diagrams, this volume will be a useful addition to most college libraries."

Choice 5:688 J1 '68 200w

"[The author] gives a cogent and detailed description and analysis . . . [discussing] local variations [and] emphasizing homogeneous qualities of each Hutterite community. Although his central concern is economic and social co-operation, he brings out important factors for students of religion, political organization, and philosophy. Presenting only a brief historical background his approach is that of the anthropological field investigator who successfully delineates patterns of a folk society, and compares these to similar systems; here the Israeli kibbutz. This will become a major reference book." Harold Blau

Library J 92:4505 D 15 '67 130w

BENNETT, SIR JOHN W. WHEELER. See Wheeler-Bennett, J. W.

BENNETT, LERONE. Black power U.S.A: the human side of reconstruction, 1867-1877 [by] Lerone Bennett, Jr. 401p il $6.95 Johnson pub. (Chicago)

973.8 Negroes—History. Reconstruction 67-28229

The senior editor of Ebony presents an historical study of the "years between 1867 and 1877 [when] black men were elected to the legislatures of every Southern state. Lieutenant governors and other cabinet officers were elected in Mississippi, Louisiana, and South Carolina. Twenty black men were sent to the U.S. House of Representatives from the South, and two black politicians were elected to the U.S. Senate from the state of Mississippi. . . . [The author maintains that] an understanding of the triumphs and failures of this first Reconstruction is indispensable for an understanding of the triumphs and failures of the second Reconstruction we are now undergoing." (Pref) This book is an expanded version of a study which appeared in Ebony magazine from November, 1965 to January, 1967. Bibliography. Index.

"A significant book with lively narrative and popular appeal. . . . Mr. Bennett dwells on the psychology of the postwar South, and the motivations of both black and white politicians. . . . Though readers may disagree with Mr. Bennett's point of view, Black Power offers a readable synthesis of historical research, and it provides a good basis for thought and discussion. Recommended for public and academic libraries." A. K. Randall

Library J 93:1629 Ap 15 '68 190w

"Bennett is not an apologist for the excesses committed by illiteracy and incompetence, but he manages to give a more credible report of the reforms actually instituted by cooperation of black and white leaders, supported by the votes of the poor freedmen and the poor whites. He also provides an excellent comprehension of the tremendous handicaps faced by any well-intentioned black politician. . . . [The author] is a master of exposition, for he makes sense out of the amazingly complex, conglomerate, and contradictory situations found in Mississippi, for example, and in New Orleans. . . . Although [he] thinks of black power during Reconstruction as a dream unfulfilled, he is not raising heroes. The strength of his writing lies in his ability to view all sides of a man in the light of background and environment. Hence there are some memorable portraits of leaders, black, white, and in between. Some were idealists, some were opportunists, some were corrupt." Harry Hansen

Sat R 51:40 Mr 23 '68 600w

BENNETT, NORMAN R., jt. ed. Reconstructing African culture history. See Gabel, C.

BENNETT, ROWENA. The day is dancing, and other poems; il. by Rainey Bennett. 96p $3.50; Titan ed $3.48 Follett

811 68-10478

This collection of sixty-three poems was first published in 1948 under the title Story-Teller Poems. Title index. "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"The book is unashamedly old-fashioned in sentiment and style; but its subjects range the fields of space, time, and imagination: necks and noses, elfin folk, fairies, flowers, wind and smoke, umbrellas, power shovels, grumbling trucks, the Creator and the Milky Way—all with equal zest. It is a neat, sweet, accomplished little collection, with moments of pure poetry, and never a grief, a pain, a fear or a skerrick of dirt." N. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 7 '68 270w

"[This collection] makes use of all the hackneyed themes usually treated in a book of verse for children. The majority of poems are saccharine, trivial and contrived, but there are a few fine selections such as 'Smoke Animals,' 'God Is Like This,' and 'Autumn Wind.' Unfortunately, these few and the pleasant watercolor illustrations cannot compensate for the majority of spiritless verse." Doris Solomon

Library J 93:3953 O 15 '68 70w

BENNETT, ROWENA. Songs from around a toadstool table; il. by Betty Fraser. 60p $3.50; Titan ed $3.48 Follett

811 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 67-15618

This is a "collection of verse on nature subjects (wind, rain, dandelions) as well as boats, airplanes, Halloween, Easter, and others. . . . Most of the selections appeared in previous collections by the author which are now out of print. [Index.] Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"[Mrs. Bennett] combines the feeling of nature's mysteries with the excitement of childhood discovery. The poems, with their lyrical rhymes, are a happy combination of fantasy and reality and are enhanced by simple, expressive gray-and-white drawings." B. H. Gibson

Library J 92:4241 N 15 '67 90w

"[This volume relies] on the tried and true. There is nothing in [it] that will make anyone mad." John Unterecker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p61 N 5 '67 50w

BENNETT, VICTOR. The complete bean cookbook; decorations by Janet Anderson. 298p il $5.95 Prentice-Hall

641.6 Cookery—Beans 67-13117

An exploration of "the ways in which 20 varieties of bean may be prepared for hors d'oeuvres, soups, salads, main dishes, even desserts." (Best Sell)

"The recipes seem a bit repetitious at times, but they are all worth trial—and tried they will likely, most likely indeed, be repeated." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 27:162 J1 15 '67 130w

"Bennett's book is attractive and imaginative. . . . A variety of cold bean salads . . . spiced, garlicked and dressed—make a succulent accompaniment for cocktails." Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 My 12 '68 40w

BENNIGSEN, ALEXANDRE. Islam in the Soviet Union [by] Alexandre Bennigsen & Chantal Lemerrier-Quelquejay; with an introd. by Geoffrey E. Wheeler [tr. from the French by Geoffrey E. Wheeler and Hubert Evans] pub. in assn. with the Central Asian res. centre, London. 272p maps $7 Praeger

323.1 Islam and state. Muslims in Russia. Russia—Religion 67-13872

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. A. Zenkovsky
Am Hist R 73:1200 Ap '68 390w

Reviewed by R. A. Rupen
Am Pol Sci R 62:1002 S '68 340w

Reviewed by R. A. Pierce
Ann Am Acad 378:153 J1 '68 440w

BENNIS, WARREN G. Changing organizations; essays on the development and evolution of human organization. 223p il $8.25; text ed $6.95 McGraw

301.15 Social groups 65-25915

"The author has divided his material into two parts. In part one, he deals with what he calls evolutionary trends in organizational development . . . [identifying] the decline of bureaucracies and the growth, in number and importance, of democratic organizations. . . . In part two, Bennis discusses the planning and control of organizational change. [He summarizes] approaches to organizational change . . . [including] laboratory or sensitivity-training programs." (Harvard Ed R)

"[Bennis has] written in the tradition of social philosophy but with a powerful theoretical base for his speculations. . . . This reviewer is disappointed that Bennis relied so heavily on his own internal logic. . . . There is ample empirical evidence today to [support his thesis] . . . Those interested in the dynamics of planned change will find this small book stimulating and useful. Perhaps the most important contributions are Bennis' hypotheses or proto-theories. They may be ■ significant for organizational research in the next decade as the works of Merton, Blau, Selznick, and Gouldner have been in the past." R. H. Guest Am Soc ■ 31:744 O '66 600w

BENNIS, W. G.—Continued

"These essays are reprinted from a variety of sources, but Bennis has added brief introductory and transitional sections which allow reasonable continuity of thought. The presentation and language are suited to the general reader, rather than the technical expert. . . . It is important to note that Bennis is not talking about any particular organizations. There is no description or analysis of an actual operating bureaucracy or democratic organization. Rather, these are treated as 'ideal' types, about which generalizations can be made. . . . [This] is certainly not an eclectic, unbiased survey of the tools available for effecting organizational change, nor is it an objective analysis of the process of organizational change. It is, instead, an articulate presentation of the philosophy, experience, and accumulated wisdom of an exceptionally able teacher and practitioner. The result is exciting reading." G. H. Litwin

Harvard Ed ■ 37:688 fall '67 950w

BENNIS, WARREN G. The temporary society [by] Warren G. Bennis and Philip E. Slater. 147p $4.95 Harper

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions 68-15985

"Bennis, former professor of organizational management and psychology, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and P. Slater, who teaches sociology at Brandeis University, here attempt to synthesize the effects of rapid and chronic change on modern society, especially American society. They argue in a series of six essays that only a democratic social system 'can successfully cope with the changing demand of contemporary civilization' because only democracy is adaptive enough to respond to a permanent condition of perpetual societal change." (Library J) Index.

"It should be noted that 'democracy' here is interpreted as an egalitarian, pluralistic, decentralizing philosophy and not merely as 'a particular political format.' The hypothesis is developed in detailed analyses; Mr. Slater has written on family behavior patterns, and Mr. Bennis on business management theory. In each instance, they show how constantly accelerating change has radically weakened traditional social values which derived from relatively stable relationships and hierarchical organization. The ideas presented here are not new but the synthesis is unique, and therein lies the value of these essays. To be effective, social science requires that someone put the bits and pieces together intelligently. This the authors have done." K. F. Kister
Library J 93:2682 J1 '68 180w

"I believe that the failure of the authors explicitly to relate their definition of democracy . . . to the demands of democracy in the classic sense vexes and bedevils the argument at every point through an otherwise most stimulating and interesting book. But equally serious, I think, is their taking of present mindless, technology-led, rapid social change as a datum. . . . I think it exceedingly doubtful that any trace of democracy can long survive it, and I believe we now see such democracy as we have tottering punch-drunk in the face of it. . . . The questions raised by the book are of the first importance. . . . If the authors are right we are on a paradisiacal path where this reviewer sees only and wrongly ■ wellpaved road to hell. The issue deserves the weightiest discussion." J. R. Seeley
Science 162:343 O 18 '68 1500w

BENOIT, EMILE, ed. Disarmament and world economic interdependence [by] Emile Benoit, with the assistance of Nils Petter Gleditsch. (Int. peace res. Inst. Oslo. Peace res. monograph) 260p $8 Columbia univ. press

341.6 Disarmament 67-31930

"The book contains 17 papers prepared for the Conference on Economic Aspects of World Disarmament and Interdependence held in August, 1965 at Oslo, Norway." (Am Econ R)

"The leading article by Benoit and Harold Lubell of AID provides, for the first time, a comprehensive standardized tabulation of the economic resources devoted to national security by 36 nations. . . . This article should be a significant reference source for economists, sociologists, and political scientists interested in the impact of military spending. The book is enhanced by several excellent essays on specific countries. . . . Like so many other reports on conferences, a few of the articles seem to be included more for diplomatic reasons than for scholarly content. . . . Following the Middle East and Vietnam settlements, perhaps this book will become a reference work for those leaders responsible for easing the adjustment from war to partial disarmament." A. L. Gray
Am Econ R 57:1389 D '67 600w

"[The volume] is eclectic, empirical, and the authors tend to stress the advantages of arms reduction. The articles are diverse in scope, central concepts, and method. . . . In method the articles range from a perceptive essay by Alexander Eckstein on 'Arms Control and the Vulnerability of Communist China's Economy to External Pressures and Inducements,' to Johan Galtung's interesting cross-national (Norway, France, Poland) survey of public attitudes on the economic effect of disarmament. Many present quantitative data (and even some mathematical models) in support of their conclusions. [There is no] strong introductory or concluding essay . . . to tie the various papers together. Owing to the great diversity in [the] chapters, this omission is particularly regrettable." O. R. Holsti

Am Pol Sci ■ 61:1180 D '67 450w

Reviewed by Robert Triffin
Pol Sci Q 83:436 S '68 700w

BENSON, ELIZABETH P. The Maya world. 172p il $6.95 Crowell

970.3 Mayas 67-18523

The "curator for the pre-Columbian collection at Dumbarton Oaks in Washington has written an . . . account of the world of the ancient Maya of southern Mexico and Guatemala. Although concentrating upon the achievements of the Maya of the classic period . . . she also delves into the origins and development of the Maya civilization, and . . . touches on the Mexican invasion of the Yucatan and the Spanish conquest. . . . [She discusses] the work of the archaeologists and others in unraveling the complexities of Maya civilization, and of the various theories proposed for its development." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Combines an easy readable style with competent and detailed content. Although Benson's information is for the most part accurate and right up to date, this volume is no better than Michael Coe's The Maya [BRD 1967]. The black-and-white illustrations are numerous and attractive but not especially new, most can be found in any number of volumes on the Maya. Coverage of the culture is adequate, and Benson is not afraid to point out areas where data are in short supply and problems unsolved. Her bibliography is far too short as are her comments on travel information. . . . The volume is aimed at the general lay reader from high school and beyond with nothing new or innovative for the reader already initiated into Maya culture."

Choice 5:246 Ap '68 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 92:4275 N 15 '67 60w [YA]

"Miss Benson gives no citations to the sources, but that does not detract a bit from the excellence of her writing and her superb fund of knowledge about the Maya World. . . . A worthy purchase for anyone interested in knowing more about one of the great civilizations created in the New World. Recommended for public and academic libraries." Mary Gormly

Library J 93:92 Ja 1 '68 160w

BENSON, FREDERICK R. Writers in arms: the literary impact of the Spanish Civil war; foreword by Salvador de Madariaga. 345p $5.95 N.Y. univ. press

809.9 Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939. Literature and history. Literature—History and criticism 67-25045

The author traces "the nature of the commitment of six writers—Ernest Hemingway, George Orwell, Gustaf Regler, Arthur Koestler, André Malraux, and George Bernanos—who all participated in some way on the Republican side of the struggle. Their commitments ranged from a negation of politics (Hemingway, Orwell) to disillusionment with Communism (Regler, Koestler), and to intellectual idealism beyond party affiliation (Malraux, Bernanos)." (Library J) Chronology of the Spanish Civil War. Bibliography. Index.

"Benson, who teaches comparative literature at the City University of New York, skillfully interweaves literary criticism with political analysis; he includes a useful chronology of events of the war and an excellent selective bibliography. For literature collections, it will appeal to general readers, informed laymen, and scholars generally." A. F. Peterson

Library J 92:4416 D 1 '67 150w

"Benson's method of examining the fiction and personal accounts of his six writers in the context of history, politics and warring ideologies is less mechanical than assigning a separate chapter to each, but it gives his book a curiously circular form and tempts him into needless recapitulation. A more serious criticism is [his] careless, not to say reprehensible use of sources. [His book] contains many vigorously written and perceptive sections, but at least in one chapter, his paraphrases of some of the books he lists in his extensive bibliography (and sometimes fails to cite in his footnotes) hardly differ from the originals. . . . Such lapses are regrettable and raise disturbing questions about the reliability of the book as a whole." Daniel Aaron

■ Y Times Bk R p34 F 18 '68 900w

BENT, GEORGE. Life of George Bent; written from his letters by George E. Hyde; ed. by Savoie Lottinville. 389p pl maps $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

970.3 Cheyenne Indians 67-15574

"George Bent was the son of William Bent and Owl Woman, a Southern Cheyenne Indian. Born at Bent's Fort on the Arkansas River near the present town of La Junta, Colorado, he received his schooling in Missouri, enlisted in the Confederate army, and after the Battle of Pea Ridge returned to Colorado and began a new life with his people, the Cheyennes. Not a biography in the usual manner, this book is really an account of the wars between the tribes of Plains Indians and between the Indians and the whites as told by George Bent in letters to his friend, George Hyde." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The book is important because between 1863 and 1868 Bent was the only man among the hostile Plains Indians who could and did write an eyewitness report of such battles as the Sand Creek Massacre, the Great Raids along the South Platte during 1864 and 1865, and the fight with General Connor on the Powder River. Because this book provides an account of Plains warfare as seen by the Indians, it should be in Western history collections." D. O. Kelley

Library J 93:1623 Ap 15 '68 180w

"[This] history is singular in the literature of the American West. . . . Bent knew that he had a gutsy tale to tell, and narrated it with a sense of drama and history. . . . While his book is bolstered by much reportorial writing based on what he learned from other Cheyennes, the best part recounts Bent's personal experiences during the most vicious and extensive fighting of the Indian wars. He gives a whole new dimension to the raids on Julesburg and the wagon trains supplying Colorado in 1865. Pure horror from the white point of view, those raids had large elements of humor from the Cheyenne side. . . . Bent (and Hyde) put together an account unlike most other frontier autobiographies in that the former tells his story with humility, sincerity, perspective, sorrow, even a certain detachment. He never really puts himself in center stage, which is a refreshing change. [This] is not just another frontier tale. It is a treasure." Oliver Knight

Sat R 51:62 Je 22 '68 400w

BENTHAM, JEREMY. The correspondence of Jeremy Bentham; ed. by Timothy L. S. Sprigge. 2v 383;542p il pl $25 Oxford

B or 92 68-84119

The first two of a projected enterprise to offer a complete, scholarly edition, in some thirty-eight volumes, of the writings of the leader of the Utilitarians.

Choice 5:1140 N '68 150w

"The editors and sponsors . . . are to be thanked warmly. A great life's work will by them be made plain to all. It must nevertheless be said that, as Dr Sprigge ruefully admits, the two initial volumes of Bentham's correspondence do not throw much light on his thought. Bentham did not do his thinking by post, and most of his letters are confined to the peripheries of his life. . . . The importance of these volumes is that through them all can come into intimate contact with Bentham and his family, a treat formerly reserved for biographers. The literary rewards are meagre. . . . There is much of the 'I send you a Bank note of £10 No. C34' order, though at other times he is sprightly enough. . . . But it is precisely the presence of life's commonplace that gives the correspondence its value. By the end of the second volume the denizens of the Bentham world are so well known that, as with the cast of Victorian novel, one is reluctant to take leave of them."

Economist 227:49 Ap 13 '68 800w

"[Because Bentham] wrote so extensively on a remarkable range of topics, little has been done prior to this publication to present his letters in a critical way to the public. The only previous edition, carried out under the supervision of Bentham's executor and completed in 1843, is forbidding in form and unbalanced in content. It simply omitted Bentham's anticlerical writings and confused his own ideas with those of his French commentator Dumont. The present edition happily remedies these defects. It yields insights into the whimsical side of Bentham's nature and traces his gradual development from a lad of three complaining about sore hands to his grandmother to a sophisticated philosophe."

Va Q R 44:cxxii summer '68 120w

BENTLEY, ERIC. The theatre of commitment; and other essays on drama in our society. 241p $5 Atheneum pubs.

792 Theater. Drama—History and criticism 67-29961

These seven essays by the professor of dramatic literature at Columbia "deal to some degree with social or political drama. . . . [Mr. Bentley] ranges over the history of theater including classic Greek theater and the development of Western theater up to the present day; sometimes he deals with one playwright [Ibsen] or with the American theater of one particular decade." (Library J) Index.

Choice 5:1140 N '68 150w

"Bentley, typically professorial, is calm, cool, and collected, even when he discusses 'The Deputy' [by R. Hochhuth, BRD 1964]. . . . [His] essays are closely reasoned, penetrating, at times witty. . . . The title essay, originally a lecture at Brandeis University in 1966, is especially incisive, perhaps because of its timeliness. . . . All have been published before, some in earlier collections of his writings. Large and medium-sized public libraries and college and university libraries, and special theater and social sciences collections, will want this volume." A. G. Owen

Library J 92:3656 O 15 '67 270w

"[This] is a collection of writing about the theater that I have greatly enjoyed reading. . . . Time and again I have thought in reading it, 'Yes, this is right. This should be said often.' . . . [However, six of these essays were] written at least seven years ago, and there hangs over them . . . a whiff of dead controversy. . . . [The title essay] is in my view the least convincing. Mr. Bentley writes as if all playwrights were either 'committed' or 'alienated,' and consequently his definitions of those two words must be stretched to encompass them all. . . . Finally, I'd suggest that Mr. Bentley's own commitment to Brecht has led him into making an unjust judgment of Anouilh's 'Antigone.' . . . This is to cavil. The essays are enjoyable and good." John Bowen

■ Y Times Bk ■ p5 D 10 '67 1300w

BENTLEY, GERALD EADES. The Jacobean and Caroline stage. v6-7 309;390p pl $18.50 Oxford

792 Theater—England

"These two volumes conclude G. E. Bentley's . . . history of the English stage from 1616 to 1642. Volume VI consists of the histories of the different theaters which flourished during this period; volume VII consists of appendices (including . . . annals of theatrical affairs of the period) and [an] index to all seven volumes." (Va Q R) For volumes 1 and 2 see BRD 1941.

BENTLEY, G. E.—Continued

"[These volumes are] an indispensable guide to the busy world of the theatre in the years between Shakespeare's death and the decree of 1642 [ordering the closing of the theatres] that marks the end of an epoch. . . . Professor Bentley has provided an excellent narrative to carry the multifarious details of the theatres he has so carefully described. Inevitably he is indebted for information to the work of many scholars; of this he makes generous acknowledgment. It is, however, his own intimate knowledge of the period that has enabled him to present so effectively all aspects of the Jacobean and Caroline stage."

TLS p870 Ag 15 '68 1050w

"The index alone is a testimony to the patience and integrity of Bentley's scholarship: there are over 250 pages of references and cross-references to . . . the wealth of information which the volumes contain. . . . [The history's] completion now is a witness as much to Bentley's character as to his scholarship. It is a remarkable achievement and there are no students of the drama who are not profoundly in its debt."

Va Q R 44:c xv summer '68 140w

BENTLEY, NICOLAS, The Victorian scene; a picture book of the period, 1837-1901. 296p il col il $17.50 N.Y. graphic 914.2 Great Britain—Social life and customs.

Great Britain—History—19th century

68-54314

The author is concerned "with the daily lives of Englishmen in all strata of society between 1837 and 1901. . . . [His text is an] exposition of the homes Victorians lived in, the food they ate . . . the clothes they wore, the ways they worked and played, their educations and their religious beliefs." (Book World)

"Except for an oddly ill-tempered denigration of Cardinal Newman and the Oxford Movement, everything [Bentley] says is standard and quite legitimate scholarship. The real glory of the book, though, is its wealth of pictures in color and black-and-white. Here he has it all over Joan Evans, whose similar compilation, The Victorians [BRD 1966], appeared two years ago. Bentley is a collector of Victoriana, and he has written about and reproduced with loving care their bric-à-brac . . . and their children hid in attics. Above all, he has not done so in the tedious spirit of Camp, but with genuine appreciation mingled with a wry sense of humor about the more hideous specimens of Victorian culture. To his credit, too, he has not neglected the more sordid aspects of the period, so this is more than just a book to delight rich collectors." Richard Freedman

Book World p7 S 15 '68 600w

Economist 229:xviii N 9 '68 160w

"A canny blend of ornate typefaces and border decorations, engravings, paintings in full-color reproduction, photographs, samples of railway tickets and bills of fare. . . . William Morris wallpaper, details of architecture, some oppressive, some stiffly, pleasingly fanciful. Nicolas Bentley is first an artist and has created an artist's book, says the publisher; and the claim may be gracefully allowed. Mr. Bentley has also provided a sound text, informative though opinionated. Unlike the delighted Beerbohm, he finds little to praise in the Victorian music hall; and his somber sense of the presence of the poor permeates the book." Harvey Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p26 S 22 '68 350w

New Yorker 44:204 N 2 '68 80w

Time 92:105 N 29 '68 60w

BENTLEY, PHYLLIS, Forgery! 188p $3.50; lib bdg $4.25 Doubleday

68-11787

A "mystery, set in 18th-Century Yorkshire, concerning young Dick Wade's part in the search for a band of coin clippers, who are devaluing golden guineas by trimming edges. Dicks' father is a man of complete integrity, but his good friend Jamie's father is a forger who has taught the lad to be mischievous and dishonest. As the story progresses, Dick has to choose between honesty and dishonesty, between loyalty to his friend and truthful witness in court. When Jamie's father is finally caught and hanged, Dick's friendship for Jamie does not waver, and Jamie, who still calls Dick a prig, nevertheless values this friendship. . . . Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"[This book] is vintage Bentley, well constructed, beautifully written, fully characterized, and with all the wild feel of Yorkshire's West Riding. . . . In this fast-paced adventure story there is treachery and betrayal, loyalty and courage and honor. . . . The people in the story are three-dimensional, and the dog, Bob-Sam, is very much alive also." Madeleine L'Engle

Book World p35 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 100w [YA]

"Bentley, of course, is the well-known British novelist. She puts all her considerable ability and imagination into the story. . . . [Young teens] will learn more than they suspect about the people and moors of Northern England, and what it was like to live on the brink of the industrial revolution. And that of course is the result this kind of writer hopes for." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 100w [YA]

"The book is far better than many adventure tales for children, but it lacks the extra quality that might distinguish it from other competently written stories and that one might expect from so practiced and skillful a writer." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:322 Je '68 200w

Library J 93:2127 My 15 '68 200w

BENY, ROLOFF, Japan in color; phot. by Roloff Beny; text by Anthony Thwaite; introd. by Herbert Read. 160p $28 McGraw

915.2 Japan—Description and travel. Japan—Civilization 67-20664

The photographer who portrayed his native Canada in To Everything There Is a Season (BRD 1968) seeks to present the complex culture of Japan: the "aesthetic of Zen, the poetry, the art that welled from it—but above all the people whose daily life blends the best of tradition and innovation, of reality and dream." (Publisher's note) Index.

"If photographs can reveal the beauty and spirit of Japan, those by Roloff Beny accomplish this task very well. His photographs tell us that almost every sight in Japan is a pattern or a poem. His panoramas and ground views give the impression of particulars which reveal essences. Anthony Thwaite's commentary adds to the reader's understanding, giving him a feeling for Japanese sights and activities. A magnificent picture book." Makiko Doi

Library J 92:4000 N 1 '67 100w

"To the Japanese this mirror held up to the nature of his country runs the danger of seeming partial and even eccentric. Whether we like it or not, Japan has opted in recent years for bread rather than blossoms; and any book that refuses to show how that bread is earned is, at best, incomplete. This said, it must be admitted that Mr. Beny's photographs are all superb. But as one turns from one illustration to another . . . one realizes once again the limits of the skill of photography. Yes, one sighs, it is all very beautiful, all very like. . . . Whereas [what] Hiroshige or Hokusai or Sesshu . . . distil from the landscape is almost always unique. . . . Unfortunately the demands of the illustrations that follow [Mr. Thwaite's essay] seldom give him scope to put to full use his knowledge of, and sympathy with, this utterly alien, hauntingly attractive and intermittently repellent country. One wishes that some publisher would now commission him to write, not a commentary for someone else's pictures, but his own book about Japan."

TLS p83 Ja 25 '68 650w

BERADT, CHARLOTTE, The Third Reich of dreams; with an essay by Bruno Bettelheim. 177p $4.95 Quadrangle bks.

135.3 Dreams

68-10832

The author describes "the dreams of people under Nazi domination. . . . [She] sought revelations of totalitarianism in the human psyche and in the subconscious of men and women, professionals and laborers, Jews and non-Jews married to Jews, boys and girls, and housewives. From 1933 until 1939 when she left Germany, she talked with these people about their dreams. [and] collected notes on more than 300 dreams." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 60w

"By tapping the political content of dreams, this book offers an interpretation which, ■ Bettelheim says in his concluding essay, goes directly to the emotional core of the matter. . . . Both Miss Beradt and Dr Bettelheim point out that a great number of the dreams recounted here were dreamed in the early years of the Third Reich when most of the details of Nazi policies had not yet been spelled out. These dreams envisaged a future which the dreamers themselves were not willing to face while awake. . . . One of the lessons of this fascinating book is that our dreams are indeed interpretations of reality." Gerhard Casper

Book World p12 Ag 4 '68 900w

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 50w

"[The author tells of] the physician who dreamed that walls had been outlawed; the woman who dreamed street signs had been replaced by posters proclaiming words that must never be uttered. . . . Bettelheim in an excellent concluding essay remarks, 'It is a shocking experience, reading this volume of dreams, to see how effectively the Third Reich murdered sleep by destroying the ability to restore our emotional strength through dreams.' There is fascinating material aplenty here for the psychiatrist and psychologist, but the layman will also find it a searing and original contribution to a better understanding of life in a state where there was no private life even in sleep." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:2012 My 15 '68 200w

"The author has not produced convincing evidence that the [Nazi] regime itself was the sole, or even a necessary stimulus for the dreams she has recorded. . . . [Her] purpose seems to be to horrify us by pointing out that, under tyranny, even the inmost recesses of our minds are not safe from invasion. Neither dream research nor the literature of brainwashing supports her thesis. This book, though containing some interesting comments upon the horrors of totalitarianism, cannot be rated as revealing or original. It is surprising that so eminent a psychiatrist as Bruno Bettelheim contributes a laudatory essay as post-script."

TLS p938 S 5 '68 550w

Va Q R 44:clxxx autumn '68 140w

BERCIU, D. Romania [Eng title: Romania before Burebista]. 215p il maps $7.50 Praeger 913.39 Man, Prehistoric. Rumania—Antiquities 66-21770

The author describes the "prehistory of Romania from the Paleolithic until about the time of Christ. . . . Each chapter deals with a specific economic stage." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The chapters on agricultural times are the best ones. A common failing for all chapters is that, due to the multitude of cultural sub-groupings in the area and the limited space . . . reading becomes almost impossible for the uninitiated and is at best hard going for the fairly advanced reader. Nevertheless, the work is definitely most usable for the latter as a start for really serious involvement. For the expert, the concise descriptions of each group make this work a very handy reference volume. . . . Detracting: the illustrations and plates are neither plentiful enough nor well organized; translation sometimes poor. But by and large, no non-Romanian student of European prehistory can do without this comprehensive work."

Choice 5:1022 O '68 200w

"Unfortunately the audience to which the book is addressed may well view it rather critically. The inconsiderable palaeolithic and mesolithic material is briefly and somewhat misleadingly presented in the terminology of nineteenth-century France. . . . The precocious copper technology of the Gumelnita Culture is dealt with quite inadequately and without reference to its counterparts south of the Danube. . . . Errors and misstatements occur too frequently. . . . Terminology is misused in the most eccentric manner in the chapters dealing with the Iron Age. . . . Finally, a post-script on the 'inscribed' tablets from Tărtăria contradicts the opinions on them given on an earlier page."

TLS p506 My 16 '68 550w

BERCKMAN, EVELYN. A case in nullity. 213p $4.50 Doubleday

68-11768

In his novel, Auriol sues Ivor Hailes "for divorce on the grounds of nullity, the English legal term for annulment based on nonconsummation. Ivor resists with a series of secret actions calculated to terrorize his wife and she predictably over-reacts." (Library J)

"The denouement . . . is profound and unexpected but fraught with implausible complications. Against every probability we forget Ivor Hailes' tortured wife as our hearts go out in sympathy to him. Struggling to escape his androgynous nature he had married ■ girl whose affections belonged still to her dead paramour. Made aware of this fact by his acute sensibilities, there was no way he could overcome his impotence. In this presentation [the author] makes a strong appeal to our capacity for charity and compassion. But when we are asked to believe that hulking Tom McKell, who helps to extricate Auriol from her dilemma, finds out in his contact with Hailes that he too is an androgyne and that Maggie Bolter, Auriol's other confederate, ■ fighting the unearned stigma of Lesbianism, credulity falters." J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 28:55 My 1 '68 400w

"This is an excellent novel, one that catches fire after an innocuous beginning, and difficult to put down once you are well into the story."

Miss Berckman is a master at building tension. One cannot wait to see what will happen next. The problems are resolved in the consideration of all points of view, and as in real life, there is no completely innocent or guilty party." Estelle Benedict

Library J 93:1498 Ap 1 '68 100w

"A pointless, overwritten neogothic tale by the author of Heir of the Starvelings [BRD 1967]. . . . Neither characters nor atmosphere predicate sympathetic readers among the young. The gothic mood is never created and the whole novels falls flat." Heien Jacob

Library J 93:2550 Je 15 '68 100w [YA]

"Essentially the straightforward story of a girl who escapes from a sexless but sadistic marriage . . . [this story] has, however, the readability, the narrative drive, and the psychological interest of Miss Berckman's excellent suspense novels, along with some nice legal touches and a fine upsetting conclusion, which casts surprisingly fresh light on the protagonists. One might say 'a woman's novel'—but like many novels for and by women, strikingly intelligent and tough-minded."

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 14 '68 100w

BERENBROK, HANS DIETER. See Bekker, C.

BERENDSEN, ANNE. Tiles; ■ general history, by Anne Berendsen [and others]; tr. by Janet Seligman. (Studio bk) 285p il col il $28.50 Viking

738.6 Tiles

67-7381

The authors "trace the history of wall and floor tiles, individual decorative tiles and those used to form tableaux, from their use in ancient Egypt to recent times. They discuss tiles of different historical periods from England, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal and Italy, and . . . cover the tile production of Holland from the mid-16th Century to the end of the 18th Century." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Published originally in 1964 entitled Fliesen: eine Geschichte der Wand-und Bodenfliesen.

"A valuable reference work for potters, collectors, and curators and a delightful browsing book. . . . The style is easiest in chapters on Dutch tiles. The short chapters on antiquity and Persia, which make this the first international history of tiles, are too condensed to be readable and too short of illustrations to be useful for reference. Omits tiles stoves. Index does not entirely make up for lack of glossary. . . . Recommended for colleges teaching ceramics."

Choice 5:1294 D '68 170w

"This authoritative and handsomely illustrated history of a minor decorative art is both scholarly and readable. Recommended for larger collections in the field of applied and decorative arts." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:3628 O 15 '67 200w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:49 My 18 '68 90w

BERENDSEN, ANNE—Continued

"The chapter on Italian Renaissance tiles is tantalizingly short and the English delft tiles are given barely two pages of text. [There is] an excellent bibliography. . . . In some ways this book is rather exasperating. It is profusely illustrated in full colour, half-tone, and line blocks, but there is no list of illustrations. Tiles from various sources related by technique, origin or time of execution are grouped on one page but the degree of reduction varies for different tiles, and hardly any sizes are given. Most of the coloured illustrations are satisfactory; many are excellent, but one or two are very poor. . . . [However this] is perhaps the best work available covering such a wide field."

TLS p1124 N 30 '67 470w

BERESFORD, MAURICE. New towns of the middle ages: town plantation in England, Wales, and Gascony. 670p pl maps $18.50 Praeger

301.3 Cities and towns. Middle Ages 67-23149

The author discusses "the planning, construction, and success or failure of [these] new towns. . . . [He analyzes] the main political, legal, economic, social, military, and geographical aspects of town plantation. . . . In addition to an index, bibliographies, and appendices, a 250-page gazetteer provides further material on the towns discussed." (Choice) Chronological lists of plantations. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The first systematic and comprehensive account of [this topic]. . . . The plates include a few aerial photographs; there are many maps and town plans (a few of which are not readily comprehensible); the statistical information in the numerous tables is lucid and instructive. A substantial part of the book is designed primarily for the scholar's reference. . . . Though the style is lively and pleasant, some undergraduates will consider this book difficult and forbidding. Desirable in college libraries; indispensable in university libraries."

Choice 5:395 My '68 160w

"During the 11th Century, Europe embarked on a conscious program of expansion that involved the clearing of virgin land on the frontiers and the creation of new proto-urban settlements. . . . It is these plantations, with particular reference to the new towns of the time of Edward I in England, Wales, and Gascony, that [the author] has exhaustively investigated in this superb book. He discusses bastide development in general, in particular, comparatively and chronologically; the success and failures involved; the relationship between motives of defence and commerce in their inception. . . . No college library should be without this book. Not only is this an excellent history and invaluable for reference, it is beautifully written, and copiously illustrated." I. M. Berg-

Library J 92:3415 O 1 '67 220w

"There appears to be one problem which perhaps the author does not always adequately face. What was a 'new town'? Professor Beresford has included in his definition only those places that were founded on virgin sites where no former settlement had existed. . . . The great majority of new towns were in fact promoted villages, not virgin settlements. Professor Beresford is of course aware of the problem. But his attempts to meet it, and especially to discuss the varying degrees of 'local merit in town plantation—infelicitous phrase—cannot always be described as wholly successful. With this note of caution, however, it must be added that the volume is a remarkable work of scholarship written with zest, observation—and originality."

TLS p573 Je 6 '68 900w

BERGAUST, ERIK. Murder on pad 34. 253p $5.95 Putnam

629.45 Apollo project. Astronautics—U.S. 68-12096

A behind-the-scenes story of the 1967 Apollo tragedy in which astronauts White, Grissom and Chaffee died. The author "describes the operation of NASA . . . and shows the numberless pressures inherent in a stepped-up, short-cut program." (Library J)

"Tragedy is difficult clay for an author to mold—over-worked, it becomes morbid or maudlin; under-worked, it fails either to capture the feelings and humanity of the people involved or to re-create their conflict. Erik Bergaust manages both to over- and under-work the tragedy of Apollo-One. . . . [In this] book, characterized by sloppy errors of omission and commission, innuendo and pointlessness, . . . [and] heavily padded with extraneous material, Bergaust . . . reveals little that is new, but is content to poke among the rubble of various newspapers, Congressional records and the space agency's own definitive report on the accident." George Alexander

Book World p4 J1 14 '68 850w

"The title of Bergaust's latest book expresses his conclusion after studying reports of the Apollo accident. . . . He gives much more detail on the accident itself than ever appeared in the press accounts, then reviews the work of NASA and its contractors on the Apollo and previous projects; undoubtedly there was considerable carelessness at all levels. Disgruntled employees of NASA must have talked to Mr. Bergaust. Whether his accusation of murder is valid, and if so, who is guilty, is left up to each reader to decide. This is one side of the story and librarians would do well to obtain the official reports to shelve with it. But they should have both on this issue of vital interest." R. S. Potts

Library J 93:2675 J1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:2740 J1 '68 70w [YA]

Reviewed by F. A. Long

N Y Times Bk R p3 N 3 '68 470w

Reviewed by A. R. Dodd

Sat R 51:21 Ag 3 '68 310w

BERGE, MARVIN L., ed. The child's world. 6v [rev ed]. See The child's world

BERGER, MORROE. Equality by statute; the revolution in civil rights. rev ed 253p $5.95 Doubleday

323.4 Negroes—Civil rights. Discrimination. U.S. Supreme Court 67-16897

"Approaching the subject of civil rights from two viewpoints, [the author] deals with the historical development of the role of government in attempting to eliminate discrimination through statutory means and court decisions. In addition, he deals with the question of the efficacy of these legal parameters in terms of current social and psychological research." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Unique contribution in an area which has received a great deal of recent scholarly attention. . . . The greatest value of this work comes from the organized and well supported arguments that laws do have an impact on society and do change the behavior of those who oppose them along with those who support them. Interesting to read and not at all difficult considering the many court cases and laws cited. Berger ties them together in meaningful categories with an easy flowing style. Most valuable for undergraduates and for general students who want a broad overview of the historical involvement of governments in the U.S. It has not the depth of other recent works on this subject but is more complete in its scope."

Choice 5:554 Je '68 200w

Christian Century 84:1071 Ag 23 '67 50w

"In the problem of minorities, particularly that of Negroes, the last 15 years have seen more changes than any previous period except that of 1863 to 1865. Therefore, Professor Berger, of Princeton, has expanded his book considerably since the first edition [BRD 1952]. [He] has organized his material chronologically from the Reconstruction era, through the Supreme Court decisions up to and after the mid-1930's, to the New York state legislation on discrimination in employment. . . . His major discussion of developments as reflected in decisions of the courts tends to be rather legalistic. However, in general, he presents his material within the framework of the social scientist. The book is suitable not only for specialists but also for informed laymen." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:2796 Ag '67 200w

BERGER, PETER L. The sacred canopy; elements of a sociological theory of religion. 230p $4.95 Doubleday

261.8 Sociology, Christian 67-19805

The author of The Social Construction of Reality (BRD 1967) in the first part of this book "develops a sociological theory of religion within the frame of reference of the sociology of knowledge, drawing its examples from both ancient and contemporary religions. The second part applies this viewpoint to a specific historical situation: the process of secularization in the modern West. After discussing the paradoxical roots of secularization in the Judaeo-Christian tradition, it analyzes contemporary secularization in its institutional aspects and in its character as a phenomenon of consciousness. Central to both parts is the fundamental question: How can any religious view of the world be made plausible to people? (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Subject index. Index of names.

"To a sociologist the book contains little that is new. This reviewer, maybe a bit obtusely, can see little difference between [Berger's] expanded concept of the sociology of knowledge and general cultural theory. . . . [However, he writes] in a challenging way, skillfully injecting theological materials drawn from both Eastern and Western religions to reinforce his points. He also displays an understanding of the issues that concern practicing religionists, while at the same time he tells them frankly where the going for them is likely to be rough. This book should find a ready market in seminars and rabbinical schools." E. K. Nottingham

Am J Soc 74:102 J1 '68 500w

"[Berger] writes in a concise and lucid style, a rare talent among sociologists, but does so without losing any of the cogency of his material. More impressively, he is almost unparalleled in his creativity. [This volume] brings together all of these virtues and is easily his most important book. Indeed, I think it the most important contribution to the sociology of religion since Max Weber's Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism [BRD 1930. Unfortunately, the question of] how the historic role of providing cosmic legitimacy to man's social reality will be achieved [is left virtually unexplored]. . . . Meanwhile, he has given sociologists, philosophers, historians, and theologians a great deal to ponder and to jam into their respective world views." J. K. Hadden

Commonweal 87:628 F 23 '68 1150w

"The author of this book is professor of sociology in the graduate faculty of the New School for Social Research in New York. . . . [In this work] he is addressing himself to an erudite and sociologically sophisticated audience. . . . All advanced students of the sociology of religion will appreciate Professor Berger's analytical objectivity and empathetic approach to religious data. However, the general reader may have some trouble following his theoretical discourse." Joseph Bram

Library J 92:4160 N 15 '67 170w

BERGERON, VICTOR JULES. See Trader Vic

BERGES, RUTH. Collector's choice of porcelain and faience. 264p il col il $15 Barnes. A.S.

738 Pottery—Collectors and collecting 67-16884

"Miss Berges, who wrote From Gold to Porcelain [BRD 1964], has written this companion volume on 18th-Century European porcelain and faience." (Library J)

"Copiously illustrated, [this] has a readable text that does not demand a great amount of background. It is possible that the book could guide the layman to 'choices and decisions as a collector,' but not the connoisseur. The photographs in Miss Berges's book are less than satisfactory, and it would have been more advantageous to have used fewer and better illustrations. Recommended as an appreciation book." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:982 Mr 1 '68 150w

"The most interesting aspect of this book is the author's selection of the objects to illustrate the text. Collector's Choice covers wide ground in types of wares from the hard-paste and soft-paste porcelains to faience and stoneware, and in choice of attitude from the appreciation purely of decoration or sculptural qualities to those of connoisseurship, and also preference according to the sex of the collector; this wide canvas, however, is not matched to the quality of the numerous reproductions: the colour plates are crude, and the monochromes are mostly dull and appear to be seen through black spectacles."

TLS p840 Ag 8 '68 270w

BERGIN, THOMAS G. Perspectives on The divine comedy. 115p $4 Rutgers univ. press 851 Dante Alighieri—The divine comedy

66-28134

"The three essays of which this book is composed [originally given in 1965 as Queens lectures at Rutgers University] deal with the structure, proportion, and substance of the Comedy as well as with its various levels of meaning." (Publisher's note) Index of proper names.

"Contrary, in part, to the dust jacket blurb, the book is obviously not for the general reader but will prove most useful to serious students of literature for the many references to critics, old (E. J. Becker, Scartazzini, E. Moore) and new (Y. Batard, 1952; T. K. Swing, 1962; R. Fasanl, 1964)."

Choice 5:56 Mr '68 180w

"This brief book by Yale's distinguished Dante scholar will appeal as much to the layman as it does to the professional student of literature. Professor Bergin does not assume that his audience possesses any specialized information concerning Dante or medieval literature over and above that which can be obtained from an attentive reading of the poem itself. He writes a lucid prose devoid of the technical terms that literary critics usually find necessary. . . . [and] incorporates into his argument the pertinent findings of other scholars, so that the reader is, in effect, provided with a list of additional readings should he care to pursue any of the matters discussed in greater detail. . . . He explores the dimensions of Dante's universe, the functions of characterization, and the dual role that Dante plays as pilgrim and poet in the poem." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 92:1624 Ap 15 '67 230w

BERGMAN, INGMAR. A film trilogy: Through a glass darkly, The communicants (Winter light), The silence; tr. from the Swedish by Paul Britten Austin. 143p il $5.95 Orion

791.43 Moving picture plays 67-21231

Scenarios of the three films. Originally published in Swedish as En Filmtrilogi.

"A Bergman cinema script is almost as provoking as the actual film. His films must be seen for full appreciation but this trilogy is a necessary companion to Four Screenplays of Ingmar Bergman [BRD 1961]. Austin is superior in capturing the interior mood of Bergman. Libraries with or without cinema collections must have the works of this Swede who forces 20th-century viewers and readers to confront themselves and realities."

Choice 4:1401 F '68 80w

"[Here] we may examine in depth the symbols, characterization, and dramatic structure so important in the Swedish master's art. In The Silence, for example, we now have objective proof of the elements we sensed on the screen: the language in this imaginary foreign country is incomprehensible except for key words; signs and public announcements are deliberate gibberish. This is a necessary book for students of film and for cinemaphiles; readers of conventional drama also will find here some interesting parallels with Ibsen and Chekov." Robert Baker

Library J 92:4431 D 1 '67 130w

"Bergman, if he does not actually write literary versions of his scripts, ready for reading, beforehand, certainly favours a very literary form for his scripts when finally published. [In the] versions we are offered of his recent trilogy. . . . there are no camera directions at all: the action is simply, directly described, in longish 'stage directions', but there is hardly a hint of the special effects produced by different photographic textures, the difference in the effect of an action depending whether it is shot in long-shot or close-up. Perhaps Bergman is here acting on principle: it would be reasonable if he took the view that nothing can duplicate or replace the film itself, so a published script might as well be arranged to work as reading-matter virtually without reference to the film."

TLS p1082 S 26 '68 140w

BERGMANN, PETER G. The riddle of gravitation. 270p il $7.95 Scribner

530.1 Relativity (Physics). Gravitation 68-11537

"In the author's view, general relativity is not merely a field for professionals but for anyone who is intellectually curious and concerned with the general aspects of contemporary scientific thinking. [In this volume, part one] is concerned with the special theory of relativity and provides necessary background. . . . [Part two] presents the general theory of relativity itself . . . [and discusses] the implications of Einstein's laws of gravitation for phenomena in the presence of very large and very concentrated masses. The third part deals with a number of further theoretical developments and with current observational and experimental programs. . . . Five appendixes contain mathematical derivations for the reader who desires a more technical treatment." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

BERGMANN, P. G.—Continued

Choice 5:830 ■ '68 160w

"One of the world's leading experts on the theory of relativity and gravitation explains past and present theories of gravitation in language that an intelligent, reasonably well-informed lay reader can understand. Mr. Bergmann does this without formal mathematics through good writing and effective use of excellent illustrations. However, he does not talk down to the reader nor disguise what is obviously a difficult subject. . . . This is a book that can be studied as well as read and should help clarify some of the puzzling notions of modern physics in the mind of the general reader and of technically trained persons." S. M. Lewis

Library J 93:2674 J1 '68 200w

Reviewed by R. B. Lindsay

Science 162:1380 D 20 '68 380w

"Graceful and daring, this book bears the mark of the school of Einstein. Its author, once assistant to Einstein himself . . . uses almost no mathematics, and indeed presupposes only the most general acquaintance with physics. . . . The text is reflective, careful and invariably intelligent, but it is not always concrete or clear. The reader will see no scales at all on the graphs; he will be told about tensors and vectors without much notion of what those animals are; he will have to count components and unknowns with the aid of a glossary of meanings. If the reader is thoughtful enough . . . he can go far. Perhaps even better, if he has learned some of this material from a more explicit and technical study, he will find here a richness and depth of connection missing from many courses."

Sci Am 219:140 J1 '68 600w

BERGSTEN, BEBE, ed. Motion pictures from the Library of Congress paper print collection, 1894-1912. See Niver, K. R.

BERKERY, PATRICK J. Restructuring religious life; a plan for renewal. 192p $3.95 Alba house

248.8 Monasticism and religious orders

67-30924

The purpose of this book is "to serve as a blueprint illustrating how [Pope John XXIII's encyclical] Pacem in Terris might be used as a guide in rewriting religious constitutions. . . . [There are] chapters dealing with the nature of the religious society, the duties, rights and dignity of all men, and the apostolate of the religious congregations. . . . [and] directives for those participating in the general chapter (listed in the sections dealing with the organizational structure of the religious society) and the formation of a world society of religious families." (Critic)

"The author's plan for renewal is based on many passages from the documents of Vatican II and especially on . . . Pacem in Terris. The book forces the reader to look carefully at almost all the accepted attitudes and customs that those who enter the 'state of perfection' have been urged to adopt. His treatment of authority is very provocative, and also his plea that religious break down the walls of the ghettos that most of them live in. This book by the rector of a house of studies deserves a wide reading." E. S. Stanton

America 118:622 My 4 '68 90w

"It is unfortunate that [this book], which has so much of very real and practical value, should vitiate its own effectiveness by a bitterness of tone, unsubstantiated generalizations, exaggeration and factual error. Readers who object to certain emphatic statements should be aware that the author's intention was 'to ask questions,' not to answer them, and 'to stimulate dialogue.' Answering the questions and discussing the problems proposed by Father Berkery would serve as valuable aids to religious engaged in renewal, in the study of identity and vocation, and in arriving at a program that is fundamental and highly contemporary. There are inconsistencies, but even these have their value since in many cases they are the type frequently heard in discussion groups. . . . [There are also] valuable insights on the dignity of person, clarification of the role of inter-community apostolates, and some shrewd reflections on the relationship between religious congregations and the society they serve." Sister M. H. Valentine

Critic 26:86 Ap '68 1050w

BERKOWITZ, MORRIS I. Social scientific studies of religion: a bibliography, by Morris I. Berkowitz and J. Edmund Johnson. 258p $7.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

016.2 Religion—Bibliography 67-18692

This listing of books and journal articles relevant to the sociology of religion is arranged in nine major divisions: Definitions of religions; Descriptions of religion; History and development of religion; Religion related to other social institutions and behavior; Religion and social issues; Religion and social change; The impact of religious belief on behavior; Religion, textbooks, analytic articles, and readers; Bibliographies of religion and encyclopedias and dictionaries. Index of journals consulted. Author index.

"Lack of book annotation is the major failing of this massive amalgam. . . . [The major divisions] contain rather finite subdivisions (e.g. the parishioner and his attitudes). [In their cross cultural listing the authors] are generally successful, although the bibliography is slightly weighted toward the West (see marriage and religion section). Despite some imbalances between the bibliographies, religion is blanketed. . . . Helpful cross references, good author index, and a 10-page list of journals consulted. Recommended to knowledgeable librarians and specialists; laymen and students will need advice on certain books listed herein. Partially unique in scope, this bibliography could serve as both acquisition (there are unfamiliar, but solid items cited) and reading guide."

Choice 4:965 N '67 140w

"Emphasis is on studies which relate religion to other social-behavioral variables, though the compilation intends to cover 'as much of religious experience as social scientists can study.' . . . Numerous cross-references are provided and there is an author index, but the user must rely on the classification outline for the subject approach." E. S.

Col ■ Res Lib 29:67 Ja '68 170w

BERLE, ADOLF A. The modern corporation and private property [by] Adolf A. Berle and Gardiner C. Means. rev ed 380p $9.75 Harcourt

338.7 Corporations. Corporation law 68-28813

"Except for the . . . preface and the foreword, in which [the authors] discuss . . . the changes that have occurred on the American economic scene since 1932, the text, tables, and charts in [this] revised edition are unchanged. The material added covers changes since the first edition, of theory and policy of employment, administrative inflation between 1953 and 1958, and changes in international trade and balance of payments effected by the corporate revolution. Also added is the statistical appendix which confirms that the three trends—the concentration of economic power, the dispersion of ownership, and the separation of ownership and control, which the authors envisioned in 1932 continue." (Library J) Index. For earlier edition see BRD 1932 and 1933.

Reviewed by Victor Novak

Library J 93:2857 Ag '68 230w

"The 36 years since original publication have certainly not diminished the . . . power of Berle's and Means's analysis of [corporate] operations. . . . On the whole [their] empirical findings have stood up well. . . . Their analysis struck a blow . . . at the school which has sought . . . to break up large corporations. . . . For better or for worse, [they] played a large role in the evolution of the corporation's good contemporary reputation. . . . This book has done as much to promote a healthy capitalism as Keynes's 'The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money' [BRD 1936]." Robert Lekachman

N Y Times Bk ■ p8 S 15 '68 2550w

BERLE, ADOLF A. The three faces of power. 83p $3.95 Harcourt

347.9 U.S. Supreme Court. Law—U.S. 68-12565

"In this series of three essays, [the author] examines the 'revolution' which the Supreme Court has effected in American life through its landmark decisions in such areas as civil rights, civil liberties, economic regulation, and the distribution of political power. . . . Mr. Berle contends . . . that these decisions—correct or not—have placed the Court in a position of danger. There has been considerable reaction in the Congress and within the society against [a] number of Supreme Court decisions, and . . . precipitate action by Congress or by a constitutional convention could harm the Court immeasurably. Mr. Berle's tentative solution is to call for the creation of a Council of Constitutional Advisers in the executive branch—patterned after the CEA—to 'institutionalize judicial legislation.'" (Va Q R) Index.

"Berle uses the experiences of his distinguished career as a lawyer, an educator, and a public servant (state, national, and international levels) as a basis for [these] incisive and thought provoking essays. . . . Recommended for general reader. A marginal purchase for college libraries."

Choice 5:867 S '68 160w

"Mr Berle . . . suggests that the Supreme Court was acting without authority in the apportionment, segregation, and anti-trust areas. The Court, he claims, has opinionated a revolution because the executive and legislative branches have abdicated their function in time of need. . . . A brilliant, perceptive misleadingly simple polemic. For public, school, college, and law libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:4518 D 15 '67 200w

"The essential purpose of [Mr. Berle's suggested council] would be to . . . institutionalize conflict in Congress rather than in the Court. . . . Unfortunately, . . . if the Congress had attempted to deal with the important constitutional questions which might be amenable to legislative action, it is doubtful that segregation in education, malapportionment, or procedural due process would have been resolved as they have been by the Court. Mr. Berle's motives are 'good,' but his solution appears rather naive. The Supreme Court may be in danger, but if it were not, it is probable that society would be even closer to chaos. As it stands, Mr. Berle's book falls short both as description and prescription."

Va Q R 44:1xx spring '68 400w

BERMAN, HAROLD J. Disarmament inspection under Soviet law, by Harold J. Berman and Peter B. Maggs. 154p $7.50 Oceana

341.6 Disarmament. Law—Russia 66-13368

The authors "analyze the compatability of Soviet law with international inspection. . . . Their thesis is that while some modification of current Soviet law would be necessary, a system of international inspection is possible within the existing Soviet legal framework." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:680 J1 '68 200w

"[Berman and Maggs] have written a companion piece to Louis Henkin's Arms Control and Inspection in American Law [BRD 1959]. . . . For the specialist in Soviet law or disarmament. A brief text of 50 pages is followed by almost 100 pages of documents."

Choice 5:680 J1 '68 200w

"In this slight volume Professors Berman and Maggs of Harvard Law School and the University of Illinois College of Law, respectively, . . . suggest, not too originally, that the crucial thing would be the attitude of the Communist Party leadership. Top party officials could stymie satisfactory inspection by secret legislation or administrative rulings, regardless of official legal provisions. The authors reason that probably no agreement would be signed unless the Soviet rulers believed it to be to their advantage; then present Soviet law could prove adequate for carrying out treaty obligations. . . . The price is relatively high for so small a book; and since its appeal is limited, only large libraries will need it." R. W. Schwartz

Library J 92:2585 J1 '67 200w

BERMAN, RONALD. America in the sixties; an intellectual history. 291p $7.95 Free press

917.3 U.S.—Intellectual life 68-10365

The author "sets out to describe and evaluate the cultural-intellectual life of the decade." (Nat R)

"If there is a literary 'New Left' then Berman's case . . . must be classified as that of the (moderate and, above all, literate) 'New Right.' . . . One finds a combination of over-documented and ponderously argued didactic essays on the intellectual foibles of virtually all contemporary leftist, radical, and extremist literati and several remarkably well formulated propositions. . . . Psychic sensations ranging from mental titillation to righteous indignation should await those not privy to the ill-kept personal, political, and sexual secrets and propensities of the left side of the American literary scene. Two of the 10 essays ('The Intellectual,' 'The New Left') make interesting reading, but at $7.95 is it worth it? Recommended for generously endowed libraries."

Choice 5:1173 N '68 150w

Reviewed by Loren Baritz

J Am Hist 55:688 D '68 180w

"With great skill, and with abundant and expert quotation, Berman manages an astonishing range of material. . . . His own stand is skeptical and critical, and he acknowledges a good point when it is made, whether by Left or Right . . . now and then he even has a good word for Buckley. . . . Berman's own prose has a mordant concentration and irony that give a distinctive voice to his criticism, and is itself an instrument of judgment. . . . [He] is illuminating on the strange venom of the intellectual, which is always available, and which most recently has been effective against LBJ. . . . Finally Berman, by spreading the decade out before us, allows us to see the main pattern of what actually happened culturally in the Sixties." Jeffrey Hart

Nat R 20:556 Je 4 '68 1250w

"This book is not an 'intellectual history.' . . . Rather, it is a conservative tract for our times. . . . Berman has ransacked the little magazines to reveal the totalitarian bent of the cultural and political left. . . . The book casts a cold eye on the nonsense of the sixties. Yet [it] fails because it is so dense with quotation that evidence eats up argument. . . . [Berman] is shrewd on the stupidities of commitment, but perhaps he needed a deeper commitment himself to work this potpourri of quotations and perceptions into a well-structured book." Stephen Miller

N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 30 '68 240w

"As a handbook on some aspects of intellectual life in the 1960s Mr. Berman's volume will surely be useful. It can serve as an index to Commentary, Partisan Review, and The New York Review of Books. It also provides a key to some little magazines that are unfamiliar to most of us. From the text and citations one can make up lists of Leftist writers, Jewish writers, Radical Right writers, old-line liberal writers, Negro writers, and writers whose vocabulary is limited to four-letter words. . . . There is practically nothing about the role of the movies, the stage, or television. . . . The result is more a chronicle or an almanac than history. The tone of the 1960s, if there is one, fails to come through." M. R. Konvitz

Sat R 51:34 Je 15 '68 600w

Va Q R 44:clxxiv autumn '68 140w

BERNAL, J. D. The origin of life. 345p il $12.50 World pub.

577 Life—Origin 67-18017

"[The first part is a rediscussion] elaborated and brought up-to-date, of topics which Bernal treated . . . earlier in his short book, The Physical Basis of Life. After introductory sketches on the history and the modern development of the subject, Bernal distinguishes three major stages during the origin of life. . . . [He] and others report important new ideas and experiments related to each of these three phases . . . [and he] describes some of the other explanations which have been suggested. . . . Finally, [he] considers the influence on contemporary thought of the discussions on the origin of life." (N Y Rev of Books) Glossary. Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"An interesting book which gives the present set of opinions relating to the origin of life on this planet. Bernal is well-suited to the task and manages an objective discussion of this area, which is all too often considered in highly speculative terms. An excellent appendix includes Oparin's classic paper which might be said to mark the origin of a rational approach to the general problem."

BERNAL, J. D.—Continued

Choice 5:643 J1 '68 50w

"Bernal has been one of the most important intellectual influences in science ever since the days when this topic was first being considered. . . . [His] position in the intellectual world . . . is very relevant to an assessment of The Origin of Life. The importance of this book lies not so much in its account of the particular biochemical processes which, he suggests, may have been involved in the Origin of Life. The book is valuable because, coming from this depth of knowledge and scientific experience, it puts beyond argument the major point that life could indeed have originated spontaneously from the non-living. . . . [It] is a rather complex work. . . . The non-biological reader may be glad to hear that besides the usual indices, bibliography, etc. there is a large well-illustrated glossary of technical terms. All of this makes a splendid book, but . . . [Bernal] seems to me to side too much with the biochemists and to give too little importance to the problem of the origin of hereditary specificity." C. H. Waddington

N Y Rev of Books 10:19 F 29 '68 4000w

BERNSTEIN, BARTON J., ed. Towards a new past; dissenting essays in American history. 364p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

973 U.S.—History

67-19177

"Since World War II, most American historians have tended to stress the uniqueness and homogeneity which have prevailed in the United States. The conflicts between Federalists and Antifederalists, Hamiltonians and Jeffersonians, and Republicans and Democrats are less important to these historians than the fact that they all agreed to challenge each other's viewpoints within a democratic framework of government. [This] book . . . declares war on the consensus historians. Contributors include Jesse Lemisch, Staughton Lynd, Michael Lebowitz, Stephan Thernstrom, and Barton Bernstein. (Library J) 'The twelve essays form a chronological sequence extending from the Revolution of 1776 to the CIA scandals of last year.' (Newsweek) The essay by Christopher Lasch first appeared in The Nation and was revised for inclusion here.

Choice 5:1031 O '68 180w

"The new New Left historians . . . have infused new life into the historical establishment. However, many of these essays verge on ideology and, to date, the conflict-historians have done better at calling for new inquiry than at proving their cases."

Christian Century 85:560 Ap 24 '68 50w

Reviewed by William Schechner

Commonweal 80:261 N 15 '68 850w

Reviewed by Irwin Unger

J Am Hist 55:369 S '68 900w

"Although the publisher maintains that this is the history part of an 'anti-text' series that will deal with anthropology, sociology, and economics for the college student, these essays are much too specialized for the uninitiated. Still, no serious student or teacher of American history can afford to miss the challenge to the consensus." L. H. Madaras

Library J 93:1135 Mr 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by Ronald Radosh

Nation 207:149 Ag 26 '68 550w

Reviewed by C. V. Woodward

N Y Rev of Books 11:8 Ag 1 '68 3350w

Reviewed by J. A. Garraty

N Y Times Bk R pl My 12 '68 2450w

"[These writers] enjoy a passionate and sophisticated grasp of what Marxism has to offer the historian. . . . Cherished liberal ideas about the purity of the New Deal, the inherent evil of isolationism and the central importance of 'morality' in American diplomacy get torn to pieces in several of the essays, which elaborate the role that economic self-interest played at every turning of our recent history. Not only ideas but men take their lumps in these pages, including S. E. Morison, George Kennan, Arthur Schlesinger Jr., J. K. Galbraith and FDR. Like the counter-universities, which it resembles, this anti-textbook lets fly at big targets without worrying about civility. If the rest of [this] series is as fiercely iconoclastic as this one, and as intelligent, it can help to uproot some fixed ideas and let fresh air into the often stale prevailing winds of academic scholarship." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:100 Ap 22 '68 700w

"Genovese's essay 'The Marxist Interpretation of the Slave South,' which stresses the importance of ideas as molders of social structure and therefore a powerful influence on economic organization and production, will be a salutary shock to many Marxists, as well as liberal or conservative historians. It is perceptive and original but, alas, contemptuously argued, for Genovese has almost as little patience with others as Marx himself. Few of the remaining essays . . . reach this level: some are very raw and doctrinaire, but one or two, notably Michael A. Lebowitz's 'The Jacksonians: Paradox Lost?', give exciting glimpses of a new approach to the major problems of American history."

T. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:23 Je 29 '68 180w

BERNSTEIN, MARILYN, jt. auth. The fourth R. See Heinemann, R. B.

BERNSTEIN, SAUL. Alternatives to violence; alienated youth and riots, race, and poverty. 192p $4.95 Assn. press

301.43 Youth. Riots. U.S.—Social conditions. Poverty. U.S.—Race relations 67-14579

This is a study of hostile youth "in nine major U.S. cities—Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco and Washington. . . . [The author analyzes their] reaction to—and participation in—Civil Rights action, and their involvement in Anti-Poverty programs in such areas as Job Corps camps and Neighborhood Youth Corps. . . . Dr. Bernstein [then] analyses such possibilities [for the removal of poverty and prejudice] as public welfare, a guaranteed national income, education, public works, the armed services, the private sector of our economy, the unions, community service jobs, slum clearance and birth control." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"A reasonable, direct, honest book; more descriptive than analytical; more concerned with realities than theories. . . . The second half is a discussion of approaches and alternatives on a fairly general level. . . . Many comments and illustrations from the young people interviewed point up the depth of problems arising from poverty and the resulting alienation. Semantics and ramifications of basic concepts are not developed. Appropriate for undergraduates in social work, sociology, education, and other areas concerned with social problems. Book needs supplementation with detailed sources."

Choice 5:270 Ap '68 160w

"An informative and helpful book. . . . Bernstein gathered his information by way of interviews—99 of them—with . . . staff members at various levels of street-work agencies, staff workers operating under various governmental programs in experimental agencies and leaders in groups highly critical of the establishment. . . . It is [his] conviction that the riots of 1964-66 were caused by conditions in the ghettos. Not organized groups, but poverty, hopelessness, frustration and bitterness were the tutors in violence. . . . It is difficult to fault this book. Bernstein frankly admits to the limitations of his data and the fact of personal bias and opinion. But he presents his convictions with reason and candor and chooses his words wisely."

M. P. Strommen

Christian Century 85:85 Ja 17 '68 650w

BERQUE, JACQUES. French North Africa; the Maghrib between two world wars; tr. by Jean Stewart. 422p $12.50 Praeger

916.1 Africa, North—History 65-20083

The author of The Arabs, Their History and Future (BRD 1965) has written a study of Arab North Africa "in terms of economic, agricultural, social and political developments, under French Colonial rule." (Library J) Glossary of Arabic words. Indexes of names, places, tribal groups and families, authors and periodicals, and general index. Originally published in 1962 entitled Le Maghrib entre deux guerres.

Reviewed by R. M. Brace

Am Hist R 73:1212 Ap '68 470w

"A good translation. Berque calls this work the basis for a further study of the independent Maghrib. If that study is forthcoming, it is hoped that it will contain more history and political development than the present book does. A good balance between social and economic factors is evidenced, but the book is less impressive when dealing with political events. . . . It is evident that Berque's first interest is sociology. In this sense he makes a valuable contribution to the social history of Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia.

Choice 4:1154 D '67 110w

"[The author] is, at times, curiously vague, in spite of the statistics and data he scatters throughout his book. . . . The merits of Mr. Berque's style do not quite compensate for a certain fuzziness of organization and treatment. For the informed reader and the student." J. C. Shipman

Library J 92:2765 Ag '67 140w

"This is a wide-ranging, stimulating and sometimes provocative study."

TLS p130 F 8 '68 850w

BERRIGAN, DANIEL. Love, love at the end; parables, prayers and meditations. 113p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

818

68-12280

A collection of poetry and prose writings reflecting the author's thoughts "on society, politics, and religion ranging from an . . . encounter between two dead young soldiers to a satirical tale of a lopsided elephant that leans slightly to the left. . . . [The meditations concern such] subjects as a 103-year-old Negro voting in Mississippi for the first time, a visit to a boy in jail, and the meaning of breaking bread." (Publisher's note) Some of the material in this book has appeared previously in The Critic and The National Catholic Reporter.

"Here is a string of fish, wrapped in silly paper. Some of it is holy in symbol, some glitters or is dull. It would displease the many who will not read it, and will please or be swallowed by the few who do. . . . The parables that comprise most of the book are generally obscure and lacking in that over-all sense of love that the author pretends to. . . . Thurber wrote fables better than these fables of Berrigan's, that sound like Hamlin Garland. He may become a good minor poet if he works at it. A few of the prayers are worth the price of the book and the meditations are deserving of reflection." William Ready

America 118:334 Mr 23 '68 400w

"Reading the parables of protester-poet-priest Daniel Berrigan is very much like walking down a dim corridor, again and again. Each time, as you approach the end, you think you finally see the light only to walk into more dimness. One senses that much of the resulting confusion stems from Father Berrigan's differences with traditional Christianity. . . . But the prayers and meditations almost redeem the book. Here, Father Berrigan points to a way out of the darkness in a plea for a simple faith that finds Christ simple. Perhaps in the future, as in the past, Daniel Berrigan will have something of value to offer the reader, but this isn't it." Audrey Cahill

Library J 93:555 F 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by E. B. Fiske

N Y Times Bk R p34 Jl 28 '68 290w

"The Institutional Church is now under siege. . . . Father Berrigan might be called the poet laureate of those who announce the failure of the institutional church. His commitment to life and to the spirit that expands without drugs, his unswerving pursuit of love and justice, are a bracing tonic. In [this book] short meditations, free verse, and startling parables pour out with velocity, verve, and a deep love for Creation. Berrigan knows life and can write of it with a mixture of humor and holiness. The church ought always to have such critics." David Poling

Sat R 51:36 My 18 '68 300w

BERRIGAN, DANIEL. Night flight to Hanoi: war diary with 11 poems. 140p $4.95 Macmillan. (N Y)

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Personal narratives 68-56045

The author, a "representative of a coalition of peace groups to secure the release of three captured American fliers [gives an] . . . account of his travels to and from North Vietnam and . . . [examines] the nature and consequences of the use of American power in Asia. . . . [He records his] reactions to the damage to life and buildings in Hanoi resulting from American bombings, and his . . . impressions of the . . . society of North Vietnam and of the three American fliers—their varied personalities and their reactions to their captivity." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Robert McAfee Brown

Commonweal 89:356 D 6 '68 230w

"This account is perhaps the most shattering one yet published by those Americans who have visited the people against whom our country is waging war. Although the events of his trip are fascinating, it is Father Berrigan's responses, as painstakingly recorded here, that are remarkable; not a glimmer of rhetoric or self-righteousness is in evidence, and the work vibrates with a love of human life and a profound feeling for community that are contagious in their strength and clarity." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:539 N 18 '68 180w

"Daniel Berrigan, S. J., is the sort of priest who causes the lights of the Vatican to burn through the night. . . . This short, urgent, passionate book is an outgrowth of [his] 'war diary,' along with eleven poems which erupted from the experience they commemorate and transmute. . . . What makes this war diary so compelling is Berrigan himself, his heart and sensibility, mind and nerve ends registering the profound anguish of being 'there' as an American, a priest, a poet, [and] a man. . . . But it is [his] attitude toward the American pilots that is at the core of the book—an attitude in which Christianity and ideology are mixed to become profound moral compassion and insight. It is impossible to read Berrigan's 'war diary' and not be moved." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 72:108B O 14 '68 700w

BERRY, BRIAN J. L., ed. Goals for urban America; ed. by Brian J. L. Berry and Jack Meltzer. 152p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

309.2 Urban renewal. City planning—U.S. Poverty 67-28390

Seven of the nine papers in this volume were presented as public lectures at the University of Chicago during its 1965-1966 academic year. The authors "argue that although the problems facing American society today are urban problems peculiar to the twentieth-century environment of mass communication, mass transportation, and massive social upheaval, we have been attempting to solve them with methods more appropriate to the eighteenth-century agrarian society of our forefathers. . . . [They propose] solutions for the major problem facing urban America today: how to create out of the jungle of cities a setting where life may be lived to its fullest, most truly human, potential." (Publisher's note)

"Several faults of the book stem from the origin of its papers, for while [they] deal with policy, few are dedicated to the horizontal approach . . . which the editors emphasize in their Introduction. Indeed, at least two (by Senator Joseph S. Clark and Governor Terry Sanford) simply reflect the importance that their authors attach to the sphere of activity with which they operate (namely, federal and state programs). . . . But even what sociologists might deem the weakness of many of the papers can be useful. Leaps into policy usually involve assumptions, and there are many assumptions here which might serve to organize past research and initiate new." William Michelson

Am J Soc 74:105 Jl '68 400w

Choice 5:867 S '68 200w

"The analytic and searching mood that dominates current thinking about urban problems permeates these essays. The editors have attempted to bring some new approaches to the problems of poverty, unequal opportunity, deteriorating city centers, overcrowding, and inadequate housing, by looking at the problems as total situations rather than as symptoms of other problems. Unfortunately, these innovating efforts are far from satisfactory. . . . However, the authors are of serious importance in today's urban scene: Heckscher, Myerson, Glazer, Governor Terry Sanford, Senators Clark and Kennedy. They may be repeating themselves, but they make the news." Sophie Mitrisin

Library J 92:3653 O 15 '67 100w

"A fine and valid book . . . on the implications of key social and political issues confronting urban America. . . . [The papers] have much to contribute. . . . [However] I'm afraid the important ideas [this collection] contains won't be sufficiently read or used because the editors stopped their work too soon. . . . They didn't cut and hone the essays to bring out their most significant points, nor did they meld the separate views of each contributor into a new construct of interrelated ideas in a separate chapter. And their introduction contains such obfuscating gibberish . . . that the reader may not venture as far as the main body of the book." J. R. Lowe

BERRY, B. J. L.—Continued

Sat R 51:48 Ap 13 '68 500w

BERRY, ERICK. Men who changed the map, A.D. 400 to 1914 [by] Erick Berry & Herbert Best [maps by Laszlo Matulay]. 170p il $5.95 Funk

920 Kings and rulers—Juvenile literature. World history—Juvenile literature 67-26044

"A panorama of history, built around the lives of 10 outstanding leaders, from Attila the Hun, Justinian, Mohammed, Charlemagne, William the Conqueror, Genghis Khan, Frederick II, Hernando Cortes, and Catherine the Great [to Napoleon. There is also a] chapter on the Ottoman Empire. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"The biographies of the individual conquerors are brief. . . . Their achievements are numerated and illustrate through a series of maps. The volume might be particularly helpful for the young student who is tracing the course of European history, although [it] also includes the conquests of Cortés and Catherine the Great. Other histories and biographies give better treatment to the subject, but the volume might serve as supplementary reading."

Best Sell 28:172 Jl 15 '68 90w

"The hazards of being a world leader are elucidated, waging wars being often the solutions to problems but no pattern of leadership is apparent. The large (8¼" x 10¾"), wide-margined format is exceptionally attractive; the illustrations—maps, photographs, reproductions—are commanding and illuminating. The lively, superficial text offers occasional intimate sidelights on the great, while the book as a whole offers chiefly that immediate appeal to browsing eyes." L. B. Jones

Library J 93:13311 S 15 '68 110w

BERRYMAN, JOHN. Berryman's sonnets. 115p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

811

67-15007

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Anthony Thwaite

New Statesman 75:659 My 17 '68 210w

Reviewed by Hayden Carruth

Poetry 112:119 My '68 900w

TLS p699 Jl 4 '68 550w

BERRYMAN, JOHN. His toy, his dream, his rest; 308 dream songs. 317p $6.50 Farrar, Straus

811

67-21526

In a prefatory note Berryman writes, "this volume, comprising Books IV, V, VI, VII, continues and concludes the poem, called The Dream Songs, begun in 77 Dream Songs [BRD 1964]. The poems in [the present] volume were written over a period of eleven years. . . . [They concern] an imaginary character (not the poet, not me) named Henry, a white American in early middle age sometimes in blackface, who has suffered an irreversible loss and talks about himself sometimes in the first person, sometimes in the third, sometimes even in the second; he has a friend . . . who addresses him as Mr Bones and variants thereof." (Pref. note)

"If John Berryman isn't the Henry of 77 Dream Songs . . . then he's an archetypal Henry, a modern man who is at odds with the things of this world. Defiant Henry hurts and he complains in an everyday language that moves both tortuously and clearly. Though it seems that it is the little things that count—views of hospitalization, the semi-erotic ladies of the lecture circuit, and the solace of alcohol—the bitches of life also include the unreasonable necessity of death and the almost unwelcome necessity of going on. . . . The religious feeling is in his poems as is a more than tenuous connection with what is beyond.

The present book is a necessary purchase along with [the previous volume] for public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:3791 O 15 '68 190w

"These ambitious poems take in . . . the public world of Eisenhower, Nixon and Kennedy; the newspaper world of Christine Keeler and Speck and Lana Turner's daughter; the inner world of poets—Eliot, Stevens, Williams, Yeats; the tragic world of lost friends—Delmore Schwartz, Randall Jarrell. One figure of gross pathos speculates on these worlds—the speaker of these poems. . . . The mournful tone of this new collection is fairly constant, and some of the best poetry comes in the seventh and last 'Book,' which concerns Henry's trip to Ireland. . . . Self-reproach fills the volume, but also, in the end, self-esteem, as Henry becomes the one inexhaustible subject. . . . Berryman has become a poet writing at last of the scathing boundaries between the soul and its surroundings." Helen Vendler

N Y Times Bk R p1 N 1 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Jascha Kessler

Sat R 51:34 D 14 '68 2000w

BERRYMAN, JOHN. Short poems. 120p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

811

67-28940

This collection of sixty-four poems represents a selection of the poet's earlier work. "It includes the complete contents of The Dispossessed [BRD 1948]; . . . all the poems in His Thought Made Pockets & the Plane Buckt, privately issued in a limited edition in 1958; and 'Formal Elegy,' written in 1963 on the occasion of the death of President Kennedy [which first appeared in Poetry and Power, edited by E. A. Glikes, BRD 1965]." (Publisher's note)

"John Berryman's sympathy with inner turmoil is expressed in 'Song of the Tortured Girl' and 'Winter Piece to a Friend Away.' His concern for love is in its pain and loneliness in 'Parting as Descent' and 'On the London Train.' . . . Mr. Berryman is a significant contemporary poet. His book is recommended for public and academic libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 92:4162 N 15 '67 160w

"[This publication] is an opportunity for readers to catch up with poems by Berryman not readily available before: . . . poems which I believe will stand with the few poems of our time that seem to condense in our best language our deepest feelings. In a few years, these poems will seem less arbitrary and eccentric than they do now, but I believe their force will remain." John Thompson

N Y Rev of Books 11:34 Ag 1 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:137 Mr 30 '68 70w

"Rereading [these] early poems makes one aware of Berryman's deliberate search for a mode and a manner of his own; and impressive as such poems of crisis . . . still are, they evoke a manner shared by a generation of poets rather than a clearly identifiable voice. One also notes the elegant and sober finish of these early poems." S. F. Morse

Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

BERTALANFFY, LUDWIG VON. Robots, men and minds; psychology in the modern world. 150p $5 Braziller

150 Psychology. Science

67-27524

The author "seeks a new 'natural philosophy,' a . . . scientific organismic approach by which the whole man can be studied in relation to his whole world—an approach where arbitrary distinctions between disciplines and methods will not prevent the scientists from seeing the significant order and organization in the complexities around him." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by A. A. Stone

Book World p14 O 6 '68 1200w

Choice 5:559 Je '68 210w

"In this brilliant tour de force, the eminent biologist and general systems theorist looks at psychology, biology, science in general, and from there, proceeds to discuss the state of the world. He sees fundamental, even preposterous contradictions, best exemplified in psychology, where eminent investigators make pompous generalizations based on trivial experiments. . . . He makes his point emphatically—too emphatically some might say; . . . but his goals are important, his arguments sound, and his writing is not only scientifically accurate but exciting and even inspirational. Highly recommended for psychology and general collections." George Adelman

Library J 92:3650 O 15 '67 180w

"Two years ago the author, professor of theoretical biology at the University of Alberta, delivered a series of lectures at Clark University] . . . commemorating the late Heinz Werner . . . but having little of his restraint and none of his commitment to the field. Bertalanffy damns the Establishment. . . . Why the overdrawn denunciation of psychology? It is a prelude to Bertalanffy's 'New Image of Man,' the first part of the book. His tactic is simple: the blacker he paints the old image, the brighter will the new one appear. . . . With all of his rhetoric, Bertalanffy makes no substantive contribution. He criticizes and exhorts but offers nothing better than the vaguest of programs. He even underestimates the potential of modern machines. . . . But the current fascination with machine analogies, the attempts to simulate intelligence and other complex processes, may reveal in more precise terms than ever before just what is uniquely human. This endeavor promises to yield more understanding than the broad and polemical abstractions of Bertalanffy's lectures." Richard Held
N Y Times Bk R p20 F '68 1200w

Reviewed by P. C. Ritterbush
Science 160:58 Ap 5 '68 600w

Reviewed by Daniel McKinley
Yale R 57:612 summer '68 300w

BERTI, LUCIANO. Masaccio. 183p 11 col 11 $27.50 Pa. state univ. press

759.5 Masaccio, Tommaso Guidi 66-25464

The director of the Galleries of Florence incorporates "recent research, and attempts to solve some complex problems—Masaccio's origins, relationships to other artists and to the general cultural milieu of early 15th-century Florence." (Choice)

"Until the publication of Ugo Procacci's survey of Masaccio's work, All of the Paintings of Masaccio [BRD 1963], there had been no dependable monograph on this major Renaissance painter in English. Although Berti's new study is a useful complement of Procacci, it is not the definitive monograph that has been needed. . . . [It] is less dependable than that of Procacci, and, while occasionally illuminating and original, is marred by tendentious arguments, some rather glib attacks on other scholars, and a much too superficial discussion of the Renaissance in general. Also Berti's book suffers from scattering the plates (some in color) without connection to the text and a few puzzling omissions in the bibliography (e.g. he does not list the Procacci mentioned above). . . . Most libraries in colleges with art history majors will need it; other libraries should probably depend upon Procacci until a more solid monograph on Masaccio appears." Choice 5:334 My '68 200w

"There can hardly be any doubt that this monograph is the most important new book on Masaccio. The scholarship is impeccable. . . . The service this book performs for scholars" is not in mere documentation, but in its ability to suggest original and exciting possibilities for further research on the artist. Mr. Berti has provided a readable text, beautiful tipped-in color plates; the book has a large format, and an attractive gold-stamped binding. Some of the color plates seem a little too 'blond' even for fresco, and details of some of the black-and-white illustrations are a little blurred, but these are minor criticisms. Short of seeing the paintings themselves, this reviewer knows of no better source on Masaccio." Richard Beale
Library J 93:1886 My 1 '68 240w

"A confused and confusing book, in part addressed to the general reader, for whose benefit the analysis of individual paintings is generalized and blurred, and in part to specialists on quattrocento painting, who may derive some benefit from the many fresh observations in the notes. . . . Dr. Berti modestly but truthfully describes his book as 'an essay in the literal sense of the word, no more than the groundwork for further study'. Never is a problem investigated to greater depth than it has been by earlier writers, and the thought processes are those of learned journalism, not of research. . . . [The illustrations] include many excellent details in collotype and a quantity of adequate or more than adequate colour plates." TLS p1246 N 7 '68 800w

BERTINE, ELEANOR. Jung's contribution to our time; the collected papers of Eleanor Bertine; ed. by Elizabeth C. Rohrbach; pub. for the C. G. Jung foundation for analytical psychology. 271p $6.50 Putnam

150.19 Jung, Carl Gustav. Psychology 67-17109

The author, one of Jung's colleagues, presents the "insights of Jung for contemporary issues and problems of religious belief, interpersonal relations, war, and miscellaneous topics of general concern." (Choice) Most of these papers were published in Spring, a publication of the Analytical Psychology Club of New York. Bibliography.

"[The author] has woven a woof of personal experience and values, religions and secular literature, and professional insights from some 40 years of practice in depth psychology through the warp of Jung's thought about the creative and integrative powers of the psyche for the individuation of man in a fragmented society. This work is of signal importance to the Jung devotee in that the reader can grasp the depths of Jung's thought in theory." Choice 5:1046 O '68 130w

Reviewed by Ross Hainline
Library J 93:561 F 1 '68 150w

BERTO, GIUSEPPE. Antonio in love (La cosa buffa) tr. from the Italian by William Weaver. 302p $5.95 Knopf

68-12680

Antonio at twenty-five "is impelled to love. In Venice he finds Maria, his soulmate. He woos her, wins her, then is denied her, both by her snobbish parents and by his own Dante-like desire to star in the unfulfilled drama of 'two souls eternally seeking each other in the infinity of worlds.' The original plan alters only in that now he finds another girl, the earthy Marika, who catastrophically offers him everything of herself except love." (Sat R)

"[The] Italian title of this best-selling novel by one of Italy's important modern writers is taken from Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness: 'Droll thing life is—that mysterious arrangement of merciless logic for a futile purpose. The most you can hope from it is some knowledge of yourself—that comes too late.' The unfortunate Antonio symbolizes all too well this universal condition, and Giuseppe Berto has chosen humor as a device to make knowledge of this condition bearable. The anti-punctiform narrative flow which has characterized Berto's writings since Incubus [BRD 1966] has been daringly and successfully extended in this excellent story. This novel is an essential purchase for public and college libraries." Arthur Curley

Library J 93:4164 N 1 '68 210w

"Like its predecessor, Incubus, [this] suffers from a deficiency of punctuation and from the excess of fausset naïveté which commonly attends this deficiency. More than with its predecessor, the reader is continuously afflicted by a nagging cleverness, a frightfully insistent knowingness. . . . The basic objection to this new novel is that there is something faintly disgusting in being made to look at young love through such very old eyes, by way of a narrator so sophisticated and worldly-wise, and especially when the narration is long-drawn-out and relentlessly facetious in tone. By the end of the book, [we learn that] Antonio has learned something about life. But we haven't learned much." D. J. Enright
N Y Rev of Books 11:24 N 21 '68 470w

Reviewed by Stephanie Harrington
N Y Times Bk R p55 O 20 '68 750w

"Never was the pacing of a novel slower; its cogitations more monumental; never, perhaps, was a thin plot so complicated. . . . More important, however. . . . Berto makes a second sharp break from the pseudo-documentary approach he has practiced steadily. With Incubus . . . he moved to the forefront of a new avant garde. . . . The inner man became his theme, irony his mode, stylistic peculiarities his trade mark. Taking even more chances in his latest novel, he maintains his balance only because once again he deals with serious matters as if they were funny. . . . [Yet] with all its moments of captivating humor, [Berto's drollery here] probably requires more patience with slow-motion action and more forbearance of stylistic eccentricity than most readers will be willing to muster." Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:46 Ag 24 '68 650w

BERTON, PETER. Contemporary China; a research guide, by Peter Berton and Eugene Wu; ed. by Howard Koch, Jr; prepared for the Jt. com. on contemporary China of the Am. council of learned socs. and the Social science res. council. 695p $22.50 Stanford univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution & peace
016.9151 China (People's Republic of China)
—Bibliography. Taiwan—Bibliography
67-14235

This list of "annotated entries of research aids and source materials . . . includes materials concerning post-1949 China and post-1945 Taiwan, published in Chinese, Japanese, English, Russian, and other European languages. . . . The cutoff date of the volume is 1963, but for series and dissertations it is 1964. . . . The [work] is divided into four major parts: (1) general and subject bibliographies and lists and indexes of newspapers and periodicals; (2) general reference works; . . . (3) selected documentary materials in law, government, economics, education, and foreign relations; and (4) selected serial publications from the Mainland, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Japan, United States, Soviet Union, and elsewhere. . . . [One appendix lists] research libraries and institutions throughout the world with holdings of Chinese materials, and [the other lists] doctoral dissertations and master's theses on contemporary China accepted by American universities." (Library Q) Subject index. Author-title index.

"For each item there is a detailed annotation which is deliberately descriptive as well as critical. . . . The excellent subject and author-title indexes are a great help in using the book. Since the guide is oriented principally to the humanities and social sciences, it is weak in the fields of Chinese natural sciences and technology . . . [nor does it include] Korean materials and additional important European literature. This highly selective and fully informative guide would be especially useful to a Chinese studies center with a small library budget and staff. College students would also benefit from having available in English these written sources. In addition to standard reference works even a major Oriental collection should consider this an indispensable research guide." W. S. Wong

Library J 93:2640 J1 '68 450w

"This work is especially distinguished for several notable features. First, the extensive scope of the materials in the volume has brought under control almost all important sources and references for the study of post-war China regardless of their types, origins, or languages of publication. Second, the introductory remarks at the beginning of the major parts, chapters, and sections are most useful in bringing the items in the section and elsewhere into perspective. Third, the special and analytical listing under important items or of major series of publication has brought together much otherwise unconnected or untraceable information for convenient checking and reference. . . . The volume is carefully prepared, well organized, and fully documented. . . . [One limitation] is probably its somewhat incomplete and inconsistent subject index." T. H. Tsien

Library Q 38:276 J1 '68 800w

BERTRAM, JAMES, ed. New Zealand letters of Thomas Arnold the younger. See Arnold, T.

BERWANGER, EUGENE H. The frontier against slavery; Western anti-Negro prejudice and the slavery extension controversy. 176p $5.95 Univ. of Ill. press

973.6 Slavery in the U.S. 67-21850

"Concentrating chiefly on the territories and states of the Old Northwest, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon, and California, Berwanger explores the roots of anti-Negro prejudice and shows the impact of racial antipathy upon the laws and politics of the 'West' before the Civil War. . . . [He maintains that] racism frequently went hand in hand with the movement to confine slavery to the South." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Examination of election and census data to determine the relative liberality of various regional, religious, and ethnic groups which settled the West would have strengthened the analysis. The argument advanced by Berwanger is not as original as his publisher would have us believe; we have understood for some time that Negrophobia and anti-slavery were not mutually exclusive. The book's major contribution is its thoroughly documented development of this theme."

Choice 5:860 S '68 150w

"This monograph contributes much to a fuller understanding of racial attitudes and of the antislavery movement. It brings new material to light [and] makes clearer the great importance of the race issue in the antebellum period. . . . Yet this study should not preclude further work on the subject. Little attention is devoted to the friends of the Negro or to their motives for combating legal discrimination, and the amount of idealistic opposition to slavery is probably underestimated." V. J. Voegeli

J Am Hist 55:139 Je '68 390w

Reviewed by R. F. Kugler

Library J 92:4410 D 1 '67 140w

BERZINS, ALFREDS. The two faces of co-existence. 335p $6 Speller

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations. World politics 67-21428

The former minister of public and social affairs of pre-Soviet Latvia "discusses Lenin's attitude toward capitalism and democracies, the use of peace, friendship, and nonaggression pacts — the tools of Soviet expansionist policy and pays particular attention to the Soviet policy toward Poland, Finland, Hungary, and the Baltic and Balkan States, as examples. In succeeding chapters he discusses the Communist strategy and tactics according to Stalin and the Soviet policy of coexistence after Stalin." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Much of the information is already known to scholars, but its arrangement and Berzins' comments deserve attention. The author ridicules the new breed of scientists, the so-called Kremlinologists, whom he compares to the latter-day soothsayers. Berzins, in contrast to some of the Kremlinologists, is more interested in what the Soviet texts say than in what they leave unsaid. . . . The book is well documented, but a little disturbing is the author's indiscriminate use of the cliché 'Free World versus the Communist World'. . . . There are a few mistakes. . . . The arrangement of an otherwise impressive bibliography is a bit unorthodox. All in all, the book merits attention and is well worth reading." Edgar Anderson

Am Hist R 73:550 D '67 500w

"The tone of Berzins' book can be gauged by this introductory statement: ' . . . the communist leaders in Moscow are still at the centre of the world communist conspiracy.' Anyone who is familiar with the difficulties encountered by Moscow in its relations with the Chinese, Albanian, Cuban, Rumanian and several other parties could hardly agree with this categorical opinion. . . . The author supports his [theses] . . . by recalling the history of Stalin's imperialism in Eastern Europe. Approximately one half of the book is taken up by this true story which had been told several times before in other books, most of them better documented. Not all of these earlier books have been listed in the bibliography, which frequently does not mention the publication dates for the listed books." W. W. Kulski

Am Pol Sci R 62:312 Mr '68 360w

Choice 5:406 My '68 150w

BESSER, MARIANNE. The cat book; II. by Shannon Stirnweis. 91p lib bdg $3.75 Holiday 636.8 Cats—Juvenile literature 67-8037

The author "discusses the personality, history, physical features, and differing personalities of cats, wild and domestic, plain and fancy. The many superstitions and curiosities concerning cats and the reasons why some people do not like them are also included. The final chapter gives some advice for owners of pet cats. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"This is a good addition to any collection of animal books. The black-and-white drawings give the text adequate support." L. L. Clark
Library J 92:4608 D 15 '67 80w

Reviewed by Richard Lockridge

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p6 N 5 '67 300w

BESSET, MAURICE. New French architecture [tr. by James C. Palmes]. 235p il $17.50 Praeger

720.944 Architecture, Modern—20th century. Architects. Architecture—Designs and plans 67-20400

A survey of the work of a number of modern French architects. The buildings, photographed and described, "include private houses, apartment buildings, industrial plants, office buildings, shopping centers, schools, theaters, sports buildings, churches, and bridges. The author . . . outlines the characteristics of the emerging style and the approaches and techniques of its most outstanding exponents and gives brief biographies of each." (Publisher's note) The text is in English and French. Index of buildings. List of architects and engineers.

"May possibly be of future use to students of national design trends rather than to architects or architecture students. . . . The bleakness and lack of delight and excitement in French architecture after Le Corbusier will be obvious to most readers. Only libraries which buy everything that comes out will want to add this book."

Choice 5:763 S '68 80w

"[This book fails] as architectural history, no attempt being made . . . to group buildings by architects or trace the development of ideas, in the manner of, say [I.] McCallum's Architecture U.S.A. [BRD 1959. It is an] anthology of miscellaneous buildings, divided into sections by building type and going back about fifteen years. This is bound to limit [its] appeal to architects who will find the information provided for each building inadequate. . . . M. Besset's writing is difficult and confirms that even in France architectural critics live up to their reputation of speaking in a private language. . . . [France] has kept the lead in system building. This alone makes the section on housing one of the most interesting. . . . The French church remains a pioneer of the new liturgical movement, and this, too, is evident from the excellent examples chosen. The subject of town-planning . . . is weakly illustrated."

TLS p332 Ap 4 '68 240w

BEST, ALLENA CHAMPLIN. See Berry, E.

BEST, HERBERT, Jr. auth. Men who changed the map. See Berry, E.

The BEST American short stories, 1967 & the Yearbook of the American short story; ed. by Martha Foley and David Burnett. 357p $6 Houghton

Short stories—Collections (16-11387)

In the editors' opinions, this volume contains the best "twenty stories written in [America in 1967]. . . . Predominant themes of this collection [are] the concept of search . . . [and] the problems of being someone, of having a particular identity. . . . [Contributors include] Kay Boyle, Berry Morgan, Henry Roth. . . . Donald Radcliffe, David Rubin, Carol Sturm, and William Wiser." (Publisher's note) Roll of honor, 1966. Distinctive short stories in American magazines, 1966.

"These gifted writers all write from the bowels of emotion. They write beautifully, fluidly, of circumstances that are vivid and sometimes stark." I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 27:344 D 1 '67 500w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Christian Science Monitor p11 D 21 '67 900w

"Three of [the twenty stories] seem to me good—one of the three very good. . . . But the other 17 stories! There is a fake Katherine Mansfield (by Ethan Ayer), a fake Hemingway (by George Blake), a fake Eudora Welty (by Berry Morgan)—even a fake Satyajit Ray film in prose (by David Rubin). There are two stories that are merely extended jokes. . . . There are two stories of moral discovery that might have been daring in 1925. . . . There are other disasters, but let us turn now to the editors. . . . In their foreword they [say the short story] 'has flourished during the past year.' On the evidence they provide, it is difficult to agree about the flourishing. . . . [This latest volume] ridiculously misrepresents the current level of American imaginative writing." Stanley Kauffmann

New Repub 157:22 N 25 '67 1400w

"[This] suffers from principle-of-selection trouble. The word 'best' demands taste and purpose. Neither is evident. Variety, however, assuredly is. . . . There is gloom, lightheartedness and cheerful squalor. (The cheerful squalor item, William Wiser's engaging 'House of the Blues,' is about the best of the lot.) . . . But to be varied is not to be representative. Editors Foley and Burnett have given us few if any previously unpublished writers, although there are plenty of good, middle-aged, established ones. There is not much original and nothing adventurous. We learn more about the American short story as it was 20 years ago than about what it will be next year." Laurence LaFore

N Y Times Bk R p55 D 10 '67 200w

BETHELL, JEAN. How to care for your dog; il. by Norman Bridwell. 64p $1.95 Four winds

636.7 Dogs—Juvenile literature 67-23535

These rules for the new dog-owner cover feeding, "paper-training and housebreaking him, curing his homesickness and first-night blues, teaching him good manners and tricks, taking him on trips and caring for him when he cries or gets sick." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"The questions children ask most often about caring for their dogs are answered in this easy-to-read manual, covering all important aspects of dog care including a great deal of general information about dogs. The little brown dog used in the illustrations is rather engaging, and the text is finished off with four pages of photographs of different breeds including some mongrels. An index would have been useful, but the chapter headings are specific enough for reference. This is for a somewhat younger grade level than the other juvenile books on dog care." L. L. Clark

Library J 93:857 F 15 '68 100w

"[This] text looks something like second-grade primers used to, but it makes sense from start to finish. Even the puppy pictures of various breeds are well chosen and captioned." Hal Borland

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p68 N 5 '67 90w

BETTS, RAYMOND F. Europe overseas: phases of imperialism. 206p $5 Basic bks.

321 Imperialism. World politics 68-19772

A professor of history at Grinnell College "surveys European colonialism from the 15th Century to the . . . [period] following World War II, and beyond that to the post-colonial era. . . . [He discusses] the Third World of the underdeveloped countries. He sees European overseas imperialism as one of the most significant occurrences in the modern era and concludes that European overseas imperialism was a cultural force of a magnitude and speed which has never been matched in history." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is thoughtful and quite readable, but at the same time, not particularly original either for data or conclusions. Little attention is given to probing the socio-political economic roots of expansion, or for that matter, to inquiring what it was in traditional Asian and African societies that made them vulnerable. The distortion of patterns of economic and social life in colonial areas to serve the purpose of European rulers is passed over virtually without mention. Nevertheless, the book offers useful insights into the dynamics of European expansion and would be a worthwhile accession for the average college library."

Choice 5:1018 O '68 150w

Reviewed by John Neufeld

Library J 93:2248 Je 1 '68 120w

BEVINGTON, HELEN. A book & a love affair. 183p $4.75 Harcourt

B or 92 68-20062

In this memoir the "poet of light verse, writer, and professor tells what it was like to be young and alive in the turbulent thirties. [She] centers her story on New York, where she met her husband in the pre-Depression days of prosperity, in 1927, when both were graduate students in the English department at Columbia University. . . . From Prohibition to Pearl Harbor, Mrs. Bevington hews to the personal in her kaleidoscopic view of these hectic years and the way the times affected her family." (Publisher's note)

"In addition to being a delightful memoir of a love affair with a charming man and with books, A Book and a Love Affair will be many things to many people. The student rebels of today will be able to say that members of the older generation were rebels too against the conventions of the 1920's. The serious student and lover of literature will find delight in the knowledge of the Bevingtons and Mrs. Bevington's ability to share her vast store of knowledge with the reading public in such a delightful manner. Those who were young during the period Mrs. Bevington describes will be overwhelmed with memories evoked. . . . Her attitude toward some aspects of living and religion may be questioned by some, but her honesty and diligent search for life's meaning cannot fail to impress. Recommended for college and public libraries." H. P. Bolman

BEVINGTON, HELEN—Continued

Library J 93:2998 S 1 '68 230w

"Mrs. Bevington loses her touch whenever she leaves the New York scene. Her description of the world tour is gushy; when she is in England she drops clichés; even out-of-town summers are platitudinized. But in New York—and especially when writing of their Morningside Heights years—her words fall right as rain, whether she is describing Columbia professors, suicides dropping out of skyscrapers or the dim gaieties of the thirties. . . . Can a happy marriage be described? Tolstoy notwithstanding, Mrs. Bevington does pretty well." Anne Fremantle
N Y Times Bk R p7 S 15 '68 850w

BEYER, AUDREY WHITE. Dark venture; 1l. by Leo and Diane Dillon. 205p $4.50 Knopf 67-15805

Demba, "a twelve-year-old West African boy wanders from home and is captured by an alien tribe. [Adam Waite] a young doctor in Bristol, Rhode Island—half a world away—agrees to sail as ship's surgeon on a vessel bound for the coast of Africa to pick up a cargo of 'Black Ivory.' The author by telling first the boy's story and then the man's joins the destiny of the two in an account of the slave trade in the late eighteenth century." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. "Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:111 Je 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:306 My 24 '68 50w

"Adam, appalled by the fate of the desperate beings that he must keep alive, become increasingly ashamed of his part in the venture. At Barbados Adam buys Demba at great personal sacrifice and brings him to America. In the final section of the book, in a staid New England town, the young doctor begins to apprehend the full significance of his actions. . . . Well-written, the book vividly re-creates the horror of slavery, and illustrates the great meaning for one's fellows of individual deeds." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 44:426 Ag '68 270w

"In spite of the author's protestations to the contrary, Adam winds up a moral midget, and worse, Demba loses all character in the face of the New World. The narrative pace flags, as [the] story slows to a stop on a feminine happy ending: Adam and the girl who waited for him will marry, and someday, Demba will be free." J. C. Thomson
Library J 93:[3311] S 15 '68 160w

"[The author] is at her best when she is with Demba, following his nightmarish journey up the Gambia River to the slave stockade, his long march in shackles to the coast, the cruelties on his ocean trip. But if the outward details of this voyage are convincing, so are the details of the inner voyage into slavery—Demba's shock, despair, humiliation, rebellion, his final adjustment and his eternal homesickness. The publisher does well to give this book a handsome format; it deserves it." Jean Fritz
N Y Times Bk R p30 My 12 '68 200w

BEZYMENSKI, LEV. The death of Adolf Hitler; unknown documents from Soviet archives. 114p il $3.95 Harcourt

940.54 Hitler, Adolf. World War, 1939-1945—Germany
68-9804

The author, who was a member of Marshal Zhukov's staff during the last days of Berlin, uses interviews with Russian eyewitnesses and quotations from interrogation reports to describe the actual happenings in the Reich Chancellery on April 20, 1945. The book makes available the autopsy reports of the Forensic Medical Commission of the Soviet Army in charge of dissection of corpses found or unearthed near the Berlin Chancellery. The book also gives an account of the end of the Goebbels family.

"Any question about the survival of Adolf Hitler and his paramour, Eva Braun, would seem to be completely resolved by the publication of these findings, some 23 years after the event, from the Soviet archives. . . . The documents present conclusive evidence, based rather strikingly on the identification of the dentures of both Hitler and Eva, of the identities of the corpses. . . . The book makes gruesome reading, but it will also settle some ghosts."

Best Sell 28:197 Ag 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by H. H. Bernt
Library J 93:3555 O 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Sebastian Haffner
New Statesman 76:431 O 4 '68 800w

"The bulk of this short book is simply a . . . re-hash of [Yelena] Rzhnevskaya's article [entitled 'Berlin Notes,' and published in 1965 in a special commemorative issue of the Russian periodical Znamya]. . . . The sole new contribution which [Bezymenski] has made is the text of the autopsy reports . . . and the sole question which these reports may enable us to answer is the limited, factual question, whether Hitler died by pistol-shot or poison. The first question which we naturally ask is, are the documents genuine? . . . The original Russian text is apparently not to be divulged, and Bezymenski's handling of texts . . . does not inspire unqualified confidence. . . . Why were these documents suppressed in 1945? . . . Why, and by whom, have they been released now? . . . [I am] prepared to assume, for the time being, that these documents are, as stated, 'complete and authentic,' and fairly translated. . . . Bezymenski's book contains some useful corroboration of accepted views, and some interesting circumstantial detail. . . . It does not 'considerably alter the picture which the world has had of Hitler's death.'" H. R. Trevor-Roper

N Y Rev of Books 11:48 S 26 '68 4350w
New Yorker 44:214 O 12 '68 150w

"[This book] turns out to be one of the silliest bits of propaganda ever put out by a totalitarian regime. [It] is not only silly; it is also badly done. . . . There is an enormous amount of nonsense at the beginning, trying to show that Hitler held out so long only because the western powers intended to come to terms with him. . . . That Hitler should have poisoned himself turns out to have a stupendous importance because it is therewith asserted that he died a dog's death, rather than that of a hero. Curiously Major Bezymenski publishes the other autopsies in full but only an abbreviation of Hitler's." TLS p1195 O 24 '68 500w

BHARTRIHARI. Bhartrihari; poems; tr. by Barbara Stoler Miller; with the transliterated Sanskrit text of the Satakatayam: Niti, Śringāra, Vairāgya [prepared for the Columbia college program of trs. from the Oriental classics. Wm. Theodore de Bary, editor]. (UNESCO coll. of representative works: Indian ser.) 156p $6 Columbia univ. press 891.2 Sanskrit poetry 66-26001

This volume "contains 200 poems and is divided into three sections—on man and his worldly gains, erotic emotion, and renunciation. This translation is based on the Sanskrit of D. D. Kosambi's The Epigrams Attributed to Bhartrihari." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography.

"Bhartrihari, the reputed author, was a sophisticated, somewhat world weary courtier, well acquainted with society's rewards and disillusionments, as well as with the seductive power of its beautiful women. He is conscious of the virtues of religious withdrawal, but is far more pictorial and immediate in describing 'the white umbrella's princely lustre.' While the translation cannot hold to the conventional verse forms of the original, it does convey the Sanskrit charm of figurative richness. Libraries will want to add this book of short poems, both for its intrinsic value and for its balance, to the usual concentration on Indian epic, drama, and religious philosophy. Undergraduates will enjoy the poems, while advanced students will find a wealth of material about the sophistication of Indian court life during the Dark Ages of European culture." Choice 4:1251 Ja '68 170w

"[This] is a free-verse rendition, which seeks to retain the character and texture of the original. Though translated with scholarly care, this edition is aimed at the general reader. . . . The spirit and sonority of the poems make it indispensable for poetry collections, and its place in the history of secular Indian literature makes it important for more general collections." R. S. Dillon

Library J 92:1011 Mr 1 '67 140w

Reviewed by R. E. Teele
Poetry 112:347 Ag '68 500w

BHATTACHARYA, SACHCHIDANANDA. A dictionary of Indian history. 888p $12.50 Braziller

954 India—History—Dictionaries 68-19984

This book of reference "deals with the dated period of Indian history, commencing from the ancient times, and covers all the periods of the history of India, ancient, medieval and modern. The topics, 2785 in number, are arranged alphabetically and include names of persons, places, works and institutions significant in the evolution and development of the history of India. With rare exceptions references to living persons have been avoided." (Introd) Chronology.

"This extraordinary reference work . . . is the work of some fifty years of study [and includes] everything from Abastanoi to Zalfikar Khan, from earliest recorded periods to the present. A list of important dates occupies pages 867-888, with a list of abbreviations on page 889. For libraries, this recommends itself as an important contribution for reference to the history of the subcontinent of India."

Best Sell 28:42 Ap 15 '68 100w

"This work fills a long-felt need . . . but it is not without defects. The 'Bengali' bias is obvious in many places. . . . Some rulers are mentioned without the slightest probable or certain chronological reference (Chastana). Ceylon, which had such sustained and intimate contact with India, gets little over a page while China, whose impact on India history until 1950 was only peripheral, is given two and one-half pages. These drawbacks do not seriously detract from the value of the work which is indispensable as a reference tool in every library and for every student of Indian history."

Choice 5:457 Je '63 200w

"There are only a few minor errors in this comprehensive and encyclopedic work. The presentation is generally objective, except for a few subjective opinions of the compiler which have crept in. The book will be a valuable reference for students, teachers, journalists, and general readers who are interested in Indian history." Recommended for library purchase generally." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:2846 Ag '68 190w

BIANCOLLI, LOUIS, jt. auth. A debut at the Met. See Peters, R.

BIASION, RENZO. The army of love. See Lost legions

BIBBY, CYRIL, ed. The essence of T. H. Huxley. See Huxley, T. H.

BIBLE. OLD TESTAMENT. PENTATEUCH. William Tyndale's Five books of Moses called the Pentateuch; being a verbatim reprint of the edition of 1530, compared with Tyndale's Genesis of 1534, and the Pentateuch in the Vulgate, Luther, and Matthews's Bible, with various collations and prolegomena, by J. I. Mombert, and newly introduced by F. F. Bruce 635p $22.50 Southern Ill. univ. press 222 [68-82023]

This is "a reissue of J. I. Mombert's edition of Tyndale's Pentateuch . . . published in 1884.

The collations are included in the . . . Prolegomena in which, besides an account of the life and activities of Tyndale, there is a close bibliographical discussion of the 1530 text. . . . [The introduction] is concerned with general topics such as the literary style and exegetical principles of Tyndale." (TLS)

"This volume will undoubtedly be welcomed with enthusiasm by those OT students whose range of interests includes what is commonly called 'The English Bible.' . . . Because Tyndale's creative genius as a Bible translator and his great impact upon subsequent English translation have been long defended by competent Biblical scholars, this work surely merits inclusion in college and university library collections. Tyndale's prolific footnotes with their constant allusion to original and contemporary Biblical texts are most instructive, as are his marginalia with their anti-papal irony. Moreover, the . . . introduction contains the kind of helpful orientation which makes the reading of Tyndale's 15th century English an inviting, if challenging, experience."

Choice 5:1152 N '68 120w

TLS p1195 D 7 '67 290w

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. The letters of Peter and Jude. See Leaney, A. R. C.

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. The New Testament of the Jerusalem Bible; general ed; Alexander Jones. 462p maps col maps $5.95
Doubleday

225.5

67-24835

"The entire section of the New Testament has been issued separately, complete with introductions, notes, tables and maps." (Best Sell) For descriptive note and review excerpts and citations of the complete Jerusalem Bible see BRD 1966.

Best Sell 27:325 N 15 '67 70w

"[This edition is] printed on regular, rather than on Bible, paper. An excellent translation, with introductions and notes, this has rapidly become one of the most popular and useful editions of the Bible now available." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:83 Ja 1 '68 40w

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. ACTS. The Acts of the apostles; introd, tr. and notes by Johannes Munck; rev. by William F. Albright and C. S. Mann. (The Anchor Bible) 317p $6 Doubleday

226

66-20918

"Opposed to form critical and Bultmannian criticism, Professor Munck finds strong evidence for the historical credibility of the Acts materials. His commentary consists of interpretative and textual notes and connected exposition for each paragraph of text." (Library J) Index entitled Key to the text.

"The entire work was revised after Dr. Munck's death, by Prof. W. F. Albright and Dr. C. S. Mann, who are also responsible for nine informative appendixes, which discuss certain key problems relative to the Acts in the light of recent scriptural and archeological investigation. The discussion of the introductory questions concerning this highly fascinating New Testament book reflects the quite conservative, yet ably supported, views the Aarhus professor came to hold toward the close of his life. This orientation of Prof. Munck's intellectual Odyssey may well prove to contain a salutary lesson for contemporary New Testament scholarship. . . . The commentary is brief but most useful and supports Munck's general interpretation of the purpose of the Acts. The appendixes will be found informative and interesting. Dr. Albright writes out of a profound erudition upon Luke's ethnic background, Simon Magus, Paul's education. Dr. Mann's notes are most informative on the structure of the Jerusalem community, on the meaning of 'Hellenists' and on the customary languages employed by the Jews at the beginning of the Christian era." David Stanley

America 117:689 D ■ '67 470w

"This volume, while useful, may well disappoint many readers. Translation of the Biblical text (via a Danish translation) is highly readable and good, but commentary is brief. The introduction and commentary present Munck's distinctive (and conservative) points of view on Paul, the early church, and Jewish and Gentile Christianity. These are set against other points of view, but, unfortunately, alternative interpretations are not documented by footnotes from which the reader could profit. . . . The author has very little to say (in a positive sense) about current studies on Acts, of which there are many. Moreover, Munck's theses, which seemed to be so fresh and exciting in Paul and the Salvation of Mankind [BRD 1961] appear to be less exciting and provocative in this context."

Choice 4:854 O '67 190w

BIBLE. N.T. ACTS—Continued

"[This volume] represents a step backwards from the careful analyses of Caddbury, Dibelius, Hänchen, Conzelmann, Wickens and others. Instead of focusing attention on the structure of Acts and on the text of a given pericope, Munck's exegesis becomes the means of showing that Acts is right after all. Neither Luke's peculiar theology nor his literary quality is elucidated; opposing viewpoints are for the most part simply ignored rather than rejected on the basis of argumentation. . . . Further, Munck sees no difference between the Lucan and Pauline ideas of salvation history, of the nature and function of the apostle, of the significance of Christ's cross, of eschatology. . . . Some of the speculations found in the appendices belong to the realm of exegetical curiosities." Gerhard Krodel

Christian Century 85:144 Ja 31 '68
550w

"Those familiar with the previous volumes in this distinguished series of Bible translations and commentaries have come to expect the high quality of workmanship, careful scholarship, and practical usefulness that characterize this most recent volume in the 'Anchor Bible Series.' Professor Munck, late of Aarhus University, Denmark, has particularly distinguished himself in this final contribution. [The] editorial revision was completed under the direction of the general editors of the series. . . . [Munck] makes a significant contribution to the literature of this key New Testament book. Nevertheless, the appendixes by the editors, and particularly the one on Stephen by Abram Spiro, may well prove to have more far-reaching if not revolutionary importance in their demonstration of the ecumenical nature of the primitive church." R. V. Ritter

Library J 92:1626 Ap 15 '67 180w

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. ROMANS. The letter of Paul to the Romans; commentary by Ernest Best. 184p $3.50; pa $1.65 Cambridge 227 66-24289

A part of the Cambridge Bible Commentary series, this volume attempts to explain the text "after an introductory section on the circumstances in which the Letter was first written." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This simple commentary is clear and well written, with warmth and considerable insight. It is provided with an excellent index, by means of which Best's interpretation of Paul's key terms can be easily followed. . . . [The] brief reading list . . . does not go beyond the traditional approach to Paul. Recent studies of Paul's thought suggest that in making Romans immediately intelligible to modern Western man we are imposing a meaning on it which would be quite unintelligible to the readers to whom it was addressed. Of this the book gives no inkling."

Choice 4:1126 D '67 100w

Reviewed by Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:117 Ja 1 '67 130w

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. GALATIANS. The letter of Paul to the Galatians; commentary by William Neil. 95p $3.50; pa $1.65 Cambridge 227 66-29271

As with other volumes in the Cambridge Bible Commentary, the introductory remarks "(saying who the Galatians were, what Paul's relationship with them was, what was the occasion for the Letter, and when it was written) lead straight into the text, which then alternates with sections of commentary." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A simple, clear, untechnical presentation of Galatians for the general reader, based upon the New English Translation of the New Testament, setting forth the common understanding of the epistle. It is modern only in the sense that it presupposes the point of view of Biblical criticism, but the insights of such modern students of Paul as Schweitzer, Munk, Schoeps, and Stendahl are completely ignored. This is regrettable because there is no other commentary in English addressed to the unsophisticated reader which provides a really modern introduction to this important epistle."

Choice 4:1125 D '67 90w

Reviewed by Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:117 Ja 1 '67 130w

BICKERMAN, E. J. Chronology of the ancient world. 253p il $3.50 Cornell Univ. press 529 History. Ancient. Chronology, Historical cal 68-10758

The text of this book, an introduction to the basic elements of ancient chronology, is a "re-written and expanded version [of the Italian edition] of the author's Chronologie, a monograph [first published in Germany in 1933]. . . . To the text has now been added a . . . section containing lists of kings and rulers of the East; of Spartan kings; Athenian archons (496-293 B.C.); Roman consuls (509 B.C.-A.D. 337); Roman emperors to Constantine; chronological tables of early Roman history; of Greek and Roman history; of new moons (605 B.C.-A.D. 308); of risings and settings of stars; . . . and a table of the Roman Julian calendar." (Class World) Index.

Choice 5:1283 D '68 100w

"Originally written to answer a simple question . . . —how are we able to date an event in ancient history?—the book provides the answers in a chapter, 'Applied Chronology,' and, together with the tables, it is now a very useful reference work. It is also a readable book, containing many fascinating items. . . . The compendious style of the text gave the author little opportunity to indicate the thorny problems and controversies that have beset the experts until the present time. Insights into some of the difficulties are provided in the last two chapters. The volume also serves as an up-to-date bibliographical guide on the subject. Relative dating methods used in archaeology and the direct methods of modern science . . . are not dealt with here." W. H. Stahl

Class World 62:60 O '68 290w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:60 N 16 '68 160w

BICKERMAN, ELIAS. Four strange books of the Bible; Jonah/Daniel/Koheleth/Esther. 240p il $7.50 Schocken 221 Bible. O.T. Jonah—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Bible. O.T. Daniel—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Bible. O.T. Ecclesiastes—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Bible. O.T. Esther—Criticism, interpretation, etc.

67-15748

"The author, professor of ancient history at Columbia, examines the characters, incidents, background and religious meanings of these Scriptural stories." (N Y Times Bk R) The article on the Greek Esther appeared previously in the Proceedings of the American Academy of Jewish Research, v20, 1954.

"Recommended for undergraduate and educated nonspecialists."

Choice 5:1146 N '68 130w

"Awakens some fresh thoughts about some well known but hard-to-fit parts of the Bible." Christian Century 85:427 Ap 3 '68 50w

Reviewed by David Daiches

Commentary 46:106 N '68 3400w

"The work is partly exegesis, partly history of exegesis, and most of all a determination of historical setting. . . . Mr. Bickerman's approach might be called secularly Jewish, although he frequently cites the commentaries of Christians and pagans. One wonders, however, for whom he intended the book. His style is excellent; he has hardly written a bad sentence. The paucity of footnotes would indicate that he hoped for a general rather than an academic audience—yet the biblical erudition he assumes is considerable. Recommended for religious collections." A. A. Greenbaum

Library J 92:4505 D 15 '67 200w

"[Written] with insight, unobtrusive scholarship and an urbane style. The nature of prophecy, the problems and rewards of life in an acquisitive society, religious persecution and religious faithfulness are among the timeless topics illuminated in these pages." N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ap 7 '68 100w

BICKHAM, JACK M. The shadowed faith. 262p $4.95 Doubleday

68-18092

"Sam Kinkaid, lay editor of a Catholic diocesan newspaper finds himself involved in ecclesiastical politics when Bishop Gallagher dies. The conservatives and reactionaries, both lay and clerical, see the death as providing an opportunity for stopping the liberal and radical tide which was set in motion by Bishop Gallagher. The struggle involves the selection of an administrator, the Apostolic delegate and the attempts to muzzle Sam Kinkaid. Sam finds his personal life complicated by his love for a fellow volunteer worker in the inner city and by the blackmail attempts of right wing laymen." (Best Sell)

"[This novel] attempts to capture the turmoil, anguish and enthusiasm of the post Vatican Council Catholic Church in the United States. The viewpoint is not clerical, but lay. The characters are not simple faithful but involved people in search of religious meaning and bent on the reform of the Church. While there is some drama in the book, there is also a great deal of cocktail party theology which will bore all but those Catholics who think of themselves as leaders or intellectuals." T. M. Garrett

Best Sell 28:178 Ag 1 '68 200w
Christian Century 85:969 J1 31 '68 20w

"This novel seems more like a documentary—a potpourri of all the uneasiness, anguish, and downright meanness of a church in transition. . . . Jack Bickham proves himself adept at setting up an impressive array of cardboard figures." G. M. Casey

Library J 93:2687 J1 '68 190w

"The liberals are swell guys committed to social work, jazz masses and enlightenment. The conservatives are masterminded by 'cold, hard' types, 'weasel faced' with 'small blood-shot eyes'; they have a secret gun cache and take blackmail snapshots with a Polaroid camera. . . . This could be interesting terrain—but Mr. Bickham has it staked out so plainly in terms of black hats and white hats that the clash of ideas becomes a perfunctory exercise in villainy." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p21 Ag 11 '68 130w

BIDAULT, GEORGES. Resistance: the political autobiography of Georges Bidault; tr. from the French by Marianne Sinclair. 348p pl $6.95 Praeger

944.08 France—Politics and government 67-20471

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by M. R. Gordon
Am Pol Sci R 62:1003 S '68 1050w

Reviewed by R. B. Capelle
Ann Am Acad 376:160 Mr '68 500w
Choice 5:251 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Stanley Hoffmann
N Y Rev of Books 10:26 F 1 '68 2100w

BIDDLE, BRUCE J., Jr. ed. The new media and education. See Rossi, P. H.

BIECHLER, JAMES E., ed. Law for liberty, the role of law in the church today; foreword by Ernest J. Primeau. 221p $5.95 Helicon press

262.9 Ecclesiastical law 67-14646

"From October 8 to 10, 1966, in Pittsburgh, the Canon Law Society of America, with the support of 15 American bishops, sponsored a seminar on the renewal of Catholic church law. This volume contains the 14 position papers presented to the 34 participants, together with summaries of the discussions and the 'Statement of Consensus.' . . . [Among the contributing authors are] David Stanley, Bernard Lonergan, Barnabas Ahern, Vernon Bourke, Charles Curran, and John T. Noonan, Jr." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. S. Stanton
America 118:621 My 4 '68 60w

"The position papers are uniformly excellent summaries of the historical, scriptural, philosophical, and theological background of church law. . . . [The] discussions of liberty and authority in the church, the historical development of canon law, law and gospel, and related subjects are recommended for all serious students of the current renewal in the Church." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:1635 Ap 15 '68 160w

BIELAWSKI, JOSEPH G. My country, U.S.A. 144p il col il maps de luxe goldencraft ed $4.99 Golden press

917.3 U.S.—Description and travel—Juvenile literature 67-16472

This book describes "present-day America: the parade of its people from their cities, towns, villages, ranches, and farms. North, south, east, west—here is an American tour of our natural and man-made beauties and blunders, our industries and institutions, our problems and prejudices, and our pleasures." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"The repetition of the title used as a phrase throughout the text will annoy most readers of this book. In spite of the fact that the many good, clear photographs give the book an attractive appearance, this is a very cursory overview of the geography and social life of the United States with an overly strong patriotic fervor." M. R. Sive

Library J 92:4608 D 15 '67 60w

"This is a beautifully presented book. Its color photographs are superb and well chosen; the information it gives is amazingly comprehensive; the quotations from well-known poems about the American countryside are happily appropriate—yet the over-all impression this book-for-young-Americans conveys is that of an up-to-date colored almanac. Here dull words are logically developed into dull paragraphs that have no further purpose than to inform: the feel of our land is not communicated. If a reader were to learn all the facts contained in these pages he might give ready answers to all the questions asked of him by the moderator of a television quiz program, and still not understand their significance." Carl Carner

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 My 7 '67 330w

BIENEN, HENRY. Tanzania party transformation and economic development; pub. for the Center of Int. studies, Princeton university. 446p $11.50 Princeton univ. press

329.9678 Tanganyikan African National Union. Tanganyika—Economic conditions 67-21016

This "study of the Tanganyika African Nationalist Union (TANU), the ruling single party in Tanganyika is also a study of the history, ideology, commitment, and the role the party plays in all aspects of life in Tanzania." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This case study presents an ideal opportunity for testing the typologies and models currently being used to study African political systems. While it creates doubts about their utility, it provides additional data that may be useful in modifying them. Towards this end, the author has provided an analytical framework which focuses on the political party and its interaction with the economy. The analysis of the evolution of specific political structures as this evolution relates to economic change is a unique and significant contribution towards the comparative study of the problems of developing areas." Paul Saenz

Am Pol Sci R 62:653 Je '68 900w

"[This] the first book-length scholarly work on Tanzania politics to appear so far and as such alone deserves a place in any serious Africana collection. Bienen has done extensive research at both the central and (rare among political scientists) the district level. The resulting account occasionally seems a bit overlong and discursive in style, but it also constitutes a major contribution to the comparative literature on one-party systems in the non-Western world. . . . Bienen remains sophisticated and clearheaded without resort to either jargon or cynicism. His analysis of economic policies has been somewhat overtaken by recent events, but in fundamentals this is a work which will remain important for some years to come."

Choice 4:1414 F '68 130w

"As a study of party, this is a distinct contribution to comparative governments. . . . Professor Bienen, a member of the Princeton faculty, makes an excellent cross-discipline study of a party and its role as it tackles the problem not only of creating an ideology for a new country to follow, but also of dealing with problems faced in mobilized economic resources in a low-income ($59 per capita) country in an attempt to meet the challenge of development. In all, this very informative and readable book is highly recommended. It will be useful in most areas of the social sciences, and should prove a valuable addition in many libraries, for it is interesting, and nontechnical." R. W. Haseltine

BIENEN, HENRY—Continued

Library J 93:193 Ja 15 '68 250w

BIER, JESSE. The rise and fall of American humor. 506p pl $10 Holt

817 American wit and humor—History and criticism. Humorists 68-10071

This critical history ranges from the humor of colonial times to the present. The author suggests "that the three high points in American humor were the Jacksonian period, the Civil War and post-bellum era, and the decade of the 1930's when radio, film, and literary humor reached their apogee." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:619 J1 '68 130w

"Writing about humor is a difficult art, but Bier wisely eschews any attempt to be humorous and instead develops a thesis about crises and the comic. Today's humor comes off rather badly from his point of view, and we take little hope from his statement that 'we turn . . . to statistical probabilities for hope.'"

Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 70w

"Most college and public libraries will be eager to add this extensive study . . . to their collections because of the dearth of such material, and English majors—especially the more snobbish variety—will find much grist here for their special mills. But the general, fun-loving, adult readers will find, alas, that there is much more of hair- than rib-splitting in Professor Bier's views. . . . Recommended as an interesting—albeit personal—study of American humor." C. D. Pipes

Library J 93:189 Ja 15 '68 290w

"Much of what Mr. Bier says in his dreadful acadamese has, to use one of his own words, validity. But surely nobody save another academician could bother to disentangle 500 pages of awful writing to get at what is basically quite a simple chronicle. The writing is not only tortuous and involved; much of it is plain old-fashioned-bad." William Cole

Sat R 51:27 Mr 30 '68 700w

BIERCE, AMBROSE. The enlarged Devil's dictionary; with 861 newly discovered words and definitions added to the previous thousand-word collection; res. and editing by Ernest Jerome Hopkins; pref. by John Myers Myers. 300p $5.95 Doubleday

817 Satire, American 67-13971

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1363 F '68 100w

Reviewed by R. W. Butterfield
New Statesman 75:306 Mr 7 '68 500w
TLS p170 F 22 '68 400w

BIERMANN, WOLF. The wire harp; ballads/poems/songs; tr. by Eric Bentley. 98p $3.95; pa $1.65 Harcourt

831 67-20306

These verses are collected under the headings The Buckow ballads; Portraits; Berlin; Reassurances and revisions; and Additional poems. The book also contains Biermann's own musical scores for many of the selections. Originally published in West Berlin in 1965 entitled Die Drahtharfe.

"Governments not sure of their popularity are afraid of the writer of poems and songs that are critical. Wolf Biermann of East Germany, who set his poems to music and accompanies his songs on a guitar, is considered a threat. At any rate he is, according to information, barred from all public appearances, and is forbidden to publish his poetry. His work is biting and at times savage. He ranges from political comment and antiwar statements to bittersweet vignettes of contemporary life. His deep feeling for Germany shines through his work. Brecht is undoubtedly his intellectual godfather but Biermann speaks for today. His book is recommended for public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2009 My 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Michael Roloff
N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 18 '68 280w

BILLINGS, HAROLD. Edward Dahlberg; American Ishmael of letters; sel. critical essays with an introd. by Harold Billings. 175p $8.95 R. Beacham

818 Dahlberg, Edward 68-14891

This collection "includes essays by Jonathan Williams, D. H. Lawrence, William Carlos Williams, Sir Herbert Read, Joseph Evans Slate, Allen Tate, Victor Lipton, Alfred Kazin, Frank MacShane, Robert Kindrick, Paul Carroll, and Kay Boyle. Also included are Edward Dahlberg's own analysis of his early work [and an] introductory essay by the editor." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius
Best Sell 28:118 Je 15 '68 370w

"It was a happy inspiration to collect these [pieces] as a vade mecum for any reader coming to Edward Dahlberg for the first time or, indeed, for those who have read him with industry and yet have failed to penetrate the essence of his writing. . . . The fact that the authors of the essays . . . are themselves expert and experienced writers makes their contribution all the more valuable. For they all see different aspects of life and literature mirrored in Dahlberg's writings. . . . [They] show that there is enough authentic quality in Dahlberg to furnish a whole 'private exhibition' of differing facets of literary expression."

Most of these contributions were composed with reference to a single book which they introduce: the writer therefore, was not perplexed by the formidable task of estimating Dahlberg's total contribution and characteristics. In consequence, the book itself is more thoroughly savored and its bouquet transmitted. This whole volume gains significance thereby." Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:198 Ag 15 '68 600w

"The essays explicate, analyze, and dissect Dahlberg well enough, and the project was worth doing. But give me Dahlberg firsthand, not secondhand. The fire and spirit, as well as the wisdom and pain, come from the man and his words. Academic libraries especially will want to purchase the collection of essays." Duane Schneider

Library J 93:2500 Je 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by Raymond Rosenthal
Nation 207:504 N 11 '68 700w

Reviewed by Edmund White
New Repub 159:19 Ag 3 '68 1000w

"Billings . . . knows Dahlberg's work very well but must, I think be discouraged from setting up as its official vendor; his admiration is uncritical, his prose too like a parody of the master's. Many of the essays he has gathered are genuinely useful; in particular, a general conspectus of Dahlberg's earlier work by Jonathan Williams, a sound critical perspective on Because I Was Flesh by Josephine Herbst, and—perhaps most interesting of all—an analysis by Joseph Evans Slate of The Sorrows of Priapus which, relating the book to the genre of the Bestiary, combines some fascinating literary history with a critical bearing on Dahlberg's work as a whole." John Wain

N Y Rev of Books 11:13 Ja 2 '69 440w

BILLINGSLEY, EDWARD BAXTER. In defense of neutral rights; the United States navy and the wars of independence in Chile and Peru. 266p $6 Univ. of N.C. press

980 South America—History. U.S.—History, Naval. U.S.—Foreign relations—South America. South America—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-23495

Concentrating on the activities of a succession of naval commanders from 1817 to 1825, this "study has attempted to ascertain the nature of naval activities off the . . . coasts of Chile and Peru in support of American commerce, the resulting relationships of the naval commanders with patriot and royalist officials, the immediate effects on relations of the United States with South American governments, and possible long-range effects on inter-American relationships." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"An exaggerated impression of the book's novelty is given by its preface; no manuscript sources outside of Washington, D. C., were consulted; and too little use was made of British sources and studies, and almost none of similar Spanish materials. On the other hand, the author has dug much new information out of the navy records in Washington, has combined this successfully with data drawn from works published in the United States and South America, and has told his story clearly, interestingly, and with the sureness of touch in naval matters that one would expect of a veteran naval officer. . . . So far as United States sources are concerned, this is likely to remain the definitive work on the subject for many years." A. P. Whitaker

Am Hist R 73:1267 Ap '68 500w

"A well-written, carefully researched, and objective account of some of the origins of United States relations with Chile and Peru [by] a rear admiral, retired, . . . currently an assistant professor of history at the University of South Florida." F. B. Pike
Ann Am Acad 376:176 Mr '68 600w

"It is always refreshing to examine a familiar topic from a new and different perspective, and this is what Edward Billingsley ably does in his well-documented study. The activities of the United States during the Latin American wars for independence have been surveyed before, but not in any detail from the point of view of the naval commanders assigned to Spanish America with the unenviable responsibility of protecting American commerce and defending American neutrality. Focusing his attention on Peru and Chile, Billingsley gives detailed descriptions of the activities of the officers. He relies on journals, governmental records, and letters for the bulk of his information. . . . For anyone interested in American-Latin American diplomatic history, this study is an essential addition to the field." T. S. Tarr
J Am Hist 54:384 Mr '68 400w

BILLINGTON, MONROE LEE. Thomas P. Gore; the blind senator from Oklahoma. 229p $5.50 Univ. of Kan. press

973.91 Gore, Thomas Pryor. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century 67-14432
This biography discusses Gore's part in American political history, "from his 'first real public speech' at a Farmers' Alliance meeting in 1888, before he was eighteen years old, to his last race for the Senate in 1936, when he campaigned as an isolationist and conservative in opposition to the [New Deal]." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Billington was handicapped by the thinness of the Gore Papers before 1930. And at times, the reader loses Gore amid the mass of background detail. Although Gore was not a major figure, this biography adds to our understanding of the politics of the Progressive and New Deal eras."

Choice 4:1170 D '67 200w

"With fine precision . . . Billington has traced the course of the blind Oklahoman from Populist firebrand to Wilsonian progressive, to isolationist obstructionist, to anti-New Dealer, and ultimately to Dixiecrat. . . . Unfortunately, the author's treatment of this phenomenon is primarily narrative and thus misses an opportunity to come to grips with the question of the motivation behind this apparent metamorphosis. . . . What emerges, even so, is a solid political biography characterized by exemplary objectivity. Billington has successfully resisted emotional involvement with his subject." J. D. Buerker
J Am Hist 54:706 D '67 250w

BIOGRAPHICAL dictionary of republican China; Howard L. Boorman, ed; Richard C. Howard, associate editor. v 1 483p $20 Columbia univ. press

951 China—Biography 67-12006

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. K. Fairbank

Am Hist R 73:565 D '67 500w

Am Pol Sci R 62:298 Mr '68 50w

Reviewed by W. A. Rickett

Ann Am Acad 337:179 My '68 550w

Col Res Lib 29:66 Ja '68 200w

TLS p1359 D 5 '68 1450w

BIOGRAPHICAL dictionary of republican China; Howard L. Boorman, ed; Richard C. Howard, associate editor. v2 481p $20 Columbia univ. press

951 China—Biography (67-12006)

"This is the second of a projected five-volume set. . . . It covers names from Dalai Lama to Ma Yin-Chu." (Library J) For volume one, covering A-Ch'u see BRD 1967, 1968.

"The second volume of this important reference work, which should be in every library concerned with 20th-century developments, includes the living as well as the dead. The alphabetical range of this volume . . . makes available a wide spectrum of biographies of eminent figures in modern Chinese history. Among them are the Dalai Lamas, both the 13th and 14th, who is now in exile; Feng Yü-hsiang, the quondam 'Chinese General'; Hu Han-min, the conservative Kuomintang politician; Hu Shih and Liang Ch'i-ch'ao, the intellectual leaders of 'Young China' early in the century; and the current scapegoat of 'The Great Cultural Revolution,' Liu Shao-ch'i. For the biography of Chairman Mao himself, watch for Volume III."

Choice 5:749 S '68 110w

"One of the most important publications on modern China in the English language. Like the first volume, this one is carefully written and authoritative. . . . There may be a few names missing such as Hsiao Kung-Chuan, the scholar; Ho Chu-Kuo, the general; and Li Shu-Tien, the brother of Li Shu-hwa; but still the value of the book to scholars is undeniably great. If a library has any books on China and the Chinese, this set should be included among them." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:2847 Ag '68 100w

BIRD, CAROLINE. Born female; the high cost of keeping women down, by Caroline Bird with Sara Welles Briller. 288p $5.95 McKay

301.41 Woman—Social and moral questions. Women in the U.S. 68-24496

This book attacks discrimination against women. Miss Bird contends that "thirty million working American women have been . . . [trained to] accept inferior status, unequal pay for equal work, and penalties for getting pregnant and having children, to disclaim personal ambition, and to apologize for intellect and ability. . . . To give every woman a chance, marriage and men, as well as work, must change and [the author] explains the new patterns that our lives must take." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Caroline Bird's dry, statistical, even somewhat humorless approach to the current economic status of women [is] particularly welcome. As a writer, she's certainly uneven, but as a commentator, she is committed and convincing, proving point by point, patiently and painstakingly, with footnotes and heavy documentation, in category after category—from Title VII, the Civil Rights Bill amendment, through pension plans, differing pay scales, studies of exceptionally successful women, to an analysis of the revolution caused by the Pill—that women are indeed kept down on the job, and that such discrimination is not inherently ridiculous but immoral. Where Born Female is weakest is in its emphasis on business." Ann Birstein

Book World p10 S 22 '68 750w

Reviewed by B. L. Smith

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 29 '68 750w

"Based on wide reading, statistics, and interviews with working women and social and business leaders, this study is a detailed view of the 'second-class' worker in the United States. Caroline Bird relates the position of women in professions and occupations to the position of the Negro, and the change in the conception of marriage. . . . This is a worthwhile addition to the growing literature on the problems faced by working women and the adjustments both society and women are making to meet those problems. The book is recommended for public and academic libraries." D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:2682 Jl '68 170w

Reviewed by Reed Coats

Library J 93:4741 D 15 '68 160w [YA]

"Caroline Bird makes good use of a background in economics (her first book, 'The Invisible Scar' [BRD 1966] was on the Depression), a knowledge of history and a lot of personal interviewing. She not only writes down all the things that women think but rarely say; she documents them. . . . The last chapter, 'The Case for Equality,' is a storehouse of strong opinions and suggested reforms, either original with the author or credited to the proper source and endorsed by her. Probably it should be sent to all the Presidential candidates just to shake up their thinking. . . . It is true that much of the book is chockful of dry research, with very little illuminating opinion. The title . . . doesn't convey the book's seriousness. . . . Yet for women with the little patience it takes to read through, start to finish, there will be a lot of liberating ideas." Gloria Steinem

BIRD, CAROLINE—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ag 11 '68 1350w

Reviewed by B. M. Solomon
Sat R 51:34 N 2 '68 600w

BIRKHEAD, GUTHRIE S., ed. Administrative problems in Pakistan. 223p $5 Syracuse univ. press 354.549 Pakistan—Politics and government.

Government ownership 66-25174

Six American contributors to this volume, who have been on the staff of the Pakistan Administrative Staff College in Lahore, present an "examination of public administration in the developing country of Pakistan [which] is concerned primarily with problems since the revolution in 1958. . . . Each chapter analyzes an aspect of the struggle to develop the political resources and institutions as well as the economic capacity of Pakistan." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by H. F. Goodnow
Am Pol Sci R 61:1154 D '67 1250w

"The essays concern the place and pace of administration and administrators in such development. They are focused on limited problem areas, omitting background data. . . . The chapters are of uneven quality; 'Agriculture and Administration' and 'Government by Corporations' are especially provocative. Given Pakistan's peculiar history, traditions, religion, and new Constitution of 1962, this valuable study may, of course, be of limited significance only in studying the development process in other emerging countries. The book is heavy going in style, statistics, and use of footnotes (one of the most impressive features of this joint effort). Recommended for university and research libraries only."

Choice 4:344 My '67 160w

BIRMINGHAM, STEPHEN. "Our crowd": the great Jewish families of New York. 404p pl $8.95 Harper

920 Jews in New York (City). Jews—Social life and customs 66-20725

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 221:112 Ja '68 600w
Choice 4:1309 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by Marshall Sklare
Commentary 45:57 Ja '68 5300w
Economist 227:66 My 18 '68 500w
TLS p544 My 30 '68 1050w

BIRMINGHAM, STEPHEN. The right people: a portrait of the American social establishment. 360p il $10 Little

301.44 Upper classes. U.S.—Social life and customs 68-11525

The author of Our Crowd (BRD 1967) describes what he terms Real Society—the upper part of Society. Members of Real Society, he contends, "have a 'look' about them, a simple style of dressing that never falls from fashion, an accent all their own that mixes the flat A of New England with a patina of Brooklynese and a soupçon of Southern drawl, [and] a particular way of thinking. . . . They are not so much special by birth as by breeding." (Newsweek) Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:101 J1 '68 600w

"The Right People cannot be classed as a definitive sociological survey of a main force in the pattern of America's social structure, for, in approaching his subject, Mr. Birmingham has relied more heavily on hearsay, on intimate glimpses into drawing rooms, and on personal observation, than on true scholarly research methods. Pride and sentiment may have colored some of the reminiscences he recounts, but, authentic or not, the anecdotes, the gossip, and the photos, with which his pages are liberally endowed, give a fascinating reality, and a feeling of being on the inside."

Jane Oppenheim

Best Sell 28:105 Je 1 '68 1000w

"The trouble with The Right People is it's wrong. There ain't no such animal. . . . This is not really a book at all, let alone a thesis. [It is based on] a collection of articles [Mr. Birmingham] wrote for Holiday [magazine] on 'Society and the institutions it supports.' . . . [His] people may be well-born, but a good many of his stories are well-worn. . . . Underneath his apparent lightness Mr. Birmingham is obviously in dead earnest about the snobbery of [the Social Establishment]. Since he is, and yet also seems to be completely convinced that it's all going strong even now, there is a question I would like to ask him: Isn't it possible that it's still going strong because he and people like him keep writing that it is?" Cleveland Amory

Book World p4 My 12 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p9 My 21 '68 800w

"The problem with the book, like its title (sarcastic or fawning?) is that it is totally lacking in a point of view. Birmingham doesn't seem to know what to make out of his Right People. He is neither social critic nor propagandist—he merely acts as a sponge who absorbs every trivial tidbit the rich have to offer. And is there a mountain of trivia. . . . One would think Mr. Birmingham could have recognized this fact and had some salty fun with his material instead of merely serving as a recorder. . . . Here lies the fault of the book. The material and the way it is handled make for bloodless fare." Joe Flaherty

Commonweal 89:130 O 25 '68 700w

Reviewed by R. R. Gambee
Library J 93:2467 Je 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by W. F. Buckley
N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 9 '68 1500w

"To those who say Society is dead, Birmingham offers proof that it is alive and well in Newport, Boston, Philadelphia and New York. Many of his judgments are open to dispute, but, right or wrong, he takes the smallest social difference seriously." P. D. Zimmerman Newsweek 71:102 Ap 22 '68 600w

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens
Sat R 51:32 N 2 '68 470w
Time 91:87 Je 21 '68 750w

BIRMINGHAM, WALTER BARR, ed. A study of contemporary Ghana; v2, Some aspects of social structure; ed. by Walter Barr Birmingham [and others]. il maps $9 Northwestern univ. press

330.9 Ghana—Social conditions (66-17015)

"This book focuses on eight facets of 'social structure': population characteristics; population change; migration and urbanization; population prospects and policy; marriage, family and household; education; religion; and land tenure." (Choice) For volume one, The Economy of Ghana, see BRD 1967.

"Unquestionably, the four essays by J. C. Caldwell dominate the volume both quantitatively and qualitatively. His skilful interweaving of census and survey data provides a detailed overview of the contemporary demographic scene and confirms earlier tentative conclusions while generating new and substantial findings. . . . The remaining essays suffer by comparison, due to the more limited data available to the authors. . . . This is a worthwhile book that will be welcome by both general demographers and students of social change in contemporary Africa." Philip Foster
Am J Soc 74:95 J1 '68 700w

"In part a useful summary of the comprehensive 1960 census. . . . The chapters, by five authors, vary widely in scope and length. Important aspects of social structure, such as emerging stratification patterns, the impact of recent government policies, and the differentiating effects of ethnicity, are largely ignored. The sound (if somewhat pedestrian) conclusions are supported by a wealth of evidence including . . . an index, and bibliographies for three chapters."

Choice 5:1173 N '68 130w

BISGYER, MAURICE. Challenge and encounter; behind the scenes in the struggle for Jewish survival; foreword by Philip M. Klutznick. 279p il $4.95 Crown

301.45 B'nai B'rith. Jews—Political and social conditions 67-17714

The author "spent some 40 years in Jewish social service, most of it ■ Executive Vice President of B'nai B'rith. . . . In this volume of memoirs he relates his experiences in dealing with various Jewish concerns: the organization of Jewish life in America, Zionism, Jewish claims against Nazi Germany, Soviet anti-Semitism, and Christian-Jewish relations." (Choice)

"Here and there [the author] relates certain little known and historically interesting incidents. However, on the whole, the book is neither revealing nor well written. On most of the matters here discussed one is better served by consulting the annual studies published in the American Jewish Year Book."

Choice 5:845 S '68 130w

"Mr. Bisgyer blends political and humanitarian skills. Nevertheless, his anecdotes seem trivial, though charming, in retrospect. He views brushes with the famous . . . from a vantage point in need of perspective. However, essays on topics like genocide in the Soviet Union are effective summaries. There are some felicitous expressions and embarrassingly naive comments about Roman Catholics." H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 92:2556 J1 '67 80w

BISHOP, CLAIRE HUCHET. Mozart; music magician. 138p il $2.49 Garrard

B or 92 Mozart, Johann Chrysostom Wolfgang Amadeus—Juvenile literature 67-16856

A biography of the composer's "personal life and career from the age of five when he played the harpsichord and composed his first minuet; through his brilliant career as composer, performer, and conductor; to his last tragic years of poverty, dejection, and early death." (Publisher's note) Glossary. List of Mozart's music which has been recorded. Index. "Grades four to five." (Library J)

"A sensitive introduction to the bitter-sweet history of one of the very greatest composers who ever lived. Young readers will pay his gifted biographer the best compliment of all by consulting the 'listening choices' she appends. One caveat: Mrs. Bishop's graceful text is ill-served by the book's mediocre design." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:309 My 21 '68 50w

"The numerous illustrations including bars of music and drawings and reproductions of paintings, are the most interesting part of this biography. Little textual material of importance is included which is not already available to readers of this age group in Mozart the Wonder Boy by [O.] Wheeler [BRD 1934] and others. While several of these books use fictionalized dialogue and thoughts, they are less obviously intended for readers of limited skill than is Bishop's book." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 93:2110 My 15 '68 80w

BISHOP, DONALD G. The administration of United States foreign policy through the United Nations; ed. by Gerard J. Mangone. (Syracuse Univ. Maxwell graduate school of citizenship and public affairs. The Maxwell school ser. on the adm. of for. policy through the United Nations) 112p $3 Oceana

341.13 United Nations—U.S. 67-14402

"The second in a series on the administration by various governments of foreign policy through the U.N., . . . [this volume] describes the organization of the executive and legislative branches in representing the U.S. before the U.N. and other international bodies, and explains the U.S. commitment, internal and external, to the U.N. The emphasis is on the Department of State and the U.S. Mission to the U.N., but other agencies are included. (Choice) Appendixes: 1. U.S. contributions to international organizations; 2. Proposed voluntary contributions to international organizations and programs, fiscal year 1967. Index.

Choice 5:262 Ap '68 180w

"[The author] has a good chapter on 'corridor diplomacy,' and he deals somewhat with policies and personalities. The book's main value is its detail on U.N. representation, which is rarely found in treatises on international organization."

Choice 5:262 Ap '68 180w

"This little book serves a useful purpose in simply yet thoroughly describing the increasing role the United Nations organization plays in the functioning of American foreign policy. . . . Professor Bishop, chairman of the political science department at Syracuse University, describes the 'little UN' set-up within the State Department that maintains contact with and services the New York based United States delegation to the United Nations. He treats the complicated policy, program, and recruiting functions practiced by the United States in support of the UN and its world peace efforts. In sum, this short essay is ideal as an introduction to our considerable national program designed to assist the humanitarian and peace-keeping goals of the United Nations. Recommended for public and academic libraries." R. F. Delaney

Library J 92:2164 Je 1 '67 160w

BISHOP, ELIZABETH. The ballad of the burglar of Babylon; woodcuts by Ann Grifalconi. unp $3.95 Farrar, Straus

811

68-13681

This poem "which originally appeared in Bishop's 'Questions of Travel' [BRD 1966]—is a song of . . . a man society treats as no longer human, chased through the hills like a dangerous animal. . . . Micuqu is an escaped convict and murderer . . . [who] hid out all night from the frightened soldiers in the brush on the hill of Babylon. . . . They found him and shot him behind the ear." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grade seven and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by Martha Bacon

Atlantic 222:152 D '68 220w

"Here [the] Pulitzer prizewinner [for Poems, BRD 1955] has risked that tricky tour de force: imitation folk literature. Her natural simplicity and economy of style make her available to young readers at the same time that these qualities save her from the usual disasters of primitive affectation. This taut little narrative poem sings of an actual Robin Hood tracked down a few years ago by soldiers in the ghetto-suburbs above Rio de Janeiro. A quietly somber lyricism elevates it from the level of tabloid item to legend. Woodcuts by Ann Grifalconi match the stark scenario of Miss Bishop's poetry—first-class by any standards." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2

'68 170w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:294 N 22 '68 20w

"This will have a strong appeal for romantics of all backgrounds and ages; more important, with proper introduction it can be a very special lure to boys who may have had good reason to scorn books as irrelevant. . . . And for stubbornly slow-reading high school students, the poem offers a myriad of mature concepts for discussion in stimulatingly easy-to-read form. Don't let anyone balk at the format—there is nothing childish in those woodcuts, which hold an immediate appeal with dramatic framing and movement similar to that of the best cinematography. Altogether, a strikingly successful blend of moving content set off by skilled and exciting form." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:2118 My 15 '68 330w

"This book is a delight to look at. It assumes good sense in its young readers. In addition, it is a most moving poem. . . . Bishop has written a completely convincing ballad of a hunted man, something that might well have been produced to guitar accompaniment in a cheap bar or around a campfire, for an audience who knew the hero, and who knew what it meant to be poor, hostile and outside the law. . . . 'What a dreadful story to give to children! That's what the old-fashioned experts will say, having forgotten their own childhood, and that children love to read of candy, lust and bloodshed . . . Micuqu's death on Babylon is the immortal, archetypal myth of the scapegoat.'" Kenneth Rexroth

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p2 My 5 '68 410w

BISHOP, JIM. The day Kennedy was shot. 713p $7.95 Funk

B or 92 Kennedy, John Fitzgerald—Assassination 68-31633

This hour-by-hour account of the events on November 22, 1963, "includes not only all persons involved such as Lee and Marina Oswald, [and] Jack Ruby, but the entourage of Kennedy and Johnson and the repercussions in the first hours after the assassination." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. J. Pusateri

America 120:22 Ja 4 '69 600w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 28:353 D 1 '68 550w

"[This is] a far more accurate and straightforward account than the authorized version [Portrait of a President, by W. Manchester,

BISHOP, JIM—Continued

BRD 1963]. . . . The underlying assumption of the book is that the Warren Commission's investigation [in the Report of the Warren Commission on the Assassination of President Kennedy, BRD 1964] was sufficiently thorough to assure that all the relevant evidence had been uncovered. I for one cannot share Bishop's confidence in the Commission's work. . . . Although Bishop provides no answers to vexing questions [raised by this report], he succeeds in what he set out to do—to reconstruct the tragedy of November 22 from the known facts. The narrative is clear, fast-paced, and extremely readable; . . . it is unhindered by analysis, evaluation of evidence, or tentative constructions. Admirers of Bishop's previous books will no doubt find this one a moving and complete rendition of a momentous event." E. J. Epstein

Book World p1 N 24 '68 1000w

"Though published against Mrs. Kennedy's wishes, Mr. Bishop gives many details about the circles affected. While the many persons involved sometimes make the account difficult to follow one has to recognize Mr. Bishop's smooth, readable style. Now and again, especially in the psychological portrayals of the inner feelings of the key individuals, . . . the presentation almost borders on fiction. Despite the emotional and controversial material, this book gives a clear and balanced picture; it will certainly appeal to the general public and historians." H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:4292 N 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by John Corry

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 29 '68 950w

"[Bishop's] facts are sometimes worthwhile and occasionally penetrating. The scenes he builds around them are his ruin. . . . The very first sentence gives fair warning of the kind of clumsy, florid padding that extends this book to its copious length. . . . In several cases, Bishop puts thoughts into Mrs. Kennedy's mind. Sometimes the thoughts are logical extensions of things she actually said or did, but they bear a peculiarly tasteless quality. . . . Bishop's distaste for the Kennedy clan and his sympathy with the Johnsons permeates the book. . . . When [he] occasionally allows his narrative to run along unhindered, this awesome and terrible story becomes deeply moving once more. Inevitably, however, the author makes his presence felt. . . . and one is driven to look toward one of the many other assassination books for the real drama and urgency of the day." Pete Axthelm

Newsweek 72:116D N 25 '68 750w

Time 92:120 D 6 '68 800w

BISNO, ABRAHAM. Abraham Bisno, union pioneer; an autobiographical account of Bisno's early life and the beginnings of unionism in the women's garment industry; with a foreword by Joel Seidman. 244p $6.50 Univ. of Wis. press

B or 92 Labor unions

67-20752

Bisno was "a Russian Jew who came to America in 1881 at the age of fifteen. . . . At twenty-four he was the first president of the Chicago Cloak Makers Union, a forerunner of the International Ladies' Garment Worker's Union. Within a few years he was called to the larger and tougher arena of New York, and thereafter he divided his time between the two cities until his term as chief clerk of the Joint Board in New York expired in 1917. He died in 1929. . . . Between 1924 and 1926 he dictated this account of his early life and of the struggle to form a union." (J Am Hist)

"Considering the pungency and frankness of [Bisno's] observations, the autobiography comes out curiously flat, very likely because he related it in English rather than in his native Yiddish. Still, it would be churlish not to be thankful for the document or to acknowledge its value for American social historians. . . . Bisno tells us much about the process of immigration and acculturation. . . . The autobiography is equally important for its illumination of early trade-unionism among the immigrant garmentworkers. . . . Finally, [it] has some shrewd comments to make about life in Chicago in the late nineteenth century. Bisno witnessed the memorable events there, he knew the Hull House group, and he served under Florence Kelley as a state factory inspector for four years. Especially arresting is his comparison of the rich sensuality within his own radical circle and the dry impersonality he found among educated American reformers." David Brody

Am Hist R 73:1654 Je '68 550w

"[This] very frank and informal account of Bisno's escape from the pogrom against the Jews in Russia in the 1880's, his emigration to America, and life in Chicago sweatshops and ghettos . . . is a valuable addition to the University of Wisconsin biographical series on labor leaders. Its readership audience is the college level historian, sociologist, or labor economist."

Choice 5:654 J1 '68 200w

"While not of fundamental importance for either the study of labor history or immigrant history, Bisno's book does throw light on the conditions within the garment industry in the 1880s and 1890s and provides an insight into the minds of the workers living in an alien land. The book is sadly incomplete, rambles almost to the point of incoherency at times, and is limited to Bisno's early years. . . . While the miserable life in Russia from which the Bisons fled is sharply etched, the personalities of union leaders with whom he associated seem fuzzy. The central contribution of the book is another commentary in the never-ending debate on why desperately poor, illiterate immigrant workmen did not become revolutionaries. . . . Joel Seidman skillfully summarizes in the foreword the mainstream of the book and goes beyond it into Bisno's later career." G. D. Blackwood

J Am Hist 54:919 Mr '68 500w

BISSELL, RICHARD. How many miles to Galena? or, Baked, hashed brown or French fried; il. by Arnold Roth. 310p $7.95 Little 917.3 U.S.—Description and travel. American wit and humor 68-30878

The author of 7½ Cents (BRD 1953) describes his travels with his wife and children to various places in the United States, Alaska, and Canada. Portions of this book originally appeared in Holiday and Venture.

"When Bissell travels, he travels far and wide, on land by automobile or by train, on river by boat or his own towboat. And he writes engagingly and with rare good humor, sometimes rueful, mostly enthusiastic, about the various places he has been. Philadelphia is given exceptionally good treatment as is Boston and Baltimore, Dubuque (his birthplace), Keokuk, Hannibal, Fort Lauderdale, San Francisco—you name it. . . . [This book] is fun to read and particularly so if you are also familiar with the places Mr. Bissell talks about. He has a sharp eye (he was a pilot on Ol' Miss, remember?) and rich wit. Worth the price."

Best Sell 28:354 D 1 '68 240w

"A long-awaited treat for fans of this first-rate American humorist, his last book being Still Circling Moosejaw (BRD 1965). The current work is ostensibly a travel book, but written with a flavor much tarter than Baedeker, . . . and in a conversational narrative style keenly attuned to local dialects. . . . Underpinning Mr. Bissell's observations, remarks, and smart cracks about people, places, and accommodations is a vast fund of background knowledge. In spite of his joking ways Mr. Bissell is an erudite gentleman. Recommended for travelers as required reading." F. J. Anderson

Library J 93:4296 N 15 '68 110w

BIXBY, WILLIAM. Seawatchers; oceanographers in action; il. by John Flynn. 215p $4.25 McKay

551.4 Chain (Ship)—Juvenile literature. Oceanography—Research—Juvenile literature 67-22394

"This is an account of an expedition aboard the research vessel Chain, of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. It is a . . . description of the research methods and techniques used by oceanographers and scientists in allied fields. The author discusses the purpose of such activities and includes . . . information on the chemical and physical makeup of the ocean, on wave action, and on marine ecology. [Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"This book describes in an interesting way the work of the oceanographers. . . . [It] serves as a fine introduction to what could be a fascinating career."

Best Sell 27:359 D 1 '67 90w [YA]

"There is a detailed table of vessels in oceanographic research and a useful index. The subject matter is presented as a descriptive essay, though the style of writing is overly elaborate in spots; this coupled with a lack of illustrations (only decorative chapter heads are included) may limit its browsing appeal." E. F. Grave

Library J 93:3312 S 15 '68 130w

BIXLER, NORMA. Burmese journey. 238p $6 Antioch press

915.91 Burma 67-11440

The "librarian emeritus of Antioch College spent the years from 1958 to 1960 setting up the new Social Science Library at the University of Rangoon. . . . [His wife Norma recounts the] frustrations in establishing a household, the joys of winning new and lifelong friendships, and especially the satisfactions of acquiring [an] understanding of another people's way of life." (Library J)

"Bixler is an American, a part-time journalist. . . . As a reporter who specializes in the 'woman's angle' in a story, she devotes roughly the first third of the book to chapters on 'Place of Residence,' 'Indoor Staff,' and 'Outdoor Staff.' The story develops strength with discussion of the attempt, which was ultimately successful, to establish a modern, useful library. Here it lends flesh to academic analyses of U.S. foreign aid failures in Burma such as Walinsky's Economic Development in Burma, 1951-1960 [BRD 1963]. Bixler draws sympathetic portraits of Burmese Buddhism, Burmese history, and the peasant village which contain few of the usual mistakes of amateurs. Like the rest of the book, these parts are more interesting than analytical. . . . Bixler's story is well grounded in local experience and appropriate humility."

Choice 4:1301 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by Hyman Kublin

Library J 92:2774 Ag '67 170w

"'Innocence abroad, or how I learned a little bit about Burma and the people with whom I had contact' might well be the subtitle of this book. The author shares with her reader the feelings, thoughts and the activities of one who came to a strange land and was determined to learn about it through her servants and immediate circle of friends. To anyone interested in how a small developing nation looked to an American with little or no preparation for adventure abroad, this collection of impressions, experiences and observations will prove interesting. But to anyone seeking understanding and explanation of the culture and history of Burma, it will not. The Burma of Mrs. Bixler is no more. Hundreds of Americans came both before and after she did and each in his own way helped to alter the country. . . . The new Burma will not be recognizable from the narrative of this book. . . . [It] belongs to that category usually collected in travel or biography and not as serious literature." Josef Silverstein

Pacific Affairs 41:153 spring '68 200w

BJORKLUND, LORENCE F. Faces of the frontier; written and il. by Lorence F. Bjorklund. 119p $6.95 Dodd

917.8 Frontier and pioneer life—Juvenile literature 67-25107

In this book brief "accounts of fifty-four kinds of frontier characters, from the mountain man to the train robber and the lady of the saloon, are each accompanied by a realistic portrait and a drawing showing him in action or an object associated with his calling." (Horn Bk) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"[Mr. Bjorklund's] short written accounts are not as good or as entertaining as his art work. However, the volume is very expensive and will probably only find its way to large collections of Americana and the West."

Best Sell 27:360 D 1 '67 80w

Horn Bk 44:76 F '68 100w

"The portraits clearly show the individual personalities of these people, and the descriptions of their lives are spiced with sympathy and perceptive humor. Details of work, animals, tools, guns, and events are authentic and clear. The text is poetic at times, with the author's empathy creating a nostalgic feeling for the past. This is excellent supplementary material to use with [E.] Tunis' Frontier Living [BRD 1962]. The illustrations are mostly self-explanatory, although a few descriptive notes would have been helpful. A book adults as well as children might enjoy browsing through."

M. A. Soderberg

Library J 92:4248 N 15 '67 130w

"This is a handsome, generous book, sort of an album of the early West. . . . [However, the author's] research wasn't all it should be. . . . One is struck by the fact that these are not so much the characters of the Old West as the cliché characters of the Old West. Mr. Bjorklund is, however, a first-rate illustrator. The drawings are all that could be desired." Dan Cushman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p51 N 5 '67 270w

BJORN, THYRA FERRÉ. The home has a heart. 190p $4.95 Holt

641.5 Cookery, Swedish. Swedes in the U.S. 68-11831

The author's 'latest book, although primarily a cookbook, continues the . . . family anecdotes that were born of Papa's Wife [BRD 1955]. Mrs. Bjorn has set down . . . recipes from the Bjorn-Franzon kitchen and many . . . household hints. She has patterned this book on the calendar year. 'A Meal for the Month,' beginning with January and ending with December, highlights each chapter. The accent, of course, is Swedish-American." (Library J) Index.

"This may not be the kind of kitchen companion one would expect, but it recommends itself as an inspiring addition to the family library."

Best Sell 28:298 O 15 '68 110w

"Once again Swedish-born Thyra Ferré Bjorn delights readers with another sojourn into the home. . . . [Here she] introduces, for the first time, members of the older branches of the Franzon family—of Lapland, Sweden, and Massachusetts. . . . Authentic recipes for a hearty Swedish pea soup or Swedish meatballs and for delicious breads and pastries can be readily found. The same warm inspirational qualities and sentiments that fill Mrs. Bjorn's earlier books abound here. Her followers and reflective readers who appreciate good food as well as 'food for the soul' will enjoy this special cookbook. Most public libraries will want to consider its purchase." D. L. Gustafson

Library J 93:3004 S 1 '68 180w

BLACK, ALGERNON D. The people and the police. 246p il $6.95 McGraw

352 New York (City)—Police. Police

68-30971

The author "was chairman of the Civilian Complaint Review Board of New York City, which existed for four months in 1966. This book in effect is his . . . report of the CCRB and its investigation of almost 200 complaints . . . against the police. . . . [He argues that] the record of CCRB in New York City shows instances of police brutality, harassment and derogatory treatment of minorities . . . and other incidents which have caused tension between people and police [and suggests] the necessity of a civilian review board to assure people against encroachment of their civil liberties." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Based on the successful operation of the civilian review board in New York City, [this] book is a strong plea for the establishment of similar boards in other cities. Mr. Black acknowledges the enormous variety of services a policeman renders, the physical hazards he daily faces, and the courage with which he meets them. He appreciates the difficult problems of the police and their need for instant decisions, especially during riots and demonstrations. . . . [He considers that] 'the complaint review agencies constitute a development which is necessary, desirable and inevitable in a just and democratic society.' This book, an important contribution to a vital matter of civic interest, should be available in public libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:2840 Ag '68 260w

"The book is a model of informative exposition; it is simple and direct and sets forth with clarity and understanding the complexities of police power and citizens' rights. It also, perhaps irrelevantly, convinces the reader that the author is a kind and sensible man who ought to have a big public job."

New Yorker 44:215 O 12 '68 110w

BLACK, LIONEL. Outbreak. 175p $4.95 Stein & Day

68-16043

This novel concerns the "chase Dr. Laverack and Dr. Gregson of the Public Health Office of a London borough go through to find all the contacts of Gaetano Filangieri who came to London after a hectic flight from western Argentina via Brazil and Paris, and who brought not only smallpox, but also a case full of counterfeit bills and travelers checks." (Library J)

BLACK, LIONEL—Continued

"A different type of suspense mystery in which medical detectives, working against the clock, must save London from a deadly epidemic. . . . The search takes Gregson into some shady places, gets him involved in a murder and strange dealings, with an international crime syndicate. Good." Best Sell 28:104 Je 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2262 Je 1 '68 90w

"Excitement all the way, with the plus of a detailed depiction of the doctor's role in public health." Anne Kincaid

Library J 93:2739 J1 '68 70w [YA]

"The framework of epidemic disease is a standard item of mainstream fiction; it is not so often used in mysteries, and seldom as successfully as in [this novel] a fast-moving thriller. . . . [Dr. Gregson's] efforts to halt the epidemic, and a nice predicament involving both him and his wife are skillfully woven into a fine story line." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p32 My 19 '68 110w

BLACK, MAX, ed. The morality of scholarship, by Northrop Frye, Stuart Hampshire [and] Conor Cruise O'Brien. (Soc. for the humanities, Cornell Univ. Studies in the humanities) 88p $4.50 Cornell Univ. press

001.2 Learning and scholarship 67-23443

These three papers were read at the formal inauguration in October 27, 1966, of the Society for the Humanities. The titles are: The knowledge of good and evil, by Prof. Northrop Frye of the University of Toronto; Commitment and imagination, by Prof. Stuart Hampshire of Princeton University; and Politics and the morality of scholarship, by Prof. C. C. O'Brien of New York University.

Reviewed by Neil Compton

Nation 206:246 F 19 '68 650w

"Just how quickly the university should respond to political events is partly the subject of [this] book. . . . Mr. Frye's essay is addressed precisely to the question of the relation which scholarship detachment has to the rest of life. He finds detachment to be not only an intellectual but a moral virtue; if, however, it becomes an exclusive moral goal, it quickly degenerates into indifference. . . . What saves it is what the existentialists call concern. . . . Mr. Hampshire is more explicitly skeptical than Mr. Frye. He inquires into the meaning, for an individual scholar, of detachment, and concludes that . . . absolute detachment appears to be illusory. . . . Mr. O'Brien is less sanguine. Without denying detachment its virtue, he finds it liable to abuse . . . through unconscious or conscious subservience to the dominant ideology." Richard Ellmann

N Y Rev of Books 10:6 F 15 '68 3400w

"[Mr. Frye's] paper is an impressive one . . . but it has two major aspects that will disconcert many of its readers. The more easily overlooked is its highly abstract content. . . . More distressing is its apparent adoption of the myth of concern of the American 'open society' as the source and mainspring of Mr. Frye's envisioned apocalyptic movement toward the universal community of man. . . . After the symmetry of Mr. Frye's essay, Stuart Hampshire's . . . seems almost claustrophobic . . . [but presumably his] basic point is still sound. Compared to Mr. Hampshire's defense of traditional scholarly independence, Conor Cruise O'Brien's [paper] is a sensational exposé of sorts. . . . It is certainly the most 'relevant' of the three. . . . No real answers to the relevance of scholarship today are provided. . . . The primary value of the book would then be simply to remind scholars that questions of relevance can and should be asked, and that some kind of response can be expected—and can be given."

Yale R 57:VI Mr '68 1300w

BLACKBURN, THOMAS. Robert Browning: a study of his poetry. 210p $6.25 Barnes & Noble

821 Browning, Robert

[67-78653]

The author is an "English poet who feels that Browning in a new light based on the inspirational to distinguish his good from his bad poems. Mr. Blackburn sets out simply to discriminate and evaluate." (Yale R)

"An attempt to evaluate the poetry of Browning in a new light based on the inspiration which Browning's marriage gave to his work. Browning's poetry on love and religion are examined through psychological methods, and the study concludes with an examination of [his] technique and imagery. Criticism is cursory and superficial. A glaring error in the dates of the marriage and elopement of the Brownings make questionable other factual information. . . . The study is far inferior to the work of Chesterton and even the numerous introductions to the poetry of Browning, as well as the more recent study by Collins of Browning's moral-aesthetic theory, and adds nothing to the Browning canon. Contains . . . notes on the Browning editions, chronology of Browning's life. . . . index."

Choice 5:620 J1 '68 150w

TLS p310 Ap 13 '67 360w

"[Mr. Blackburn] shows good taste in selecting for praise such poems as Childe Roland, Karshish, Two in the Campagna, and The Ring and the Book, while rejecting such old favorites as Saul, Rabbi Ben Ezra, and Waring. His selections are hardly original. . . . But then Mr. Blackburn doesn't seem to have kept up with modern criticism of Browning; he goes back for his references to G. K. Chesterton's book of 1903 and Stopford Brooke's of 1902. . . . Although Mr. Blackburn lacks the analytic power to show us why the poems he selects are good, his accounts of them are lively and intelligent, and his way of connecting Browning with such alluring modern figures as Yeats and Lawrence make the book an effective introduction of Browning to modern-minded poetry readers who might start with a prejudice against him." Robert Langbaum

Yale R 57:303 D '67 600w

BLACKMAN, JOHN L. Presidential seizure in labor disputes [by] John L. Blackman, Jr. 351p $10 Harvard Univ. press

331.89 Arbitration, Industrial. Executive power—U.S. 67-20871

"In the one hundred years since the first instance during the Civil War, four presidents have seized private companies a total of seventy-one times to insure the continuance of production. . . . The focus of [this] study is on presidential policy and its effect during government possession and operation in [these cases]. . . . In each case the author considers the extent of government control over labor relations and other economic activities of the disputing parties, what standards of labor policy and of public administration were observed during the period of control, and what, if any, bias existed toward either labor or management in the conduct of the seizure. He examines the effectiveness of seizure in preventing or halting work stoppages and providing for continuous operation of the seized company, in inducing the parties to the dispute to come to some agreement, and in enforcing national labor relations policies." (Publisher's note) Chronological list of seventy-one presidential seizures with historical data. Index.

Reviewed by Joel Seidman

Am Econ R 58:638 Je '68 650w

"Until the appearance of Professor Blackman's study, a comprehensive analysis of experience with seizure did not exist. That gap has now been filled, and, I think, definitively. . . . The act of seizure raises complicated legal operational problems. . . . Resistance has taken the form of production stoppages—after seizure—managerial or union insubordination, against presidential orders, overt or thinly disguised strikes, resort to the court, and political appeals to Congress. Professor Blackman analyzes each form of resistance in detail and indicates the degree to which it has been successful in defeating presidential intentions. He also devotes considerable attention to the managerial problems of the various government agencies which at one time or other have served as the executors of seizure orders. . . . Informed discussion of . . . seizure as an appropriate tool of government policy in coping with emergency disputes in peacetime will from now on require familiarity with Professor Blackman's findings and analysis." J. P. Windmuller

Ann Am Acad 375:204 Ja '68 650w

Choice 5:230 Ap '68 190w

"Although the author did not consult the relevant presidential papers, the effective use of other published and unpublished primary materials, as well as many secondary works, and the delineation of specific issues make this an important contribution to the history of industrial relations. . . . Students of industrial relations may disagree with this economist's conclusions such as the need for new legislation for future industrial-relations emergencies. . . . Historians may be critical of Blackman's failure to answer some of the questions of causation; however, this monograph will probably stand for some time as the major work on this topic." J. L. Forsythe

J Am Hist 54:929 Mr '68 450w

"A list of 11 tables illustrating the details of [the] seizures accompanies the text. This is one of the few studies, and certainly the latest, on this important aspect of American labor relations. . . . [It is] an objective factual study of the subject for all libraries having labor relations materials in their collections." J. V. Brown

Library J 92:2927 S 1 '67 400w

BLACKWELL, WILLIAM L. The beginnings of Russian industrialization, 1800-1860. v 1 484p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

338.0947 Russia—Industries. Russia—Economic conditions 67-21017

A "study of the economic aspects of modernization (transportation, business institutions, commerce, technology, manufacturing—both private and governmental) in the preparatory phase prior to Russia's industrial revolution of the late 19th century. This account—analytical as well as narrative—is based upon . . . primary and secondary sources." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"While American scholars have written much on Russian political and intellectual history, economic history has been largely neglected. Blackwell (N.Y.U.) is to be applauded for this broad study. . . . [It is] a valuable work not only for advanced undergraduates and graduate students, but for fellow scholars as well. . . . A basic item for all libraries with strong holdings in Russian and/or European economic history."

Choice 5:1006 O '68 170w

"Not only does [the author] stress the gradual transformation of the economic and business climate in the tsarist empire during this period but he also points to the concomitant social and technological changes. Of major importance is his treatment of the role of private and state enterprise which, respectively, in later years, took on added social and political meaning. When Mr. Blackwell's findings are assessed against the background of the better known agrarian changes of 19th-Century Russia, the result is a far more balanced view of tsarist economic modernization than is customary." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:3132 S 15 '68 170w

BLACKWOOD, JAMES R. The house on College avenue; the Comptons at Wooster, 1891-1913. 265p il $10 M.I.T. press

920 Compton family. Wooster, Ohio. College of Wooster 67-27340

This biography reconstructs "the daily events in the life of a family that produced three sons and a daughter who, each in his own way, made their marks in higher education and science." (Choice) Index.

"A glimpse of turn-of-the-century life at a small college in rural Ohio, vicarious participation in the life of a close-knit family, and intimate, narrative history empathetically presented make this book an unpretentious yet valuable contribution to social history. . . . Suitable for all college libraries both for historically inclined students and for leisure time reading."

Choice 5:1001 O '68 130w

"An engrossing, well-documented study. . . . Elias Compton, a pioneer in child psychology, and his wife, Otella, American Mother of the Year in 1939, had four children. Like her three brothers, Mary was graduated from Wooster College. . . . Karl won fame in physics and became president of M.I.T.; Wilson became a leading conservationist and government official; Arthur won the 1929 Nobel Prize in physics. Their intellectual, physical, and moral growth is discussed with charm and insight in this model cultural-biographical study." W. K. Bottorff

Library J 93:2479 Je 15 '68 130w

BLAKE, NICHOLAS. The private wound. 211p $4.95 Harper

68-15980

The narrator of this novel of suspense, Dominic Eyre, is "on a tour through Ireland looking for background for a novel. . . . [He] stops at the little town of Charlottesville where he becomes infatuated with the lively wife of one of the local gentry. His ensuing affair and involvement with her does not contribute to his popularity among the citizens. When the lady is murdered, things really begin to look bad for him." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:34 Ap 15 '68 80w

"The new Poet Laureate [of England, Cecil Day-Lewis who is the author of this novel] . . . concentrates on the days Dominic Eyre spent in the west of Ireland in the peaceful summer of 1939. There he learned to know the lovely Harry Leeson, her husband Flurry, and Father Bresnahan, and there he became as much involved as they were in the dark melodrama by the river. A lifting change from the usual BLAKE."

Library J 93:1023 Mr 1 '68 70w

"[This is the author's] best novel in a dozen years. . . . It is an intensely penetrating study of sexual passion (and, incidentally, a model of how to write sexy without writing dirty). It is also a powerful story of murder and its aftermath, strengthened by a subplot of Irish politics, and constantly illuminated by the author's lightning flashes of insight into the Irish and the English (he himself is both) and the even more incredible relation between man and woman." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ap 7 '68 120w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 30w

TLS p603 Je 6 '68 150w

BLAKE, ROBERT. Disraeli. 819p il $12.50 St Martins

B or 92 Beaconsfield, Benjamin Disraeli, 1st Earl of 67-11837

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Christian Century 85:789 Je 12 '68 30w

Reviewed by Norman Gash

Engl Hist R 83:360 Ap '68 2850w

Reviewed by Asa Briggs

Pol Sci Q 83:285 Je '68 700w

BLAKE, WILLIAM. A grain of sand; poems for young readers chosen and introduced by Rosemary Manning; with engravings by William Blake. 92p $2.95; lib bdg $2.21 Watts, F.

821

68-18572

Selections from the eighteenth-century English writer's poetry. "Edited sections of longer works are included, and the poems are arranged according to themes, e.g. 'The Peaceable Kingdom,' 'Two Contrary States,' and 'Jerusalem's Pillars.' [Index of first lines.] Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland

Book World p24 (children's issue) N 3 '68 60w

"[These selections are] well suited for classroom use or simply for personal enjoyment. . . . there is an excellent biographical and critical introduction by the compiler; the decorations are reproductions of Blake's wood-engravings for Thornton's Virgil." Terry Myers

Library J 93:[3312] S 15 '68 60w

"[This will] appeal to those older children who will appreciate mystery, sense what a symbol is, and not mistake simplicity for simple-mindedness. These are fairly rigorous demands. Blake's deceptive lucidities do deepen, for some children, with mature acquaintance; but this is a book perhaps only for some—though still amply justified on those grounds alone. Miss Manning (who uses small Blake illustrations with great discretion and appropriateness) has chosen widely and boldly from the Songs of Innocence and Experience and the prophetic Books, and has been unafraid of potentially disturbing qualities ('The Garden of Love' and 'London' are included)."

TLS p440 My 25 '67 160w

BLAKE, WILLIAM. Songs of innocence and of experience; showing the two contrary states of the human soul, 1789-1794 [with an introd. and commentary by Geoffrey Keynes]. unpubl. col. il $20 Orion

821

67-21229

This is a reissue of the book originally published as a limited facsimile edition by the William Blake Trust in 1955. It is based on the original in the Library of Congress Rosenwald collection and contains fifty-four color plates by Blake. Index of first lines.

"[This] is a fine, exact facsimile (e.g. special paper matching the tint used by Blake). The poems of the illustrations are printed on the facing page. Well within the financial reach of many libraries, this reissue will enhance any English literature or art collection."

Choice 4:1114 D '67 100w

"William Blake was remarkably free of false emotion or sappiness in his concern with the basic subjects of innocence and experience, life's joys and sorrows. The truth and balance of his allegories are best portrayed in this collection, which he designed and etched in copperplate, illuminated with water-color wash, and published in 1794. What he saw in his mind's eye and depicted is reprinted here, with excellent fidelity of color tones. This handsome volume, printed in France in six- and eight-color offset, deserves wide library purchase." M. M. Ferguson

Library J 93:80 Ja 1 '68 110w

TLS p334 Ap 4 '68 140w

BLALOCK, HUBERT M. Toward a theory of minority-group relations [by] Hubert M. Blalock, Jr. 227p $6.95 Wiley

301.45 Race problems. Minorities 67-17335

"In response to the lack of systematic theory in the field of minority-group relations, Dr. Blalock has attempted to present general theoretical propositions based on the empirical data in this area. Using power relationships as the integrating theoretical framework, he focuses primarily on competition, status, and economic factors that relate to discrimination. While most of the empirical data cited refer to the case of the Negro in the United States, propositions have been stated in such a way that they may be tested in connection with other minority groups. . . . Attention is given to the major methodological problems, the testability and evaluation of alternative theories, measurement, and nonlinear and nonadditive models. . . . An attempt is made to state practical implications on the basis of the theory." (Publisher's note) Index.

"It should be kept in mind . . . that many facets of racial and ethnic relations are not readily covered by this set of propositions. In this regard, the book is a fragment nevertheless. It does provide a fine illustration of how research findings and conceptual ideas can be incorporated into a single unit. . . . The book will prove of interest to a wide audience. The propositions, if valid, are relevant to many other contexts besides race relations. The author's restatement of coalition formation theory, his conceptualization of power, and the elaboration of various social psychological mechanisms go far beyond racially based forms of organization or social interactions. In this sense, the book is less of an attempt toward a theory of race and ethnic relations per se and more of a codification of various principles based on their application to the racial and ethnic scene. . . . [It is] a solid contribution toward placing some facets of race and ethnic relations into a broader context of sociological and social psychological theory." Stanley Lieberman

Am J Soc 74:83 J1 '68 650w

"The ninety-seven propositions Blalock sets forth are not inferred from any overarching general theory, but from a number of special theories, each constructed to account for a limited class of events—like motivation theory, notions of choice behavior, frustration-aggression. . . . [From these he] deduces chains of singular propositions grouped around thematic or situational areas of major significance like 'Frontier Contact Situations.' . . . The heavy reliance on deductive method has a tendency to narrow Blalock's results, particularly if they are to have cross-cultural relevance. . . . [The] propositions have little relevance to ethnic minorities immigrating to the United States, or to the whole range of secessionist minorities in African countries today. . . . This, however, does not detract from the creative achievement that marks Blalock's work. It is an effort of consummate skill, logical rigor, and fidelity to evidence in a rare combination—in fact, one of the few indispensable works for all those who want to rethink the basic issues." R. A. Schermerhorn

Ann Am Acad 376:198 Mr '68 480w

Choice 5:1373 D '68 220w

"Mr. Blalock states that his arguments are tentative and meant to stimulate further thought. This book ought to be a good 'launching pad' toward the missing theory if it is studied carefully by sociologists. It is definitely not a book for laymen. Recommended for large sociology and race-relations collections." David Cooley

Library J 92:1635 Ap 15 '67 140w

BLAMIRE, HARRY. The Bloomsday book; a guide through Joyce's Ulysses. 275p $6.50; pb $3.50 Barnes & Noble

823 Joyce, James—Ulysses [66-75515]

The author "sets out to provide a page-by-page guide that will help the new reader pick his way . . . through the labyrinthine complexities of Ulysses [BRD 1934]." (Choice)

"[Blamires stands] aloof from pointless contention. . . . For what he actually accomplishes, his statement of purpose is much too modest. Simply, concisely, and often brilliantly, he untangles countless knotty problems of action and symbolic reference. But all this is done without a single egotistic flourish. Blamires never wavers in the quiet, painstaking unwinding of his Ariadne's thread of interpretive direction. . . . There is no doubt that every student and teacher of Ulysses will find The Bloomsday Book invaluable."

Choice 4:160 Ap '67 200w

"[The author] escorts the reader through Ulysses, but does little more than summarize, with occasional and often far-fetched comments. . . . There are several readable brief accounts of the book to help the beginners over the initial hurdles, but it is hard to see how a summary of what happens can take him far into a book where form and content are so absolutely inseparable."

TLS p526 My 23 '68 300w

BLANC, SUZANNE. The rose window. 192p $3.95 Doubleday

67-10981

"Revolutionaries blow up a railroad yard in San Luis, Mexico. One of the revolutionaries is killed, another captured, three escape,—one possibly wounded. Evan Connor, American freelance writer, seeking local color stories, decides to visit San Luis to find the true story. Traveling by bus he meets a lovely North American girl also en route to San Luis: her father, a Mexican, had been born there. On arrival, Evan is brushed off by the local police. . . . The girl on the bus disappears, kidnapped by the rebels. Evan is almost killed, but Inspector Mendoza now believes his story, saves the girl and solves the case." (Best Sell)

"Good local color of Mexican towns." H. J. Erhart

Best Sell 26:404 F 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:1035 Mr 1 '67 100w

"[The author] has simply not generated enough story to match her characters and background. But you will not be bored. Miss Blanc has developed some stimulating criminal notions out of little-known (to us gringos) facets of Mexican politico-religious history; and her Inspector Miguel Menendes, affectionately remembered from earlier novels, is one of the Great Pros. It's a shame that Miss Blanc's clear understanding of Mexico is marred, possibly in the copyreading, by Spanish which is phenomenally illiterate, even by the very low standards prevalent in this country." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p60 Ja 23 '67 100w

"Suzanne Blanc writes well, and her Mexican stories of the Indian detective Inspector Menendes are realistically invented. This one concerns tourists, terrorists, and a concealed convent [behind the rose window of the church]."

TLS p380 Ap 11 '68 50w

BLANCHARD, WILLIAM H. Rousseau and the spirit of revolt: a psychological study. 300p $8.50 Univ. of Mich. press
848 Rousseau. Jean Jacques 67-25345

An American clinical "psychologist examines the interplay between Rousseau's complex personality and his political writings. Dr. Blanchard presents the biographical facts of Rousseau's life and, with the help of Rousseau's Confessions, interprets them according to modern psychology. [He] believes that almost all of Rousseau's works have political implications, and he considers such diverse writings as the Letter to d'Alembert on the Theatre, The Social Contract, Emile, and Rousseau's correspondence . . . [exploring] the similarity between the rebel and the tyrant in Rousseau, discussing Rousseau's 'urge to suffer for truth,' and commenting on the dangers of these tendencies; which he finds present in modern society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Rousseau is more important than Marx in understanding the present discontents of the revolutionary left-wing intellectuals of the Western world. [and this book is an] invaluable contribution not only to an understanding of Rousseau but to an understanding of the present moment. . . . [The author believes] that the quest for innocence and truth were in Rousseau at one and the same time an elaborate self-deception and an act of self-aggrandizement. Had Dr. Blanchard's analysis of the psycho-dynamics of Rousseau concluded on this note, the study would have been worthwhile enough, but he goes on to make some more exciting observations concerning the elements of aggression and masochism in all liberal programs of reform and revolution. . . . [However, he] finds it difficult to distinguish between the fascist and the liberal humanitarian." S. J. Tonsor

Nat R 20:916 S 10 '68 700w

"[Blanchard] has written a psychological biography generally sensible in tone and defensible in argument. . . . [His] theories about Rousseau, despite the lucidity and care of his general analysis, are a little doubtful, though. . . . [In] the short concluding chapter, . . . he restates his certainty that the 'feeling-tone' of Rousseau's political writings 'is decidedly destructive and denunciatory. Nowhere more than in the writings of Rousseau is one aware that the rebel has within him many of the attributes of the tyrant.' . . . I wonder." Peter Gay

N Y Rev of Books 11:33 D 5 '68 800w

BLAU, PETER M. The American occupational structure [by] Peter M. Blau and Otis Dudley Duncan; with the collaboration of Andrea Tyree. 520p $14.95 Wiley

331.1 Labor supply. U.S.—Occupations. Success 67-19939

Based on information from United States Bureau of the Census 1962, this book examines "the patterns and determinants of occupational achievement in American society. . . . The authors describe the patterns of occupational mobility and discuss the chances of a person's becoming a professional person, a clerical worker, a skilled craftsman or an unskilled laborer, in terms of his ethnic background, the occupational background of the family in which he grew up and various other factors." (Publisher's note) Name index. Subject index.

"Many political scientists [will find this book valuable]. . . . There is a timely chapter on 'Inequality of Opportunity' which portrays the fashion in which region, race and immigration affect occupational chances. While the authors demolish the popular conception of self-perpetuated status they do demonstrate how the American Negro becomes the victim of an accumulation of disadvantages resulting in a vicious circle. . . . The bearing of kinship and marriage patterns on careers is taken up in some detail and carried off with consummate skill. Classic and tantalizing questions are considered: the importance of birth order, family size, broken families, social origins of spouse [and so forth]. . . . Those concerned with the effects of spatial mobility and urbanization on the political process will find the extended material on these topics enlightening." M. K. Jennings

Am Pol Sci R 62:596 Je '68 1300w

"Blau and Duncan's book deals with major substantive and methodological questions. . . . The principal findings . . . do not diverge widely from those of other national studies. . . . It is a virtue of the book that it discusses quite fully downward mobility. . . . [The authors] make clear that they see their research as relevant to broader problems of stratification, and they imply a criticism of some earlier work which was too exclusively demographic in orientation. Their own interpretations, principally in the concluding chapter, of the relations between mobility and the system of stratification in the USA, raise a number of interesting questions." T. B. Bottomore

Am Soc R 33:294 Ap '68 1900w

"An excellent book which, I venture to predict, will deservedly be recognized as a classic in its field. . . . Its methodological contributions are substantial. Blau and Duncan have produced an impressive, careful, and thought-provoking piece of research that should serve as a model for future investigations using quantitative multivariate techniques. The study clearly indicates the advantages of working with large cross-sectional samples of the national population combined with retrospective data that make possible inferences about temporal sequences. . . . The authors seem fully aware of limitation of design and measurement and take the reader into their confidence in this respect. The analysis is unusually thorough in providing alternative ways of analyzing the data, and there is a careful attention to detail that is rare indeed in most sociological research." H. M. Blalock

Am Soc R 33:294 Ap '68 1100w

"[This study] will doubtless keep sociologists busy for many an evening. Not only will it require them to digest some important methodological innovations and a wealth of empirical findings, but it will also require them to ponder the study's implications both for policy and for future research on occupational structure and stratification theory. . . . Chapters 2 and 3 on patterns and trends in occupational structure are certainly most pertinent for economists interested in the growth and structure of the economy. . . . It should be remarked in passing that the volume is not self-contained; several important pieces of analysis which underlie sections of the book were developed in earlier papers and are only summarized here. . . . [The] reasons for disappointment with this book . . . lie in the lack of a well-drafted analytic framework around which to arrange the many interesting topics covered." W. L. Hansen

Am Soc R 33:294 Ap '68 2600w

Choice 5:1333 D '68 220w

"[This] is by far the most impressive book on the subject to date and will certainly become the point of departure for future research. Yet, like most modern quantitative social science it is virtually unreadable. In part this is because the authors have a penchant for Germanic syntax and Latinized diction which makes it easy to forget that they are talking about real phenomena. . . . A more serious problem is that they present the heart of their argument in a statistical shorthand that will baffle the lay readers. . . . [Women] are conspicuously missing from this survey and from almost all previous studies of social mobility. . . . This brief summary hardly does justice to Blau and Duncan's 520-page report [which] does suggest a number of general conclusions." Christopher Jencks

New Repub 158:31 Ap 20 '68 3800w

BLAUSTEIN, ARTHUR I., ed. Man against poverty: World War III; a reader on the world's most crucial issue; ed. by Arthur I. Blaustein and Roger R. Wootck; with a pref. by John W. Gardner. 456p $7.95 Random house

339.4 Poverty

67-12753

This collection "aims to 'view the totality of problems of institutional poverty in the U.S. and the underdeveloped world, and to see them within the context of the Cold War and the role of the United States as a world power.'" (Library J) Index.

"One of the best. Although all of the 39 essays in this collection have appeared previously in such periodicals as Ramparts . . . the New York Times Magazine, and the Atlantic, or as portions of books, the editors have done an excellent job in selecting from the available literature. Many of the most important social and political thinkers of our day are represented, including Paul Goodman, Robert Coles, Barbara Ward Jackson [and] Michael Harrington. Liberal in orientation. . . . [the book accomplishes its] purpose." K. F. Kister

Library J 93:2992 S 1 '68 170w

BLAUSTEIN, A. I.—Continued

"[These essays] accurately delineate what it means to be poor. . . . [The editors] presumably have chosen what they consider to be a widely informative group of articles. Generally they are correct. However, at times one wonders if the nonprofessional's interest will be sustained. . . . One suspects that an informed person has already read many of [these essays]. Few are original, and 1965-66 would be an average publication date: none is of 1968 vintage. This is not to suggest that what has been said is necessarily irrelevant, just not current. However, considering this year's startling events, the lack of currency is indeed remiss. There is not, for instance, a single article on the Poor People's Campaign. . . . Yet the collection is adequate. . . . [and] deserves to be read." Thomas Goldwasser
Sat R 61:47 N 16 '68 500w

BLAXLAND, GREGORY. Egypt and Sinai; eternal battleground [Eng title: Objective: Egypt]. 327p il maps $5.95 Funk

962 Egypt—History. Egypt—History—Intervention, 1956 67-30534

The author recounts the "military history of the area. He describes the battles fought by Napoleon, Abercromby, Wolseley, Kitchener, and Stockwell. . . . He also analyzes the interplay between the demands of strategy and practical politics—the larger picture of French, British, and Arab empire-building." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The title misleads. The 'battleground' is less 'eternal' than late 19th and 20th century. . . . Because [Blaxland's] descriptions of great battles have been presented before and better, and because his forays into political, diplomatic, ideological, and cultural questions usually break against the wall of his own misconceptions and nonexpertise, this work is of negligible value to the scholar. For, while granting Blaxland's flair for moving men and arms across his pages, his is too much a world of the stereotype, of the half-truth, and the simplistic. Finally, the treatment of the Suez crisis of 1956 (to which he devotes some one-third) adds nothing to the picture."
Choice 5:660 J1 '68 160w

"The book is more than a military history because some the struggles were diplomatic and political rather than military, and [the author] also covers these in his book. While there are some mistakes, Mr. Blaxland has produced a well-written and interesting study which is recommended to both public and academic libraries." David Shavit
Library J 93:2236 Je 1 '68 170w

"Mr. Blaxland thought of a good idea but has failed to carry it out. . . . As an ex-soldier, he is well up in regimental histories, and can usually add some little-known particulars when describing a British campaign. Unfortunately he was swept off his feet and out of his depth by reading a few popular and standard histories of Egypt and was tempted, presumably by discovery of facts new to him, into summarizing these in order to link his military incidents. He admits to having spent only one month in his life in Egypt, and that in a military transit camp, and he reveals again and again how inadequate is this experience for framing judgments about the Egyptians. He has consulted no source that is not British."
TLS p11 Ja 5 '67 270w

BLEGVAD, ERIK, jt. auth. One is for the sun. See Blegvad, L.

BLEGVAD, LENORE. One is for the sun, by Lenore and Erik Blegvad. unsp il col il $3.50; lib bdg $3.54 Harcourt 811 67-17151

A rhyming numbers book which goes first from one to ten and then by millions to ten million. "Preschool to kindergarten." (Library J)

"[These illustrations] have a luminous quality that catches the beauty of all seasons, on sea and shore. . . . The Blegvads have lived in many places on the globe and by using a variety of settings in the pictures they make a subtle comment on the international quality of childhood and beauty." Anne Izard

Book World p4 (children's issue) N 3 '68 110w

"A little charmer. . . . With books, however, as with people, charm and logic don't always coincide; and although this book has its logical moments, showing one sun to represent the number 1, three trees to represent 3, seven streams to represent 7—the number 6 is exemplified by ten toads, 8 by four skaters, 9 by a dozen meadows. Strange. The book 'has something'; but it could so easily have had much more." N. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 7 '68 130w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:285 N 22 '68 50w

"A counting book which is also a concept book that can lead young children toward a conscious appreciation for many pleasant aspects of nature, such as two skies, one light and one black; four winds to toss leaves and blow hair, and so on with streams, meadows, and ponds. . . . Line drawings alternate with colorful paintings to reinforce the sensuous beauty described. . . . A book for the youngest to enjoy again and again." B. L. Ryder
Library J 93:3954 O 15 '68 150w

BLISS, EDWARD, ed. In search of light. See Murrow, E. R.

BLOCH, E. MAURICE. George Caleb Bingham. 2v 399,238p il col pl $45 Univ. of Calif. press
759.13 Bingham, George Caleb 65-10714

This 'study of the life and work of Bingham, the 'Missouri artist' known for his paintings of frontier and river life (consists of two parts). Part 1, The Evolution of an Artist. Part 2, A Catalogue Raisonné." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Indexes.

"[This study and] J. F. McDermott's biography [George Caleb Bingham: river portraitist, BRD 1960] . . . surpass previous studies in accuracy and comprehensiveness; both include excellent bibliographies and are well indexed. Whereas McDermott concentrated on establishing accurate facts about the social and political milieu of Bingham's life and times, Bloch focuses on an analysis of the artist's style and upon the artistic influences that bear upon this. The two studies complement each other. Among the important contributions of Bloch's study are his references to 'how-to-do-it' books on painting and drawing available in the mid-19th century and the probable use Bingham made of these. Bloch also indicates many probable Bingham sources for pictorial motifs drawn from published engravings. Much of this new data is relevant to the work of other 19th-century artists as well. The catalogue raisonné published in the second volume is the most definitive to date."
Choice 5:469 Je '68 210w

"This definitive work on the Missouri frontier artist . . . is a delight to read and to hold. The text is interesting, the catalogue is useful, and the 175 halftones and twenty-three color plates are splendid. Maurice Bloch is an art historian; but his study extends far beyond stylistic and formal analysis and embraces a wide biographical, social, and political background. St. Louis in the 1840s and 1850s was simply not a specialized society, and Bloch wisely decides not to separate the artist from commerce and politics along the Mississippi. . . . The descriptions, cross-references, and analytical indexes are obviously invaluable for museums and collectors; but they should also be used by historians for further insight into the time and place. . . . Western scholarship is abundantly richer with these fine volumes."
R. V. Hine
J Am Hist 55:141 Je '68 480w

"These two volumes cannot be considered independently. Much of the material, both descriptive and comparative, in the Evolution of an Artist properly belongs in the Catalogue Raisonné. To cite an example, drawings related to specific paintings would have better been noted in the catalog, would contemporary descriptions of lost works. The Evolution of an Artist would then not have been overcharged with the extraneous materials that make it dull and repetitious. An essay of a few thousand words would have sufficed to cover

Mr. Bloch's speculations, many of them specious, on the sources of Bingham's style. Nevertheless, this is an important work for the student of American art . . . [and] is recommended for all collections in American art."

M. E. Landgren

Library J 93:744 F 15 '68 230w

BLOCK, EUGENE B. The fabric of guilt; true stories of criminals caught in a net of circumstantial evidence. 215p $4.95 Doubleday 364.12 Criminal investigation. Crime and criminals 68-22698

"A series of accounts of criminal and civil cases, linked by the fact that a chain of circumstantial evidence was used to obtain a confession or a verdict of guilty." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:185 Ag 1 '68 70w

"This is another of Eugene Block's fascinating crime books for the layman. . . . The book will provide suspense for the mystery fan and succinct accounts of the trials, flavored with just enough dialogue, will attract the legal buff. Laymen sometimes feel that circumstantial evidence implies a weakness, but Mr. Block contends that it is often more certain than direct evidence. The Coppolino trials provide a contrast between indirect and direct evidence, for each trial was dominated by one type, though both were present. The book is recommended for public libraries." D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:2683 J1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Laurie May

Library J 93:3996 O 15 '68 60w [YA]

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 S 28 '68 40w

BLOOMSTEIN, MORRIS J. Verdict; the jury system. 176p $3.75 Dodd

347.9 Jury—Juvenile literature 68-15414

This account of the jury system "traces its early beginnings and discusses juries around the world, but concentrates on the system in America. It covers selection of jurors, . . . kinds of verdicts, the roles of judge and lawyers at a trial, variations in state and federal jury requirements and practices, the pros and cons of retaining the system today." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"A worthwhile addition to the school library where students are trained for responsible citizenship."

Best Sell 28:111 Je 1 '68 100w

"This is a straightforward, competent account of the jury system . . . and a defense of the idea of trial by jury. One aspect neglected by the book is the right of gentlemen to trial before a jury of their peers; recent plans to take automobile liability away from the jury also deserved a comment. However, the book discusses some very recent studies on the subject, and the appendix, which includes a manual first printed for the guidance of New York City jurors, is valuable." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:1807 Ap 15 '68 90w [YA]

BLOSSOM, THOMAS. Nariño: hero of Colombian independence. 212p $8.50 Univ. of Ariz. press

B or 92 Nariño, Antonio. Colombia—History 66-20661

This biography begins in 1794 with Nariño's first revolutionary act—using an official printing press to publish his translation of the Declaration of the Rights of Man—and continues to his death in 1823. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The picture of Nariño that emerges is generally conventional. Blossom is justly, though also uncritically, favorable to his subject, and he offers little real analysis of doubtful or controversial questions. [Furthermore, he] has used some unpublished materials . . . [and] lists a wide array of printed works . . . [but] excessive reliance is placed on a few key items. The work is probably weakest in handling the general background of the period. . . . The manuscript obviously needed a rigorous editing and failed to receive one, since the style itself tends to be confusing. Likewise typographical errors, especially in the bibliography, exceed normal limits of tolerance." David Bushnell
Am Hist 73:632 D '67 340w

"Blossom shows this revolutionary leader as a fine propagandist if not a successful statesman. Indeed, Nariño does not emerge clearly as a personality. Blossom appears a better researcher than stylist in this first biography of Nariño in English, a sympathetic presentation which contributes to the literature of the period and should be useful for graduates and undergraduates."

Choice 4:1308 Ja '68 200w

BLOUET, BRIAN. A short history of Malta [Eng title: The story of Malta]. 253p 11 maps Praeger

945.8 Malta—History

67-23011

This "study of Maltese history encompasses developments on the island from Neolithic man to self-government and independence in 1964." (Am Hist R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] is more than a survey. In particular the chapters on the government of the Order of St. John are based on research in the archives of the order in the Royal Malta Library at Valletta and in the Valletta law courts, and the notarial archives and documents in the Curia. Besides discussing the quality of the administration of the order, Blouet adds new information on the growth of population and of towns and villages during this period. . . . The chapters on Malta and Britain are based mainly on secondary sources, and, though Blouet deals with the material in perspective, he is led into two inaccuracies. . . . But these reservations do not materially detract from what is essentially a sound and eminently readable study." Hilda Lee
Am Hist R 73:1570 Je '68 270w

"[The author], lecturer in geography at Sheffield University in England, states that his purpose in this book is to examine the 'development of Maltese landscape and society.' However, he not only succeeds in demonstrating the important effect that physical environment and the Maltese people have had on the affairs of their Moslem, Christian and British overlords, he has written a readable history of this strategic base. . . . [This is a] good addition to history and geography collections in academic libraries and in general libraries with readers interested in this part of the world." E. O. Hofstetter

Library J 92:3994 N 1 '67 110w

"One of Mr. Blouet's greatest merits is his ability to make valid comparisons. He underlines the similarities between 1565 and the 1940s. He keeps constantly before us the basic and extremely important fact that the Maltese have for centuries been under colonial rule. . . . Mr. Blouet is a sympathetic as well as an objective analyst, and his study admirably captures the spirit and atmosphere of Malta and the Maltese."

TLS p1235 D 21 '67 480w

BLOUGH, GLENN O. Discovering insects; pictures by Jeanne Bendick. 48p $2.50 McGraw 595.7 Insects—Juvenile literature 67-22953

"A general discussion of insects and their habits, together with suggestions for experiments and observation. The material is presented through the activities of an imaginary boy George Snow. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

"[An imaginary child is] seldom a satisfactory approach in juvenile non-fiction. The illustrations are fairly clear and well labeled for younger readers, but the expressions on the children's faces are often exaggerated into grimaces. Except for good suggestions for experiments, there is little new here." Dorothy English

Library J 92:4609 D 15 '67 80w

"[This] comprehensive introduction for readers in the middle grades is . . . written with humor and persuasive directness and likely to inspire more than one hobbyist. Besides a background of scientific information, it contains a lot of practical advice about where to look for insects, how to catch and keep them, what to observe and how to conduct some elementary experiments with them." Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p56 N 5 '67 160w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:146 D '67 90w

BLOUGH, GLENN O. Discovering plants; pictures by Jeanne Bendick. 48p $2.95; lib bdg $2.96 McGraw

581 Plants—Juvenile literature 66-14532

The author "explains the function of each part of the plant and demonstrates how each section is important to the plant—and to human beings. He advises young scientists about [using] the magnifying glass [to] help them with their observations." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to three." (Library J)

"This beginner's book of botany is proof that it is possible to present scientific fact in simple form without the sort of misleading statements usually associated with simplification. The style is informal, almost a running conversation, with the reader, but not condescending. Questions, simple experiments, and meaningful comparisons keep him continually alert. . . . Illustrations are meaningful and well placed in logical relationship to the text." Della Thomas Library J 92:1723 Ap 15 '67 100w

"This particular American import is well planned; the examples chosen are familiar on both sides of the Atlantic and children are encouraged to study and handle familiar plants." TLS p1165 N 30 '67 30w

BLOW, MICHAEL The history of the atomic bomb. See American heritage

BLUM, JOHN MORTON. From the Morgenthau diaries; v3. Years of war, 1941-1945. 576p il $10 Houghton

336.73 Morgenthau, Henry. Finance—U.S. Money (59-8853)

This third volume of a trilogy, based on letters, memoranda, stenographic transcripts of meetings attended, and off-the-cuff remarks by the United States Secretary of the Treasury from 1941 to 1945, concerns Morgenthau's participation "in the war's financial decisions, [which] inevitably affected diplomacy. The Treasury had a role in planning aid to the Allies and in deciding on the treatment of liberated and enemy territories." (Atlantic) For volumes one and two see BRD 1959 and 1965.

"A possessor of imposing academic credentials, Prof. Blum has doubly benefited from a privileged sanctuary among the Morgenthau papers and an intimate working relationship with F.D.R.'s Secretary of the Treasury. . . . In such an account, one is always bemused and surprised—or reconfirmed in his personal prejudices—by some of the personalized observations. . . . Rightist types had better reach for a bromo before reading the unfavorable treatment afforded the Chiang régime and the strident defense of Harry Dexter White. . . . Like its predecessors, this volume is more than a memoir and less than a biography. Regardless, it is still first-rate history. Prof. Blum has produced a trilogy well meriting the sobriquet 'indispensable' for those who will want to know what F.D.R. and the New Deal were really all about." R. H. Miller America 117:667 N 25 '67 550w

Reviewed by J. P. Nichols

Am Hist R 73:1674 Je '68 650w

"Professor Blum has skillfully fashioned a readable narrative. . . . As in the earlier volumes, the editor has not injected his own judgments but has allowed Morgenthau to speak for himself. . . . The diaries contain interesting reflections on relations with the Allies." Oscar Handlin Atlantic 220:141 O '67 480w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 27:266 O 15 '67 600w

Reviewed by A. B. Rollins

J Am Hist 55:427 S '68 650w

"Professor Blum has traced in detail the story of the notorious Morgenthau Plan to strip Germany of all war-making potential, leaving her with an agricultural economy. Harry Dexter White, later accused of Communist activities, plays a major role in the story, but Professor Blum found nothing against his loyalty. Some of the financial details make hard reading, but this book is essential for an understanding of Roosevelt and his administration of the war. Here is an excellent account of American war financing on the highest level. It was hard work." Keith Eubank Library J 92:2556 Jl '67 230w

"Blum is crushed not only by the dead mass of his materials but by his inability to walk away from them. . . . [He] does not make enough of the . . . 'position papers,' written for Morgenthau by some of the outstanding economists of the time, authorities in money and banking, taxation, and international trade, who were called upon to advise the Treasury. . . . [Moreover] what Morgenthau had to say about and had to contribute to the shaping of policy during the years 1941-45 were really quite insignificant. . . . Blum ends his book almost like a threnody. He makes no effort to add or subtract, to assay Morgenthau's contributions in a post that two such different men as Alexander Hamilton and Andrew Mellon regarded as and made the most important in the Presidential Cabinet." L. M. Hacker N Y Times Bk R p64 O 8 '67 950w

Reviewed by L. W. Koenig

Va Q R 44:140 winter '68 1300w

BLUMBERG, ABRAHAM S. Criminal justice. 206p $5.75 Quadrangle bks.

343 Courts—U.S. Justice, Administration of. Criminal law 67-21638

This is a "sociological analysis of the organization and occupational structure of the American criminal court. . . . [The author] focuses on the emergence and operation of . . . a system in which the fundamental goals of due process are replaced by the rational-instrumental goals of efficiency and production." (Library J) Index.

Choice 5:1218 N '68 170w

"Professor Blumberg's points are well documented, both by empirical data and by reference to relevant published works. This book should be read by every judge, prosecutor, and lawyer in the United States; in fact, it should be read by all Americans. . . . [It] is an important book." M. A. Forslund Library J 92:3051 S 15 '67 170w

"In fearlessly describing the real workings of the criminal law, in its modern, bureaucratized and psychiatrized form, Blumberg tells us certain things many people know but few care to acknowledge. . . . [He] dares to say that often defense lawyers do not defend their clients, nor forensic psychiatrists protect their 'patients.' The upshot is an outstanding critical analysis of the subversion of the Rule of Law by the Rule of Psychiatry. . . . Ever since M'Naghten, English and American psychiatrists have . . . been instrumental in saving, by means of the insanity defense, the lives of offenders who might otherwise have been sentenced to death. That they have done so by creating a vast system of penal institutions, disguised as hospitals and administered by physicians, has not received the attention that it deserves. [This] book goes part of the way toward rectifying this." T. S. Szasz Nat R 20:247 Mr 12 '68 800w

Reviewed by C. H. Rolph

New Statesman 74:851 D 15 '67 380w

BLUME, FRIEDRICH. Renaissance and baroque music; a comprehensive survey; tr. by M. D. Herter Norton. 180p $5 Norton

780 Music—History and criticism. Music, European. Music—Analysis, appreciation 65-13323

A German musicologist examines European music from the fifteenth century to the middle of the eighteenth. "In the first study he examines the concept of the term 'Renaissance,' summing up the views of art historians and others; the Renaissance attitude toward music; the treatment of the Renaissance as a period in music history; the various national styles and the types of composition in that period; . . . and finally the accomplishments of the Renaissance in music. . . . [In the second study] the meaning of the term [Baroque] and its application to music history are discussed. . . . The forms, techniques, and other characteristics of the music of the period [are described]. The last section deals with national traits and social functions of Baroque music." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The author of this short work is the general editor of Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, and these essays appeared in German in that monumental encyclopedia. It is very good news that the material is now available in English, for Dr. Blume is among the greatest editors and musicologists alive, and his style adds greatly to this masterful presentation of two complex periods in music history. Highly recommended." Baird Hastings

Library J 92:582 F 1 '67 70w

"This is a brilliant book in a distinguished translation. One need not swallow either whole. . . . One asks, 'For whom is this book intended?' It is hard going even for the musicologist. . . . At worst, it lists names in endless processions. . . . At best, it is a mine of irresistible quotations and hence of examination questions for advanced music students. . . . [The bibliography] with emphasis on works in English, and preference given to those easily available in paper editions," suggests the value of the book to a graduate student preparing for comprehensive examinations. . . . One cannot dismiss the book, however, without pointing out that its depth and allusiveness time and again lead to rich sentences that leave one breathless and in awe. . . . So the reader will value this short book in proportion to his own learning and his own acquaintance with the music of the periods it discusses." Vernon Gotwals

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:488 Mr '68 850w

BLUNT, ANTHONY. Nicolas Poussin. (Bollingen ser, v35, no7; U.S. gallery of art. The A. W. Mellon lectures in the fine arts, 1958) 2v 431p 271il 265pl $25 Pantheon bks.

759.4 Poussin. Nicolas. Paintings, French. Painters, French 66-16237

The author's "specialized studies on Poussin led to the invitation to deliver the Mellon Lectures in 1958 and to his appointment as organizer of the major exhibition of Poussin's work held at the Louvre in 1960. This two-volume publication, a synthesis of the studies, the original Lectures, and the knowledge gained from the exhibition, gives [an] account of Poussin's life and development, in which Professor Blunt deals with his entire oeuvre and his theory of art. The text volume is illustrated by 271 comparative subjects; the plates volume, by 265 halftones." (Publishers note) Bibliography. The volume of text includes: List of Poussin's works by subject categories. Index to titles of Poussin's works. General index. The volume of plates includes: List of paintings by subject categories. Index to paintings by location according to city. Index to titles of paintings.

"Poussin's religious pictures, depicting subjects in the Old and New Testaments that were rarely used in the 17th century are treated with reference both to Catholicism and to 17th-century humanism and Stoicism. For the last great landscapes and mythologies Blunt suggests a consistent view of nature expressing the Stoic cosmology of Tommaso Campanella. The importance of classical styles and archaeology is underlined throughout. This image of Poussin as artist-philosopher may be somewhat inflated. . . . [That he] had well-informed philosophical beliefs is not entirely convincing. But even if some of Professor Blunt's conclusions are hard to accept, he adds to our understanding of each picture by setting it in its cultural context." Carl Goldstein

Book World p6 D 31 '67 350w

"Blunt's articles on Poussin, spanning more than 25 years, are well known to anyone interested in the great French painter. The results of these researches have now been incorporated into what is without doubt the best single study on Poussin. [The two volumes] are beautifully and sensibly produced. The idea of binding the plates in a horizontal format while keeping the normal vertical for the text facilitates using the two volumes together. Appendix with selections from Poussin's writings: admirable indices; and numerous plates both in the text and in the volume of plates. Clearly, useful for the undergraduate as well as the advanced graduate student."

Choice 4:1371 F '68 190w

"It is good to remember again the sheer beauty of paint and color, the tenderness, the eroticism, the gaiety, and the depth of feeling in picture after picture when reading Sir Anthony Blunt's masterly thesis that the old tag 'peintre-philosophe,' so often applied to Poussin, can be given a new and profounder meaning. . . . [This] constitutes by far the most impressive contribution that has ever been made to our understanding of the artist. . . . [not as] a straightforward monograph on Poussin, but rather an investigation into 'the intellectual climate in which he worked and the ideas—religious, philosophical, or aesthetic—in which he believed and which affected his method of work as well as his paintings.' . . . The arguments in fact are not strained and depend clearly on the paintings themselves, which are not forced into a preconceived scheme; and the literary evidence for so many ideas which now seem bizarre is presented with great clarity and—an exceedingly important point which is often neglected in this sort of study—we are always told how accessible it would have been to Poussin and his friends." Francis Haskell

N Y Rev of Books 10:4 F 15 '68 400w

TLS p650 Je 20 '68 500w

Va Q R 44:1xxix spring '68 320w

"The second volume in the Bollingen Series pair is devoted to reproductions, generally of a lamentable quality. . . . The poor quality of these plates constitutes the most serious limitation to Blunt's work. Others are peripheral. Scholars of the Denis Mahon camp, cautiously anticipated in a footnote on page 61 of the text volume, will surely rise up again and attack scornfully the chronology of Poussin's works as proposed by Blunt. But while their objections will be of crucial importance for individual paintings or for the interpretation of certain stylistic currents in Poussin's work, they cannot affect the all-embracing significance of Blunt's book, which for once assimilates critically all previous studies and produces a coherent presentation of Poussin as a painter and as a man." Edgar Munhall

Yale R 57:422 Mr '68 1050w

BLY, ROBERT. The light around the body; poems. 62p $3.95 Harper

811

67-11323

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Peter Davison
Atlantic 221:141 F '68 300w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson
Harper 237:74 Ag '68 220w

Reviewed by Paul Zweig
Nation 206:418 Mr 25 '68 1400w

Reviewed by Alan Brownjohn
New Statesman 76:146 Ag 2 '68 180w

Reviewed by Robert Mazzocco
N Y Rev of Books 10:22 Je 20 '68 2550w

Reviewed by Michael Goldman
N Y Times Bk R p10 F 18 '68 800w

Reviewed by Hayden Carruth
Poetry 112:423 S '68 160w
TLS p867 Ag 15 '68 220w

BLYDEN, EDWARD WILMOT. Christianity, Islam and the Negro race; introd. by Christopher Fyfe. 407p $6.50 Aldine pub.

276 Africa—Religion. Islam. Negroes in Africa

This book is a reissue of a work first published in 1887. It contains "a collection of 15 speeches and articles written between 1871-84 on a variety of subjects, all of which carry a unifying theme: Islam is the preferable religion for the Black African simply because its profession entails no loss of human dignity." (Choice)

"A most welcome reissue of Blyden's very scarce classic, which is essential for those who wish to understand black consciousness manifested in such movements as Pan-Africanism. That which culminated in the 20th century with W. E. B. Dubois, George Padmore, and Kwame Nkrumah has as its origins such prolific and perceptive pens as that of Blyden in the 19th century. . . . A valuable addition to all college and university libraries." Choice 4:1299 Ja '68 140w

"The first volume in the new series 'African Heritage Books,' which will consist of reprints of early works, by writers of African descent or sympathy, that contributed to the struggle for independence or the emergence of African culture."

Economist 225:752 N 18 '67 40w

BLYN, GEORGE. Agricultural trends in India, 1891-1947: output, availability, and productivity. 370p maps $10 Univ. of Pa. press

338.1 Agriculture—India. Agriculture—Economic aspects 63-7861

"In this book, the economic history of India's agriculture and the extent of its development from 1891 to independence (1947), is . . . examined in a study of output, acreage, and yield per acre for the eighteen crops that constitute most of India's agriculture." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

BLYN, GEORGE—Continued

"A detailed working over of published statistics, this volume offers little new in analysis or interpretation and very brief discussion on the roles of prices, trade, research, and education in affecting agricultural production. The period covered is summarized satisfactorily (and many other aspects covered) in S. Thirumalai's Post-war Agricultural Problems and Policies in India [BRD 1954]. Blyn's book can be recommended to anyone faced with handling British colonial statistics. Many tables, charts, maps, limited bibliography . . . some curious statistical abbreviations."

Choice 5:232 Ap '68 80w

"This valuable study, written by [an] economist and geographer at Rutgers, at the urging and with the advice of Thorner, Kuznets, and Hoselitz, must stand as the definitive work in its area. . . . After an excellent section on the methodology of treating data and measuring trends, the trends are described and analyzed by regions within India for the entire period as well as for significant shorter periods, the causal effects on the trends of changes in output composition, agricultural technology, intensity of cultivation, and physical environment are evaluated; and finally, trends are related to population figures to indicate changes in India's welfare. This book should be in every library dealing with development problems." R. E. Will

Library J 91:3406 J1 '66 130w

Reviewed by Daniel Thorner

Pacific Affairs 40:187 spring-summer '67 1100w

BOAK, DENIS. André Malraux. 268p $10 Oxford

848 Malraux, André [68-103250]

The author "examines and assesses both the novels, with which Malraux made his reputation between the wars, and the works on the philosophy of art which have been his major literary preoccupation since 1945. Dr. Boak concludes with a discussion of the sources of Malraux's thought, in particular the influence of Nietzsche, and Malraux's relationship with Existentialists such as Sartre, and attempts to estimate Malraux's place in the context of modern literature." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The sensational Anti-Memoirs of Malraux will be published in America later this year. Readers can prep for that experience by taking on this study of Malraux's work and its relation to the work of Camus, Dostoevsky, Nietzsche, Sartre and Stendhal."

Christian Century 85:1065 Ag 21 '68 40w

"[Dr. Boak discusses] some of the mysteries surrounding Malraux's life and which may well have been deliberately contrived. He then analyses with meticulous care the early writings. . . . [However] most readers, and many critics, are far from certain what they should make of [Malraux's] literary productions and how they can relate them to his artistic and political activities. The time has come to try to comprehend Malraux as a whole. Dr. Boak does not help us to do this. It is true that he includes in his survey the writings on art. . . . But there is virtually nothing about politics, and what references there are to Malraux's communism do not suggest that Dr. Boak would be entirely at home in this field. . . . This is a careful and scholarly book, written with care and clarity. But it is not enterprising, it does not ask the right questions."

Economist 227:52 Je 22 '68 420w

"Dr. Boak's . . . conclusion can be profitably read alone, not only for its critical evaluation of Malraux's place in modern literature, but also as a study of the continuation of the Romantic tradition in the 20th Century. This book's scholarly tone and extensive quotations in French limit its general appeal, but it is highly recommended for academic and research libraries." S. L. Fell

Library J 93:3561 O 1 '68 140w

TLS p1148 O 10 '68 280w

"Boak is probably wrong in believing that if the Anti-memoirs [by A. Malraux, BRD 1968] had been issued in time for him to consider them, his André Malraux would not have been greatly different. In his view Malraux is a successful novelist (especially in Man's Fate) [BRD 1934], a derivative and somewhat overrated philosopher of art, and an enigmatic, often irritating, public figure. But what Malraux says of the 'farfetu' element in both his writing and his life makes Boak's treatment of it seem rapid and almost superficial. . . . [However, Boak's] total estimate of Malraux's achievement is probably closer to what will eventually be the consensus than anyone has come so far." W. M. Frohock

Yale R 58:126 O '68 1400w

BOARDMAN, FON W. The thirties; America and the great depression [by] Fon W. Boardman, Jr. 152p $3.75 Walck, H.Z.

973.917 U.S.—History—1933-1945 67-19921

The author touches on various aspects of life, year by year, from 1928 to 1940, such as "dating customs, the rise of book clubs, film and radio favorites, and rates of malnutrition in American children. In the economic sphere, he discusses . . . the causes of the Depression and the philosophies and programs of the various New Deal agencies." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Best Sell 27:429 F 1 '68 120w [YA]

"[Mr. Boardman] shows successfully what life was like in the Great Depression. . . . FDR is Mr. Boardman's man of the hour, but his is not a blind admiration. The totality of his coverage of the thirties differentiates this book from [L.] Werstein's A Nation Fights Back with its emphasis on the '20s and lesser coverage of the Roosevelt years. The present work is especially noteworthy because of the lucidity of the exposition. . . . Grade nine and up." M. S. Bart

Library J 93:878 F 15 '68 140 [YA]

"[Boardman] takes a large, calm view of the whole decade, complete with movies, song hits, etc. He seems to be a Rooseveltian Democrat; he is objective and 'fair.' But he has excluded all passion, and so the events are unrecognizable." David Cort

N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 24 '68 190w [YA]

BOARDMAN, JOHN. Engraved gems; the Ionides collection; phot. by Robert L. Wilkins. 114p $13.75 Northwestern univ. press
736 Ionides, Constantine Alexander, collection. Gems—Collections 68-17325

The intention of the author is "to present, with brief narrative and description, the gems of the Ionides Collection in London. . . . The early history of Classical gem-engraving, leading to the execution of these fine gems in Greece and Roman Italy, is sketched . . . and illustrated also by . . . examples from the same collection. It ranges from the work of an immigrant Greek artist in the sixth century BC, through specimens of the work of Etruscan and Italic artists, to the Hellenistic Greek. The Roman gems and cameos are [also] described. . . . The account is completed . . . with a selection of Late Renaissance and eighteenth-century gems." (Intro) Bibliography. Indexes—motifs, inscriptions, artists and other subjects.

"This unusual book attempts, presumably, to attract the attention of people who are not collectors to a self-contained field of art that has remained, one gathers, virtually unchanged except for technical developments since its heyday in classical Greece and Rome. Lovely as it is, and fascinating as are the glimpses it gives of the beauties of this specialist's world the book is not altogether successful as a work of popularisation. . . . However, the illustrations themselves, some in colour, are ample reason for anyone to be drawn to the book. They are of high quality, and some of the work reproduced is of inexhaustible loveliness."

Economist 227:xx Ap 27 '68 160w

"[The collection] contains a number of stones which came from the famous Arundel and Marlborough collections and from a Mexican, the Rosarena. Of the 123 stones, 99 are illustrated, five repeated in color, in remarkably reproduced photographs. Mr. Boardman . . . has provided an informative introduction, and notes on each illustration. . . . For larger libraries and for fine arts collections." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:3548 O 1 '68 160w

"[There is some unevenness in the book] since the collection is least rich in the fine archaic scarabs and better provided with rather uninspired Roman cameos. . . . Even granted the difficulty of the subject, there remains the impression that Mr. Boardman is more confident in his presentation of the early material than of the later. . . . A useful chapter on 'The Post-Antique' [is included], in which the author explains how to distinguish between genuine works of antiquity, Renaissance and modern forgeries, and modern gems in the classical tradition made with no fraudulent intent. Though the main part of the book will tell him little that is new, the scholar will find indispensable the detailed catalogue of this unjustly neglected collection."

TLS p888 Ag 22 '68 750w

BOAS, FRANZ. Kwakiutl ethnography; ed. by Helen Codere. 439p il $12.50 Univ. of Chicago press

970.3 Kwakiutl Indians 66-13361

From 1886 to 1931, Boas made thirteen field trips to the North Pacific Coast. His manuscript on the Kwakiutl Indians was incomplete at the time of his death. This volume "reflects Boas's final assessment as well as (about one-quarter) Codere's editorial additions. Structurally the ethnography is divided into 11 chapters plus Boas's introduction, five appendixes, and Codere's introduction. These chapters cover a range of topics, from the setting and background of the Kwakiutl to technology and economic organization, social organization, the potlatch, war, religion, two chapters on the winter ceremonial, mythology, the arts, and life-cycle materials." (Science) Appendixes. Bibliography. Index.

"A notable contribution to the ethnographic literature describing firsthand observations of North American Indians in the early 20th century. . . . [Boas's field notes] provide detailed insights into the thoughts and corresponding actions of the Kwakiutl Indians. This information is extremely valuable to American Indian specialists and should prove fascinating reading to laymen and scholars interested in this area of thought. Boas' meticulous collection of field data is reflected through the clarity and thoroughness with which the material is presented."

Choice 5:128 Mr '68 150w

"The style and content of [this book] . . . pose several basic problems that make the ethnography awkward to use. At the most general level it is often impossible to tell which Kwakiutl group Boas is talking about. . . . A second and equally pervasive problem is that Boas usually does not specify the time period about which he is writing. . . . This is a serious flaw. . . . Other, more specific problems are also apparent. . . . [Three debated issues], the nature of class-rank stratification on the North Pacific Coast, the potlatch system, and numimots (Kwakiutl ambilateral descent groups) . . . [are not] resolved or even clarified. . . . [Moreover] Codere makes several factual errors in her introduction. . . . Anthropology is ultimately left with only a partial and inadequate insight into the rich cultural system of the traditional Kwakiutl. This must be the final verdict, even though the ethnography contains some valuable new information as well as implications." R. P. Rohner

Science 158:362 O 20 '67 2400w

BOASE, T. S. R. Castles and churches of the crusading kingdom; with col. phot. by Richard Cleave. 121p maps $17.50 Oxford

720.956 Castles. Churches—Palestine 67-99184

"A survey of the architectural and artistic achievements of the crusaders in the Holy Land." (Library J) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index of places.

"Far from stressing the romantic or the exotic aspects of the Crusades, Mr. Boase, who is well known for his studies of English art, has written a straightforward text that is both well informed and readable. The very latest archaeological information is included, but at no point does the text slip away from the reader. This takes a rare gift and a mellowness, and Boase has both." Robert Branner

Art Bul 50:292 S '68 190w

"Boase has given us a sorely needed survey in English of the castles and churches built by the Crusaders in the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem during the 12th and 13th centuries. The book, although short on scholarly apparatus, is a very worthy one. . . . It is well written and well illustrated although the tipped-in color plates often include copious amounts of very attractive land and/or seascape. . . . Boase's description of the Krak des Chevaliers merits special mention, and most helpful is his inclusion of a plan of Jerusalem showing the major holy sites discussed in the text. Well indexed. Will be useful as an introduction to the domestic and religious medieval architecture and sculpture of the Crusaders."

Choice 4:1232 Ja '68 170w

Christian Century 84:1255 O 4 '67 40w

"This book is rather a mixed blessing. I have never seen better photographs of historical sites. The crusader monuments never looked better and their strategic value was never made clearer to those who have not visited them. But the text leaves much to be desired. . . . It is neither popular history—too technical and dull—nor is it completely scholarly. . . . [Professor Boase] has placed too much emphasis on the condition of the ruins in the 18th Century and not enough on how the churches and fortresses were built. . . . How strange it is to have a discussion of the holy sites of Jerusalem complete with a diagram of the Haram that makes no mention of the Walling Wall or the Jewish significance of the shrines. Finally, discussion of artistic and architectural influences of crusader states on the West is too brief. But the photographs are magnificent." I. M. Berger

Library J 92:4143 N 15 '67 220w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

Sat R 50:36 N 25 '67 50w

TLS p135 F 8 '68 300w

Va Q R 44:cxviii summer '68 130w

BOASE, T. S. R. St Francis of Assisi; with 16 lithographs by Arthur Boyd. 120p $7.50 Ind. univ. press

B or 92 Francis of Assisi, Saint 68-15550

"In this biography, which has been revised to include the findings of current research in Franciscan history, Mr. Boase presents the general outlines of the many facets of St. Francis' life. . . . placing St. Francis in relation to the historical, social, and philosophical movements of the thirteenth century. In a set of lithographs prepared especially for this book, Mr. Arthur Boyd has reinterpreted the Franciscan legend in twentieth-century terms." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. The book was originally published in England in 1936.

"Among the numerous lives of St. Francis this one . . . is a small masterpiece. . . . More important than the clear picture of the life and times of the 13th Century is the affectionate and reverent insight into the heart of Brother Francis. This gracious retelling of the fact and fable that make up the legend can be enjoyed by all kinds of readers of all shades of belief." M. L. Garvey

Library J 93:2853 Ag '68 110w

"The principal importance of the present book is the inclusion of Arthur Boyd's illustrations, which are indeed a violent departure from the conventions of the Italian painters. . . . Dr. Boase, as a distinguished art historian, recognizes the right of artists to transform a legend and to relate it to the sensibilities of their own time. Mr. Boyd's lithographs . . . —harsh and even brutal—affirm the hard facts of Francis's being and of his mission. . . . The swirling lines of these lithographs, their concentration on nakedness and abnegation, evoke with great force the absolute ardour of Francis's vocation. . . . [These illustrations] are a marvellous complement to the measured admiration of Dr. Boase's text."

TLS p926 Ag 29 '68 480w

BOCCA, GEOFFREY. The secret army. 268p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

965 Algeria—History. Organisation de l'armée secrète 68-19837

"The period dealt with in this work is that of the Algerian War, 1954 to 1962. The 'secret army' is not the Algerian rebel force but rather the O.A.S. (l'Organisation de l'Armée Secrète), sworn to keep Algeria French despite the climate of the times, and the final decision of De Gaulle and his government to set it free. . . . Bocca, correspondent with a British airborne division during World War II, bases his facts on personal interviews, local newspaper accounts, and works published by the principals involved, and on formal histories of the events." (Library J)

BOCCA, GEOFFREY—Continued

"Bocca recounts the short and brutal history of the Secret Army with considerable skill and a wealth of detail, much of it previously unpublished. His portrayals of the Secret Army leaders are perceptive, and he evokes with numbing accuracy the nightmarish atmosphere of Algiers and Oran in the last six months before independence. . . . Once independence became inevitable, Secret Army policy changed to a simple arithmetical equation: There are nine million of them and one million of us, so if each one of us kills nine of them Algeria will remain French. The author shows how the police, although infiltrated by Secret Army sympathizers, was finally able to dismantle the organization's leadership." Sanchede Gramont

Book World p5 J1 21 '68 900w

"A savage, often sordid tale, in which the cast of characters runs the gamut from idealistic nationalists to insane sadists and assassins. . . . The book reads like a novel and could easily become the basis for a movie thriller fully as realistic and brutal as any in the prevailing fashion. For the general reader." J. C. Shipman

Library J 93:1480 Ap 1 '68 190w

"If the reader can take with salt putative conversations put in quotation marks and can stomach a bit of old-fashioned biology (the notion that blood determines character), he will be able to satisfy his sadistic urges vicariously. . . . Bocca's book is filled with gunnings, knifings, bombings (plastiquer), plots and counterplots, tortures. Sometimes there is a touch of the romantic; sometimes horror is unadorned. . . . The leaders of the O.A.S., chiefly professional military men, were soldats perdus who after the defeat in Indochina found a raison d'être in the Secret Army. Most of them were men of action, not philosophers. They represented [a] face of France . . . that is both pathetic and horrible." B. C. Shafer

Sat R 51:25 Ag 3 '68 490w

BODE, CARL, ed. American life in the 1840s; ed. with an introd. by Carl Bode. 368p il $7.50 N.Y. univ. press: pa $1.95 Doubleday

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—History—1783-1865 67-15623;67-11163

"The selections in this book are from writings of the 1840's and are illustrated by prints of the time, many from periodicals. . . . [The editor, in his introduction and notes, describes] mid-19th-Century life in the United States." (Library J)

Am Lit 40:110 Mr '68 50w

"A worthwhile collection of documents. . . . Bode's first five parts in which he describes, through documents, the social, economic, and cultural tone of America have significant cohesion, but his remaining two parts, one on 'Comprehending Our Country' and another on 'Slavery,' could well have been omitted. The series is an important contribution to the teaching of 'period' history."

Choice 4:1042 N '67 200w

"[This book] shows the central themes of the times, underlines the significance of cultural documents, and illuminates problems that characterize American society. . . . Recommended as useful for high-school and college libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:1153 Mr 15 '67 100w

BODENHEIMER, EDGAR. Treatise on justice. 314p $10 Philosophical lib.

340 Justice 67-11987

The author, a professor of law at the University of California at Davis, "views justice as a material value whose realization shapes or affects the quality of life lived by the members of a society. The work is based on the assumption that the problems of justice are intimately connected with certain fundamental existential needs of human beings whose cognitive ascertainment is not beyond the capacity of human philosophical endeavor. [The] view that justice is a wholly irrational ideal unamenable to objective methods of research is therefore rejected." (Publisher's note) Index.

"It is important to state at the outset that Bodenheimer does not deliver what his title promises. The book is not a treatise: sustained, systematic exposition and argument is lacking. Nor can it, except in an irresponsibly loose way, be said to be devoted to the subject of justice. It consists instead of a series of chapters which present the author's loose impressions and rambling observations on a number of themes having to do with current debates in jurisprudence, political theory, economic planning, criminal law enforcement, and international law and organization, in that order. No working definitions are elaborated, no viewpoint asserted with sufficient coherence to permit one to gather what the author's argument is or what conclusions he believes are supported by his disjointed comments."

Choice 5:119 Mr '68 100w

"[The author] discusses the meaning of justice; the relations of justice to law, morals, reason; . . . the goals of justice . . . and the application or realization of justice in politics, in economics, in courts of law, and in international relations. Where the discussion impinges on basic philosophical issues, such as the problem of free will and responsibility as regards crime and punishment, . . . [he] adduces and sensibly evaluates the views of provocative thinkers of the past and present. . . . This is a worthy contribution to an important subject." William Gerber

Library J 92:1835 My 1 '67 160w

BOEHM, KLAUS. The British patent system [v] 1. Administration, by Klaus Boehm in collaboration with Aubrey Silberston. 184p $10.50 Cambridge

608.7 Patents [67-14285]

An "account of the history, development, administration, and functioning of the British patent system to be eventually followed by a second volume comprising an economic study of British patents . . . Appendix [includes] charts dealing with industrial acceptance of patents." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The present British system is a compromise between those patent systems which involve a mere registration of alleged inventions, as in Belgium, and full examination systems, as in the U.S., where patents are only granted when novelty has been duly ascertained. This makes the book of special interest to U.S. students since currently proposed legislation would tend to move in the direction of Britain. . . . Recommended for students of law, history, and economics as well as patent practitioners."

Choice 4:1229 Ja '68 100w

"[The authors] have obviously had difficulty in finding the statistics necessary to anyone attempting to estimate the worth and significance to industry and the country of the present patent system. They have used what figures exist with ingenuity. . . . [However,] it is a criticism of the book that in discussing the meaning of 'invention' and 'patentability' it necessarily goes into questions of legal definitions with which the authors do not seem to be at home. Short of mastering the legal jargon there is not much the authors can do to help the layman or the cognacy of their own case. They should be on much more rewarding ground for their skills when they study the economic effects of the patent system in their second volume."

Economist 226:36 Ja 6 '68 300w

BOESIGER, W., ed. Le Corbusier 1910-65. See Le Corbusier

BOESIGER, W., ed. Richard Neutra: building and projects, 1961-66. See Neutra, R.

BOGAN, LOUISE. The blue estuaries; poems, 1923-1968. 136p $4.95; pa $1.95 Farrar, Straus 811 68-29134

"This book contains poetry from five previous volumes plus a section of new poems." (Library J)

"The poems are musical and intellectual; one must listen with the heart and mind to her words. It is like listening to the sound of a shell—unmistakable but at the same time mysterious. . . . There are also excellent descriptive passages. Recommended for small and large libraries." M. M. Miller

Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 140w

"Now that we can see the sweep of 45 years' work in this collection of over a hundred poems, we can judge what a feat of character it has been. . . . [Miss Bogan's diction] stems from the severest lyrical tradition in English. . . . Hers is a language as supple as it is accurate, dealing with things in their own tones. . . . One of the 12 new poems in this collection is called 'St. Christopher.' In it can be seen both the stiffness and the energy of Miss Bogan's style. . . . Reading this book with delight, I was struck . . . by how [her] reputation has lagged behind a career of stubborn, individual excellence. I hope [this volume] may set things straight." William Meredith

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 13 '68 750w

BÖGLI, ALFRED. Luminous darkness; the wonderful world of caves [by] Alfred Bögli [and] Herbert W. Franke [tr. by B. M. Charleston and H. Griffin] [Eng title: Radiant darkness]. 83p il col il col pl $14.95 Rand McNally

551.4 Caves

67-14005

The text "tells of Cave Research, Formation of Caves, Life in Caves, Caves and Prehistoric Man, How Caves Breathe [and] Photography in Caves. . . . The authors have included the specifics of photographic equipment and films." (Publisher's note)

"Evidently, the purpose of this book is to present caverns as awe-inspiring refuges for exploration by scientist and layman. The task is not accomplished. The most useful parts of the book are those reporting the dangers of and preparations necessary for cavern explorations. . . . The most impressive feature is the 72 elaborate, color photographs which are mildly interesting and of excellent quality. A few interesting comments are made about the extinct cave-bears and the artistry of prehistoric man. Celebrated American Caves, edited by [C. E.] Mohr and [H. N.] Sloane [BRD 1956] is a superior general interest book which deals with American caverns while discussions in Luminous Darkness stem from European examples."

Choice 5:79 Mr '68 180w

"The authors of this superbly illustrated, beautifully printed work are scientists who for years have investigated caves in Europe, particularly in the Alps and Austria. . . . [They both] write clearly and concisely; the translation from the German is excellent. They consider all aspects of underground investigation: the formation of caves and amazing deposits found in them; their fauna; primitive cave dwellers, and so on. . . . This treatise will have a strong appeal to the general reader, especially to one scientifically inclined." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:4166 N 15 '67 100w

BOISDEFRE, PIERRE DE, jt. auth. Kafka: the torment of man. See Albérès, R. M.

BOLES, ROBERT. Curling. 259p $4.50 Houghton

68-12778

In this novel the author of The People One Knows (BRD 1964) "records the observations, thoughts, and memories of a rich and well-educated young man over the period of one week-end, as he leaves his job as a structural engineer. [Chelsea, a Negro who had been adopted by a wealthy white family, then] visits friends, walks the streets of Boston, goes to his house on Cape Cod, attends a drunken party, and finally flees to New Bedford where, still dressed in his tuxedo, he gets into a fatal brawl outside a waterfront saloon." (Commentary)

Reviewed by C. V. Cassill
Book World p26 S 8 '68 600w

Reviewed by John Thompson
Commentary 45:72 Ap '68 600w

Reviewed by T. C. Miller
Commonweal 88:419 Je 21 '68 650w

"The book is less important for its plot—if it has one—than for its insight into the mind of Chelsea and the occasional rhythm and style of its description and dialogue. . . . An interesting experiment which is not entirely successful, this novel is for large fiction collections." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:569 F 1 '68 200w

"Boles, himself a Negro who has lived much of his life on Cape Cod, has several things going for him in this sensitive novel; indeed, that is one of his problems as a writer. 'Curling' never quite makes up its mind what kind of novel it wants to be. . . . The result is an impressionistic, unstructured, and, at times, slightly pretentious novel that requires considerable patience to follow. . . . It will certainly not please the militants, and it leaves others with a rather spongy case for moderation. [If] it never really comes to grips with its big idea, it rewards in dozens of small, compelling ways." David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 3 '68 700w

"The 'curling' of the title refers not only to the old Scottish game, played by sweeping a stone over ice with a broom, but to Chelsea's evasiveness. He is a gray man in a black-and-white world. He has been quiescent rather than satisfied, and his feeling of separateness increases during the events of the weekend covered by the novel until he is shocked into full awareness. . . . In addition to symbolizing Chelsea's response to life, 'Curling' describes the narrative method. By an inordinate use of flashback, reverie, dream, and reminiscence, the book winds towards realization of its point. For the first two thirds of the way, however, it is simply confusing. . . . Boles is a far better writer than parts of [the book] would indicate. When he writes 'straight' it is often with both power and beauty." John Greenya

Sat R 51:38 F 17 '68 700w

BOLIN, LUIS. Spain: the vital years; foreword by Sir Arthur Bryant. 396p pl maps $6.95 Lipincott

946.081 Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939
67-24005

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Gabriel Jackson
Am Hist R 73:1172 Ap '68 460w

Reviewed by H. V. Livermore
Social Studies 59:291 N '68 250w
Va Q R 44:1xxiv spring '68 180w

BOLINGER, DWIGHT. Aspects of language. 326p $6.95; college ed pa $3.95 Harcourt

410 Language and languages 68-15946

A professor of Romance languages at Harvard University discusses language: its "structure and history; the direction and nature of language change; the effects of dialect on communication and social stratification; the way in which the structure of a message as well as a listener's interpretation of it affects its forms; and . . . questions of the origins of language and the relationship between language and ego, and language and cognition." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

"Though this book is generally nontechnical, Mr. Bolinger is by no means superficial in his treatment of language as a physical, social, cultural, and intellectual phenomenon. Public and college libraries should not be without this book." David Lawson

Library J 93:2870 Ag '68 100w

"[This book is] a rare and engrossing introduction to what many people believe to be a dreary and difficult subject. . . . While he leaves no aspect of structural linguistics unexamined, Dwight Bolinger is no mere grammarian; in his skillful hands, linguistics is transformed into a science that helps us understand man's nature and comprehend the complex relationship existing between man's talent for making and using symbols and his ability to create culture. . . . Though this book is bound to be used as a text (the wealth of concrete examples and the provocative exercises at the end of each chapter virtually guarantee it), mercifully for students its wit and style seem primarily addressed to lay readers: it richly deserves a wide audience." Gloria Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p16 J1 14 '68 250w

BÖLL, HEINRICH. End of a mission; tr. from the German by Leila Vennewitz. 207p $5.95 McGraw

68-11926

"When a young German soldier and his carpenter father set fire to an Army jeep at the side of a road near a Rhineland village, they are arrested, jailed for six weeks, then brought to trial before Judge Alois Stollfuss, who will close his career with their case. The novel covers the proceedings of the one-day trial, which opens early in the morning and concludes with the judge's verdict delivered shortly after midnight. . . . Both young Gruhl and his father plead guilty but claim that their action was not a criminal one but an artistic 'happening' not subject to the conventional laws of the Federal Republic." (America) Originally published in 1966 under the title Ende einer Dienstfahrt.

BÖLL, HEINRICH—Continued

"The problem with the novel is that its sardonic overtones are likely to be overlooked because of its intensely Teutonic framework. The thesis of the novel is perhaps too carefully worked out at the expense of characterization. Not that there aren't well-drawn characters in the book—there are just too many of them. The list at the front of the novel includes 42 names. . . . Still another weakness is the translation, which makes too obvious an effort to provide colloquial expressions for what must be untranslatable phrases. Nevertheless, it is a highly intelligent, albeit low-keyed, novel by one of Germany's premier novelists." T. L. Vince

America 118:549 Ap 20 '68 700w

"The book develops, in what amounts to inexpressibly tedious detail, the slow and maddening testimony. . . . The trial of course, is absurd, but the record of the trial illuminates the life of a town and its inhabitants. With sharp and devastating irony the atmosphere of the court is presented like that of an amateur dramatic company about to perform a play. . . . The point of the story is the senselessness of war and its practice and malpractice, the hypocrisy of the people playing soldiers, and the spirit of the little people caught in the big time of war. Phantastisch!" C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 28:24 Ap 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by Richard Rhodes
Book World p10 My 19 '68 700w
Choice 5:488 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 19 '68 500w

"This light anti-military polemic is entertaining and will, perhaps, find a wider reader circle than some of Böll's major works, such as Billiards at Half Past Nine [BRD 1962]. The translator, unfortunately, tends to use both German terms—Frau, Bundeswehr—and such American concepts as junior high school, county court house, and so on. For public libraries, middle sized and up, and German collections." M. E. Kelley

Library J 93:570 F 1 '68 300w

Time 91:104 Mr 29 '68 200w

TLS p841 Ag 8 '68 700w

The BOLL WEEVIL (FOLK SONG). The boll weevil; verses sel. and il. by Glen Rounds. unp $3.50; lib bdg $3.27 Golden Gate

784.4 Folk songs—U.S.—Juvenile literature
67-24923

Eighteen verses are included in this illustrated version of the American folksong that tells of "the destructive march of the boll weevil across the American South and the economic ruin it brought with it. . . . [A] piano arrangement with guitar accompaniment," as recorded by Jake Zeitlan from [Carl] Sandburg's rendering of the song, is included. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:54 F '68 70w

"This early protest song, while not likely to be as popular with children as last year's very successful collaboration between Rounds and Richard Chase on Billy Boy, is a worthy companion to it." Elva Harmon

Library J 92:3845 O 15 '67 90w

"The boll weevil who appears in [these] illustrations for the folk song is as vivid a personality in his nasty, ugly way as the ragged but stubborn farmer whom he drives off the farm and out West. Not only animals and artifacts but people are drawn with such intelligent and humorous skill that volumes about their character, economy, culture and even nutrition are conveyed in these duotone line sketches. As a folk narrative of the boll weevil's effects on the Southland's crops and people, the song by itself is a lively conveyer of history. But these illustrations add the detail that makes it also an involving story." M. L. Bird

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 15 '67 150w

BOLOGNA CENTER CONFERENCE ON GOLD AND INTERNATIONAL MONETARY REFORM, 1967. Monetary reform and the price of gold. See Hinshaw, R., ed.

BOLTON, CHARLES D. The university student; a study of student behavior and values [by] Charles D. Bolton [and] Kenneth C. W. Kammeyer. 286p $6; pa $2.95 College & univ. press

378.1 Students—U.S.

67-13188

Based on a study carried out at the University of California at Davis, this "book revolves around three problems. The first is an essentially descriptive analysis of what students do with their time, especially what they do in their informal interactions with one another. Second is an attempt to arrive at a meaningful typology of students based on their responses to questionnaire items. And third is the effort to determine whether there is some correspondence between their actual behavior and the behavior we would predict on the basis of our typology. Throughout the book we are particularly interested in the question of the amount of intellectual content that spills over from the classroom to the informal transactions of students." (Pref) Index.

"[This book] provides some new perspectives and new data. Yet, the study has some serious shortcomings. The bulk of the volume is of only limited significance, since it consists merely of an extended description of student bull sessions on the campus. Among various methodological inadequacies is the lack of any analysis of the social class backgrounds in the discussion of the bull sessions. It is also very dangerous to generalize about the 'American university student' from a small and clearly unrepresentative sample from a single institution. Still, this is an interesting analysis of a relatively ignored aspect of American student life." P. G. Altbach

Am Soc R 33:319 Ap '68 600w

Christian Century 84:1255 O 4 '67 30w

"This important book grew out of a sociology class assignment designed to shed some light on the content of bull sessions. . . . The initial results were so provocative that sociologists Bolton and Kammeyer next set up a systematic research design . . . that required the interviewing of 210 students drawn randomly from the population of approximately 3,000, to be interviewed at a rate of thirty a day during the first week in December 1962. The interview schedule had been expanded to include a background and attitude questionnaire, a time budget for the twenty-four-hour period, and an accounting of each bull session in which the subject had participated during that twenty-four-hour period. The authors present a careful analysis of the material in a language which is almost totally devoid of special sociological terms." R. C. Birney

Sat R 51:78 Mr 16 '68 1250w

BOLTON, W. F. A history of Anglo-Latin literature, 597-1066; v 1, 597-740. $10 Princeton univ. press

870.9 Latin literature

65-17132

The author "studies the Latin writers of the time by examining the works of individual men rather than movements. He devotes a chapter each to the period before 597, the 7th Century, Bede, and Bede's successors." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[Professor Bolton] translates Latin illustrations and concludes with an invaluable 64-page bibliography. His discussions are brief and lucid, and the work should serve more as a reference than as a continuous history. Every college and seminary library should have this book, and public libraries strong in classics and religion should find it a necessary purchase. (Volume II is in preparation)." D. K. Fry

Library J 93:1145 Mr 15 '68 130w

Va Q R 44:cxv summer '68 100w

BOND, BRIAN, ed. Victorian military campaigns. 328p il maps $7.95 Praeger

942.081 Great Britain—History, Military

67-23966

A collection of articles edited by a lecturer in war studies at King's College, London. Contents: Introduction by Brian Bond; The Sikh

Wars, 1845-9, by E. R. Crawford; The Third China War, 1860, by John Selby; The expedition to Abyssinia, 1867-8, by D. G. Chandler; The Ashanti campaign, 1873-4, by John Keegan; The South African War, 1880-1, by Brian Bond; The Egyptian campaign of 1882, by M. J. Williams; The reconquest of the Sudan, 1896-9, by Cyril Falls. Chronology of Victorian wars and punitive expeditions. Bibliography. Index.

"This volume has many fascinations; as in all edited works, however, the caliber of the essays varies. . . . The editor took the sensible approach of picking out those campaigns upon which either little had been written or upon which not much had been published in recent years. The intent, generally well carried out, was to deal less with the tactical approach than with the campaign in its whole setting. . . . The introductory essay is well worth reading. For courses in British Imperial history, the book will be a boon. It provides a variety of readings on a subject that was of considerable importance throughout the nineteenth century and is of revived interest today." Robin Higham

Am Hist R 73:1156 Ap '68 390w

Choice 5:660 Jl '68 100w

"All [these] studies are by leading authorities, and all have the polish that one would expect. Campaigns are placed in their political context successfully. . . . Bond's attempt to place the Victorian generals in a better light is so well done that many of them will seem to have been seriously maligned in the past. For large public libraries, and most college and university libraries serving historians." P. W. Filby

Library J 92:2564 Jl '67 180w

BOND, MICHAEL. Here comes Thursday! il. by Daphne Rowles. 126p $3.25; lib bdg $3.13 Lothrop

Mice—Stories

67-22594

Thursday, a fugitive from a home for stray mice, is adopted by a large family of mice who live in an organ-loft cupboard of St. Mary's in the Valley. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by Margery Fisher

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 3 '66 100w

Horn Bk 43:748 D '67 300w

"The author of the popular stories about Paddington the Bear [Paddington Helps Out, BRD 1962] has once again demonstrated his ability to successfully balance animal and human traits, so that the animal characters are readily open to reader identification and their mundane activities are made to seem interesting. Two badly stereotyped foreigners—a mad German scientist with a Katzenjammer Kids accent and a Texas tourist cousin—intrude jarringly on the otherwise mild yet pleasant adventures of the amiable British mice. On the whole, the book seems best suited to doling out in small read-aloud portions just before bedtime." E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:1301 Mr 15 '68 100w

"[Mr. Bond has] confidently created a minuscule . . . mouse world. Thursday, an orphan mouse who is . . . adopted as the twentieth child of the Cupboardosites . . . [arrives in a] balloon, and this flight plays an unexpected part in saving the family grocery business. . . . Miss Bianca invites a wry smile, Thursday a belly laugh; these two captivating creatures can take a double bow."

TLS p1087 N 24 '66 100w

BONDY, RUTH, ed. Mission survival: the people of Israel's story in their own words: from the threat of annihilation to miraculous victory; ed. and comp. by Ruth Bondy, Ohad Zmora [and] Raphael Bashan. 503p maps $7.95 Sabra bks.

956 Israel-Arab War, 1967—Personal narratives 68-21378

Three Israeli journalists have collected "newspaper reports, magazine articles, letters, radio broadcasts, speeches, official releases, and press conferences. Most of these were written at the time of the [Six Day War in 1967] and appeared in Israel's dailies and weeklies. They are presented with connecting comment by the editors who wrote a number of the items themselves." (Library J) Glossary. Chronology.

"The special interest of [this] book is that [it was] written by Israelis and translated from Hebrew. . . . There are some items by well-known (to the American public) statesmen, military leaders, and authors, but the majority are by journalists who accompanied the army as military correspondents or served in it as soldiers. Those readers who would like to obtain some firsthand information about the war will find [this] book very interesting." David Shavit

Library J 93:2862 Ag '68 110w

"[This collection includes] such contributors as Abba Eban, General Dayan, Nasser's spokesman, Mohammed Heykal, [and] Nahum Eisenthal, a 5th-grade student in Tel Aviv. The book is interesting not only as an insight into the trials of people caught up in an impending catastrophe but also as a prime source book for press conferences and major statements during the crisis." M. J. Bandler

Nation 207:444 O 28 '68 90w

BONEY, F. N. John Letcher of Virginia; the story of Virginia's Civil War governor. 319p $6.95 Univ. of Ala. press

975.5 Letcher, John. Virginia—Politics and government. Virginia—History. U.S.—Politics and government—1783-1865 66-25023

"The book covers the early career of Letcher . . . [but] focuses largely on the protagonist's activities as governor and the problems he attempted to solve." (Choice) Bibliography.

Reviewed by C. B. Dew

Am Hist R 73:606 D '67 290w

"Boney has consulted the primary sources and mined them extensively and fully. . . . Most useful for college students and should stand as the standard biography of Letcher."

Choice 4:1170 D '67 180w

"This is the first full-length biography of Virginia's Civil War governor and was developed from the author's doctoral dissertation. . . . His analysis of Letcher's thought and action is well done. . . . The governor is depicted as 'Honest John,' ever doing his duty in an orderly way, ever hopeful of the southern cause. The chapters on his role during the war are the best in the book. . . . Though his literary style is not outstanding, Boney fills out a neglected story interestingly and accurately." C. W. Turner

J Am Hist 54:674 D '67 500w

BONHAM, FRANK. The ghost front. 223p $4.50; lib bdg $4.45 Dutton

67-20122

A novel about a sector of the Allied front in World War II used for training inexperienced troops. Among the soldiers of the 106th Infantry Division "fighting on the Ardennes Front during the Battle of the Bulge in December, 1944 . . . [are] 18-year-old twins Andy and Tom Croft. Separated immediately after training, contrary to the Army's promises, the twins engage in different battle skirmishes while trying to find each other. . . . Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"While young readers will be attracted to the action and excitement, it may also be presumed that they will be confused as the author jumps from one twin to the other. Because of this confusion and the lack of background in young readers expected to pick the book up, the volume will only serve as free-time reading on a dull Saturday."

Best Sell 27:465 Mr 1 '68 200w

"Drawing detail from official reports and personal narratives, Bonham recreates, hour by hour, the confusion, fright and errors that followed the surprise attack. With lines overrun, command posts shattered, and communications severed, only individual acts of ingenuity and courage held the enemy back. . . . Hitler's last big push failed, and the blow-by-blow story of some of the things which happened before order was restored and the reserves brought up makes exciting reading for any boy." E. B. H.

Book World p28 (children's issue) My 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:307 My 24 '68 90w

"A realistic novel, which might well appeal to reluctant readers all the way up to senior high. . . . As [Tom and Andy] change from innocent youths to gaunt, bearded, mud-soaked men the chaos and senselessness of much that happens in war is vividly conveyed." Leora Oglesby

Library J 93:878 F 15 '68 110w

BONHAM, FRANK—Continued

Reviewed by Robert Berkqvist
N Y Times Bk R p20 Ap 14 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 180w

BONHAM, FRANK. Mystery of the fat cat; 1l.
by Alvin Smith. 160p $3.95; lib bdg $3.91 Dutton

68-18348

"When the rat- and roach-infested Oak Street Boy's Club building blows up under the strain of massive fumigation, the sole haven for the young men in that ghetto community is gone, unless someone produces money for its restoration. . . . [Buddy Williams and his friends] team up to bag the . . . legacy of 600 grand, left to the club by Mrs. Atkins. . . . to be awarded at the death of Buzzer, her well-padded cat." (Library J) "Ages ten to fourteen" (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by J. H. Clarke
Book World p20 O 6 '68 150w

"The author of Durango Street [BRD 1965] has blended characters and plot so well that the reader thinks only incidentally of the boys as Negroes. . . . A simple but uncondescending style and a judicious use of colloquialisms give immediacy to the problems of the underprivileged without undermining the basic plot." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:426 Ag '68 330w

Reviewed by Susan Roth
Library J 93:2110 My 15 '68 200w

"Only gradually does the author paint these characters brown or the color of dark rosewood, revealing them as blacks or 'beans' (Mexican-Americans). They emerge as realistic guys of the ghetto. . . . Their humor, a jaunty cynicism born of poverty, rings true. . . . Particularly in his handling of encounters between citizens and cops and of alert boys with a mentally retarded youngster, Bonham shows slum people the way they are, with honest pragmatism and tough vitality." Jane Manthorne

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ag 25 '68 190w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 100w

BONHEIM, HELMUT. A lexicon of the German in Finnegans wake. 176p $6 Univ. of Calif. press

823 Joyce, James—Finnigans wake 65-21267

The author's "procedure has been to work his way through the 'Wake,' recording in columns, as he goes along, all the words that contain in their baggage of meanings any visual or auditory suggestion of German, providing the German meaning appears to have some relevance. . . . To the left of the pertinent wake-word Bonheim records the page and line; and to the right the proper form of the German word along with its English equivalent." (N Y Times Bk R)

Choice 5:181 Ap '68 110w

"[There are] over 6,000 entries. The fact that anyone with an interest in 'Finnegans Wake' can quickly lose an hour browsing through these pages is testimony to the 'Wake's' richness and the validity of Mr. Bonheim's project." N Y Times Bk R p18 F 25 '68 300w

"The most difficult problems in such studies [as this] are those of limitation, definition, and relevance, and the individual reader must ultimately be the judge. . . . Professor Bonheim has done a service to Joyce scholarship and his book should appeal to Joyceans, libraries, and Deutschlose Wakemen."

Va Q R 44:1x spring '68 200w

BONO, EDWARD DE. See De Bono, E.

A BOOK of masques; in honour of Allardyce Nicoll. 448p pl $12.50 Cambridge

822 Masks (Plays). Nicoll, Allardyce [67-85724]

This volume consists of "fourteen masques, each specially edited with an introduction and commentary by a different scholar. There are four by Ben Jonson and two by James Shirley; the remainder are by Samuel Daniel, Thomas Campion, Francis Beaumont, William Browne, Thomas Middleton, Thomas Nabbes, William Davenant; there is also the anonymous Masque of Flowers. In his introduction, Professor Bentley examines the masque as Jonson conceived it. . . . There is also a final essay on the influence of the masque on the drama of the period. . . . [and] a group of 48 plates . . . prepared by Sybil Rosenfeld, many of them reproducing designs by Inigo Jones." (Publisher's note)

"The English court masque, a spectacular Renaissance blending of aristocratic pageantry, drama, poetry, and dance, has immediate import for students of literature, theater, art history, and music. . . . [This volume contains] a fine suggestive essay by Inga-Stina Ewbank on the incorporation of masques into English Renaissance drama. The sampling of masques is excellent, though Jonson's The Masque of Queens is omitted, and 48 plates of costumes and sets are included. [S.] Orgel's important study The Jonsonian Masque [BRD 1965] is only briefly noted, and there is no bibliography on the masque nor index to Ewbank's essay; yet no other reliable edition of all of these masques exists. Recommended for undergraduates and graduates alike."

Choice 5:212 Ap '68 300w

"[This] is at once a splendid and appropriate tribute by pupils and colleagues to Allardyce Nicoll, and also a valuable gift to students of the Renaissance. It is very precisely what it says it is, a book of masques and not a book about masques. . . . It is a refreshing change from the usual festschrift, and the editors do justice to their chosen authors; if indeed the choice was theirs. It is nowhere stated upon what principle the selection was made or the tasks apportioned. . . . An oddity is Thomas Nabbes's The Spring's Glory, never known to have been performed. It was perhaps a 'blank' masque, adaptable to any occasion. . . . An introductory essay by G. E. Bentley shows that only a small fraction of the masques actually performed in the seventeenth century survive in print."

TLS p841 S 21 '67 1000w

BOORMAN, H. L., ed. Biographical dictionary of republican China, v 1, v2. See Biographical dictionary of republican China

BOORSTEIN, EDWARD. The economic transformation of Cuba; a firsthand account. 303p $7.95 Monthly review

338.97291 Cuba—Economic policy 68-13652

The author "is an American economist who arrived in Cuba in May 1960, and for the next three and a half years worked in the top planning agencies of the Revolutionary Government. He has written [an] account of the problems, successes, and failures he witnessed. . . . To supplement his account of Cuba's socialist reconstruction, Mr Boorstein provides discussions of Cuba's prior economic history, of the situation of other Latin American countries, and of the more universal implications of the Cuban experience for the concepts of socialist planning." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Ronald Steel

Book World p7 Ag 18 '68 50w

"This book will undoubtedly become one of the basic source materials for the story of Fidel Castro's vigorous transformation of Cuba in the early 1960's. It is not an easy book to read, however, for Marxist propaganda and resultant interpretations often misstate situations, particularly when referring to pre-Castro economic conditions on the island. . . . What makes Mr. Boorstein's account particularly rewarding is the insight he gives to the workings of a planned economy. His closeness to Ernesto Che Guevara, to whom the book is dedicated, gave to his stay in Cuba a special quality which few other outsiders could claim." J. N. Goodsell

Christian Science Monitor p9 Je 13 '68 800w

"The first two chapters on the imperialistic prerevolutionary period and the movement toward socialism are pedestrian, but the following two chapters on problems of running a vastly changing economy in the face of extreme resource scarcity, and the subsequent need for greater planning—thus a burgeoning bureaucracy—are useful and unique analyses of the difficulties of rapid transformation to a socialist economy. In a final chapter Mr. Boorstein generalizes on the United States role in Latin America, Russian ideology and experience, and operating a planned economy. This book is a good addition to Latin American collections and academic libraries." R. E. Will

Library J 93:1891 My 1 '68 200w

"At first the reader is a bit uncomfortable with the vocabulary—'American imperialism,' 'monopolies,' etc., the familiar jargon of one side of the cold war—but here it is simply the literal truth. . . . Boorstein discusses Theodore Draper's well-known thesis that Castro betrayed the revolution . . . [and] tells how Humpty Dumpty was put back together again, with dreadful mistakes and appalling waste but with marvelous ingenuity and spirit. . . . There is only one cavil: although the 'why' of Boorstein's involvement is clear—he believes in revolution—the reader would like to know how he got involved." R. J. Walton Nation 207:55 Jl 22 '68 410w

"Boorstein and [J.] Yglesias [In the Fist of the Revolution: Life in a Cuban Country Town, BRD 1968] should be read together; they complement one another, one viewing the revolution from the top and the other examining the results in one Cuban town of decisions made in Havana. . . . Both write in anecdotal style, although Boorstein has significantly analytical discussions of the inadequacy of much of the socialist and capitalist economic doctrine. Both are more impressed by the achievements of the revolution as expressed in joys and satisfaction it has brought to the people, than by its economic gains. They both recognize and criticize the shortcoming of the revolution without losing sympathy for it." D. J. Morris
New Repub 159:25 Jl 20 '68 750w

BOOTH, CHARLES. Charles Booth's London: a portrait of the poor at the turn of the century, drawn from his "Life and labour of the people in London": sel. and ed. by Albert Fried and Richard M. Elman. 342p $7.95 Pantheon bks.

942.1 London—Social conditions. Labor and laboring classes—London. London—Poor. Poverty 67-19173

This is a one-volume reader containing selections from Booth's classic work published in 1902-1903 in seventeen volumes and concerned with "the life of the London poor. . . . [It contains] descriptions of families, homes, streets, conditions of work, cultural and religious practices, much of it illustrated with charts, maps, and statistics . . . [and concludes with] Booth's judgments and recommendations for improving the lot of the poor. . . . [The editors] have selected the contents for their vividness, readability, and intrinsic interest for a contemporary audience." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"It was Booth's statistics concerning the 'arithmetic of woe' which shocked contemporaries . . . accustomed by many writers besides Macaulay to see the history of their country in terms of 'improvement' and 'progress.' The statistics mean less today than the vivid glimpses into what may be called, in contemporary idiom, the cultures of poverty. . . . [Booth] wrote patiently, directly and not without humor about people rather than categories. . . . His greatest strength lay in his ability to catch and to convey mood. He is most memorable when he draws contrasts between streets or families or between whole places, like Whitechapel . . . and St. George's-in-the-East. . . . His work continues to appeal not only for what it contains in itself but because it acquires new significance as a touchstone whenever the facts and forms of poverty change or new cultures of poverty are discovered." Asa Briggs

Book World p4 Ja 21 '68 1050w
Choice 5:1333 D '68 150w

"These selections are grouped under six headings: 'Poverty,' 'Occupations,' 'The Jews of London,' 'Religion and Culture,' 'Illustrations,' 'Random Observations from Booth's Notebooks,' and 'Recommendations.' Booth was a conservative, an indefatigable and objective observer, and a good writer. . . . A worthwhile book for colleges, universities and schools of social work that do not have the original volumes. Also of interest to larger general libraries serving the adult public." William Gibelman
Library J 93:564 F 1 '68 200w

"[Booth] a cousin of Beatrice Webb, but bitterly opposed to her socialist policies, decided to investigate the poor of London because he thought that the nascent Labor party was grossly exaggerating their numbers. . . . He paid assistants, acquired helpers and meticulously plotted the poor, house by house, street by street, parish by parish, throughout East London. He published the results of this gigantic task in 17 volumes, and the present editors . . . have made a judicious, useful and readable selection from them, even though it gives but a pale impression of Booth's stupendous work. . . . Everyone concerned with poverty in America should read and ponder Booth's work." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p3 F 4 '68 1300w

BOOTH, ROBERT E., comp. Culturally disadvantaged: a bibliography and keyword-out-of-context (KWOC) index [by Robert E. Booth [and others]. 803p $25 Wayne state univ. press

016.3719 Socially handicapped—Bibliography
66-27901

This "is both a bibliography of and index to the literature relating to the culturally (or economically) disadvantaged. It was compiled by searching periodical indexes, tables of contents, monographs, books, research reports, micro-fiche, and related informational sources for pertinent materials. As a bibliography, the work identifies about 1,400 items drawn from a wide range of sources. As an index, the compilers have provided between ten and twenty-five keywords or descriptors for each bibliographical item. . . . The first part of this book consists of the subject index arranged alphabetically by keywords (or subject headings). . . . [The second part] contains full bibliographical citations for material appearing in the subject index." (Pref) Author and subject indexes.

"In most instances, no references more recent than 1965 are included, although the preface advises that semiannual supplements will keep the bibliography current. The compilers—all librarians affiliated with Wayne State University—unfortunately neglect to provide a list of bibliographic sources searched, periodicals cited, or their criteria for selection of items included, all of which would be useful for the serious researcher to know. Nevertheless, these omissions can be tolerated since the list itself is sound and thoroughly indexed."

Choice 4:1103 D '67 200w

"This bibliography is an example of a satisfactory idea that did not really succeed. The compilers have arranged a reference tool in the KWOC style and, with admirable attention to providing the user with multiple access to the subjects, have assigned many subject headings for the entries; but ease of access, comprehension, and readability have been sacrificed in the process. Because there is sufficient spacing, the difficulty is not so much that the book is printed all in upper-case characters as it is in the cumbersome and confusing collection of ambiguous entries and codes that hinder quick use. Although there are many pages and some 1400 items, . . . the price of this bibliography is not related to its intrinsic value and the book is not recommended." B. F. Vavrek

Library J 92:2387 Je 15 '67 200w

BOR, MIKHAIL. Aims and methods of Soviet planning; with introd. note by Maurice Dobb [tr. by Maxim Korobochkin and others]. 255p $6.95 Int. pubs.

338.947 Russia—Economic policy 68-495

"This book, specially written for British and American readers by a Soviet Planning economist, analyses . . . the current methods employed in economic planning in the socialist Soviet Union and explains their practical and theoretical basis." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Nicolas Spulber

Am Econ R 58:1000 S '68 900w

"Professor Bor's book emerged from a report prepared for the United Nations. It is presented with an interesting introduction. . . . Before turning to a Western evaluation of Soviet planning the interested reader will undoubtedly wish to refer to a first hand account by a Soviet scholar who for over a quarter of a century participated in shaping the planning techniques. However, it should be noted that Professor Bor does not belong in the ranks of the new school of Soviet planometrics. There is much that is traditional in his thinking." G. R. Feiwel

Am Pol Sci R 62:1011 S '68 410w

BOR, MIKHAIL—Continued

"An up-to-date account of Soviet planning procedures. While the presentation is obviously an inside account, it has the familiar elusive quality of much Soviet self-description. Planning purposes and procedures are described with a blandness that may well be entirely sincere, yet which nevertheless is frustrating for anyone seeking to understand the underlying reality. . . . Perhaps the most interesting chapter compares West European programming with Soviet planning. Here the discussion is quite moderate in criticizing state capitalist efforts; the author seems genuinely concerned to find scientific common ground. The Western reaction of this reviewer combines respect for the imperfect Soviet record with affectionate impatience for a more lucid and analytic account of Soviet planning in actual practice." Holland Hunter

Ann Am Acad 378:204 J1 '68 320w

"[This book] largely confines itself to a formal exposition of Soviet planning procedures, of little value to the general reader and not detailed enough for the specialist." TLS p1345 N 28 '68 600w

BORDEN, WILLIAM. Superstoe. 304p $5.95 Harper

68-15973

"Paxton S. Superstoe, a former university teacher in the mid-West, has descended to high-school teaching. . . . One day he realizes he can take over America. With his two colleagues, Lazarus Firth and Benjamin Franklin Adams, who are also SuperBrains, he brings down the government by starting a series of epidemics. . . . Once in power it only remains for them to drug the new President, and Superstoe is set up to become SuperPax." (TLS)

"A serious, sometimes tendentious, but frequently witty first novel. . . . The characters are as improbable a group of conspirators, or philosopher-kings, as one could hope for. . . . The events of the government takeover are as bizarre as the characters. In short, this is a brilliant work. Its appearance this election year should help gain it much-deserved attention among mature observers of the human political scene, for it is indeed a fable for our times. For Young Adult, college, and public library collections." R. D. Johnson

Library J 93:2013 My 15 '68 160w [YA]

"The plotters in this ramshackle Utopia want to bring to America an end to crime, the improvement of the human breed, ideal education, universal prosperity and everlasting peace. And to attain their goals . . . a cabal of school-teachers working out of [Crossbar.] North Dakota employ germ warfare and indiscriminate homicide. Besides bringing up the obvious moral question, Mr. Borden poses a social one. To wit: Who wants perfection anyhow? The characters who should flesh out the author's opinions are vestigial, and they caper about in a desert of arid encounters and knee-slapping humor." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p33 Je 23 '68 100w

TLS p515 Je 8 '67 160w

Va Q R 44:cxlv autumn '68 110w

BORDUA, DAVID J., ed. The police: six sociological essays. 258p $7.50 Wiley

363.2 Police—U.S. 66-29624

A collection of six essays which "deal with such themes as the evolution of modern police work against the historical background of crime and public disturbance in urban society, the organizational and operational character of police work, the public image of the police, and the relevance of the police recruit's social background and training to the way in which he assimilates his occupational role." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

Reviewed by William Miller

Ann Am Acad 375:235 Ja '68 480w

"Joins [J. H.] Skolnick's Justice Without Trial [BRD 1966] in filling critical needs in the areas of social control and the sociology of law. The essays, some theoretical and some empirical, illustrate impressively the value of sociological analysis in generating insight and furthering understanding of complex problems of human association and action. . . . A valuable acquisition for the undergraduate or graduate collection in criminology, social problems, and sociology generally." Choice 4:756 S '67 130w

BOREL, JACQUES. The Bond; tr. by Norman Denny. 479p $6.95 Doubleday

67-11149

An autobiographical novel "set in provincial France and in Paris [which] traces the . . . effects of a mother's devoted love on the entire life of her talented and lonely son, who at the same time provokes and struggles against her jealousy throughout his boyhood, his early sexual affairs, and his subsequent marriage." (Publisher's note). Originally published 1965 entitled L'Adoration.

Reviewed by P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 28:178 Ag 1 '68 800w

"A tediously long and detailed narrative of a man's relationship with his mother. According to the jacket it 'grew out of a diary Borel has kept since the age of fourteen.' Its source is evident in several ways: the loving inclusion of unimportant trivia; redundancy; and a sprawling, nearly formless flow of incident. . . . [The book] is not without some interest. Its pictures of a provincial boyhood and of a particularly tortured and tortuous adolescence during the German Occupation are period pieces that ring true and occasionally cause the reader to share the author's rapt fascination. The latter sections of the book, a series of failed romances and the author's return to a love for his aged and ill mother, are less convincing. For larger public and college library collections." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:3019 S 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Janice Elliott

New Statesman 75:589 My 3 '68 280w

"Even had it not won the 1965 Prix Goncourt, 'The Bond' would surely have become a best seller in France, for it is a profoundly French book. . . . The sex life of the narrator, Pierre Deligne, certainly bulks large in this first-person narrative of his first 30 years—but it is treated reticently enough by contemporary American standards. No, what makes this novel about an only son and his widowed mother so unmistakably French is the appalling strength of the 'bond' that joins them. . . . Best known previously as a poet, critic and translator, Borel published [this] his first novel, at the age of 40. Its leisurely pace, and the narrator's Proustian fascination with his own portrait as well as his mother's, suggest that the book is thinly disguised autobiography. . . . This moving though egotistical work reads very well in . . . translation and invites comparison with a recent English-language masterpiece, the late Frank O'Connor's 'An Only Child' [BRD 1961]." Vivian Mercier

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 8 '68 1400w

"Since Jacques Borel has been in the avant-garde of literary criticism and a poet of original talent, one would have expected his first novel to be trail-blazing and controversial. Instead [it] bows to literary tradition. . . . The mother-son-grandmother-homestead bond has worn pretty thin from Proust to Mauriac. . . . If Borel injects anything modern into the old formulas . . . it is the strict observance of the single perspective whereby he avoids analyzing anyone but himself. . . . Although this carefully documented, kaleidoscopic diary of the intimacies of mind and body would have been judged a promising beginning in an unknown aspirant, one is disappointed that anyone as intelligent as Monsieur Borel should have produced such a bland book." Anna Bala-kian

Sat R 51:46 Ag 24 '68 400w

BORGESE, ELISABETH MANN. The language barrier: beasts and men. 151p pl $5.95 Holt

591 Animal communication. Animals—Habits and behavior 67-13481

Maintaining that it is possible "to teach human speech to the animal prodigies bright enough to learn it, Mrs. Borgese, a writer, scientist, and animal lover . . . reports many documented cases of talking animals; describes her school for her dog, Arli, who learned to count, read, write, type on a special machine, and even talk somewhat; elephants, and Bob the chimp, whose education is still going on. [She] describes . . . learning tools, progress rates, teaching principles, and techniques." (Library J) Portions of this book have appeared previously in Harper's Bazaar, Holiday and Life International, Index.

"[This book commands the reader's] astonished attention from cover to cover. . . . The last chapter is a little too philosophically diverse for the tenor of the book, but in general this is fascinating material written in a free-swinging style." D. M. Simms

Library J 92:4515 D 15 '67 200w

"[The author's] description of her teaching methods and her comments on animal intelligence are both entertaining and irritating, largely because she has managed to confuse valid research data with metaphorical and mystic musings. Her own experiments in fact reflect the conviction of many leading ethologists: animals are capable of more learning than we imagine, but they can not, despite Mrs. Borgese's incautious optimism, conceptualize as we do nor can they be taught to do so." Gloria Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 19 '68 300w

BORK, BERT VAN. See Van Bork, B.

BORKO, HAROLD, ed. Automated language processing. 386p $12.95 Wiley

410 Electronic data processing. Programming languages (Electronic computers). Language and languages—Electronic data processing 66-26735

A review of "the progress that man has made in programming a computer to process language. . . . The work is divided into three sections. The purpose of the first, 'Language Data Processing,' is to provide the reader with 'a conceptual and theoretical orientation to the applications of language processing. . . .'; this section includes a chapter on 'Mathematical Models in Linguistics and Language Processing.' In the second section, 'Statistical Analysis,' contributors survey 'the statistical techniques used to index, classify or abstract the meaning of reports' and those used to analyze an author's style of writing. . . . In the third section, 'Syntactic Analysis,' specialists treat 'Syntactic Theory in Computer Implementation,' 'Answering English Questions by Computer,' 'Translating Languages,' and 'Designing Artificial Languages for Information Storage and Retrieval.'" (Library J) Index.

"[The] associate head of the language processing and retrieval staff, research and technology division of System Development Corporation (SDC), and his fellow contributors (all but one employees or consultants of SDC) . . . have tried to use this book 'as a vehicle to describe and demonstrate the concepts and procedures of automated language processing.' They are to be congratulated on the success with which they have presented the 'state of the art.' [The volume] is highly recommended for special collections. The book will also appeal to informed readers." Clifford Johnson

Library J 93:1632 Ap 15 '68 220w

"[This] is not a book on librarianship, but it reports on the progress of a new discipline that has implications for the study and practice of librarianship. A goal of its research is the construction of systems that will answer requests for bibliographies and other facts. . . . Frequent references are made to related material in other parts of the book, and the list of sources for each chapter provides a selective bibliography for more detailed study. (Most of the sources, incidentally, are published titles.) . . . H. Edmundson's chapter, 'Mathematical Models in Linguistics and Language Processing,' describes concisely a large number of models used in linguistic research. These descriptions will help a reader to interpret diverse research reports. Thus the chapter will have a useful reference function long after the other chapters have been superseded by future research." D. K. Weintraub

Library J 38:274 J1 '68 1300w

BORN, MAX. My life & my views; introd. by I. Bernard Cohen. 216p $4.95 Scribner

501 Science and civilization 68-12510

An "account of the life and thought of Born comprising a series of articles published in the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists in 1965 and the translation of his Von der Veranantwortung des Naturwissenschaftlers. . . . [It is concerned with] the problems of the atomic age—decay of morals, insanity of war, questionable values of space travel, and philosophy of a physicist." (Choice) Index.

"[This timely book] rates a place in every library. According to Born, 'the belief that there is only one truth and that oneself is in possession of it, seems to me the deepest root of all that is evil in the world.' The philosophical essay, 'Symbol and Reality,' merits special comparison with [E.] Schrödinger's 'The Principle of Objectivation' in Mind and Matter [BRD 1959]."

Choice 5:518 Je '68 120w

"These eight essays, couched for the most part in untechnical language, at once command attention because they represent the social thinking of a man whose name is a truly eminent one in modern physics. . . . Adding to the interest with which one approaches Born's ruminations on science and society is the knowledge that he is eighty-six. . . . As one might expect when an octogenarian author discourses on his life and views, the book is overlaid with reminiscence, but it is reminiscence of a curiously immediate order. . . . The list of political intrusions in Born's life goes on and on, but it would be glib to theorize that these entirely account for his social conscience. Unlike many colleagues, however, he does possess one, and in abundance. Repeatedly, he proclaims it the sustaining force of his later years. . . . Highly cultivated though he is in music, philosophy, poetry, and history, Born's accents are unmistakably those of a scientist. . . . Generally speaking, however, [he] is not unduly abstruse for educated lay readers." Daniel Lang

Commentary 46:92 J1 '68 1900w

"In the first three essays of this collection Max Born, winner of a Nobel Prize in physics, recounts his own career and achievements, and describes his association with many other famous scientists. The remainder of the book reflects his chief preoccupation of recent years—the ethical and political problems generated by modern developments in science, especially by nuclear weapons. In each essay he examines some aspect of the problem from the physicist's standpoint, forming a cogent and influential argument for sanity in the face of unprecedented dangers. . . . The collection as a whole is disappointing because Mr. Born makes identical points in almost identical terms in different essays (see especially the first two essays of Part II), but the book will still be of much general interest." T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:2644 J1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Robert Berkqvist

N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 30 '68 260w

BORRAS, F. M. Maxim Gorky the writer; an interpretation. 195p $4.80 Oxford

891.7 Gorky, Maxim [67-104160]

The author "investigates the Weltanschauung that emerges from the corpus of Gorky's work. The book is divided into chapters according to the different genres Gorky used and shows how the principal short stories, novels, plays, and autobiographical pieces contributed to the development of his thinking about the individual and society, and the contradictions inherent in that polarity. . . . As a background to his study, Borrás gives a thumbnail sketch of the revolutionary movement in Russia from the 1860's to the first revolution in 1905." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The book deals very shortly with Gorky's life but in the early pages a biographical chronicle gives important milestones. . . . [There is] a list of principal works and their publication dates. The student of Russian literature may wish that Borrás had used supporting quotations from Gorky's works more liberally or had provided footnotes to identify more specifically the texts he cites in his interpretive study. An admirable work about Gorky's socio-philosophical views, more concise in this aspect than any of the standard works in English. . . . and a welcome addition to Gorky scholarship."

Choice 5:632 J1 '68 170w

"[A] most interesting appreciation . . . the product of a careful and sober scrutiny of Gorky's chief works. . . . The examination of Gorky's short stories concentrates on such examples as 'Old Izergil' and 'Chelkash,' offering cogent elucidations of the main issues and emphasizing the use which Gorky made of the device of symbolic characterization. Other stories are selected for examination. . . . Illustrations of Gorky's concern for such themes as the autonomy of the strong in their relations with the weak, the human desire for some sustaining illusion and the disintegration of the human personality in a bourgeois world. The novels and plays are discussed less fully. . . . Professor Borrás has done less than justice to his subject by selecting only three [plays] for examination, and only one, The Lower Depths, for close scrutiny. This is not to deny a sense of proportion to his book, for he quite rightly insists that Gorky is at his best as a memoirist and he devotes several pages of detailed analysis to [My] Childhood [BRD 1915]"

BORRAS, F. M.—Continued

 TLS p952 O 12 '67 950w

BORSCH, FREDERICK HOUK. The Son of Man in myth and history. 431p $8.50 Westminster press

232 Jesus Christ

67-25329

The author deals with two things which he suggests "are closely associated: the Son of man in myth, and the Son of man in history. The latter is Jesus who, according to Professor Borsch, consciously fulfilled the essential features of the myth. . . . [The first chapter] reviews the principal solutions which have been offered of the Son of man problem in the gospels. Regarding them all as unsatisfactory. Professor Borsch draws upon the findings of the history of religions school as providing a more fruitful approach." (TLS) Indexes of modern authors and of references.

"This is without question an extraordinarily scholarly volume. However, it expects far too much in the way of New Testament, patristic, and theological background for the college student. It is meticulously and voluminously footnoted with a massive and minute familiarity with contemporary bibliography, but, again, it is definitely not written on the undergraduate level."

Choice 5:636 J1 '68 60w

"As an attempt to buttress a particular view of the Son of man in the gospels, this book, for all its undoubted learning, is unlikely to convince any except those already predisposed to this view on other grounds. Its thesis is erected on very unstable foundations: the confused and tangled mass of ideas from many sources, which cannot be resolved into a mythological pattern sufficiently consistent to serve as a possible cause of inspiration for Jesus's own convictions about himself and his mission. There is, however, a credit side. The author's collection of a wealth of information on the Man mythology is in itself very valuable, and his discussions of the New Testament texts often contain insights and suggestions deserving of careful consideration."

TLS p139 F 8 '68 800w

BORTEN, HELEN. The jungle. unnp il $3.75; lib bdg $3.78 Harcourt

574.9 Tropics—Juvenile literature. Nature study—Juvenile literature 68-11496

This book portrays the cycle of day and night in a hot land near the equator. It describes the animals and plants, sounds and odors of the jungle world. "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"Vacillating between poetic description and nature information, this picture book generally combines the two successfully. Occasionally, however, an inappropriate metaphor jars rather than enhances. . . . The finely textured illustrations are attractive and express the jungle's mystery in full-page spreads of muted tans, browns, and greens. . . . Impressionistic rather than for instruction." Steve Rybicki

Library J 93:2110 My 15 '68 130w

"[This is] a handsome design portfolio of variations on the jungle motif. Graphically rewarding, it is not for children. The text is generalized, diffuse—and set in such monotonous blocks as to virtually assure its going unread."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p55 My 5 '68 50w

BOSWELL, HAZEL. French Canada: pictures and stories of old Quebec. rev ed 76p $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

917.14 Quebec (Province)—Juvenile literature 67-20029

The author discusses various aspects of French Canadian life, including "the annual Dog Derby, the manner in which French Canadians observe Sunday, the reason why some French Canadians have Scottish names, and the arts of spinning, weaving, and hooking rugs." (Horn Bk) For original edition see BRD 1938. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"A child who remembers Expo with pleasure might enjoy this nostalgic, quaintly illustrated record of a Quebec that has almost disappeared. All ages." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:185 N 10 '67 30w

Horn Bk 43:761 D '67 80w

"The accounts are simple and rather endearing, and each is accompanied by a full-page, softly-colored illustration in which the author has 'tried to follow the type of drawing and design that the French-Canadian women make for their hooked rugs and other work.' These illustrations give the little book its distinction. Apparently only slightly changed from its original 1933 edition, this is a welcome re-issue in the all-too-barren field of juvenile Canadiana." Donald Putnam

Library J 92:3845 O 15 '67 110w

BOTTING, DOUGLAS. One chilly Siberian morning; phot. by John Bayliss and Douglas Botting; drawings by Leslie W. Botting. 192p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

915.7 Siberia—Description and travel 67-14415

This travelogue gives the reader "glimpses of the most remote . . . places in Siberia, Central Asia, and the Caucasus, of permafrozen Yakutsk, Chukotka and Kolyma, of Bratsk, Baku, and Yerevan, of tundra, taiga, desert, and mountain." (Library J)

"Despite some painful lapses, the editorial 'we' (presumably the author and his photographer partner) emerges as intelligent, sensitive, and perceptive. And so is the book, illustrations and all. A particular mention should be made of the charming ink drawings. . . . Poignantly and lyrically written, not too liberal with its facts, this stands out in the crowd of hasty travelogues and will be a welcome addition to Russica shelves and a boon to armchair travelers. Wholeheartedly recommended as suitable for libraries of all types and sizes." Oleg Ivsky

Library J 92:1833 My 1 '68 200w

"[The book] is well and humorously written. . . . [The author] and his Russian-speaking companion John Bayliss are certainly the only Englishmen known to have been to the Kolyma river during this century. The book tails off rather badly with a perfunctory and uninteresting description of a visit to Central Asia; but taken as a whole it makes good reading and the photographs are exceptionally good."

TLS p319 Ap 14 '66 150w

BOTTOMORE, T. B. Critics of society; radical thought in North America. 150p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

309.17 Radicals and radicalism. U.S.—Social conditions 67-19181

Talks, given by the author on the radio and published in 1966 by the Canadian Broadcasting System under the title Social Criticism in North America, have been revised and expanded to produce this "survey of North American social criticism [concerned with the relationship between intellectual dissent and theories of society]. . . . He believes a new social theory to replace those developed in the 19th Century is needed to give both impetus and meaning to current dissent." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Few books of 150 pages contain as much information and arresting interpretative insights as does this one. It . . . brilliantly summarizes a century of North American social dissent. Its key feature is continual reference of new ideas to changing economic and social realities presented as the source and context of ideologies. Like Myrdal a generation ago, Bottomore doubtless owes to his foreign origin much of his fresh insights about the American experience. . . . A chapter is devoted to recent Canadian dissent: chiefly Social Credit, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, and nationalism in French Canada. Canada seems inadequately comprehended, almost an afterthought. . . . With respect to the U.S., Bottomore's treatment before World War II is both original and detached. But it is less successful for the last generation. . . . Nonetheless, few other works so successfully convey to the general reader a clear sense of 'the present as history.'"

Choice 5:1333 D '68 260w

Reviewed by Staughton Lynd
 Commonweal 88:209 My 3 '68 1100w

"This 'tentative essay in the interpretation of radical social thought' can also be read as a call for a new theory of society which could unify various special interest groups and bring about solutions to the problems of war, bureaucracy, social and economic inequality, and individual alienation. . . . An informative essay on Canadian radical opinion and a general bibliography add to the value of Mr. Bottomore's intelligent interpretation. Highly recommended to academic and public libraries." Janet Freedman

Library J 93:765 F 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2740 J1 '68 150w [YA]

Reviewed by Christopher Lasch

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 S 12 '68 1700w

"The restrictions of radio still seem to influence [the author's] style and approach. . . . [Bottomore] tends to give far too much importance to academic thinkers and the influence of universities. . . . The real contemporary radical movement has come, as it should, from the grass-roots—from men like Dr. King and Malcolm X, who were drawing together towards a common philosophy shortly before the latter's death (Professor Bottomore misses this very important point). . . . His selected bibliography is loaded with academic white thinkers. . . . The fact that Professor Bottomore is not a very good guide in the contemporary deep waters should not blind us, however, to the merits of his book in tracing the fledgeling failures of the past."

TLS p340 Ap 4 '68 800w

BOUDAILLE, GEORGES, jt. auth. Picasso: the blue and rose periods. See Daix, P.

BOUDET, J., ed. Jerusalem; a history; foreword by E. O. James. 294p il col il $25 Putnam

933 Jerusalem—History. Jerusalem—Description—Views 67-17933

The story of the city is "outlined from the earliest settlement of the Semitic invaders round about 3000 B.C. to the arrival of the British forces under Allenby on December 9th 1917 and the visit of Pope Paul VI on January 4th 1964." (Foreword)

"This lavishly illustrated work, remarkable for its beautiful photogravure and detail, will surely become a collector's piece. But history has us all by the throat, and books can be overtaken by events no less than nations and armies. . . . Boudet's work bears the nihil obstat of a Roman Catholic priest and the imprimatur of a high dignitary of the Cathedral of Westminster dated March 1, 1967, but . . . if the history of Jerusalem goes back five thousand years, the decisive phase of that history as far as we now are concerned has occurred in the five months since the war of June 1967."

Had Dr. Boudet been able to do justice to the events of the last five months, and had he drawn out their full implications, it may be doubted whether the imprimatur would have been forthcoming at all. . . . The religious status quo reflected in these pages has now been rudely and drastically revised—of that there can be no doubt." Harold Fisch

Commentary 45:86 F '68 1650w

"In every pictorial history the text is subordinate to the pictures. This is true in this book. The artists concern themselves mainly with the religious history of the city. . . . [The] pictorial documentation concentrates on the history of Jerusalem of the Spirit—the city of the Temple, the Holy Sepulchre, and the Dome of the Rock. As a history of the Holy City of Jerusalem . . . [this is] a well-written, objective, and beautiful book. Whatever the deficiencies of the text, the pictures are excellent and the book is highly recommended." David Shavit

Library J 92:4410 D 1 '67 180w

BOUDIN, JEAN. Miranda's music, by Jean Boudin and Lillian Morrison; drawings by Helen Webber. 69p $3.75 Crowell

811 68-21596

"A book of poems by two women who have chosen here to publish as one. [Title index.] Age twelve and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Fifty short poems, geared in style and mood to today's adolescent readers. Humor, emotion, wisdom and insight are conveyed in striking imagery and sensitive word selection. . . . These poems should sing out to young people—they are right on key." Doris Solomon

Library J 93:3976 O 15 '68 100w

"[These writers] have found a haunting illustrator in Helen Webber. . . . Here and there the problem looms of where spontaneity ends and art begins. There is the danger of the facile, too great a reliance on the lucky accident, words put on a roulette wheel coming out surprising, brilliant, but not always true, the charm of a clerihow not of a true poem. Often the wry humor, sharp bright images, tenderness add up to a poem like a bubble, as iridescent, and more lasting. Still, I am not quite convinced. I carp a little. It looks so easy and does not nourish. I ask for a rock of a poem to rest on." May Sarton

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 29 '68 140w

BOULBY, MARK. Hermann Hesse: his mind and art. 338p $8.75 Cornell univ. press

833 Hesse, Hermann 67-13547

This study analyzes Hesse's "major novels, comments on many of his short stories and novellas, and takes into account his critical and autobiographical writings. Drawing upon recently published sources not available to previous Hesse scholars, Professor Boulby discusses . . . the early novels Peter Camenzind and Beneath the Wheel [BRD 1963] and uses them in working toward a new understanding of the later works. . . . [The author examines] Hesse's imagery and language, [and finds] complex yet coherent thematic and symbolic patterns, which he links to the emotional and spiritual conflicts at the core of the novels." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Boulby devotes a fourth of his book to Hesse's early novels and then takes up the major novels. It is unfortunate that he is forced to go over the same ground which [Theodore] Ziolkowski [The Novels of Hermann Hesse, BRD 1967] has already plowed and that with equal necessity he comes to many similar conclusions. . . . The basic difference between Ziolkowski and Boulby is that Boulby denies all development in Hesse where Ziolkowski sees several distinct shifts in style and attitude. The latter view seems more convincing. Though Boulby's book is neither as sweeping nor as elegant as Ziolkowski's, it is written with intuition and insight and should especially appeal to the American undergraduate and graduate reader of Hesse."

Choice 5:1134 N '68 240w

"An important addition to this literature and, in view of Hesse's stature as a writer, will be a necessary purchase for German literature collections in academic and large public libraries." E. G. H. Lenel

Library J 92:3423 O 1 '67 150w

BOULEZ, PIERRE. Notes of an apprenticeship; texts coll. and presented by Paule Thévenin; tr. from the French by Herbert Weinstock. 398p $8.95 Knopf

780.9 Music—History and criticism 67-18625

This work by the French composer and conductor was originally published in 1966 called Relevés d'apprenti. It is an anthology of articles published between 1948 and 1962. Among the composers discussed are Debussy, Ravel, Messaien, Berg, Schoenberg, Webern and Cage.

Reviewed by Martin Mayer

Book World p6 O 1 '68 330w

"[This book] is brilliant, tough, and illuminating, written by one of the leading musicians of our time. This composer has definite opinions which he states with no concessions to the fuzzy-minded or musically illiterate. The vocabulary and aural memory of the reader and a willingness to reread carefully are here even more indispensable to full understanding than in the basic writings of Stravinsky, whose works . . . Mr. Boulez analyzes with perception. . . . [The editing and translation] are, insofar as Mr. Boulez's original permits, elegant. . . . This reviewer admires Mr. Boulez's alive mind with his insights into aleatory music . . . and though he cavils at the value judgments he finds in the work, it is required reading for anyone who wishes to understand what music is all about today. The book is bound to become a classic. Highly recommended." Baird Hastings

Library J 93:3006 S 1 '68 350w

BOULEZ, PIERRE—Continued

"Boulez, now forty-three, is unquestionably ■ genius figure and typically ■ French one. . . . [This book is] written as he speaks, with brio and with a vast repertory of allusions. In French it is not easy to make out, because the vocabulary is over-replete with technical terms from mathematics (which Boulez seems fairly familiar with), from philosophy (less confidently used), from musical analysis (where he is both precise and inventive), and from the slang of intellectual Paris. . . . The translation, though obviously made with care, is in the long run no less labored than the composer's own prose and often just as hard to follow. The pieces of high technical interest are among the earliest, from the years of his twenties, when he was building a method and formulating principles." Virgil Thomson

N Y Rev of Books 11:56 S 26 '68 1750w

"Boulez's prose is, by English-language standards (perhaps by any standards), murky and obscure. An underlying logic and clarity of thought is expressed in a tortured language full of hints, asides, indirections, obscure similes, oblique metaphors and subtle references. . . . Stimulating as many of the ideas in this book remain, they must be understood in sum as less an exposition of modern music or even of one composer's weltanschauung than as a documentary history of an era. . . . [However, the] translation betrays little knowledge of the music of the 20th century, scarcely a rudimentary familiarity with the last 20 years, a very poor grasp of terminology, no ability whatever to cope with the fluorescences of Boulez's style and indeed only ■ very nodding acquaintance with the French language." Eric Salzman

N Y Times Bk ■ p8 O 27 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Robert Jacobson
Sat R 51:43 D 21 '68 200w

BOULTWOOD, ALBAN. Into His splendid light; with a foreword by Eugene J. McCarthy. 238p $4.95 Sheed

242.3 Meditations 68-13843

The Benedictine Prior of St. Anselm's Abbey in Washington, D.C., "has written this series of reflections inspired by the year's liturgy and addressed to ordinary men and women in the post-Vatican II Church. His preoccupation is with the inner realities of the spiritual life, rather than with the institutional Church or with social action, although he does not decry the importance of externals." (Library J)

"His lack of knowledge of the ways of the world in no way hinders the writer, nor makes his reflections less interesting and helpful to the layman. What he presents is not a 'how to do it' spirituality but an unveiling of basic attitudes that characterize sound persons and indicate healthy Christians. . . . Life, inspired new life, is centered on relationship; and Fr. Boulwood puts the responsibility of man's personal relationship with life where it ultimately belongs: in the person himself. Yet he brings out the balance between the person and the community. . . . [His tone] makes reading Fr. Boulwood's reflections a prayerful experience of open-minded and sincere sharing." J. W. Hough

America 118:586 Ap 27 '68 430w

"Based upon the liturgical year and its primary Masses, these meditations are a little old-fashioned since the tightly knit liturgy has now lost its force in the use of different readings for epistle and gospel. Although Father Boulwood is at his best in his luminous contemplation of the Christmas, Epiphany, and Pascal mysteries, he also can be practical and forthright. . . . This is not a revolutionary book and it is more devotional than theological, but it will find a perennial audience." Genevieve Casey

Library J 93:83 Ja 1 '68 120w

BOUQUET, A. C. European brasses; with an introd. and notes by A. C. Bouquet in collaboration with Michael Waring. 78p pl $28.50 Praeger

739 Brasses [67-113539]

"This book contains reproductions of 32 brasses with the necessary information about the monument and the deceased. Preceding the plates, Mr. Bouquet, a member of the Monumental Brass Society, gives an . . . introduction on the subject of brasses and the incidents which were a combination of stone and brass. [The] plates are arranged chronologically. . . . The geographical spread is half English and half from continental Europe." (Library J)

"This is a beautiful book which may be a problem for the librarian since it is about 20" x 14" and bound in white, with a design of a brass stamped in gold. Title, author's name and blurb are printed in black on an acetate cover. The life-span of such a cover is problematical. Recommended for larger libraries." Julia Sabine
Library J 93:1131 Mr 15 '68 300w

"Dr. Bouquet's text is a model of sanity. He gives us, straightaway, the basic facts; . . . how medieval brass, or latten, was made; its chemical composition; the rise and decline of the art from the 12th to 16th centuries; the possibilities of its origins either in stone engraving or enamel work. [The rubbings, however,] are not so splendid as one might have wished. . . . [Since] the illustrations have been reproduced at a fifth of their original size, the fine detail—the florid decoration, the saints in their niches, the delicate calligraphy—tends to clot in reproduction. . . . The brief squibs accompanying the plates carry the known facts about the deceased. They seem to have been compiled with tender, loving care. In the end, one becomes as fond of Dr. Bouquet as of the departed souls under his charge." J. R. Mellow
N Y Times Bk R p7 F 18 '68 900w

New Yorker 44:176 My 18 '68 200w

BOURDEAUX, MICHAEL. Religious ferment in Russia; Protestant opposition to Soviet religious policy. 255p $8.95 St Martins

286 Baptists. Russia—Church history. Church and state in Russia [68-15656]

This study concentrates on the "present unrest within the Baptist Community caused by the increasing pressure exercised by the Soviet State against these Christians. . . . [The author concludes] that the Soviet Government is steadily mounting its offensive against all who believe in God and that the recent legislation after Khrushchev's fall makes it increasingly difficult for Christians to avoid violation of one or another of the new laws." (TLS) Bibliography.

"An enquiry into the present state of religion in the Soviet Union . . . [by an Episcopalian priest who] discovered a vitality in the Russian Baptist Church, the communion on which he mainly dwells in this book. Bourdeaux also found significant stirrings among the Orthodox and Catholics. Makes for heavy reading at times." V. S. Kearney

America 118:610 My 4 '68 100w

"[This study] contains translations of some valuable and illuminating documents. . . . [Since 1954 the numbers of Baptists] fell partly because of renewed persecution; but still more because of schism consequent on persecution. The secular authorities compelled the general council of the Baptist church to avoid evangelism, and dissuade young persons from being baptised. Hence protests and divisions; and the book gives much fascinating and pathetic, though tantalising, evidence about the protestants and their fate. It was a protest against the complaisance or weakness of church authorities before the requirements of an atheist state."

Economist 226:55 F 24 '68 400w

"[An] excellently documented and up to date [book, supplying] carefully verified facts mostly taken from the Communist press in support of the conclusions."

TLS p234 Mr 7 '68 140w

BOURKE, VERNON J. History of ethics. 432p $6.95 Doubleday

170 Ethics—History 67-19089

A professor at St. Louis University summarizes the themes of thinkers "on the subject of right and wrong. After . . . surveying Graeco-Roman, patristic and medieval, early modern and modern views, he outlines [these contemporary viewpoints] . . . classified as axiological, self-realizing and utilitarian, naturalistic, analytic, and existential and phenomenological." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"One of America's leading Thomistic scholars presents a history of Western ethics from its beginnings. The erudition he manifests is not, however, at all matched here by the literary quality of his exposition, which is rather flat. [R.] Tsanoff's The Moral Ideals of Our Civilization [BRD 1942] is far better in this respect; it is also twice as long and covers the major thinkers in much greater depth, besides offering pungent criticisms of them. Bourke, on the contrary, carefully avoids the role of critic. His treatment of medieval Jewish and Moslem ethics and of contemporary ethicists does fill in gaps in Tsanoff's work. The latter remains the standard work, but larger libraries will need Bourke as a very useful supplement to Tsanoff. Each author treats a number of lesser moralists whom the other does not mention."

Choice 5:1140 N '68 110w

Christian Century 85:344 Je 26 '68 40w

"An important, perhaps even a definitive, book. . . . Individuals are discussed sequentially and the thought of each is compassed into a brief and succinct description of both his writings and the central ideas of his ethic. . . . In the chapter of Humanist Ethics in the Renaissance, for example some fifty men are mentioned in nineteen pages. . . . This means that trends, movements, influences of one school upon another, and cultural factors that affect a particular ethic, while not ignored, are clearly not given much attention. . . . A bit more specific and articulate analysis could improve the narrative. . . . Despite these limitations this is a clear and comprehensive treatment. [which] will surely be of value, both in the classroom and beyond." E. L. Long

Commonweal 89:229 N 8 '68 1150w

"[Bourke] consciously excludes Oriental philosophy, but covers Jewish and Moslem ethics in the Middle Ages in some detail. . . . He competently organizes and summarizes the major themes of many seminal thinkers . . . with eminent clarity and judicious apportionment of space." William Gerber

Library J 93:1635 Ap 15 '68 140w

BOURNE, K., ed. Studies in international history; essays presented to W. Norton Medlicott; ed. by K. Bourne and D. C. Watt. (Archon bk) new ed 446p $12 Shoe String

909.8 History, Modern. Medlicott, William Norton 67-99392

This volume consists of "twenty-one essays presented as a festschrift to Medlicott on his retirement as Professor of International History (University of London). The essays, by former colleagues and students . . . focus on a wide variety of topics from 19th- and 20th century diplomatic history. Herbert Butterfield, Llewellyn Woodward, Gordon Craig, and John Hawgood are among the . . . contributors." (Choice)

"The scope of talent, interest and topic represented . . . apparently is intended to reflect the expansive talent and scope of Medlicott. The result, however, is a collection of essays that give the volume little sense of uniform theme. Students of diplomatic history, nonetheless, will profit from these frequently incisive and notably scholarly articles. Most of the articles are thoroughly documented research pieces, and are not otherwise available. A more descriptive title for this collection might be: Studies in Modern European Diplomatic History."

Choice 5:1020 O '68 160w

"On a variety of subjects—Turkey during the first world war, economic warfare during the first world war, the origin of the mandate system and of the League, the end of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, South African attitudes on the eve of the second world war, German economic policy towards France during the second world war—[the essays] contribute to the steady revision of received views on contemporary and near-contemporary developments of which the non-professional reader needs to be kept informed. . . . The volume opens with two essays on the development of historiography . . . which form an appropriate tribute to Professor Medlicott's work in the interests of the historical profession over many years, and closes with a list of his published writings."

Economist 226:37 Ja 6 '68 390w

Reviewed by John Vincent

New Statesman 74:231 Ag 25 '67 500w

BOURNE, KENNETH. Britain and the balance of power in North America, 1815-1908. 439p maps $9.50 Univ. of Calif. press

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Great Britain 67-26632

This study "concentrates on the 'problems raised by thinking about and planning for the possibility of a future war with the United States, and their general influence upon official British policy towards the United States' in three periods of crisis in Anglo-American relations: the aftermath of the War of 1812; during the Civil War and the decades immediately preceding it; and the rest of the 19th and early 20th centuries when the danger of war between the two countries became increasingly remote." (Choice) Index,

"Bourne, a historian at the London School of Economics, relies on more traditional histories of Anglo-American and Anglo-Canadian relations for much of his factual framework, but his approach is new and his archival research on both sides of the Atlantic is extensive. This clearly written and fully documented book is from a British perspective, but it also presents new insights into British defense policy in Canada and reveals much of American war planning. Of special note is his discussion of Captain Mahan's role in American war planning in the 1890's where Bourne discloses for the first time the nature of Mahan's plan. . . . A highly recommended book with excellent foldaway maps."

Choice 5:660 J1 '68 210w

"While Bourne's central theme is not startling the reminder that military men and some politicians long considered the United States a nation of 'Vulgar minded Bullies' . . . is salutary. Although the discussion of 'defense policy after the War of 1812 is tedious, Bourne provides valuable information on the 1840s and the Civil War period. . . . Equally useful is [his] examination of the 'conscious inauguration of a policy of colonial desertion' under Gladstone, as well as an analysis of the discussions which produced official recognition of the inevitable early in this century. Several qualifications remain to be made. First, when Bourne speaks of a balance of power, he seldom means a multi-national system. . . . Second, the reader must remember that . . . this book rests largely on research in military archives. . . . Finally, Bourne perhaps pays insufficient attention to larger problems of imperial defense and to the temperature of Anglo-American relations at times of deep military concern. . . . Despite these caveats, both Canadian and American historians, and students of English defense policy as well, will find this book useful and interesting." Bradford Perkins

J Am Hist 55:124 Je '68 480w

"British, Canadian and American archives have revealed the extent and complexity of [Dr. Bourne's] subject and the gravity with which each power regarded the other's intentions. In some respects, though, Dr. Bourne is far too fastidious a scholar to seek to create such an impression; his account possesses a rich vein of comedy. . . . Given the scope and extent of Dr. Bourne's study it can hardly be considered a criticism to suggest that some aspects appear more fully explored than others . . . But additional studies would only strengthen and underline the importance of Dr. Bourne's contribution, and indicate the fashion in which the limitations and responsibilities of great power were recognized, sometimes by the narrowest of margins, by nineteenth-century British politicians."

TLS p1255 D 28 '67 800w

BOWEN, ELIZABETH. Eva Trout; or changing scenes. 302p $5.95 Knopf

68-12685

At twenty-five Eva "is an heiress. Her mother died in a plane crash; her father, a homosexual tycoon, was a suicide. Her guardian [Constantine] was her father's partner in business and in bed." (Time) "For nearly the entire length of the novel, [Eva] is remote in a dream world. . . . Fantasy succeeds fantasy—home, child, marriage. Only once in a while does Eva come near to waking. But in the meantime she 'begets trouble' wherever she finds herself. . . . Inarticulate Eva adopts the deaf-mute Jeremy; constantly in the background are letters that are never delivered; unpunctuated telegrams liable to misinterpretation; Eva's collection of tape-recorders and radios." (Christian Science Monitor)

"There is a chilly and quite exhilarating supremacy of words to people in Eva Trout. As the scenes of action dominate the action itself, varying modes of speech are more noticeable than the common humanity of those who speak.

BOWEN, ELIZABETH—Continued

Eva Trout's isolation from others is demonstrated by her monstrous English. . . . The overriding interest in the arrangement of words is more poetic than novelistic. . . . One moves through elaborate syntactical mazes, to arrive repeatedly at the solid, blatant, ludicrous bulk of Eva. . . . This is writing prose, like Auden's writing poetry, to play an intricate word game." Mary Ellmann

Atlantic 222:124 N '68 1650w

Reviewed by T. O'Hara

Best Sell 28:392 D 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by Patrick Crutwell

Book World p19 N 24 '68 600w

"There is something about Eva that suggests one of Henry Moore's monumental women, a hugeness, a strength (like a 'dedicated discus thrower'), and a rooted stability combined with the instinctive wisdom of an E. M. Forster character. But she is far more complex. Instinct is not always wise. . . . Since Elizabeth Bowen is the author, much of the pull of 'Eva Trout' lies in its superb telling. There is a perception in Miss Bowen akin to Virginia Woolf's, a facility for writing as if with a skin too few. It shows in voices, appearances, concepts, and in wit." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p7 O 24 '68 900w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:159 N '68 360w

Reviewed by Patricia Stiles

Library J 93:4164 N 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by R. K. Morris

Nation 207:538 N 18 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi

N Y Rev of Books 11:40 Ja 2 '69 360w

"Different from earlier Bowen novels, which owed something to the drama in their construction, [this] moves with the flickering rapidity of the movie camera. . . . A certain hallucinatory aura, more common to Miss Bowen's short stories than to her novels, rises from its pages. . . . A virtuoso balancing act between the comic and the intense, the novel is uneven. In one chapter, Iseult sits down at her desk and types out everything she thinks. The chapter is brilliant. Another chapter, a jab at Midwestern vulgarity, seems to me completely mistaken. An air of the quixotic hangs over the work as a whole, as if a master architect had added a stained-glass window or two not quite in keeping with the original plan." Howard Moss

N Y Times Bk R p1 O 13 '68 1700w

Reviewed by Walter Guzzardi

Sat R 51:53 D 7 '68 300w

Time 92:102 N 1 '68 280w

BOWERS, RAYMOND V., ed. Studies on behavior in organizations; a research symposium [papers presented at a Conf. on behavior in organizations; sponsored by the Air force office of scientific res. and the Social science res. inst. Univ. of Ga] with a foreword by Charles E. Hutchinson. 364p $8 Univ. of Ga. press

658 Management. Sociology

65-28462

"This symposium provides a utilitarian approach to the subject of basic research in the area of organizational effectiveness and its results emphasize the necessity of understanding behavioral patterns in organizations. Included are reports on the results of completed work and discussions on the problems of conceptualization or method. The editor has arranged the chapters into three categories: conceptual essays, empirical studies (substantive or methodological), and computer-simulation experiments." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"This is a stimulating book. . . . Many problems pertaining to the support of basic social science research by mission-oriented government agencies have yet to be solved, but this book provides evidence that an ultimately 'applied' goal does not preclude theoretical significance." G. M. Swatez

Am Soc R 31:869 D '66 750w

"The research begins with a variety of perspectives, including the psychological, the social-psychological, and the sociological. The subject matter includes the individual, the group, and the organizational level of analysis. Since it is the work of many authors from diverse fields, both the writing styles and the conceptual approaches vary. This variation detracts from the value of the volume, since Bowers has done relatively little to pull the components together. Some papers appear to occupy more space than is merited, while others are not given sufficient space for clear development. As an indicator of both the problems and new directions for research, it is a useful book. As an overview of the field, it is not."

Choice 3:970 D '66 150w

BOWIE, WALTER RUSSELL. Where you find God. 116p $3.95 Harper

231 God

68-11727

In this examination of man's search for a conception of God, an Episcopalian minister and lecturer at the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Alexandria, Virginia suggests that it is in the service of others "that we find, and are found by, God." (p. 116) Included in this book are chapters entitled "'God in the Intensity of Life'; 'Can Life Really be 'Religionless?' a consideration of the thought and spirit of Dietrich Bonhoeffer; 'The Approach to God through Jesus'; 'The Human and the Divine'; and 'The Experienced Reality.'" (Publisher's note)

"A safe and sane guide to the ways of discerning God's presence, this book takes a middle course between radical religionlessness and idle talk about the availability of God. Because of its sense of moderation it will appeal more to mature people for whom belief in God and the experience of his presence are realities that have become ill defined. There is little here for those who are starting from scratch, as it were, or for rebels or the disenchanters."

Christian Century 85:24 Ja 3 '68 80w

"[The author] does not defend the perpetrators of the Puritan God-image, nor does he condemn the rejection of such a God by modern thinkers. He does ask: 'What shall we put in its place?' He discusses evil and good, calamity and miracles, and the misinterpretation of the works of Dietrich Bonhoeffer. . . . Exceptionally well written. Recommended for all interested readers. Everyone who reads in this area will find the book of service. It really has no limits of usefulness." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:4506 D 15 '67 130w

BOWLES, PAUL, ed. & tr. Love with a few hairs. See Mrabet, M.

BOWMAN, WILLIAM J. Graphic communication. 210p il $9.95 Wiley

760 Graphic arts. Communication 67-29931

"This book integrates different fields of graphic practice . . . by identifying the range of ideas which can be visually presented, describing the elements of visual language, offering a design methodology to translate ideas into visual statements, and . . . including an organized collection of design models which serves as working library of ideas in industrial or classroom situations." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A thorough and clearly organized volume that recommends itself highly for college libraries of art and design, engineering, the sciences. . . . [This unique book] is a substantial antidote to 'McLuhanism' and a hopeful sign for the solution of the obfuscation which confronts us from highway interchanges to household appliance manuals. . . . The right picture is still worth a thousand words."

Choice 5:763 S '68 80w

"Many different types of subject matter and many kinds of design and artwork are used in illustrating ways of presenting information visually in simplified form. . . . Extremely useful are different sorts of cutaway and sectional representations, both in detail and in simplified diagrams. . . . Bowman is obviously a talented and knowledgeable graphic artist, and on the whole the profuse illustrations in his book are excellent in design and elegant in their illustration of points made in the text. . . . The pencil renderings are slightly fuzzy and lack contrast, and I hope prospective buyers will . . . not put it back on the shelf because of this shortcoming." F. A. M. Watkins

Science 160:660 My 10 '68 280w

BOWRA, C. M. Memories, 1898-1939. 369p pl $7.95 Harvard univ. press
B or 92 67-27994
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones
Book World p8 Ja 14 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Stephen Spender
N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 28 '68 2200w
New Yorker 43:115 Ja 20 '68 150w

Reviewed by John Calam
Sat R 51:69 Ja 20 '68 100w
Va Q R 44:lxv spring '68 200w

BOWRA, SIR MAURICE. See Bowra, C. M.

BOYARSKY, BILL. The rise of Ronald Reagan. 269p pl $5.95 Random house
B or 92 Reagan, Ronald 68-18261

A biography of the present governor of California which "covers his early radical days (he led his own campus revolt), his film career, his debut as a union leader in the Screen Actors Guild, and tells how he ran [his] political campaign." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 5:1218 N '68 40w

"Because of his present prominence and possible greater share in the national spotlight this timely and informative account of Ronald Reagan, liberal turned conservative, is recommended." W. C. Kiesel

Library J 93:2010 My 15 '68 230w

"Boyersky's study of the California governor is liberal in perspective and hostile in tone, but it is in no sense a hatchet-job. The book provides a fair and orderly account of Reagan's activities from childhood to statehouse. [He] includes some behind-the-scenes political vignettes which have not previously appeared in book form. . . . If one does not share the liberal mind-set, however, there is little in the story that is unflattering to the governor." M. S. Evans

Nat R 20:702 Jl 16 '68 1800w

"Boyersky, who has covered California politics for a national wire service since 1960, sees Ronald Reagan as part of a new phenomenon, a growing reaction that [he] fears may engulf both California and the nation. . . . As his biography of Reagan proceeds, the idea of a real personality attenuates. Reagan the man becomes ethereal and what remains is Reagan the symbol, neither hero nor demon but simply a reflection of the fears and phantasms of little men." W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk R p10 My 19 '68 550w

Reviewed by Leo Katcher
Sat R 51:27 Je 29 '68 500w

BOYD, JAMES. Above the law. 337p $5.95 New Am. lib.

B or 92 Dodd, Thomas Joseph. Corruption (in politics) 68-17056

The author, former administrative assistant to Senator Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut, describes the events which led to Senator Dodd's being censured by the Senate for financial misconduct. Index.

"This book by [Dodd's] chief pursuer . . . reeks with a malice and a venom quite without parallel. . . . [It] can be read as a melodramatic morality play, and, of course, as another go in James Boyd's unsleeping vendetta against Thomas Dodd. But most of all it is an amazing self-revelation of James Boyd himself. . . . And, ironically, while it is not likely to excuse Dodd from his trespasses it is very likely to make him to many an incomparably nobler man than his accuser could ever be." W. S. White

Book World p8 Je 23 '68 500w

"More alarming [than Senator Dodd's misbehavior] is the Senate's studied reluctance to hose down its entire stable. If 'Above the Law' does nothing more than burn this distressing fact into public thinking, it will be a success. . . . Only the completely cynical can read Mr. Boyd's book without mounting distress. . . . With the exception of Jack Anderson and Drew Pearson, who published dozens of columns based on information Mr. Boyd gave them, the press doesn't smell too sweet either. . . . [This book] gives a much more elaborate and cohesive account of the Dodd affair than did the Pearson-Anderson columns, or even the Senate investigation." C. R. Sheldon

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 1 '68 650w

"James Boyd's account of the exposure and censure of [Senator Dodd] has the suspense and intrigue of a good political novel, while his plea for reform of Congressional ethics and his portrait of an able man gone wrong make it more than just an enjoyable time killer. This readable book is highly recommended for most libraries." David Cooley

Library J 93:1004 Mr 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by F. J. Donner
Nation 207:278 S 23 '68 1500w

"Boyd's book reveals writing skill, humor, and an unreciprocated exercise of fairness. . . . This detachment raises what would have been an interesting report on a dishonest senator into a thoughtful and literate account of a contemporary tragedy. . . . It has also given us some delightful scenes. . . . Boyd's observations on how the ethical policemen of the Senate reversed the roles of accuser and accused in order to keep themselves unsullied should be read by all students of government. . . . [However] it's unfortunate that [Boyd] didn't spend more time on Dodd the Anti-Communist Crusader, since that role has certainly helped preserve Dodd the Crook." Robert Yoakum

New Repub 158:23 F 10 '68 3700w

Reviewed by W. V. Shannon
N Y Times Bk R p12 Mr 31 '68 850w

"[This] tale has a bit of everything. It is first and foremost a morality play that asks large questions about our time and our institutions. On another level it is a psychological drama; on still another—especially in the account of the purloining of Dodd's files—it is a cloak-and-dagger thriller. Added to all this is the brooding presence of Dodd himself, a character larger than fiction." F. J. Cook

Sat R 51:31 Mr 16 '68 1450w

BOYD, MALCOLM. Malcolm Boyd's Book of days. 215p $4.95 Random house 818 68-14524

In this book the author, an Episcopal priest "is concerned not with traditional religious problems, but with secular realities—Vietnam, Black Revolution, sexual freedom, worldly hypocrisy, anti-Semitism, and the Underground Church." (Publisher's note)

"[These] 'maddeningly relevant' observations by Father Boyd and others raise a lot of the right questions about the central question: 'Where is religion taking us?' . . . Father Boyd is not primarily a theologian, and it would be a mistake to read him for doctrine. He does not question the fundamental workability of orthodox tenets. His contribution is not a radical new theology, but a radical insistence that religion has no sacred right to separation from daily life and no right to exist unless it relates practically to human needs." S. P.

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 27 '68 500w

"Rev. Boyd seems to have his eye on the groovy Mod theologians and hippie curates and making Time magazine again, not on the Infinite." James Wade

Critic 27:93 O '68 360w

"Father Boyd's previous books, written in a thoughts-at-random style, are not nearly so enlightening as this one. Where they were disjointed, this one is unified. Here the reader learns more about the man than about his works, more about 'why' than about 'where.' This book is, at last, what the public needs to answer the unasked questions, to explain the man who often comes off poorly in the press and to show us all what Father Boyd means when he says, 'The beginning of Charity: There's no "them".' . . . Highly recommended for adult library collections." E. F. Waterman

Library J 93:1487 Ap 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 93:4429 N 15 '68 70w [YA]

"Among the most provocative selections are sections of letters to Father Boyd. Much of the material is taken from Father Boyd's own books. . . . Some of it is trite rather than inspirational; much of it is self-conscious and even vain. Yet even here there is a refreshing spiritual honesty." E. B. Fiske

N Y Times Bk R p34 Jl 28 '68 470w

BOYD, MILDRED. The silent cities. 160p il $3.50 Criterion bks.

913.03 Cities and towns, Ruined, extinct, etc.—Juvenile literature 66-23736

Description: "of the archaeological discovery of civilizations that had been lost for ages, those of the Indus Valley, the sacred city of the Aten, the land of Hattii, the great city Shang, . . . the lost people who built Zimbabwe in Africa, and the amazing Peruvian-Andes cities of the Incas." (Best Sell) "Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"The photographic plates are few, but a bibliography and Index are helpful. An introductory book to ancient history and pre-history. . . . Junior high and up."

Best Sell 27:182 Ag 1 '67 80w [YA]

"This is such an excellent book, broad in scope yet never superficial, factual and clearly written that one regrets the minor flaws. Miss Boyd has chosen her cities well, since this is a topic which has been written to death, and she has done a better job than most of the others. Only Tel Amarna has received excessive coverage elsewhere. The opening selection about the Indus valley ruins is the best. She includes ecological facts to explain the decline of this and other civilizations. It is only in attempting to simplify that she sometimes states as an accepted fact one that is still debatable. The photos further amplify the text. Archaeology buffs will love it." Edith Crawford
Library J 92:1323 Mr 15 '67 100w

BOYER, DAVID. The sidelong glances of a pigeon kicker. 119p $3.95 Viking

68-16630

"Jonathan is a cab driver by whimsical inclination rather than by grim necessity. . . . At the age of twenty-four, [he] has exemplary credentials. He comes of socially correct parents (well, at least one of them is his parent), has graduated from college, and associates with peers who are not really prime candidates for kookhood. He is also the possessor of an undemanding and affluent mistress. And yet it all seems unblackly ludicrous to him; people seem to be cruelly self-serving—funny, but self-serving. But if they are all mad, what does that make him?" (Publisher's note)

"Jonathan's whole story is a swift and never-ending reel of sense impressions. From his taxi-route to his friends, to his mother's bad marriage. From his illegitimate birth to his immoral or amoral behaviour,—everything seems a sour jest. . . . Mr. Boyer's first novel has some worth. The style is simple, the thought swift. One wishes the sense of sarcasm so well displayed in certain conversations and incidents (like the urination scene) had been more fully exploited. The parents and their circle could have been less obviously degenerate. [This] is an interesting excursion into one bewildered mind and the world about it. It is very brief. That is commendable; the reader suspects another twenty pages would bore him terribly." H. L. Sicherman
Best Sell 28:139 J1 1 '68 470w

Harper 237:77 Ag '68 480w

"Boyer takes that old wheeze, the sardonic, innocent narrator, and moves him with considerable freshness and skill through the streets (and bedrooms) of Philadelphia ■ a taxi driver. . . . [Boyer] requires of every sentence that it have a kick and a bite, and ■ high percentage of the time he gets what he wants. The examples of folly through which he moves us are wonderful to behold. They are the ancient and classic failings of mankind. We have seen them all before, if not quite in their Philadelphia trappings. It is, however, a delight to have a new guide, and especially one with so golden a grin." Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:811 Ag 13 '68 320w

"Hiding away in the back of Boyer's incredibly fertile 26-year-old imagination is ■ stern old man whining 'O tempora, O mores.' But Boyer doesn't take him too seriously. He glances sidelong at him as he does at everything else, with bemused detachment. His Jonathan learns no Lessons. He bounces from one acte gratuit to the next, throwing away lines that Terry Southern would expand into chapters. He sees through everything, making no judgment aside from a masterful double-take. . . . If Joseph Heller invented the existential picaresque in 'Catch-22' [BRD 1962], Boyer has perfected it. He understands that pace and brevity are essential to the success of this subtle genre. Now at work on his second novel, he can proceed in the confident knowledge that his first effort was a quick trip, but very nearly flawless." R. A. Sokolov

N Y Times ■ R p4 J1 7 '68 650w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 72:82 J1 22 '68 180w

Reviewed by Joseph Haas
Sat ■ 51:47 Ag 24 '68 260w
TLS p1145 O 10 '68 270w

BOYER, PAUL S. Purity in print; the vice-society movement and book censorship in America. 362p il $7.95 Scribner

323.44 Prohibited books. Censorship 68-17340

"Boyer begins his study with the founding of the vice societies in fast growing American cities during the decades following the Civil War; [and] ends with their decline in the 1930s, a decline symbolized by Judge John Woolsey's 1933 decision to allow Joyce's Ulysses [BRD 1935] through Customs. . . . [The book] is based not only on newspaper accounts, memoirs, and court records, but also on interviews with individuals who figured in the censorship battles of the 1920s and 1930s." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of names.

Christian Century 85:1109 S 4 '68 60w

"Boyer provides excellent analyses of numerous books which were attacked by the censors during the late 19th Century and early 20th Century—including . . . Madeleine [an Autobiography, BRD 1919], Jurgen [a Comedy of Justice, BRD 1919], and Mademoiselle de Maupin; a welcome relief from the almost-endless writings on Tropic of Cancer [BRD 1961], Ulysses or Lady Chatterley's Lover [BRD 1959]. It was not until the late 1920's that librarians began to reexamine their traditional role as guardians of the middle-class pieties. . . . One of the most fascinating, well-written, enjoyable, and informative books on the subject, this is highly recommended for libraries and librarians." H. I. Schotz
Library J 93:2891 Ag '68 230w

"Few somersaults have been more stunning than the total reversal in American attitudes toward sex in this century. . . . [Boyer] who teaches history at the University of Massachusetts, has skillfully managed to reconstruct the history of book censorship and the gradual erosion of it that has made this dramatic evolution possible." F. Y. Blumenfeld
Newsweek 72:63 S 2 '68 900w

BOYLE, KAY, ed. The autobiography of Emanuel Carnevali. See Carnevali, E.

BOYLE, KAY. Being geniuses together, 1920-1930. See McAlmon, R.

BOYLE, PATRICK. Like any other man. 332p $5.95 Grove

68-20636

"James Simpson is the manager of a small bank in western Ireland. He is a big man, proud of his giant strength, perfect health, unsurpassed drinking capacity, and his amatory prowess which is concentrated on a . . . young barmaid, Delia. However, his self-confidence is abruptly shattered when he suffers a retinal hemorrhage, liable to turn into total blindness unless he eschews all those violent activities which make his life enjoyable, including Delia. Thus there begins a cycle of abstinence and indulgence which can end only in tragedy." (Library J)

"Boyle is a novelist to reckon with. He writes with great intensity, and his narrative is charged with tension and violence. We are most impressed by his portrait of the decline and fall of a modern day 'hero': a performance in the best literary tradition. And Mr. Boyle captures admirably the atmosphere of stagnation and decay which permeates so many small Irish towns today. . . . This work deserves the serious attention of students of the novel and mature readers generally. The squeamish may find Boyle's explicit treatment of sexual encounters offensive; and there are the usual four-letter words; but this is not obscenity for its own sake: it all belongs, within the framework of the novelist's artistic intentions, and is 'right' within that framework." S. P. Ryan

Best Sell 28:125 Je 15 '68 260w

Choice 5:1302 D '68 160w

Reviewed by T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:2256 Je 1 '68 90w

"Boyle uses Irish speech for exactitude, but English for effect—and all too often weakens the effect by exaggeration. . . . [This novel] describes the agony of a man for whom physical force is the only measure. The title seems inappropriate; and since the hero is a bank manager he's surely in the wrong job. At all events, Simpson. . . . discovers he has syphilis, murders his girlfriend, goes blind and pulls the wardrobe down on top of him. The ostensible parallel is with Samson and Delilah. The real one could be with Mr Boyle and the violence he does to his own talent." Robert Taubman

New Statesman 71:934 Je 24 '66 80w

Reviewed by Clancy Sigal

N Y Times Bk R p28 Jl 28 '68 480w

Reviewed by David Dempsey

Sat R 51:25 Jl 20 '68 430w

"The characters smell, sweat, puke, belch and hoor. The dialogue, never dull, is laced throughout with self-conscious Irish 'bad chat'. The description of Simpson's fall, always very concrete, is both funny and, at times, moving, but the characters are rarely more than grotesque caricatures, also, jokes are repeated, and we might have been spared the repetitive details of each of Simpson's many visits to the specialists."

TLS p589 Jl 7 '66 290w

BOYS, MICHAEL, jt. auth. English style in interior decoration. See Gilliat, M.

BRACE, GERALD WARNER. The department: a novel. 289p $4.95 Norton

68-15752

"Professor Robert Sanderling, about to retire after 40 years in the English Department of a large university, . . . reminisces about his life, his colleagues in the department, and some of his recent students." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. P. J. Corbett

America 120:26 Ja 4 '69 500w

"This is . . . an 'in' book, in the sense that it will have a special appeal to readers who are themselves involved in academic life. Teachers of college English will be most responsive as they will recognize themselves and their colleagues . . . and they will meet again all the academic clichés . . . which seem an inevitable part of the university scene. . . . What Professor Brace has done most successfully in this novel . . . is to set out his own academic 'credo.' As a representative of a generation of college teachers of English now retired or facing retirement, he . . . deplors some of the bright young men now dominating the scene. . . . [This] is an absolutely first class novel, thought-provoking, literate, restrained: highly recommended." S. P. Ryan

Best Sell 28:214 S 1 '68 600w

"This [novel] is neither good nor bad, but simply pleasant. . . . None of [the story] creates much drama, and . . . is, like its narrator, in a very low key. It is pleasant reading, perhaps good for a warm summer day, but not a necessary purchase." S. L. Mott

Library J 93:2896 Ag '68 130w

Reviewed by Carlos Baker

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 6 '68 850w

New Yorker 44:211 O 26 '68 80w

"[This book's] distinction is a double clarity, the clarity of Sanderling's perceptions about his peers, their strengths and weakness, and the clarity, even brilliance, of Brace's language in recording those perceptions. The book is well written though not densely plotted, rather leisurely in pace, somewhat old-fashioned as befits its narrator, who feels himself inadequate beside his ambitious younger colleagues and left behind by undergraduates who sneer at most things he has always thought worthwhile. Neither notably comic nor truly tragic, his story nevertheless has moments capable of moving us to tears or laughter." H. A. Simpson

Sat R 51:32 O 5 '68 500w

BRADFORD, AMORY. Oakland's not for burning. 248p $5.50 McKay

309.1794 Oakland, California—Social conditions. Urban renewal. Economic development 68-55048

In 1966 the author, "once a New York Times executive, was coordinator for the Economic Development Administration in Oakland. [This is] his journalistic account of the . . . program to subsidize business and provide jobs and training for the unemployed." (Library J) Index.

"This is an account of the happenings in Oakland that prevented it from becoming another Watts. . . . This work is not flawless; an instance, the attribution of census tracts to the Budget Department instead of the Department of Commerce. To one despairing the plight of cities, this competent work is a ray of hope." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 28:340 N 15 '68 460w

Christian Century 85:1408 N 6 '68 40w

"Mr. Bradford, a good organizer, refuses to see failures although his most ambitious project is still stalled. His faith is in government as 'employer of last resort,' in subsidized capitalism, and in coordinators, that is, outsiders with no understanding of the poor or minorities. He says little of Oakland's repressive police or of officials who fear Saul Alinsky rather than disease and poverty. This is useful only as an impressionistic record: for larger collections." Herman Elstein

Library J 93:4124 N 1 '68 100w

BRADFORD, ERNLE. The sultan's admiral: the life of Barbarossa. 224p pl maps $5.75 Harcourt

B or 92 Bābā, 'Arūj, called Barbarossa I, dey of Algiers. Khair al-Din called Barbarossa II, dey of Algiers 68-24384

This "biography of the Turkish pirate . . . [tells] how the legendary Barbarossa—in reality two brothers—conquered the Mediterranean and turned it into 'a Turkish lake' for the Sultan of the Ottoman Empire. Aruj, the elder brother, is credited with securing the North African coast. . . . After his death Kheir-ed-Din, the younger . . . brother, increased this maritime domain to include the Italian kingdoms of Genoa and Venice and reign as High Admiral in Sultan Suleiman's navy." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"Based exclusively on secondary sources, . . . the book vacillates between a semi-scholarly examination of the Barbarossa legend and a narrative treatment of sealore and, as such, can not really be called either good history or good story telling. Quotations are not acknowledged with exact footnotes. . . . [Those] which give exact dialogue of historical figures require about four citations just to hint at some kind of credibility—especially since the author himself admits that sources of which he made 'extensive use' are 'quite often unreliable.' . . . [If] Bradford wishes the book to stand on its narrative and stylistic merits, then there are even greater problems. Much of the descriptive writing is melodramatic and overdone." W. K. Kraus

Best Sell 28:341 N 15 '68 550w

"[Bradford's] allegation that Aruj and Kheir-ed-Din were 'men of constructive violence' in a violent age is based largely upon primary, Turkish, and African sources and refutes the legends popularly known to so many; he clarifies the reasons why Kheir-ed-Din, especially, is still adulated in Turkey and North Africa. . . . Strong in nautical and geographic detail, this book will appeal to readers of naval history and adventure. . . . Generally recommended for adults and young adults in school, public, academic, and subject collections." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 93:3124 S 15 '68 210w

"[This] book which is both informed and readable presents the great seaman in full and in a sympathetic way. The author does not leave out the piracy, but he also says something about Barbarossa as a great naval leader, and, even more surprising, a great statesman. Mr. Bradford is well qualified to do this. He knows both the sea in general, and Barbarossa's sea in particular. . . . A biography should be the portrait of a man, warts and all. This one, perhaps because Mr. Bradford does not have the detailed information necessary . . . is more a chronicle of events. . . . [But it] is a story worth the telling. Mr. Bradford has told it well." T. C. Chubb

N Y Times Bk R p71 O 27 '68 750w

BRADFORD, RICHARD. Red sky at morning;
a novel. 256p $4.95 Lippincott

68-11373

A first novel. Joshua Arnold, a seventeen-year-old boy, narrates the story. He and his genteel Southern-belle mother are living in Sagrado, New Mexico during Mr. Arnold's service and eventual death as a naval officer in World War II. . . . His mother and her almost permanent house guest, Jimbob Buel, tippie sherry, play bridge, and re-live the good old days of the South. . . . Josh's best friends are a Greek doctor's son, an Episcopalian minister's daughter, an ex-Pachuco, and the Mexican cook's daughter, none of whom, according to his mother, are good enough for Josh." (Library J)

"There is no plot. One follows along wanting to laugh. . . . Zaniness is the keynote for the book which can be read without boredom, mainly because the author is a charmer in delineating incidents in concrete, specific detail. He names things in a delightfully imagistic way that will keep the reader, no matter how stuffy he may be, in a sort of half-smiling coma. . . . Maybe there should be a new classification for this book: IIBz, for mature adolescents only." Arthur MacGillivray

Best Sell 28:98 Je 1 '68 600w

"[This novel] is warm and funny and yet has a sharp bite to it, like the snap of fangs crunching through corn pone. The genteel Old South hasn't taken such a beating since Sherman's day. . . . But what makes the book a true delight is the dead-pan, irreverent humor with which Josh tells the story. . . . No brief review can do justice to Mr. Bradford's book. Don't borrow it; go out and buy it, because you'll want to keep it around for quoting." Nathaniel Benchley

Book World p3 My 19 '68 550w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:104 J1 '68 180w

"[Bradford] gives us a sort of Catcher in the Rye [by J. D. Salinger, BRD 1951] out West. . . . The book is one of those at times humorous, at times heartwarming views of life that is quite readable. If the quips and comments of the teen-agers seem particularly clever, we can only be thankful; they might have sounded more like 17-year-olds. There is nothing profound here; there is no great characterization here, but it is a book which most readers would find fun." E. H. Jones

Library J 93:1651 Ap 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita
Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 160w [YA]Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 206:801 Je 17 '68 60wReviewed by John Knowles
N Y Times Bk R p5 Je 1 '68 700w
Va Q R 44:xcvi summer '68 80w

BRADLEY, S. A. J., ed. Sixty ribald songs from Pills to purge melancholy: sel. and ed. with introd, notes, and glossary by S. A. J. Bradley and arr. with guitar accompaniment by John W. Duarte. 219p $6.50 Praeger

784.4 Songs, English 68-25832

These songs have been selected from Wit and Mirth; or, Pills to Purge Melancholy, a six-volume anthology edited by Thomas D'Urfey and published in London in 1719-20. In the introduction, Mr. Bradley discusses "the sixteenth and seventeenth-century treatment of Melancholy; . . . enumerates D'Urfey's sources, Elizabethan, Jacobean and Restoration; and explores the antiquity of our ribaldry and the double entente. . . . He annotates each song, and gives the author and composer where they are known." (TLS) Glossary. Bibliography. Index of first lines. Index of titles.

"The songs range from the charming and delightful to the vulgar. Mr. Bradley . . . puts the collection in perspective with a splendid introduction. . . . The accompaniments to the songs are new. . . . Recommended for libraries with broad-minded governing boards." A. B. Skei

Library J 93:3789 O 15 '68 110w

"For the philologist, the literary critic, the musicologist, the sociologist, the historian, these songs will provide interesting material to study. But the criterion which dictated to D'Urfey his excellent choice of songs still holds good: they are all eminently singable and entertaining. To make them more easily singable, John W. Duarte has arranged guitar accompaniments . . . placing 'little strain upon the classic guitarist of moderate ability'"

TLS p1196 O 24 '68 750w

BRADSHAW-JONES, MALCOLM HENRY. See Jones. B.

BRADSTREET, ANNE. The works of Anne Bradstreet; ed. by Jeannine Hensley; foreword by Adrienne Rich. 320p $5.95 Harvard univ. press

811

67-17312

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Am Lit 39:589 Ja '68 80w

Choice 4:1378 F '68 180w

Reviewed by R. J. Mills
Poetry 112:127 My '68 350w

BRAGDON, HENRY WILKINSON. Woodrow Wilson, the academic years. 519p pl $9.95 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Wilson, Woodrow 67-27081

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by D. W. Hirst
Ann Am Acad 378:170 J1 '68 800w
Choice 5:401 My '68 100wReviewed by A. S. Link
New Eng Q 41:118 Mr '68 1600w
TLS p933 S 5 '68 750wReviewed by F. C. Rosenberger
Va Q R 44:312 spring '68 800w
Yale 11 57:XXXIV Mr '68 700w

BRAGER, GEORGE A., ed. Community action against poverty; readings from the Mobilization experience; ed. by George A. Brager and Francis P. Purcell. 349p $7; pa $3.45 College & univ. press

361.6 Public welfare. New York (City)—Poor 67-17938

A collection of essays from 1964-1965 dealing with the experiences of New York City's Mobilization for Youth Project. Some of these essays were previously published in Social Work. "The collection is divided into six sections: Poverty and Social Welfare, Demonstration Projects and Social Change, Mobilizing the Poor for Social Action, The Low-Income Nonprofessional, New Roles for the Social Worker, and The Law and Social Action." (Am Soc R) Indexes of authors and of subjects.

"Few books now available shed as much light on this tumultuous matter as does [this] anthology. . . . [However] nowhere does [it] name names and 'tell it as it was' where personalities and politics are concerned. Also surprising is the soft-peddling of inter-agency rivalries, mass media harassment, and the confused and confusing ambivalence of politicians at every level. . . . And far too little is written about the strengths and weaknesses of the extensive academic involvement in MFY. . . . Far more significant than these regrettable shortcomings are the anthology's many clear merits. . . . [It] offers sociologists a clear, competent, and often compelling brief for welfare activism, fundamental social change, and occupational re-arrangement. Each of these is a crucial, if under-developed, issue concerning the nation's mini-War on Poverty." A. B. Shostak

Am Soc R 33:473 Je '68 600w

"The writers anticipate that the MFY experience should have wide effects on the teaching and practice of social work. Well-written case studies with a minimum of professional jargon." Sophie Mitrisin

Library J 93:91 Ja 1 '68 120w

BRAIBANTI, RALPH, ed. Asian bureaucratic systems emergent from the British imperial tradition [by] Ralph Braibanti [and others]. 733p $17.50 Duke univ. press

354.5 Civil service—Asia, Southern. Asia, Southern—Officials and employees, etc. Great Britain—Colonies 66-27487

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by R. E. Frykenberg
Am Hist R 73:570 D '67 550wReviewed by Philip Mason
Pacific Affairs 40:347 fall-winter '67-'68 1050wReviewed by Rowland Egger
Pol Sci 83:154 Mr '68 950w

BRAITHWAITE, E. R. Paid servant. 219p $4.95
McGraw

362.7 Child welfare. England—Race relations.
Adoption 68-17502

The author of To Sir With Love (BRD 1960), describes his experiences as a welfare worker in London assigned the task of locating adoptive parents for racially mixed children. The book was originally published in England in 1962. The author has been Guyana's Ambassador to the United Nations since 1966.

"Braithwaite is freely critical of middle-class and upper-class West Indians who are too disorganized by their own prejudices and snobberies to unite in helping the less fortunate. A victim himself of subtle bigotry on the part of fellow workers in the welfare department, he notes the covert bureaucratic strategies that often succeed in keeping the half-colored child from getting a home with white parents. To Braithwaite the social worker is the 'paid servant' of the poor, and his book is a plea for friendlier treatment and greater understanding of the disadvantaged of all races. Despite the poignant subject, it is written with an underlying cheerfulness and optimism and a wealth of lively anecdotes." Myrtle Passantino

America 118:517 Ap 13 '68 500w

Reviewed by J. A. Flaherty

Best Sell 28:46 My 1 '68 700w

"In this account of his career as a caseworker, [Braithwaite] again shuns sentimentality, revealing his struggle to combat his own animosities and to overcome the racial prejudice and petty officialism of others. Unlike a colleague who 'never said "child" if he could say "sibling,"' he replaces sociological rhetoric with articulate writing that shows a genuine appreciation of human dignity. Humor and poignancy harmonize in this book which, despite its frankness, should be included in Young Adult as well as adult collections in the public library." Janet Freedman

Library J 93:1622 Ap 15 '68 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Anne Kincaid

Library J 93:2134 My 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 19 '68 300w

"In Britain during the '50s, when [the author] was a London welfare worker, the dream of black and white together was more than a subject for liberal sermons. But today Braithwaite's personal account of those years he spent placing abandoned black and mixed children in new homes reads exactly like a fairy tale, full of innocence and good intentions. . . . [It] is really a period piece, like a prewar ice-box—charming, but it just won't work any more. What does work, and awfully well too, is Braithwaite's honesty about himself and the clear way he sorts out other people's motives." R. A. S.

Newsweek 71:93 Ap 1 '68 600w

Reviewed by Zilpha Snyder

Sat R 51:84 My 11 '68 550w

BRAMBLETT, ELLA, ed. Shoots of green; poems for young gardeners; il. by Ingrid Fetz. 117p $3.75 Crowell 808.81 Gardens—Poetry—Juvenile literature.

Nature in poetry—Juvenile literature.
Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature

68-11057

An anthology "of over 100 short poems celebrating the myriad aspects of gardens and gardening. The arrangement follows the growth cycle beginning with the coming of spring and planting and on to harvest and the changing seasons. The poets range from unknowns to such favorites as Mother Goose, Robert Louis Stevenson, Rachel Field, and Langston Hughes. [Index of authors, of titles, and of first lines.] Grades two to six." (Library J)

"This collection suffers from a vocational fault of anthologies: unevenness. Robert Frost, John Keats, and Mother Goose ('Mary, Mary Quite Contrary') are fine. The trouble is, there are a lot of weeds in with the good seeds. For readers who can winnow, the harvest is worth it." M. M.

Christian Science Monitor p36 My 2 '68 60w

"This is an especially attractive selection. The poems will add interest when integrated into nature lessons while the subject approach makes this a worthwhile addition to general poetry collections." C. A. Hough

Library J 93:1796 Ap 15 '68 80w

"The poems are delightful, sweet and simple without being saccharine, and they are by such authors as Shakespeare and Blake as well as contemporary poets, among them, Behn and Farjeon. The illustrations, black and white, are softly realistic." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 70w

BRAND, CHARLES M. Byzantium confronts the West, 1180-1204. 394p maps $12.50 Harvard univ. press

949.6 Byzantine Empire

67-20872

This "work covers the twenty-four years of Byzantine history . . . from the death of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus to the Latin sack of Constantinople. Its purpose is to examine the reasons for that climactic event." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The sack of Constantinople . . . is the subject of a meticulous and moving final chapter which, like its predecessors, makes judicious use of the various and variously dependable primary sources. By the end a mass of facts has been digested and the reasons for the catastrophe demonstrated. . . . All this does not mean that the book is dull. It is well and on occasion brilliantly written. Too specialized for most undergraduates' purposes, it should yet be bought for its thorough exposition of a complex quarter of a century." Choice 5:845 S '68 180w

Reviewed by P. F. Moran

Library J 93:1894 My 1 '68 170w

"Mr. Brand is well equipped, as his impressive bibliographies show. He draws with equal facility on Western, Greek and Slav sources; he is good on the administrative history . . . and also in unravelling the intricacies of palace politics and the influence of the landed aristocracy. . . . Though the book is designed for the specialist the ordinary reader in search of something out of the ordinary will find much to attract him. He will not be put off by academic language. . . . The material is well organized so that detail, of which there is plenty, is illuminating and in no way oppressive. Above all Mr. Brand has told a good story clearly and well. . . . The book can be recommended even to those to whom the background is unfamiliar."

TLS p924 Ag 29 '68 800w

Va Q R 44:clxxiii autumn '68 200w

BRAND, CHRISTIANNA. Nurse Matilda goes to town; il. by Edward Ardizzone. 128p $3.25; lib bdg $3.22 Dutton

[68-73569]

"When Mr. and Mrs. Brown go off on a well deserved holiday, their ferociously naughty children are sent to spend the time with Great-Aunt Adelaide Stitch in London, and Nurse Matilda's guidance is again required to cope with their pranks and scraps. . . . [This is a] sequel to the author's first tale of the nanny of the formidable tooth, Nurse Matilda [BRD 1964]." (Publisher's note) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. F. Ruffin

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 2 '68 200w

Reviewed by E. L. Heins

Horn Bk 44:417 Ag '68 230w

"The funny, appealing story is complemented by black-and-white sketches which are crowded with children and action and not burdened with detail." M. I. Purucker

Library J 93:1308 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Janet Lunn

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 4 '68 170w

"Ardizzone's engaging illustrations are perfect for this tongue-in-cheek story about a Victorian family of innumerable children. They are not only not numbered, they are not even all named, there are so many. Incorrigibly naughty, the children can only be brought to heel by the stern discipline of Nurse Matilda, a Poppins-plus. Occasionally the anecdotes verge on farce more than fancy, but the combination of magical power, teasing ploys, and outrageous behavior will capture most readers. . . . Ages seven to ten." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:38 My 11 '68 100w

"Basically the book [is] farce, and the num-berless family enables readers to know from the beginning what they are in for: not realistic stories about realistic children but marvelous farce, best read aloud at a cracking pace. . . . [This] book is as funny as the first. The Brown children go to stay with Great Aunt Adelaide Stitch and Evangeline. There are dreadful adventures with fleas and a concert that goes on for ever. . . . It is all very satisfactory."

BRAND, CHRISTIANNA—Continued

TLS p1149 N 30 '67 600w

BRANDENBERG, ALIKI. See Alik

BRANDON, HENRY. Conversations with Henry Brandon. 288p $4.95 Houghton

917 U.S.—Civilization

68-13567

A collection of tape-recorded interviews with Americans, and some British living in the U.S., who are outstanding in contemporary cultural and political life. The interviewer, who began these conversations in 1956 "is an associate editor and Washington correspondent of the London Sunday Times, and [a Saturday Review] editor-at-large. . . . [Among those interviewed are] John F. Kennedy, Arthur Miller, Walter Reuther, Artur Rubinstein, Ben Shahn, James Thurber, Peter Ustinov, Edmund Wilson and Frank Lloyd Wright." (Sat R)

Christian Century 85:688 My 22 '68 40w

"Brandon knows American life, particularly its operative politics, and he has a sense of history sharper than have most journalists. His questions are apt, the issues explored potentially vivid, the interviewees are articulate, and the interviews run to good length. And where it is a matter of exploring and reporting ideas, interpretations, the result is usually resoundingly successful—notably in the case of the interview with Kennedy in June 1960, when Kennedy was on the verge of the presidency. . . . The 'conversation' with Richard Neustadt—who discusses the institutional character of the secretariats of the British Prime Minister's and the Cabinet's office, and the consequences of their organization for our political life—shows interviewer and subject at their easiest and best. . . . The problem comes in when Brandon, as part of his purpose, seeks from his interviewees a sense of the important configurations of American culture." Malcolm Bradbury Encounter 28:73 Mr '67 1500w

"It is a measure of Henry Brandon's skill as an interviewer that much of this material has kept its freshness and topicality. Of 15 chapters, nine are from an earlier book, 'As We Are' [BRD 1961], and six are new. Brandon modestly describes himself as a catalyst in the interview process, as though he merely carried his recorder from place to place, picking up conversational gems at the drop of a cue. But it takes a rather unusual catalyst to set such disparate individuals as, say, Peter Brook and James Thurber at ease." Robert Berkvist
N Y Times Bk R p12 Jl 7 '68 250w

"One tends to overhear rather than read these conversations, conscious of their living in the moment, of having just now occurred. They are the still-vibrating first drafts of men and women who normally commit their thoughts to paper with care and precision and due deliberation. . . . The Anglo-American slant of [Brandon's] questions heightens interest in almost every instance. It is remarkable how close to written expression many of them come, particularly Jonathan Miller's brilliantly verbalized impressions of Harlem and Boston [and] Peter Brook on theater directing." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:77 My 11 '68 200w

"[The author] is the most modest and reticent of interviewers, able (it seems) to put a wide range of celebrities at their ease, and obviously a man who does his homework. . . . In spite of the all-star cast, [however], the end result is unsatisfactory. . . . Too many of those interviewed rely too heavily on the champagne-fizz of the moment. . . . It needs some quite particular excellence to salve many of these pieces recorded in 1957, 1958 or early 1960's: the biting edge of Margaret Mead's observations, for all the interest in her anthropologist's diagnosis of the American scene, is now eight years out of date. . . . [And] the transposition to paper needs more care than this editor or publisher has expended."

TLS p1199 D 29 '66 600w

BRANDON, JAMES R. Theatre in Southeast Asia. 370p 11 maps $12.50 Harvard univ. press

792 Theater—Asia, Southeastern 67-14338

"Professor Brandon, who teaches speech and comparative literature at Michigan State University, discusses four distinct but interrelated aspects of theater in eight Southeast Asian countries: the cultural setting and development of theater genres; the performing arts and production methods; the theater as a social institution; and the theater as a communication medium." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A most welcome and long awaited first survey of contemporary Southeast Asian theater. Brandon, a former Cultural Affairs officer in Indonesia, has an immensely entertaining and readable style that will appeal to both advanced and beginning theater and sociology students. . . . Supporting charts, maps, bibliography, and an appended résumé of major genres currently employed are most helpful. Especially appreciated are the 73 exceptionally informative photographs and the glossary."

Choice 5:72 Mr '68 120w

"Linguistic skill, and a talent for dedicated research have produced this authoritative, fact-filled compendium. . . . Professor Brandon, who is a recognized authority on the Japanese Kabuki Theater, traveled extensively, interviewing artists from more than 200 Asian theater groups. He has [included] . . . extracts from plays. A key reference work." L. A. Rachow

Library J 92:3439 O 1 '67 180w

"Such emphasis is given to the mechanics of both running and manipulating contemporary Southeast Asian theatre that it would be fair to describe this book as a documentary study rather than an aesthetic one. Its pragmatic approach and marshalling of a hundred and one facts mark [it] as an excellent text for Asian background courses and it goes without saying that for theatre students it is an essential source of reference. Even those Olympians, the sociologists, will find grist for their mills in this useful volume. It is one of those works we can expect to find quoted and requoted in term papers and footnotes for the next decade. One stringent criticism must be made, the book is prohibitively expensive. . . . [It] is a text that I personally would like to recommend for general course work but it is simply not practical." A. C. Scott

Mod Lang J 52:33 Ja '68 430w

Reviewed by M. K. Mulholland

Pacific Affairs 41:442 fall '68 390w

Va Q R 44:lxxxiv spring '68 170w

BRANDWEIN, NAFTALI C., ed. A guest for the night. See Agnon, S. Y.

BRANLEY, FRANKLYN M. Floating and sinking: il. by Robert Galster. unp $3.25 Crowell 532 Physics—Experiments—Juvenile literature 67-15396

This book discusses the buoyancy of water and suggests experiments young readers can perform "to understand why a heavy ship floats, or the way in which our lungs keep us above water, or how a submarine submerges." (Publisher's note) "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"The drawings are excellent, but they fail to make the message worth the price of the book." J. C. Waugh

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 60w

"The book explains some basic facts about water . . . through simple text and clear double-spread illustrations in shades of blue and green alternating with gray and black. A few simple experiments are also suggested. . . . This will be especially useful in school libraries." Rose Henning

Library J 92:4602 D 15 '67 70w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:142 D '67 30w

"[This book] must be judged unsatisfactory, raising more questions than it solves."

TLS p1384 D 5 '68 130w

BRASSELLE, KEEFE. The cannibals; a novel about television's savage chieftains. 510p $6.95 Bartholomew house

68-24230

"Joey Bertell a TV impresario, . . . reminisces in these pages on the Byzantine negotiations that accompanied his tenure as henchman to Jonathan J. Bingham, the . . . prexy of the B.C.A. Television Network. The . . . mechanics of TV programming in the executive jungle are explored." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Robert Lasson
Book World p12 O 13 '68 700w

"This is a dull, vulgar story that maunders interminably about the utterly inconsequential back-of-the-scenes machinations of TV-network executives. If it thrills library patrons to be told what presumably are the facts about the normal and abnormal sex practices of television's stars and staff, buy it." E. M. Oboler
Library J 93:4164 N 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p61 S 29 '68 230w

"[This novel] is 'self-servicing.' That is clear enough from the author's portrayal of the first-person narrator, Joey Bertell, the only one in the novel who comes on like the white tornado. . . . The rest of the characters are ill-disguised caricatures of CBS executives. They are such a kinky crew that the reader may well wonder how CBS stays in business. Even kinkier is Brasselle's claim that Hollywood Producers Otto Preminger and Joe Levine are fighting over the screen rights to this book. If they have any taste, Preminger wants Levine to do it, and vice versa."

Time 92:106 O 4 '68 430w

BRATA, SASTHI. My God died young. 235p $4.95 Harper

B or 92 India—Social life and customs 68-28188

This "autobiography was written by a 29-year-old Indian in an attempt to explore his own identity. Nurtured in a tradition-bound Brahmin family and educated in England, he articulates the problem of being raised in two conflicting societies. He feels completely at home in neither. . . . [He describes] Indian family life and customs, English schooling, youthful love affairs, and wide travels." (Library J)

"[This] is almost half a good book. Mr. Brata gives us sharply drawn and believable sketches of the India of his youth and adolescence. . . . [He] has developed his descriptive skills to a high level, but he has not yet developed a self-analytical tool which allows him to cut through pretention, pomposity, and the sophomoric urge to shock and impress. Because of the objective descriptions of Indian life, we believe in the problems, but not in the individual who is meant to embody them." Donald Gropman

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 12 '68 240w

"This book is extremely well written; for academic and public libraries." S. A. Epstein
Library J 93:3777 O 15 '68 100w

"Brata's weaknesses as a writer are journalistic. He admits that he can be brash. He can lapse into vulgarities. . . . But his account of his childhood and education is vivid and intelligent. He is candid about himself. His non-conformist school encouraged hauteur, priggishness, and the passion to be 'favoured'; pious tyranny among the masters led to sadism, deceit and cunning. . . . His descriptions of the squalor of Calcutta are very well done and there is a long account of his relations with a beggar boy which is on the way to becoming a good short story. Another sign of his promise is the story of his painful, forbidden courtship, which more than any amount of opinionating tells one everything about the pressures of Indian life on the young student." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 76:352 S 20 '68 700w

Reviewed by Robert Berkvist
N Y Times Bk R p50 O 20 '68 460w
New Yorker 44:250 N 23 '68 150w

"[The author] writes from a standpoint of frustration, impatience and self-imposed exile . . . lashing out at sacred cows ancient and modern. . . . Readers familiar with those Hindu customs and superstitions which obstruct Indian progress will find little to surprise them or to explain the bitterness of Mr. Brata's attack on what most of his contemporaries seem to take for granted. The suspicion may grow that he is assuming an angry posture just to be in the forefront of western fashion, that his rebellious nature is mainly due to an exceptionally strong sexual urge which he found he had to 'go foreign' fully to express. . . . [Brata] is, in a powerful if inarticulate sense, a patriot. He has an undeniable literary gift and there must surely be hundreds of young Indians of the kind in whom the West places confidence who feel as he does, that they have all the gear but haven't yet made the scene; and as whose spokesman Mr. Brata deserves our unequivocal recognition."

TLS p879 Ag 15 '68 900w

BRATHWAITE, EDWARD. Masks. 80p $4.25 Oxford

811

68-94231

This is the second volume in a three-part sequence of poems in which the poet "seeks to 'survey' the condition of the contemporary New World Negro within the total context of Africa, Europe and America." (Library J) Glossary. For the first volume, Rites of Passage, see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh
Book World p20 N 3 '68 140w

"[The book's] rhythm is the beat of autumn-pan, the talking drums which speak of Doman-koma, the Sky Creator. . . . Africa's meaning and history come alive in the hypnotic poetry of this West Indian writer whose next book, The Island, will celebrate his Caribbean experience. The first book, Rites of Passage is recommended along with Masks for public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:3144 S 15 '68 90w

"One must praise the range of rhythmic effects, particularly the use of dance rhythms. The effort of will behind this design is sobering to any observant reader. Yet one cannot help feeling often that the deed might be preferable to the will. Only in the autobiographical passages, where Mr. Brathwaite recalls his own experiences and reflections in Ghana, does the verse rise above the level of pleasing incantation. In many sections he puts us directly in touch with racial memories, trying to make us relive his process of uneasy identification with the remote, frightening, enriching sources of his nature. These sections carry us over too large a country; the diversity is more than the poet's evocations can convey."

TLS p867 Ag 15 '68 160w

"Brathwaite is a poet of great power and technical skill. . . . Rime and rhythm weave a texture of sound which carries a meaning beyond meaning, a beauty which is its own meaning. Brathwaite's sequence is one of the most important in modern poetry, for its scope is large and its achievements impressive."

Va Q R 44:cxlviii autumn '68 190w

BRAUER, JERALD C., ed. Reinterpretation in American church history, by R. Pierce Beaver [and others]. (Chicago Univ. Divinity school. Essays in divinity, v5). 227p $5.95 Univ. of Chicago press

209 U.S.—Church history 68-20186

This volume seeks to document "the major changes that the study of American church history has undergone since its inception. Furthermore, it seeks to isolate new trends in method and interpretation now emerging. . . . [Some of the papers] demonstrate new interpretations of particular problems such as missionary motivation, and Negro Christianity, or of major figures in American religious history." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Morris' essay on 'The Genius of Jonathan Edwards' points to the New England divine's unique combination of the rational and the empirical as the keystone of his greatness. Kirschenmann clears away the thicket of misunderstanding which has choked off a proper evaluation of Horace Bushnell. . . . Sidney Mead's excursus is part fun and games, part jabs and feints (and possibly a T.K.O. or two), part self-analysis and part crucial, significant reinterpretation. Since Mead has himself been so prime a mover in recent historiographical shifts on the American scene, he is both subject and author in the volume under review. . . . Mead's discussion of reinterpretation, like so much of his writing, is an essay on cultural and self-understanding, the heart of the historian's task. It is an essay on how to know, how to feel, indeed on how to love. Reinterpretation enough." E. S. Gaustad

Christian Century 85:1244 O 2 '68 600w

Reviewed by J. H. Dorn
J Am Hist 55:641 D '68 420w

"All students of church history, especially of the American church, will find this volume stimulating." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:3003 S 1 '68 80w

BRAUER, KINLEY J. Cotton versus conscience: Massachusetts Whig politics and Southwestern expansion, 1843-1848. 272p $7.50 Univ. of Ky. press

329 Massachusetts—Politics and government 66-26692

"During the 1840's the Whig party in Massachusetts was gradually divided into two factions because of disputes concerning the annexation of Texas and the ensuing extension of slavery in the United States. Those who desired to proceed cautiously on the slavery question in order to maintain the national unity of the party and, allegedly, to protect the supply of cotton to manufacturers became known as Cotton Whigs. They included Appleton, Lawrence, Winthrop, and Saltonstall. The Conscience Whigs under Sumner and Charles Francis Adams began to attack slavery and the cotton interests on moral grounds." (Library J) Parts of the book have previously appeared in The Journal of American History and The Historian. Bibliography. Index.

"The author has done a considerable amount of research and has made good use of primary sources. He writes clearly and organizes his material in creditable fashion. It cannot be said, however, that he has made a major contribution to our knowledge of the period. David Donald's [Charles] Sumner [BRD 1960] . . . and Frank Gatell's John Gorham Palfrey [BRD 1964] have recently covered the same field. Brauer's chief addition is a detailed account of political maneuvers." G. G. Van Deusen

Am Hist R 73:603 D '67 240w

"The monograph should prove useful in upper division and graduate level history courses, but otherwise will have limited appeal. Also, it should point the way to further studies of state and local politics during the period."

Choice 4:1437 F '68 140w

"The balanced and scholarly presentation won the McKnight Foundation Humanities Prize in American History for 1965. Brauer has replaced the usual bibliography with an informative bibliographical essay. For consideration in general libraries on the Boston-Austin axis, and all comprehensive American history collections." R. C. Hilton

Library J 92:110 Ja 1 '67 140w

"Historians will be long indebted to Professor Brauer for his detailed, richly documented study. . . . His account of the Conscience Whig efforts to sway public opinion and influence party conventions as well as the conservative leadership while dealing warily with abolitionists is superb, as is his fascinating analysis of the political maneuverings of such conservative leaders as Abbott Lawrence, Daniel Webster, and Nathan Appleton. However . . . his work does not illuminate the social origins or attitudes of more than a small fraction of those who were politically active in the Massachusetts Whig party in this crucial period. . . . For that reason . . . the evidence presented . . . does not enable us to assess the relative importance of the status revolution of the early nineteenth century as a factor in those disensions over the slavery issue that ultimately destroyed Whiggery in Massachusetts and in the nation. That reservation notwithstanding, Brauer's work is a most welcome and able addition to the unfortunately sparse literature on the Whig party." A. A. Cave

New Eng Q 41:135 Mr '68 1100w

BRAUNTHAL, JULIUS. History of the International; v2. 1914-1943; tr. by John Clark. 596p il $17.50 Praeger

335.4 International. The. International Socialist Congress. Communist International (67-17667)

This volume like its companion Volume one (BRD 1967) "is arranged chronologically and by country. . . . In the first two parts Mr. Braunthal discusses World War I and resulting revolutionary movements, and then . . . the disintegration of the Second and the rise of the Third International. In the fourth and fifth parts he gives a . . . picture of the constant struggle between the Third (Communist) International and the labor organizations of the Free World, the latter declining under the impact of Fascism. In the sixth and last part he covers World War II and the collapse of both international organizations." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects. Originally published in Germany under the title Geschichte der Internationale.

"[Traces of] Marxism can be found in [this] massive history of international Communism . . . the second volume of which now covers the period of the Comintern with detail and erudition. Braunthal continues to speak of 'sham democracy' in Weimar, and to insist that the Bolshevized Third International founded in Moscow in 1919 violated the 'spirit of Marx.' . . . An ideological point of view provides Braunthal's analysis and exposition with a coherence that is rarely found in other Western writings on Communist politics. The special value of his book is its detailed discussion of the international politics of the entire European left in disarray in the period after World War I." J. H. Billington

Book World p4 N ■ '67 240w

Choice 5:244 Ap '68 240w

Economist 227:50 Je 29 '68 110w

"The content of this volume differs basically from that of the first volume: the era between World War I and World War II saw the considerable growth of labor organizations and for the first time they participated in the governments of Europe's influential countries. As with the first volume, this thorough presentation is mainly for specialists, students, and informed laymen although the excellent documentation and bibliography, extensive appendixes and indexes will serve definite reference purposes."

H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:189 Ja 15 '68 180w

"The second volume of Dr. Braunthal's massive history is as masterly as the first. . . . This is history in the grand manner. . . . It may be that Dr. Braunthal is too gentle with his Social Democratic friends, to whom he tends to give the benefit of every possible doubt, and too harsh with his communist enemies, whose repulsive combination of dogmatism and machiavellianism he exposes without mercy. But there can be little doubt that, in general, he is right; for it was the unrelenting enmity of the communists that consistently pushed the Social Democrats towards the passivity and opportunism that became their besetting sins. . . . For students of the European labour movement, Dr. Braunthal's book will become as essential as the late G. D. H. Cole's classic History of Socialist Thought [BRD 1953, 1954, 1956, 1959 and 1961]. A work of reference that is also compulsively readable, it is a very distinguished achievement indeed."

TLS p105 F 1 '68 750w

BRAY, R. J. The solar granulation [by] R. J. Bray and R. E. Loughhead. 150p pl $11 Barnes & Noble

523.7 Sun

[67-101267]

This book discusses the cells, called granules, appearing on the surface of the sun which "are due to nonstationary convection in the outer convection zone. . . . The major part of [the] text discusses the granulation, but . . . the authors also describe umbral granules, facular granules, and the newly discovered (1960) phenomenon of supergranulation." (Science)

"An excellent monograph (comparable in quality to the same authors' Sunspots). . . . Historical, theoretical, and observational aspects of the subject are developed; this exposition beautifully illustrates the nature of science at the frontiers of knowledge. Accessible to non-specialists, good reading for advanced undergraduates."

Choice 4:1262 Ja '68 50w

"Many important advances have occurred since the authors' bibliography was completed in February 1966 which contradict or modify a number of their conclusions. . . . The chapter on theoretical studies of granulation provides an excellent introduction to this very difficult subject. . . . The most disappointing section [is] on high-resolution observing methods, which seems quite incomplete and somewhat repetitive of the similar section in the earlier monograph on sunspots. . . . However, despite the misgivings . . . this monograph is a fair presentation of observational and theoretical work up to early 1966 and it will be very valuable not only to students and newcomers to the field but also to experienced solar astronomers, who will find it an excellent reference book because of its extensive bibliography." G. W. Simon

Science 159:969 Mr 1 '68 800w

BRAYMAN, HAROLD. Corporate management in a world of politics: the public, political, and governmental problems of business. 272p $7.95 McGraw

658 Industrial management. Industry and state 67-13899

This book "is an appeal for better understanding by business of the political arena. [It] asks for improved relationships between business and the academic and writing worlds . . . [and is] critical of top management when they send subordinates or hired advocates to deal with important public officials." (Library J)

"Addressing himself to the management of large corporations, the author will bore the academic reader with his shorthand rationalizations of the business position, his recitation of current business tribulations, his easy optimism that ills can be cured by sound public relations. His grammar is popularized; his analysis is often superficial special pleading; his sycophancy can try the patient reader. But his prejudices are frank; his understanding of political forces and the meaning of political debate is often shrewder than that of many businessmen. . . . His prescription, energetic top management leadership of the corporation's outside relationships, sounds reasonable. . . . The book serves as an admirable example of the difficulty business discourse has in dealing with ideas in the political process." Oliver Garceau

Am Pol Sci R 62:625 Je '68 800w

Reviewed by R. L. Waters

Library J 92:2151 Je 1 '67 140w

BREARLEY, MOLLY. A guide to reading Piaget. by Molly Brearley and Elizabeth Hitchfield [Eng title: A teacher's guide to reading Piaget]. 171p $4.50 Schocken

372.21 Child study. Intellect. Piaget, Jean 67-25234

Piaget is a Swiss psychologist whose "ideas about children . . . seek to explain the child's intellectual life in terms of his own action and its internalization rather than as the emergence and training of an inherited ability. . . . The texts chosen are organized around key problems in the development of the child." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"First of its kind. As may be expected, Brearley and Hitchfield are sympathetic toward the cause of Piaget, but this bias is not labored. Rather the authors are content to collect excerpts from the works of Piaget that are known best in England and the U.S. and to provide the reader with their interpretation of [his] clinical method. . . . Piaget is difficult to read; because of this and because [his] name and views are in present decline, this slender guide . . . will perhaps be more useful to the generation to whom the name of Piaget is familiar and to graduate students."

Choice 5:88 Mr '68 130w

"Brearley and Hitchfield will serve as a good introduction to a learning theorist, who ranks with Millie Almy, Lois Murphy, Jerome Bruner, Erik Erikson, and others. . . . Teachers and librarians in the elementary schools, however, should find this brief introduction . . . of value at least as a reminder of the complexity of learning and the fact that one generally teaches with only the hope of finding the magic combination that will open the way for communication between teacher and child." L. L. Shapiro

Library 93:1299 Mr 15 '68 600w

"The authors furnish examples of Piaget's clever experimentation to test at various ages youngsters' conceptions of number, measurement, knots, perspective, coordinates, floating and sinking, and moral judgment. A final chapter on the behavior of babies treats the first workings of mental life. As an intellectual hors d'oeuvre, this slim volume assuredly whets the appetite." John Calam

Sat R 50:74 D 16 '67 100w

BREEDEN, KAY, jt. auth. The life of the kangaroo. See Breeden, S.

BREEDEN, STANLEY. The life of the kangaroo [by] Stanley and Kay Breeden. 80p il $4.95 Taplinger

599 Kangaroos 67-12614

This book describes the natural history of the grey kangaroo. For three years the authors observed and photographed these giant marsupials in the wild on Bribie Island in Moreton Bay in south-east Queensland.

"[This volume] demonstrates that a series of black-and-white photographs can be just as revealing as color plates. The simply written text . . . contains much information not normally found in the standard textbooks on Australian mammals . . . and an appealing section on the care of the young, both in and out of the pouch."

Choice 5:216 Ap '68 250w

Horn Bk 44:78 F '68 30w

"Well-written and delightfully illustrated. . . . Undoubtedly the photographs will be the greatest attraction to most readers. Along with a generous share of baby-in-pouch pictures, other aspects of the existence of the kangaroo are also well illustrated. The Breedens avoid sentimental expressions of affection that might easily be made when writing of such improbable animals. . . . The book surely will have wide interest." J. D. Buffington

Library J 92:2795 Ag '67 120w

"The mob of gray kangaroos and their little joeys that live on a coastal island about 20 miles north of Brisbane in Australia are the topic of this photographic essay. The pictures are splendid and numerous, the text is clear, the observations are made with insight and affection. On this wild island the kangaroos were without fear: 'they let people approach within feet.' The result shows here; this is a first-rate example of modern natural history, looking at one endearing species in some depth but wholly without technical barriers to any reader." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:145 D '67 80w

BRÉHIER, EMILE. The eighteenth century; tr. by Wade Baskin. (The hist. of philosophy, v5) 263p $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

190 Philosophy—History. Philosophy, Modern 63-20912

"This is the fifth volume of Émile Bréhier's series surveying man's philosophical thinking. . . . [He presents] the rising predominance of experience-oriented over reason-oriented ways of thinking in the 1700s. He . . . recounts the thrusts of Scottish partisans of common sense, Berkeley's focus on perception, Vico's documentary methods, the skepticism of Hume and the philosophes, and the pre-Romantic systems of Kant and the Kantians." (Library J) This is a translation of Histoire de la Philosophie: La Philosophie Moderne II: Le Dix-Huitième Siècle, published in France in 1930. Bibliography. Index.

"[This volume] continues the excellent translation of Bréhier's standard work. . . . Bréhier's critical insights coupled with his gift for choosing apt quotations often help to put a philosopher's position or a whole trend of thought into perspective. His learning and scholarship, never obtrusive, result in one of the most interesting and readable works of its kind and a valuable supplement to the study of primary sources. Each chapter has a good, short bibliography, including recent works in English."

Choice 5:496 Je '68 180w

"Large libraries which possess other multi-volume histories of philosophical thought . . . should also acquire Bréhier. . . . [His] book clarifies the complex currents and the general course of European thought in a major period. For the informed layman and specialist in the field." William Gerber

Library J 92:3425 O 1 '67 130w

BREISACH, ERNST. Caterina Sforza; a renaissance virago. 375p il $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

B or 92 Sforza, Caterina 67-25511

A biography of "the natural daughter of Galeazzo Maria Sforza, duke of Milan. At fourteen she was married to Girolamo Riario, nephew and adviser of Pope Sixtus IV, and her second husband was a member of the lesser branch of the Medici family. Machiavelli encountered her on his first major diplomatic mission, when she got the better of him. . . . The beautiful Caterina spent her first twenty-two years as a gentlewoman, but with . . . the loss of papal favor, and the retreat to the family's possessions of Forlì and Imola in Romagna, she increasingly emerged as warrior and power politician. She fought the French invasion of 1494, the Venetian Republic, and, finally, Cesare Borgia's papal and French soldiers. . . . She had two husbands, nine children, and numerous [love affairs]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. P. Bruderle

America 118:124 Ja 17 '68 550w

"Despite its imposing panoply of scholarly footnotes, which testifies to the author's assiduous research in both published and archival sources, the book contributes little to our comprehension of the age. This is old-fashioned narrative history, nineteenth-century vintage, with very little analysis or sense of problem. The author scarcely makes any effort to distinguish between the significant fact and the petty and inconsequential detail. The book often reads like the factual and gossipy diplomatic dispatches, which constitute one of its primary sources of information. Breisach does sketch the historical background to Caterina's career, but his summaries of Renaissance politics are superficial and filled with clichés." G. A. Brucker

BREISACH, ERNST—Continued

Ann Am Acad 337:174 My '68 700w

"This is a violent story of a violent woman whose relationships with others were tempestuous and often flared into outrage. . . . The political history behind the story of Caterina Sforza is complicated and sometimes repetitious, but Breisach has amply documented his story with an impressive list of sources from the archives of Milan, Venice and the Vatican and has added almost one hundred pages of notes to amplify and elucidate his text. . . . [The book] will appeal to scholars with some background of the Italian Renaissance. The 'gentle reader' may find it somewhat strong and bitter to the taste." Sister Mary William

Best Sell 27:406 Ja 15 '68 420w

Reviewed by Jane Boutwell

Book World p20 N 11 '67 650w

Choice 5:1027 O '68 120w

Reviewed by R. E. Stevens

Library J 92:4404 D 1 '67 110w

"Breisach, a professor of history at Western Michigan University, is a learned and tireless researcher in Italian archives, ■ adequately readable writer who occasionally lapses into stiff and clumsy phrases or lamentable clichés. His [book] is an impressive work of original research which adds considerable new information to the story of one of the most remarkable women of the time. . . . [It is] an important contribution to Renaissance history. And for anyone not well acquainted with the cruelty, treachery, and endemic violence of the period, it should be a revelation. [Caterina] ruled the two small cities of Imola and Forlì with arrogant courage and no other virtue. Licentious, vindictive, and furiously proud, she conspired, executed, tortured, and waged war with a masculine enthusiasm that won her the awed admiration of her contemporaries—of those, that is, who did not hate her. Mr. Breisach has told her grim story with detachment as well ■ with formidable erudition." Orville Prescott

Sat ■ 50:37 D 2 '67 350w

BREITMAN, GEORGE. The last year of Malcolm X; the evolution of ■ revolutionary. 169p pl $4.50; pa $1.95 Merit pubs.

301.451 Malcolm X. Black Muslims 67-20467

The author argues that Malcolm X "cannot be understood unless his leadership phase be divided into three: the dependent period under Black Muslim [Elijah] Muhammad; the independent period (50 weeks), the first three months characterized by earnest gropings for what he stood; and the final period, June 1964 to February 1965, of growing into a mature leader. In Breitman's view, neither Negro leaders nor the American press were ready to recognize Malcolm for what he was in the end, ■ revolutionary Leftist." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is] the outgrowth of Malcolm X Speaks which Breitman helped prepare, and ■ reaction to The Autobiography of Malcolm X [both BRD 1965] by Malcolm and Haley, the ambiguities of which Breitman felt needed to be cleared up for a balanced judgment of Malcolm. . . . Well documented and generally well balanced, though the chapter on Malcolm's critics is an outright defense of Malcolm. An appendix includes the 'Statement of Basic Aims and Objectives . . . of Afro-American unity' [and] statements by Malcolm's critics. . . . Recommended for all college libraries, especially useful for undergraduates interested in the Negro revolution."

Choice 4:1170 D '67 180w

"Mr. Breitman has more than adequately documented speeches, interviews, and writings of this charismatic leader to prove his point—Malcolm X was not merely a leader of black men, he was emerging as ■ leader of all men. This book will serve as an excellent companion to the Autobiography of Malcolm X and Malcolm X Speaks. Recommended for academic and public libraries." M. M. Jackson

Library J 92:2557 J1 '67 220w

BRELIS, DEAN. The face of South Vietnam; phot. by Jill Krementz. 250p $10 Houghton

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-24416

The authors, ■ free lance photographer and a television reporter, attempt to show through pictures and text "the experiences of both soldiers and civilians and the effects of the war on the land and the people." (Sat R)

"[This] seems to me a quick, patched-up job. Text and photos each constitute half the book, but they have no relation to each other. . . . [Brelis'] reports of combat patrols and his thoughts on General Ky are interesting enough. . . . They include four-letters words that aren't allowed on the networks. Miss Krementz's photographs, mostly civilian scenes in and around Saigon, are second-class Cartier-Bresson 'decisive moment' shots that look in some cases like random shutter openings. Libraries may not wish to spend $10 for a book with contents their patrons may duplicate by tuning in the six o'clock TV news." Collin Clark

Library J 93:194 Ja 15 '68 130w

"Photographs, taken in 1965-66, do follow in the tradition of the great men-in-action coverage of Vietnam by such photographers as Horst Fass and Larry Burrows. . . . Miss Krementz displays no apparent ideological attitude toward the war; her perceptions are personal, committed to recording the way men live, without making arbitrary judgments. . . . Brelis [who] has supplied a text to accompany the pictures . . . has an eye for the telling detail. . . . [He] also has the good sense to let a good story tell itself, which he does in a 30-page account of two marines, one a Negro sergeant who lives for his wife's daily letter, the other a New York lance corporal who has hardly begun to shave." Howard Junker
Newsweek 71:78 F 5 '68 750w

"The American who wants a better understanding of Vietnam in terms of human beings and their experiences can profit from [this book]." R. H. Fifield

Sat R 51:34 F 17 '68 80w

BREMNER, ROBERT, ed. Traps for the young. See Comstock, A.

BRENNAN, MICHAEL J. The economics of age [by] Michael J. Brennan, Philip Taft [and] Mark B. Schupack. 246p $7.50 Norton

331.3 Age and employment 67-11089

"Major topics covered: (1) employment conditions for different age groups are appraised and compared within the context of demand-supply forces as affected by various institutional forces; (2) geographic mobility and resultant effects upon income and employment distribution are examined by age classes; (3) occupational survival determinants (by age). Themes [are] examined through use of theoretical models supported by direct surveys and statistical analysis." (Choice) Index.

"The chief contribution of the present volume lies in its application of sophisticated theoretical and analytical tools to the study of the problem of declining employment opportunities for older workers. Its methodology represents ■ significant advance over much of the previous research on this problem and may well stimulate further work along the same lines. But the book is almost entirely concerned . . . with the impact of age on the individual in his role as ■ worker. Such important problems ■ age variations in the propensity to consume or to save are not considered. Nor do the authors analyze in any detail the impact of changes in the age structure of the population and labor force on the economy. . . . It is particularly in connection with the authors' review of the data and literature relating to the declining labor force participation of elderly men, however, that their interpretation seemed questionable to this reviewer at a number of points." M. S. Gordon

Am Econ R 58:639 Je '68 950w

"[This study is] comprehensive, rigorous, and up to date. . . . [The authors] all well-known econometricians and/or labor economists, conclude with discussion of a wide variety of public proposals. Extensive use of theoretical models, general level of analysis, minimize usefulness for general or undergraduate library, but a desirable acquisition for graduate, professional, or specialized libraries. . . . Chapter 2 contains discussion of historical evolution of aging problem and an excellent review of existing literature in the area."

Choice 5:381 My '68 170w

BRENNAN, WILLIAM J. An affair with freedom; a collection of his opinions and speeches drawn from his first decade as a United States Supreme court justice [by] William J. Brennan, Jr.; sel. and ed. with an introd. and notes, by Stephen J. Friedman; foreword by Arthur J. Goldberg. 384p $8.50 Atheneum pubs.

340.08 Law—U.S.

67-25480

This book concentrates on the justice's "interpretations of the Bill of Rights and the 13th to the 15th Amendments as they affect the rights of individuals and minorities. The collection includes his significant United States Supreme Court opinions, two of his New Jersey Supreme Court opinions, a few speeches and an evaluation by Mr. Friedman, a former clerk of Mr. Brennan." (Library J) The topics include obscenity, reapportionment, freedom of speech and religion, criminal justice and civil rights.

"The opinions of Brennan are in the public domain and his lectures have also been published previously. Librarians must consider whether patrons wishing to read a Supreme Court opinion will be well-served by this book containing excerpts, without notes, of 39 opinions. . . . [The book] is an uncritical panegyric to and by one member of a collegial court during 10 years. (There are other years and other justices for the librarian to worry about). This book will be of negligible value to a serious lawyer or social scientist who moves easily among the official and professional documents this book is drawn from. A citizen or a schoolboy will definitely find enlightenment here, but it remains doubtful that this is a class of publication that libraries should support. Our shelves are already too crowded with its like."

Choice 5:1218 N '68 220w

"The Justice's impact on labor law and his influence on judicial education are among the areas purposely neglected. The reader wonders whether the import of a Supreme Court justice's career can be captured in midstream; and, although Mr. Friedman's chapter comments are models of briefly stated information, this is not the book to read for a critical evaluation of Justice Brennan's work. For law libraries, large public libraries and civil liberties collections."

E. J. Bander
Library J 92:3052 S 15 '67 150w

BRESLER, JACK B., ed. Human ecology: collected readings. 472p il $9.75 Addison-Wesley

573. Anthropology. Ecology. Man—Influence of environment 65-25650

"This book is a collection of papers dealing with environments of human beings and their subsequent adaptation or lack of adaptation to those environments. The first of the major divisions is concerned with the natural environments of man, and represents . . . problems [such as] . . . water supplies, temperature, light, soil, oxygen pressure, and even the uterine environment. The second division contains papers on man-made environmental factors [such as] . . . nuclear bomb developments, medical use of x-rays, cigarette smoking, automobile exhaust, and . . . the space capsule. . . . I have tended to follow a biological or animal ecological orientation in the selection of the papers [and] to select . . . studies showing the effects of the environment upon man, rather than man's effects on his environment." (Introd) These articles have previously appeared in such publications as American Anthropologist and The American Journal of Human Genetics. Bibliographies. Index.

"The 30 articles included in the volume are all valuable—or at least interesting—contributions to knowledge, and almost all have good bibliographies that would serve as introductions to the literature on the particular topics. But they don't add up to anything resembling my idea of human ecology—most of them read more like contributions to bioclimatology. . . .

The most curious aspect of the anthropology . . . is the omission of any material on environmental pollution by man—except for air—and two of the four articles in this section are concerned with the relation between cigarettes and cancer. These are important articles on a widely discussed topic, and tobacco is an important part of some human environments (in North Carolina, for instance), but the emphasis seems odd. It all depends, I suppose, on what is meant by human ecology." Marston Bates
Am Anthropol 69:551 O '67 500w

"[An] excellent collection. . . . A particularly interesting group of articles covers the controversy over the application of Bergman's and Allen's rules to human evolution and serves to illustrate the tentative nature of theory in human ecology, just as the entire collection demonstrates the cross-disciplinary nature of this growing subject. In line with current controversies, I should have liked to see Ferdon's critique of Meggers accompanying her 'Environmental limitations on the development of culture.' . . . A synthesizing introduction would have been welcome, for some kind of overview would have been advantageous. The editor has thoughtfully left the bibliography to each article intact, a practice becoming rare in such collections. In addition, he has added helpful lists of supplementary reading at the beginning of each section." Alexander Alland
Science 154:254 O 14 '66 200w

BRESSON, HENRI CARTIER-. See Cartier-Bresson, H.

BRETT-SMITH, RICHARD. Berlin '45: the grey city. 176p pl $6 St Martins

914.3 Germany—History—Allied occupation, 1945-1955. Berlin—Description 67-25726

The author "attempts to reconstruct just what he learnt and thought as a member of the British occupation forces in Berlin between July, 1945, and March, 1946 [when] he was twenty-two years of age. . . . [and a member of] the 11th Hussars." (TLS)

"The book concentrates on a wide variety of topics, ranging from statistics on the Black Market and assorted vices to a discussion of Nazi architecture, painting, and sculpture. To some extent the treatment is analytical; but its major accomplishment, it seems to me, is its ability to evoke the moods of post-war Berlin. In this connection the book serves as a companion piece to Christopher Isherwood's similarly evocative, 'Goodbye to Berlin' (BRD 1939), which captured the pre-war mood. All of it is remarkably good reading, informed by the author's lively style and by his profound interest in his materials." Peter Corodimas
Best Sell 27:382 Ja 1 '68 700w

"This journalist's account of his impressions and observations, his prejudices and sentiments, is more boring than most old soldier's tales. Brett-Smith's portrayal of the destruction of war, which he personally encountered, admittedly succeeds better than his attempt to enliven the book with nearly a chapter on Berlin's vices, which he appears to have experienced only vicariously. . . . Worst of all, in a short book he repeats himself. Unless a definitive collection on Berlin is being built up, this book is one libraries can safely afford to ignore."

Choice 5:251 Ap '68 160w

Reviewed by P. W. Filby

Library J 93:750 F 15 '68 100w

"This recapitulates scenes and recaptures moods that, more than twenty years ago, were rendered familiar to all through press, film and radio. . . . But if it lacks originality this is partly because the author has eschewed hindsight and subsequent experience. . . . In trying to retell only what he saw and how he felt at the time, he has produced a book which is at least authentic and which in its better passages has the quality of immediacy."

TLS p104 F 9 '67 340w

BREWER, TERRY, jt. auth. Kops and custards. See Lahue, K. C.

BREWTON, JOHN E., jt. comp. America forever new. See Brewton, S.

BREWTON, SARA, comp. America forever new; a book of poems; comp. by Sara and John E. Brewton; drawings by Ann Grifalconi. 269p$4.50 Crowell

811.08 American poetry—Collections

67-23663

An "anthology of American poetry from Emily Dickinson to Hayden Carruth. . . . Many modern lesser known poets are included as well as such favorites as Frost, Béné, and Sandburg. . . . [The] subjects and setting include history and modern life; natural beauties industrial contributions; regional, small town and city life." (Library J) Index of authors. Index of titles. Index of first lines.

Reviewed by E. L. Heins

Horn Bk 44:433 Ag '68 160w

"[This volume] reflects some of the complexity and uniqueness of the United States and the American Spirit. . . . Though the poems, themes and forms are mostly traditional, this kaleidoscopic view, perfectly complemented by striking pen and ink drawings, offers an awareness of the diversity of the American scene." M. L. Gardin

Library J 93:2544 Je 15 '68 100w

"[For] ages 10 to 16, [this] is, to be sure, a celebration of our land, but much less embarrassingly patriotic than you might suppose. In this generous compilation there is much variation in time, tone and quality, from page to page, and it's good to see that ironical attitudes and considerable lightheartedness are not absent." Walker Gibson

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 200w

BRICKMAN, WILLIAM W., ed. Educational imperatives in a changing culture; fifty-third schoolmen's week proceedings: March 16-19, 1966. 232p $6 Univ. of Pa. press

370 Education

67-24846

These reports and commentaries are "divided into four parts. Part 1, 'Educational Challenges,' deals with the 'Third American Revolution' in the cultural, social, and political spheres and the revolution's impact on education. Part 2, 'The Teacher: U.S. and Abroad,' discusses conflicting philosophies underlying teacher education and compares academic programs for teachers in the United States and England. Part 3, 'Curriculum and Pupil,' describes curriculum changes and innovations in research and teaching. Part 4 presents up-to-date information on cooperation among universities in international education and a history of worldwide programs." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1190 N '68 140w

"Unless one places the broadest possible construction on the words 'imperatives' and 'culture' of the title, it is difficult to find a common thread tying together papers exhibiting interests ranging from elementary school music, through mathematics for the terminal student, to the problems of articulation between the two- and four-year college. . . . The title word 'imperatives' suggests a polemical urgency which is all but lacking in many of the chapters. The approach seems to be that of the specialist writing in terms understandable to the non-specialist, even the layman. In this approach, something of the provocative potential has been sacrificed. Yet for students of higher education the volume is not without merit. Fully one-half of the articles deal in some fashion with the concerns of post-secondary schooling. . . . For students of education in a period of continuing change [this] is at least solid fare." C. E. Peterson

J Higher Ed 39:415 O '68 400w

"Emphasis on education for change provides editorial unity, so hard to achieve in published proceedings." John Calam

Sat R 51:56 Jl 20 '68 90w

BRIDENBAUGH, CARL. Vexed and troubled Englishmen, 1590-1642. (The beginnings of the Am. people) 487p $10 Oxford

942.06 Great Britain—History—Stuarts 1603-1714. Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603. Great Britain—Social conditions

68-17604

The author asks himself "what previous experiences, what habits and customs the first settlers of America carried with them. . . . [The book is based] on manuscript and printed plays, sermons, ballads, broadsides, letters, [matter] that was written during the period; diaries, and, above all, court records." (N Y Rev of Books) Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 119:566 N 30 '68 30w

"Based upon primary research, especially into neglected local English records, the book is a disappointment to scholars. It presents little that is new, is too much a narrative, lacks balance, and leaves too many unanswered questions. Nevertheless, the book is a must for undergraduate libraries. It will serve as a well written introduction to the period, and it collects information hitherto widely scattered."

Choice 5:1027 O '68 180w

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 100w

Reviewed by George Langdon

J Am Hist 55:628 D '68 750w

"In this thoroughly researched and thoughtfully written book Carl Bridenbaugh of Brown University has made a significant contribution to the social history of the 'ordinary' English people during the 50 years after 1590. . . . [He] also describes the techniques of recruiting in England, and the areas of settlement of different types of emigrants. . . . Certain to be one of the notable books of the year, it should be purchased for history collections." R. G. McInnis

Library J 93:2489 Je 15 '68 130w

"A sweeping reassessment . . . [of] nearly every aspect of English life during this half century. . . . [which attempts to show why] nearly 60,000 Englishmen abandoned England for America. . . . [The author] is less concerned with why they came—although he offers some extensive explanations—than with what they were like as people. . . . Readers will find few statistics and none of the demographic analyses that have adorned the most recent studies of the period. Bridenbaugh has relied on visiting the places where his Englishmen lived, looking at their houses, and reading what they wrote. . . . The result is an extremely wide-ranging description of what it was like to be an Englishman in the early seventeenth century: where you lived, what kind of house you lived in, how you talked, . . . what you ate and drank (or did not), and how you made a living (or did not). . . . The fascination of [this] catalogue of English traits and habits . . . lies in holding it up against the later American colonists to see how it fits. . . . No study of the 'English background' has been more suggestive for the understanding of early American history." E. S. Morgan

N Y Rev of Books 10:38 My 9 '68 1600w

Reviewed by A. T. Vaughan

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 16 '68 850w

"[In the 17th century] Englishmen poured into America, bringing with them, in addition to their few worldly goods, all their fears, hopes, ideas, and shibboleths. Bridenbaugh realizes this well enough and, in this admirable . . . [book] draws a wonderful portrait of the society that forced Englishmen to emigrate. The beginnings of American history are traced therein with a scholarship that is as enviable in its range as in its appositeness. Moreover, Professor Bridenbaugh writes, as few American historians do, with clarity and grace." J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:23 Je 29 '68 180w

Reviewed by R. E. Brown

Yale R 58:292 D '68 380w

BRIGGS, ELLIS. Anatomy of diplomacy: the origin and execution of American foreign policy. 248p $5.95 McKay

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Diplomatic and consular service 68-18725

An analysis of the conduct of foreign relations by an American diplomat who has spent 18 years as a U.S. Ambassador. "In the first section [he] defines the scope of foreign relations and . . . summarizes the evolution of our machinery for the conduct of them. He discusses the role of the Presidency, the Congress, the Secretary of State and his Department, and the American Foreign Service . . . [and describes] other agencies of government that have inundated United States Embassies with attachés and operatives. . . . In the second part of the book he surveys [and evaluates] United States policies toward communism, Latin American countries, the United Nations, and newly independent nations." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author has] a masterly grasp of the apparatus for and the workings of American foreign relations. For a topic of this nature, his style is anything but formal. In language easily understood, interspersed with wit, he is able to get his message across to the man-in-the-street. . . . Except for some excellent definitions pertaining to the world of diplomacy that Ambassador Briggs has coined, the first section offers nothing more than is already contained in standard works on the subject. The true value of [the book] is to be found in the second section where the author critically evaluates American foreign policy during the last quarter-century. . . . This book should be read by everyone who is interested in finding out how American foreign relations 'tick.' The treatise should be read especially by the author's former colleagues—those to whom responsibility for the conduct of our foreign affairs has been entrusted." J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 28:162 J1 15 '68 1000w

"Both the general reader and the college student concerned with international affairs will gain candid views on the President's tenuous relationship with his ambassadors abroad, the 'peripheral performers' such as the Peace Corps and the U.N., and on how to deal bluntly with hostile regimes. In his irascible, fetching way, Briggs has written a book that deserves a place on the same shelf with memoirs of other hardened professional diplomats like George Kennan, Joseph Grew, and Robert Murphy."

Choice 5:1037 O '68 180w

"With the avowed purpose of rendering more intelligible the foreign relations of the United States, Mr. Briggs (author of Farewell to Foggy Bottom [BRD 1965]) . . . has written a breezy survey of international relations. A more serious book than his previous one, the present volume contains much that is incontrovertible but rides some of the same prejudices noticed in Foggy Bottom. His wit is sometimes on the mordant side. . . . The discussion of relations between President and Congress is timely. [Mr. Briggs gives] several realistic examples of the State Department at work. . . . The discussion of decolonization problems is useful as is that of the containment of Communism. Readable and witty; recommended for general rather than academic collections." E. P. Stickney

Library J 93:2509 Je 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by K. W. Thompson
Sat R 51:41 S 14 '68 100w

BRIGGS, K. M. The fairies in English tradition and literature [Eng title: The fairies in tradition and literature]. 261p il $6.95 Univ. of Chicago press

398.4 Fairies. Characters and characteristics in literature 67-24298

This survey extends "from medieval times to the present. . . . [It examines] the fairy peoples themselves as part of English tradition [and] describes the various fairy types, fairy beasts and plants, regional differences, and the host of the dead. Part Two deals with the traffic between humans and fairies, with fairy wives and lovers, changelings and midwives, and alleged encounters with fairy creatures. In the third section the author is concerned with fairies as they appear in the poetry and literature of the eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth centuries. She briefly treats the pictorial representation of fairies." (Publisher's note) Appendixes I: Fairy types and individuals; II: Extracts from fairy poems; III: The Cottingley fairies. Bibliography. Index.

"A comprehensive, penetrating, and wholly new analysis . . . enhanced by the inclusion of 13 illustrations. . . . A 'must' for folklore collections and for literature collections in all libraries. While useful as a reference work, it will more probably be read for its general interest."

Choice 5:1302 D '68 170w

"In the present book, a continuation of Katharine Briggs's earlier work. The Anatomy of Puck. [the author] makes use of published and unpublished accounts of fairy appearances, and while she notes her personal agnosticism regarding their actuality, she maintains a respectful attitude toward the relevance of their aesthetic truth. . . . A glossary of fairy types—giants, hags, hobgoblins, and so on—a good bibliography, and index are additions which make this a useful book for public, college, university, and reference collections in children's departments and school libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 180w

"[It is] very difficult to handle all the relevant material in a single volume; and lively, erudite and fascinating as it is, the present volume has not done so. Each of its themes is treated with skill and erudition, but both need . . . less speed and fuller consideration. Thus, some of the chapters on literature provide little more than an aerial map of the terrain, with the most tantalizing and inexplicable omissions. . . . Where actual beliefs are concerned Dr. Briggs has garnered a wonderful harvest. . . . There are chapters on Banshees and Brownies, mermaids, mermaids and merrows, the alarming creatures of the Fens, fairy beasts and plants and pre-Radio fairy music . . . [and] some curiously prosaic and matter-of-fact modern accounts of fairies. . . . There is no discussion of other modern fairy concepts though, the goblins said to haunt aircraft, the cult of flying saucers lately dignified by the title of 'ufology', the conviction that the earth is visited by little green men from outer space."

TLS p748 Ag 17 '67 950w

BRIGGS, PETER. Men in the sea. 128p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Simon & Schuster

551.4 Oceanography—Juvenile literature. Oceanographers—Juvenile literature 68-18967

"Nine oceanographic pioneers . . . are discussed: Athelstan Spilhaus, Roger Revelle, Maurice Ewing, Columbus O'Donnell Iselin, Edwin Link, George Bond, 'Tap' Pryor, Townsend Cromwell, and Anton Bruun. Also included is the story of the . . . research submarine Alvin, which located a missing hydrogen weapon off the coast of Spain in 1966." (Publisher's note) Bibliography Index. "Age twelve and up." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Bernice Levine

Library J 93:3976 O 15 '68 60w

"All the great men of sea science get their due. . . . Intermingled with these admiring biographies is a wealth of scientific information, all the more effective because operatively presented. Anyone with the least desire to become oriented in oceanography—how it works, how funded, what can come of it—will profit from the author's knowledgeable acquaintance." E. B. Garside

N Y Times Bk R p16 J1 7 '68 260w

"As stimulating as any adventure story. . . . The subject itself is fascinating, a science with expanding frontiers, and the stories of the exploits and explorations of the sea are spiced with danger, courage, and innovation." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 80w

BRIGGS, PETER. Water: the vital essence. 223p il $5.95 Harper

551.4 Oceanography. Water supply. Water —Pollution 67-11347

This book is about man's relationship to water. The author discusses such topics as "oceanography, water pollution, water supply, soil conservation, flood control, manned submersibles, the T.V.A., and so forth." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[An] interesting book. . . . The author has given us a readable, worthwhile account of the world's waters and concludes by pointing out some of the potentials for the future." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 27:465 Mr 1 '68 140w [YA]

"Here is a hodge-podge of information which Mr. Briggs has pulled together under the heading of 'water stories.' . . . Although there is nothing new to be found in this volume, a synthesis of this type may prove especially useful to students. Simply and clearly written, this book may be considered for purchase for YA libraries as well as for general collections." H. R. Downey

Library J 92:251 Ja 15 '67 140w [YA]

BRIGGS, VERNON M., jr. auth. The Negro and apprenticeship. See Marshall, F. R.

BRIGHT, JOHN. The authority of the Old Testament. (Duke Univ. Divinity school. The James A. Gray lectures, 1959) 272p $5.50 Abingdon

221.6 Bible. O.T.—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 67-14989

The author of The Kingdom of God (BRD 1953) "develops hermeneutical principles he believes should guide the minister in his daily use of the Old Testament. He deals with the fundamental questions of biblical authority, reviews unsatisfactory solutions offered in the past, and then . . . points the way to new solutions. He explains how these principles can be implemented in preaching." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index to Bible references. Index of persons and subjects.

BRIGHT, JOHN—Continued

"This is a serious study of importance to anyone concerned with the role and authority of the Hebrew scriptures within the Christian church. . . . Bright seeks to reestablish the authority of the entire Bible by affirming its underlying theological unity found in the history of salvation, the quest of Israel fulfilled in Christ. . . . The present book is more akin to [his] The Kingdom of God, sharing its popular and more expansive style and its concern for unity of the Biblical message."

Choice 5:208 Ap '68 230w

"Bright's work is a brilliant and powerful summons for new works in biblical theology. But his solution will not remain unchallenged. It reminds one of the traditional stance of Lutheran candidates who subscribe to 'the doctrinal content of the Lutheran Confessions' at ordination. The definition of that 'content' and its center poses a fresh dilemma." N. C. Habel
Christian Century 84:1464 N 15 '67 410w

"[Professor Bright] is constrained to propose a method which does not impair the authority of the Old Testament and at the same time draws from it a message applicable to the convinced Christian. . . . [In his view] there is a theological undergirding of the whole Old Testament, derivable from it by objective examination and of continuing validity [while the] theology of the New Testament is . . . essentially identical in structure with that of the Old, but with the content radically transformed. . . . Since preaching the whole Bible is what Professor Bright aims to secure, it is only right that he should discuss in theory the hermeneutical considerations underlying the use of the Old Testament in the pulpit, and even give some examples of the method in practice. Certainly all his readers, especially those who may have found the close and careful discussions rather exacting, will be grateful for the last chapter in which he does this. . . . Anyone who is interested might like to think out how he would preach on David and Bathsheba, without just moralizing; on Psalm 137, without expurgating the text; and on Joshua's campaign (Jos. 11: 16-23; 23) without advocating genocide. Then let him consult Professor Bright and marvel."

TLS 0115 F 1 '68 1350w

BRIGHTBILL, CHARLES K. Educating for leisure-centered living. 232p il $6.95 Stackpole co.

301.5 Leisure

66-22826

"Learning to use leisure creatively—the author, professor of recreation at [the University of Illinois] suggests that many of society's ills would disappear if only we would dig leisure. . . . [He discusses] such subjects as togetherness, poverty, cybernetics, and lost park acreage. . . . proposing a 'Government Teach-In for Leisure.'" (Library J)

"Of the genre of self-help books which are of little value to the professional and of dubious value to the layman. The discussion is superficial, cliché-ridden, and at times evangelical. Its inadequate scholarship is revealed by a paucity of notes, no bibliography, and no references to important literature in the field, e.g. J. Ellul, The Technological Society [BRD 1964]. Not recommended."

Choice 4:1292 Ja '68 90w

"[This book offers] the reader such pearls as, 'The best armor against the ruthlessness of time is to be young at heart.' . . . There is nothing here that RLS, the apologist for idlers, did not say almost a century ago." K. F. Kister

Library J 91:5955 D 1 '66 80w

BRILLER, SARA WELLES. Born female. See Bird, C.

BRILOFF, ABRAHAM J. The effectiveness of accounting communication: foreword by William O. Douglas. 338p $17.50 Praeger 657 Accounting 67-16666

This volume consists "of criticism of accounting literature, philosophy, and empirical research . . . and proposes a variety of means to improve accounting practice and theory. The empirical work is based on 136 responses to a . . . questionnaire [by] a selected group of accountants and persons in the 'financial community'. . . . The responses are analyzed emphasizing accounting controversies and the possible conflict between audit independence and management services." (Choice) Appendices. Bibliography. Index.

"This book is a strong indictment of the accounting profession for ineffective communication with those who make use of financial statements. Its message is, indeed, a forceful one, but the way in which the author presents his case is . . . an unfortunate one. . . . The book is based on the author's doctoral dissertation. . . . [His] statistical analysis of the responses to various questions and, indeed, his drawing graphs of these answers served largely to distract rather than to convince this reviewer. The turgid style of the book was equally disturbing. . . . Doctoral dissertations seldom make good books, and this one is no exception. What it has to say is important, but the manner of presentation certainly affects the effectiveness of its communication." S. I. Simon
Ann Am Acad 337:222 My '68 470w

"A unique book dealing with some important and controversial issues facing the public accounting profession. . . . Briloff dramatically argues the urgency of the 'gap in GAAP' (generally accepted accounting principles.)"

Choice 5:381 My '68 110w

BRINK, CAROL RYRIE. Winter cottage; drawings by Fermin Rocker. 178p $4.50 Macmillan (N Y)

68-12086

"A lonely summer cottage on a northern lake [in Wisconsin] became the winter home for [13-year old] Minty Sparkes, her younger sister Eggs, and their father. It was the hard Depression year of 1930. Chance led them to the cottage as their luck was running out, and they took shelter without the owners' knowledge. When an older boy, wandering homeless joined them, what they had all expected to be a winter of desperation became the best winter of their lives." (Book World) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. H. Clarke

Book World p12 Ag 11 '68 120w

"Through [the girls'] appreciative eyes, one perceives the beauty of the changing seasons; and although the mystery in the quiet, well-told story is rather transparent and the climax wholly predictable, the three main characters are individual and convincing." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:418 Ag '68 230w

"Minty, the older girl, troubled by the need for a more conventional and secure life, emerges as the clear-headed, lovable heroine of a story that girls will thoroughly enjoy." G. B. Herman

Library J 93:2112 My 15 '68 100w

"An appealing heroine is presented in this rather placid story of the Depression period by the recipient of the . . . Newbery Medal [for Caddie Woodlawn BRD 1935]. . . . Parts of the story were published in magazines in 1939 and 1940. The story line is weakened by its dependence on coincidences at several points; however, the quiet woodland setting and the amicable family scenes are attractive." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:40 My 11 '68 100w

BRINK, F. H. VAN DEN. A field guide to the mammals of Britain and Europe; tr. and ed. by Hans Kruuk and H. N. Southern; il. by Paul Barruel. (The Peterson field guide ser) 221p maps $7.50 Houghton

599 Mammals. Zoology—Europe. Zoology—Great Britain 68-24071

"Nearly 200 species are described, from mice and moles through bears and bison, including sea mammals such as whales and walrus. Notes are mainly for identification, and include physical size, markings, habitat, habits, and points of difference with similar species." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published under the title Zoogdierengids van Europa ten westen van 30° oosterlengte.

"Most of the mammals discussed are illustrated, many in excellent color paintings (generally side views). Other illustrations include line drawings of tracks and tooth patterns, photographs of skulls, and maps showing the distribution of each animal. A glossary... and index are included. The book is very well suited to its intended purpose. There is only one drawback for Americans: dimensions and weights are given in metric units. . . . Nevertheless, large libraries will want this book." R. L. Hough

Library J 93:2891 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 40w

Va Q R 44:clxxxix autumn '68 80w

BRINSMEAD, H. F. Beat of the city. 277p $4.75 Coward-McCann

68-15942

A novel "of youngsters in search of identity in [Melbourne, Australia]. . . . Raylene Slater runs away because she can't communicate with her fisherman father. Sabie Korkoran cannot abide his mother's platitudes and his father's advice. . . . [Sidney Green] finds his parents unworthy of him. And what would this trio of malcontents swap for the mess at home? Raylene is determined to have a fling with Blade O'Reilly, who wears a black leather jacket. . . . Sabie wants Blade's motorbike, a stolen Bonneville. (When begging and borrowing don't work, he steals to get it.) Syd is bucking for status momentarily epitomized by Sabie's striped shirt." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"Despite an uncommonly good writing style, the author's faintly ironical air will seem to rebuke sensitive readers even before they've had a chance to get involved. Sounding like a parent all the way (calling a transistor radio a 'perfect anesthetic,' for example), the author remains an observer with an ax to grind—the reverse of S. E. Hinton's attitude in The Outsiders [BRD 1967]." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:300 Ja 15 '68 100w

"Here is the universal teenage world of puzzled parents and their sulky, sultry offspring—a world of transistors and motor-bikes, deception and delinquency, flick-knives and jazz groups and the juvenile courts, a world with an understandable fascination for countless boys and girls who never experience its seamier excitements for themselves. . . . On page 77 it's obvious that Raylene is about to be raped by Blade O'Reilly and his Death Riders. . . . Grandfathers may wince at the publishers' assessment (10 to 14 age group) but . . . only by pushing back the frontiers of the permissible, by facing and interpreting more and more of the alarming, enticing realities the adolescent is already aware of, can the writer offer this upper age-group something of interest and value." Geoffrey Trease

New Statesman 72:708 N 11 '66 400w [YA]

"Introducing her tale of youngsters in search of identity in an Australian metropolis, H. F. Brinsmead observes, 'In Melbourne that year the way-outs were in.' For Melbourne read New York or San Francisco and this teen-age shibboleth seems no less appropriate. . . . The winner of several Australian awards, the author describes her native land vividly and often lyrically. But the more reflective reader will find Mrs. Brinsmead's swiftly moving narrative rarely pauses to give a penetrating look into either teen-agers themselves or the symbols of their aspirations." Sidney Offit

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 31 '68 300w [YA]

TLS p1085 N 24 '66 200w

BRINTON, CLARENCE CRANE. See Brinton, Crane

BRINTON, CRANE. The Americans and the French. (The Am. for. policy lib) 305p $6.75 Harvard univ. press

327.44 U.S.—Foreign relations—France.
France—Foreign relations—U.S. France.
Civilization 68-15633

This "is a survey of contemporary French developments and Franco-American relations. Mr. Brinton, McLean Professor of ancient [and] modern history, Harvard University, emphasizes that the present tension between France and the United States cannot be attributed simply to General de Gaulle. Instead, he insists that 'the France of 1967 is in so many ways so different from the France of twenty years ago that under any form of government, under any rulers, its stance, its policies, its international relations could not possibly be what they were in 1947.' He analyzes the nature of the channels in French life and reviews General de Gaulle's career and the political institutions of the Fifth Republic." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Writing at the apex of a distinguished career as an historian of Europe, Brinton is urbane, witty, informal, and perceptive. He explains for the American reader the cultural, intellectual, economic, and political developments which have combined to form the France of today. He discusses American attitudes toward France briefly, and gives the context for an understanding of Franco-American relations. . . . Recommended for those who want a short, intelligent explanation of the French—either for general information, prelude to travel, or background for further study of Franco-American relations."

Choice 5:1028 O '68 180w

"This informative and stimulating book . . . offers insights and interpretations which general readers and specialists alike will find rewarding and thought-provoking. . . . In the reviewer's judgment, Brinton is on much more solid ground in his discussion of cultural and socio-economic aspects than of Franco-American diplomatic relations in the last two centuries. Admittedly endeavoring to balance some of the current American criticism of de Gaulle's policies, he is too generous toward France. Would it really be wise to treat France as a great power when, by present standards, it can hardly claim to be one?" Henry Blumenthal

J Am Hist 55:377 S '68 410w

"In his consideration of Franco-American relations during the 1960's, Professor Brinton emphasizes the need 'to treat France as a great power, as, it is just possible, she is and will long be.' The text is supplemented by statistical charts, and there is a substantial annotated bibliography. This is a timely, well-written study which should be included in the collections of academic, public, and substantial high school libraries." B. S. Vialat

Library J 93:1138 Mr 15 '68 200w

"[This book presents] a cool, eminently well-informed and reflective analysis of the evidence. . . . What the 'new France' is, inevitably, is harder to describe. But in the interests of a more pragmatic understanding of the Franco-American relationship . . . Mr. Brinton makes a clear exposition of the forces that are shaping it. . . . The author is particularly illuminating in the insights he gives into the reasons why . . . most elements of the postwar development of France are viewed with contempt and distaste by the predominantly Marxist French intellectuals and by American liberals who still take their cues on things French from what is left of St. Germain des Prés. Mr. Brinton has set out to describe a two-way relationship, and he emphasizes that the present tension between France and the United States results at least as much from American policies based on clumsy American applications of real power as from too imaginative French assertions of 'grandeur.'" Robert Doty

N Y Times Bk R p20 Mr 24 '68 900w

New Yorker 43:140 Mr 30 '68 100w

Reviewed by S. K. Padover

Sat R 51:30 My 4 '68 1800w

BRITISH ECOLOGICAL SOCIETY. Light as an ecological factor: a symposium of the British ecological society. Cambridge, 30th Mar. 1-Apr. 1965; ed. by Richard Bainbridge, G. Clifford Evans and Oliver Rackham. 452p 11 pl $13.50 Wiley

574.5 Light. Ecology

67-4988

This volume consists of twenty-two papers covering three general topics: "(1) general measurements of light climates, (2) effects of light in terrestrial communities, and (3) light effects in the sea." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Name index. Subject index.

"This will be useful as a reference volume, but a number of omissions are clearly evident. . . . A majority of the papers are interesting, are well illustrated, and contain excellent bibliographies. An effective addition to ecology collections in undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 4:1406 F '68 130w

"Although the representation of subjects in the individual papers of the symposium is partly fortuitous, most of the topics considered

BRITISH ECOLOGICAL SOCIETY—Continued.
are presented in remarkable breadth and depth. . . . The papers are substantially enhanced by the inclusion of selected aspects of the discussions which followed their presentation." K. F. Lagler
Science 158:1037 N 24 '67 550w

BRITT, DELL. The emperor's big gift; il. by Jan Hogenbyl. unp $4.25 Prentice-Hall Elephants—Stories 67-15165

"When the Emperor of China received a gift of an elephant, wise men were called in to determine its weight. All were baffled by the problem of weighing so great a beast until a small boy suggested a solution." (Horn Bk)
"Grades three to six." (Library J)

"Hogenbyl, a Dutch artist, illustrates [this in] commonplace fashion, although his three-color drawings present lively and sometimes humorous figures, human and animal. Here, too, the very young will find appeal in the cleverness of the youngest." Virginia Haviland

Book World p22 O 15 '67 80w

Horn Bk 43:580 O '67 70w

"This is a good retelling of a classic tale. Fifth and sixth-graders can read it themselves; younger children will enjoy hearing it read aloud. Clean, full-page, multi-colored illustrations are faithful to the text." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 92:4610 D 15 '67 90w

TLS p1117 O 3 '68 40w

BROADBRIDGE, SEYMOUR. Industrial dualism in Japan; a problem of economic growth and structural change. 105p $5 Aldine pub.

338.952 Japan—Economic conditions 66-23159

Based on Japanese and English sources this study, by a professor "of the London School of Oriental and African Studies, explores some of the contrasts in Japan's industrial structure [where] huge combines exist side by side with thousands of small businesses. . . . He outlines the reasons for the development of this dual economy and examines the economic and political factors which have allowed [it] to continue even in the postwar period of rapid economic growth." (Library J) Bibliography.

"In Part II, Dr. Broadbridge presents statistics of industrial scale and of wage productivity differentials, and briefly surveys the dilemma which any government that is set on both economics modernization and social and political stability must face in a dualistic economy. . . . [He maintains that] for the many thousands of very small units in manufacturing industries which supply the mass-produced articles common to all advanced industrial nations, the future must be bleak. . . . For these the solution must be elimination. . . . 'If both greater efficiency in production for the domestic market and improved international competitive power is to be achieved,' Dr. Broadbridge brings a new and fresh talent to the analysis of the Japanese economic scene." J. B. Cohen
Ann Am Acad 374:246 N '67 700w

"This monograph suffers from having a flawed first chapter, where Broadbridge outlines a murky thesis of the problem. . . . The reader's problem is further compounded by inconsistencies in this thesis both within and between subsequent chapters. Despite these flaws, it is still interesting and valuable. Much of the statistical material utilized in assessing post-war economic conditions is not readily available in other English sources. More important, the author sheds new light on labor utilization within Japanese industry, and rejects the commonly held idea that all Japanese firms have rigid paternalistic labor policies and hence regard labor as a fixed cost. . . . In outlining other current problems in Japanese industrial organization, capitalization, government fiscal and monetary policies, this work is a useful supplement to W. W. Lockwood's works: The Economic Development of Japan: Growth and Structural Change 1868-1938 [BRD 1955], [and] The State and Economic Enterprise in Japan [BRD 1966]. . . . Strongly recommended for undergraduates in economic history, economic development, comparative economic systems, business administration as well as Far Eastern studies."

Choice 4:1288 Ja '68 220w

"Will be of value to those who are interested in the general problems of economic growth as well as those specifically concerned with Japan's development. For medium-sized and larger collections." C. W. Stucki
Library J 92:1923 My 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by Whatarangi Winiata

Pacific Affairs 41:288 summer '68 700w

BROCK, W. H., ed. The atomic debates; Brodie and the rejection of the atomic theory; three studies. 186p $6.50 Humanities press

541 Atoms

[67-82004]

This volume explores the significance of Sir Benjamin Brodie's "'calculus of chemical operations' the focus for the 'atomic debates' of the 1860's. . . . The first essay (by Brock and D. M. Knight) sets the background of 19th-century scepticism about chemical atoms. The second (by D. M. Dallas) outlines the calculus itself, and the third reproduces a variety of correspondence relating to it, from . . . eminent men of science." (Science)

Choice 5:803 S '68 130w

"It is this third [essay] which is in many ways most fascinating, not only for the glimpse it gives into the private attitudes toward atomism of an important group of mid-Victorian scientists, but also for the atmosphere of leisured grace it portrays. . . . Unfortunately, the authors have chosen to stress the fact that Brodie's calculus was a 'form of operationalism' which preceded and anticipated Bridgman's use of the term by some sixty years.' While this may be true, the importance of Brodie's work does not lie in any anticipation of such a now-dated fashion as operationalism. Indeed, the writers seem uncertain as to quite how significant were the 'atomic debates' that they report." Arnold Thackray

Science 157:416 J1 28 '67 320w

"The exposition of the calculus itself, though careful and sensitive, may well leave the casual reader as mystified as were many of Brodie's audience. Any serious student of the period will still have to wrestle with the calculus for himself, though this introduction will certainly assist the study of the original papers. . . . While the book may entertain the practising mathematician and chemist, a lighter touch would have better served such an end. . . . The editor is to be commended for producing an account of a controversy previously neglected, yet in many ways so typical of its period. Unfortunately such congratulations must be tempered with reservation. Past minor controversies, when insufficiently related to the main debates of their period remain the deadest science of all."

TLS p526 Je 15 '67 400w

BROCKWAY, ALLAN R. The secular saint. 238p $4.95 Doubleday

261 Christianity. Secularism

68-10560

A Methodist minister describes "the dissatisfaction felt by so many young people with traditional Christianity. By the term 'secular saint' he means essentially the free Christian living outside the church but . . . obeying the commandments of God. . . . In a series of 'case studies' he discusses the . . . pressures of modern life arising out of emotional strain, isolation, and social mobility. [He] illustrates his arguments with . . . quotations from the Scriptures, Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Reinhold Niebuhr, and Marshall McLuhan." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The author] sees the growing impetus of secularity not as something to be welcomed or feared, but as a fact to be lived with for theologians. Unlike the so-called 'Death of God' theologians, who argue that traditional words and phrases of Christian thought must be abandoned, Brockway attempts to refill these concepts with a meaning that patterns itself after our age. In some cases, he succeeds admirably. His illustrations are well chosen; his arguments convincing. . . . The book follows the thesis that religion does have an intelligible place in what Brockway calls our 'steadystate world,' but it must be a religion willing to reassess its concepts and forms. The book is extremely readable and highly recommended for college students who are not afraid of new ideas on an old subject."

Choice 5:512 Je '68 200w

"As one who likes to think of himself as a secular Christian, I find Brockway's secular saint not particularly attractive. He sounds too much like the ideal middle-class intellectual. Brockway says that children are simply in no position to understand or respond to the 'Christ possibility.' It seems likely that the slum dweller would face the same impossibility. I also reacted negatively to Brockway's emphasis on God as the limit of life, rather than as the absolute demand. . . . Nonetheless [the book] is not without merit. . . . even if we cannot accept Brockway's delineation in full, we can appreciate his effort and be stimulated to continue the quest he has begun." William Hordern

Christian Century 85:1064 Ag 21 '68 600w

"[This] book is recommended for public and academic libraries which serve a young clientele interested broadly in the problems of religion in contemporary American society." J. A. Clarke

Library J 93:83 Ja 1 '68 170w

BRODE, W. R., ed. Science in progress: sixteenth series, 1964-1966. See Science in progress

BRODER, DAVID S., jt. auth. The Republican establishment. See Hess, S.

BRODIE, FAWN M. The devil drives: a life of Sir Richard Burton. 390p pl $6.95 Norton
B or 92 Burton, Sir Richard Francis

66-18069

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by R. G. Gregory
Am Hist R 73:820 F '68 400w

Reviewed by Maurice Richardson
New Statesman 75:44 Ja 12 '68 700w

Reviewed by C. F. Mullett
Social Studies 59:184 Ap '68 500w
TLS p32 Ja 11 '68 1200w

BROME, VINCENT. Freud and his early circle; the struggles of psychoanalysis. 275p il $5 Morrow

150.19 Freud, Sigmund. Psychoanalysis [68-74180]

A study of "the early followers of . . . [the psychiatrist, who were] each constantly analyzing the other's moves and emotions, each concerned to establish his priority and originality. . . . [The author has had] interviews with some of the participants and access to unpublished letters [including those of] Bleuler, Adler, Stekel, Jung, and their colleagues." (Library J)

"Brome, an accomplished writer, an English novelist, biographer and essayist . . . walks a tightrope. He has no interest in writing yet another rabid, slanderous, gratuitous attack on either Freud or his hard-won intellectual victories. Nor does he come off as a cheap gossip, a disrespectful voyeur or a man who gets his thrills by tearing others apart. He obviously admires Freud, and those who surrounded him as well. Indeed his admiration is severe enough to allow a wry kind of detachment. . . . Brome has done his job very successfully. He is a first-rate writer; without exception his sentences are clear and he knows how to be quietly ironic. But most of all he is brave. . . . He has the refreshing good sense to resist idolatry but admire greatness." Robert Coles

Book World p4 Jl 14 '68 800w

"Brome's analysis of [E.] Jones's biography [Life and Work of Sigmund Freud. BRD 1962] and Phyllis Bottome's [Alfred Adler. BRD 1939] reveal his position in the feuds. This book is a vivid portrayal of an extraordinary group of men, and is for the reader concerned with the minutiae of the history of psychoanalysis." Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:561 F 1 '68 130w

"In his account of the early days of psychoanalysis Brome invites us to board a very leaky ship. . . . Danger is evident at the very outset when [he] challenges Ernest Jones' leviathan biography of Freud. Brome enumerates sources he claims were either unavailable to Jones or ignored by him, such as the recently published Abraham-Freud correspondence. But that correspondence was available to Jones, and he did rely on it heavily. . . . The story Brome tries to tell picks up Freud's career around the turn of the century. . . . But Brome misses his chance to tell this story. One of the reasons is the decision to tackle Jones rather than the subject itself." D. M. Kaplan

New Repub 158:33 Je 15 '68 1250w

"How much is there to be added to Ernest Jones's classic biography of Freud? A good deal, no doubt; but how much does Mr Brome know that we haven't been already told? His book is not by any means a total vulgarisation. . . . He has, however, a rather unfortunate tendency to equate Freud and Jung as a pair of originators; it reminds me of the way in which journalists to this day still tend to equate Lenin and Trotsky. Still he does contribute something." Maurice Richardson

New Statesman 74:770 D 1 '67 110w

Reviewed by J. W. Burrow
Sat R 51:31 Je 1 '68 550w
TLS p525 My 23 '68 950w

BROMS, ALLAN. Thus life began; il. by Howard S. Friedman. 326p $5.95 Doubleday 577 Life—Origin. Evolution 67-15354

"A series of short presentations of many subjects, rather than a detailed study of one. . . . [The discussion is limited] to the fields of science concerned with the emergence of life and its progress through many life forms prior to man [and] covers . . . evolution, physiology, biology, embryology, genetics, biology [and] the geological changes . . . that paralleled this evolution." (Library J) Index.

"A popular account of the development of evolutionary ideas and of the origin and evolution of animals, by an engineer who is also a popular science writer and lecturer. In the interest of simplification and popularization, Brome takes certain factual liberties (for example, Amphioxus becomes a vertebrate) but he has skillfully sifted the chaff from the wheat and the important evolutionary steps are emphasized and clearly explained. Well written and readable but includes nothing that cannot be found in most textbooks of biology or evolution. It would therefore be of little value to college libraries, but would be a very useful book for public or secondary school libraries." Choice 5:808 S '68 110w [YA]

"The contributions of many scientists and schools of science are necessarily included in this broad, but superficial history. Although Mr. Brome's presentation is clear, the reader will find that familiarity with pioneers of science and with scientific terminology will aid his understanding." R. E. Swinburne
Library J 92:4010 N 1 '67 140w

BRONSON, WILLIAM. How to kill a golden state. 224p il $6.95 Doubleday

333.7 California—Description and travel.
Natural resources—California 68-11815

This book is "aimed at revealing what an age of mass affluence has done to . . . California in the name of 'progress.' A picture of California . . . is presented in word and . . . black-and-white photographs. . . . This is a California of freeways, autos, smog, pollution, destruction of wildlife, dreariness of landscape, ugly social sores, filthy streets, and cheap-jack architecture." (Choice)

"Through the medium of over 300 graphic photographs, many of the 'before and after' character, and a hard-hitting text and captions, William Bronson shows how men, greedy and ruthless, or thoughtless and careless, are destroying the air, the water, the land, and the forests of the once golden state of California. . . . [He] has made a strong case for conservation and restoration. He has done a service not only to his own state, but since thoughtful people elsewhere will recognize similar symptoms in their own states, to the entire nation. This book should be in every public library and featured there to encourage readers to take count of what is happening."

Best Sell 28:119 Je 15 '68 330w

"Well illustrated and documented. . . . Stylistic qualities are such the book is easily read and understood by the layman. A broader spectrum of degradation is presented than in [R. F.] Dasmann's The Destruction of California [BRD 1965] and Bronson's plea is more convincingly portrayed through his extensive use of photographs."

Choice 5:1118 N '68 180w

BROOKE, RUPERT. The letters of Rupert Brooke; chosen and ed. by Geoffrey Keynes. 709p il $12.50 Harcourt

B or 92

[68-116100]

Contains the correspondence of the English poet who died at the age of twenty-seven. "There are letters to his mother and to . . . friends, including, among many others, Frances Cornford, Gwen and Jacques Raverat, Hugh Dalton, E. J. Dent, Katharine Cox, Edward Marsh, Cathleen Nesbitt, and the editor. The letters range from his Rugby School days in 1904 almost to the day of his death in April 1915." (Publisher's note) Index.

"If I had to choose between [Brooke's] Collected Poems . . . and this volume (which, in fact, is selected letters), I'd settle for the prose. From what one can gather, Brooke (like Byron) wrote a disproportionate number of bad poems, but hardly ever a dull letter. . . . Poignancy—in spite of all the gather-ye-rosebuds energy and the epigrammatical hilarity—is the final impression these letters leave. . . . [Keynes] is a candid and scrupulous editor who, admitting that Brooke was neither a 'major' poet nor a 'great' letter writer, nonetheless here offers him at his most interesting and, I think, his most enduring too." Paul West

Book World p4 N 10 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor p7 D 19 '68 650w

"[Much of the material in this book] has already been set out at pretty good length and analysed by [C.] Hassall [in Rupert Brooke; a Biography, BRD 1964]. . . . The new reader should turn to Hassall, not to this volume. Those who have already been hooked by him can browse with interest here. The love-letters are painful reading: in this field he was unhappy and desperately self-conscious. The letters to his male contemporaries are the best, and give some idea of that gaiety and charm to which all his friends bear witness. There is ample evidence of that fluency in verse which was his standing temptation as a poet. When he drops into that medium in his letters, he is at his best."

Economist 227:51 Je 22 '68 340w

Reviewed by P. W. Filby

Library J 94:77 Ja 1 '69 130w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

New Repub 159:30 D 14 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Philip Larkin

New Statesman 75:798 Je 14 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 24 '68 2200w

"What this voluminous collection of letters . . . reveals is that the author was a far more complex and tortured soul than one would imagine or expect from the single thin volume of his collected poems. . . . Indeed, many in this collection are fine prose poems. Brooke excelled at transmitting his many moods to the reader: a score of letters communicate the gaiety and charm for which he was renowned, but along with the pulsations of joy were also the doldrums of pessimism. . . . It is not only that he wrote to inform, but also that he tended to write in a variety of poses, according to whatever assumed character he thought would amuse each correspondent, and that he regarded each one of his letters as a conscious literary effort." F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 72:120 N 18 '68 1000w

TLS p743 Jl 18 '68 1850w

BROOKS, GWENDOLYN. In the Mecca; poems. 54p $4.95 Harper

811 Negro poetry

68-26544

The title poem of this collection by the Poet Laureate for Illinois tells "a tragic story of a mother's efforts to find a lost child. Although the woman fails to discover her daughter, her search reveals the lost and tragic lives of her neighbors. The decayed pretentiousness of the 'Mecca,' the apartment building in which they live, adds a note of irony to the poem. Short works in this volume include poems of appreciation to Medgar Evers and Malcolm X." (Library J) Some of the poems were first published in such periodicals as Negro Digest, Chicago Magazine, and Sisters Today.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p20 N 3 '68 140w

"[The author] sees beauty and ugliness, hope and despair, strengths and weaknesses, all with equally clear eyes, and she writes it like it is.

. . . Her surface simplicity is deceptive; underneath lie all manner of revealing complexities. . . . Miss Brooks can sum up in a few words a whole battery of implied ideas. . . . [Her] particular, outstanding genius is her unsentimental regard and respect for all human beings. . . . From her poet's craft bursts a whole gallery of wholly alive persons, preening, squabbling, loving, weeping. . . . Unlike some other Negro writers, she realizes that at least some Negro problems are universal problems, intensified because of the circumstances in which Negroes live, but not, finally, apart from the rest of the world." Janet Overmeyer

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 19 '68 550w

"In her first volume of poems in nearly 10 years Gwendolyn Brooks turns from . . . the lyric meters of her earlier work for those of exhortation. . . . In her discovery of new attitudes and in her treatment of new themes, this fine poet has achieved a work which is of added vitality and relevance." Walter Waring

Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 140w

BROOKS, GWENDOLYN. A portion of that field. See A portion of that field

BROOKS, LESTER. Behind Japan's surrender; the secret struggle that ended an empire; with a foreword by Fumihiko Togo. 428p il $8.95 McGraw

940.5 World War, 1939-1945—Peace. World War, 1939-1945—Japan 67-25808

An "account of the last days of the Japanese empire. Brooks, who served in the army under MacArthur in the Philippines and Japan and later as a foreign service officer in Asia, draws upon personal interviews and his own experience as well as published and unpublished documents to tell the . . . story of the various attempts . . . to prevent the surrender of Japan in late August 1945." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"A popularly written but not unscholarly account. Containing much more detail than the briefer accounts of some of the same events found in [R.J.C.] Butow's Japan Decision to Surrender [BRD 1954] or [H.I.] Feis' Japan Subdued [BRD 1961], this book focuses on the personality and actions of Premier Suzuki, Foreign Minister Togo, War Minister Anami, Marquis Kido, and others, including Emperor Hirohito himself. It does not replace the broader writings of Butow, Feis, or [L.] Mosley (Hirohito, Emperor of Japan [BRD 1966]), but is a useful supplement to such works, especially for the undergraduate reader." Choice 5:660 Jl '68 300w

"Brooks recounts the well-nigh incredible sequence of affairs with verve and accuracy. Above all, he reconstructs in considerable depth the attitudes of key military and political leaders towards the conflict and their views upon the conclusion of peace. Much of this story has been told previously in scholarly literature but there is much that is new in this account. Mr. Brooks . . . has made a notable addition to studies of the 'Great Pacific War.' For public and academic libraries." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:72 Ja 1 '68 200w

BROOKS, PATRICIA, jt. auth. The Presidents' cookbook. See Cannon, P.

BROOKS, STEWART M. The sea inside us: water in the life processes [il: Marie Litterer]. 116p $3.95 Meredith

612 Body fluids—Juvenile literature. Diseases—Juvenile literature 68-15205

"The author discusses the composition and functions of body fluids. Many of the short chapters explain various diseases that result from an upset of body fluids, for example diabetes, hemophilia, burns, glaucoma, and kidney function. [Index.] Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"Our bodies are comprised mostly of water and the relationship of this fluid to diabetes, hemophilia. Addison's disease, coronary thrombosis and other ailments is explained in a simple but accurate style. The book should be accessible to all."

Best Sell 28:111 Je 1 '68 90w

"[Written in] clear prose. . . . In some places, such as in the discussion of osmosis, the writing is too technical for beginners and should have included simpler definitions of terms and concepts. However, with its informative diagrams and sketches, this is a good supplement to books on human biology." Isadora Kunitz
Library J 93:13312 S 15 '68 90w [YA]

BROPHY, BRIGID. The burglar. 126p $4.50 Holt 822 68-14926

"In answer to [critics of The Burglar, produced in London in 1967,] Brigid Brophy has written an . . . essay in two parts and it is here published with the text of the play. The first part of her 'Preface' is an apologia to the critics who accused her of being 'combative' and 'pugnacious.' The second part is an . . . examination of crime and punishment." (Library J) The play concerns a burglar who "stumbles into ■ lovers' tryst only to be surprised by the appearance of the betrayed husband and his mistress." (Publisher's note)

"The Burglar is a clever play which, for no reason discernible in print, failed in London. The failure riled Miss Brophy into writing a preface, rather Shavian in both style and length, about art, critics, and her life with both. Her opinions are, as usual, independent and designed to provoke dissent." Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 50w

"Miss Brophy is at once perceptive and reckless, innocent and iconoclastic, disciplined and chaotic. . . . Her seemingly uninhibited and energetic self-exposure also leads occasionally to amateurish, exaggerated exuberance. . . . However, I enjoy her un-English abandon and her insistence . . . on her own convictions. The long preface published here—and it is as long as the text of the play—is much more interesting than the play itself." A. C. Willers
Library J 93:2894 Ag '68 280w

BROPHY, BRIGID. Fifty works of English and American literature we could do without, by Brigid Brophy, Michael Levey [and] Charles Osborne. 150p $4.95 Stein & Day

820.9 English literature. American literature
68-13491

First the authors "explain that they will not bother with stuffed owls—books which are famous merely for being awful. They will turn their attentions only to books which stand generally high in critical esteem. . . . Their list starts with Beowulf ('primitive non-art'). From there it marches . . . through Hamlet, Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, Pickwick Papers, Wuthering Heights, Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, Huckleberry Finn, . . . up to A Farewell to Arms." (Book World)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 221:128 Mr '68 500w

"With each dark name goes an indictment, sometimes as much as two-and-a-half pages worth. (Two pages doesn't seem a lot when one is executing Hamlet, but B.B., M.L. and C.O. are as saving of their own time ■ they are of ours. In effect, these are very small murders.) It is quite true, they concede, that Hamlet is 'a crucial monument in Western civilization,' but all that is 'vitiated by Hamlet's vampirism,' (i.e., he hogs most of the better lines). The authors introduce us to this bloodbath by asking us not to scream at their iconoclasm, which is just the kind of come-on ■ reviewer is sorely tempted to obey. But the trouble with such dogmatism as theirs is that backlash is inevitable. Considered as ■ parlor fight, though, [this book] would be not at all a bad challenge to late-night television." Alice Glaser
Book World p5 F 11 '68 900w

Reviewed by Alan Levensohn
Christian Science Monitor p14 F 15 '68 600w

"I merely want to express my disquiet that this is what British literary criticism should have come to. . . . This sort of half-literate and more than half-ignorant pseudo-criticism would be harmless enough if its perpetrators did not profess an anti-philistine and reformist aim. The danger is that students, bemused by the status, reputations, and qualifications of the authors, may reproduce this kind of waffle in their examination papers." Anthony Burgess Encounter 29:71 Ag '67 3200w

Reviewed by R. J. Thompson
Library J 93:996 Mr 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Victor Strauss
New Statesman 73:722 My 26 '67 900w
N Y Times Bk R p16 F 25 '68 240w
Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 50:30 F 17 '68 110w

"[This] is little more than a compendium of flaunted smartness. Creaking wit, determined spleen, thin, anxious ironies. All the symptoms of an exhausted social eagerness are on display. The aim is for outrageousness, a superb refusal to be lulled by other people's tepid, idle judgments. The effect is of a damp impertinence. A good number of the chosen (or unchosen) works are easy sport, and a few really do deserve oblivion, but they are hounded with a good deal more ineptness than they can themselves be blamed for."

TLS p485 Je 1 '67 600w

BROPHY, JOHN. The meaning of murder. 279p $5.95 Crowell 364.15 Murder 67-11664

A collection of case histories of knifings, stranglings, poisonings, shootings, "intellectual" murders, and "serial" murders. Index.

"Brophy's book is little more than a series of poorly developed case studies. . . . The author fails both in his attempt to show how these acts have sprung from inner pressures and conflicts and to give meaningful social and psychological insight to the phenomenon. Journalistic in form and psychoanalytic in interpretation, Brophy gives no attention to the theoretical insights and empirical research findings about murder which have been increasingly offered by such major disciplinary perspectives as law, psychiatry, sociology, psychology, and anthropology. . . . Scholars still have much to learn about this form of human behavior; it is unfortunate that Brophy's book has little to offer, either theoretically or empirically." Choice 5:128 Mr '68 180w

"Shrewd observation and analysis plus absorbing case histories make this book a natural for the true-crime shelf. American examples are numerous." Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 50:29 My 27 '67 50w

BROSSARD, CHANDLER. The Spanish scene. 113p $4 Viking

914.6 Spain—Civilization 68-16634

A report on present-day life in Spain. A portion of this book first appeared in Look.

"Those of us who have made short visits to Spain welcome ■ book of this kind in which avant garde novelist Chandler Brossard, author of . . . The Double View [BRD 1960], gives a closer view of the Spanish. In the present book he uses his talents for interviewing and observation. . . . Although everyone will not agree with what he sees, his writing is so skillful that it is a pleasure to read his observations. Readership will probably be greatest among those who appreciate this type of informed commentary." L. W. Turpin
Library J 93:1141 Mr 15 '68 100w

"The merit of Brossard's book is not so much what he reveals about Spanish ferment in 1967 as in the way he gets at it. . . . Brossard talks to people from all walks of life. Each dialogue becomes a short set piece revolving about one or two ideas, the essence of which is captured by some sharp statement of observation. These pieces are alternated with paragraph-long 'shots' of street scenes. The effect is somewhat like a Godard scenario in which the documentary scene approaches poetry while the 'made-up stuff' looks like newsreel footage. . . . Brossard asks people from all walks of 1967 Spanish life what their Spanishness means to them at such a critical moment in world history. The responses vary, but the net result is the same: malaise over thirty-one years of Franco's rule. . . . pride in their culture, scorn for the tourist hordes, empathy for the youthful revolts the world over." Daniel Talbot
Nation 206:674 My 20 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Raymond Carr
N Y Rev of Books 11:29 D 19 '68 350w
New Yorker 44:175 My 11 '68 170w

"Brossard wields a vivid little collection of vignettes, a jeweled dagger with a poisoned tip. A writer with a fine eye, a fine ear—and heart—Mr. Brossard has caught much of the best in Spain, and much, much more of the worst. He has talked with many people, but they have a disturbing way of turning into brilliant carica-

BROSSARD, CHANDLER—Continued

tures. . . . He converses at great length with angry young students, angry young workers, angry young priests, and angry Basques; he attends a bullfight with a Communist aficionado; he interviews a stupidly brutal Civil Guard, a flashy business tycoon, an American couple, and even spends an evening, in line of duty, with an amiable prostitute called Lala. . . . As a hot, angry exposé of what's wrong in Spain the book has merit; as an objective analysis it is marred by spleen." Benjamin Welles

Sat R 51:28 Ap 6 '68 230w

BROWER, BROCK. Debris. 228p $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

67-14327

An advertising executive, Merriam Dexter, returns for a hunting weekend to an area on the Carolina coast where he had grown up. The duck-blind he chooses conceals Ray Harris, "who has escaped from an Army stockade. Harris has returned to kill the hunter's guide [Robert Atkins who] . . . has taken advantage of Harris's absence in the Army to take over his wife and his motel. . . . Harris now waits with [a] pistol for Atkins to come back to the blind. The entire action of the novel takes place during the day in which the hunter and the fugitive squat together in the tiny blind." (N Y Times Bk R)

"In contrast to the grim violence of his story, Brower's style is lyrical, underplayed and artful. The control is impressive because he chooses to tell the story in a rather difficult manner. He alternates his focus, by chapter, from one character to another, and creates a different prose style for each. The technique is sometimes intrusive, but it heightens the novel's effect. As events rush toward their culmination their significance shows from three entirely separate points of view. . . . The novel has one serious weakness. It fails to give Dexter's character sufficient depth. . . . Brock Brower's excellent magazine profiles . . . have already established a considerable reputation for him as a writer of non-fiction. Debris, his first novel, uncovers a completely new range of talent." V. T. Hyman

Book World p13 O 8 '67 800w

"The problem, the characters, and the symbolism lose out to heavy use of monologue (perhaps necessarily in poor syntax but still tiring) and to the not-too-exciting attention to ducks, tides, and guns. The book is limited in appeal to start with and not particularly successful." J. M. Carroll

Library J 92:2601 J1 '67 210w

Reviewed by Peter Buitenhuis

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 24 '67 850w

"While the story is primarily concerned with the problem of escape, building considerable tension in the process, the author shrewdly emphasizes the neurotic characteristics revealed by each participant to the infinite enrichment of a narrative that increasingly commands respect for the distinctive talents thus revealed. Not once does Mr. Brower pander to his reader, not once does he compromise with the aesthetic demands imposed by his material. His book is a top-notch piece of work."

Va Q R 44:viii winter '68 140w

BROWER, KENNETH, ed. Navajo wildlands. See Jett, S. C.

BROWER, ROBERT H., ed. & tr. Fujiwara Teika's Superior poems of our time. See Fujiwara, T.

BROWN, A. THEODORE, Jr. auth. A history of urban America. See Glaab, C. N.

BROWN, DAVID, ed. How I got that story. See Overseas press club of America

BROWN, DAVID G. The mobile professors. 212p $6 Am. council on educ.

378.1 Teaching as a profession. Colleges and universities. Labor turnover 67-21046

The author's "purposes are to apply the tools of economic analysis to job-changing professors, to extend wage-employment theory to professional workers, and to recommend changes for the improvement of the market mechanism relating the supply of professors to the demand for them. The findings are chiefly derived from [questionnaires] . . . prepared to provide data on the major factors influencing professional mobility. . . . The study rests upon a market analysis and there are twenty-five recommendations for improving the market mechanism." (J Higher Ed) Index.

"This study is both theoretical and practical. . . . From the practical point, Brown makes perceptive recommendations which . . . should be carefully studied by American higher education at this critical point in staff needs. Probably the best guide to the many intricacies of academic staff needs, and should be available both to administrators and college personnel in all libraries."

Choice 5:1342 D '68 210w

"To a degree, economic concepts are helpful in analyzing the markets for professors, and the author makes professional use of them. The concept of mobility is, of course, fully explored. . . . Although the author has a command of economic analysis and has been aware and cautious in the use of his data, the study does not reveal much by way of economic analysis or findings that would not have been anticipated. Mainly the study should be thought of as a useful and needed confirmation." Meno Lovenstein

J Higher Ed 39:475 N '68 600w

"Coins fewer memorable metaphors than [T.] Caplow and [R.] McGee's The Academic Marketplace [BRD 1958, 1959], yet presents revealing new facts on the professorial 'musical chairs' game played annually across the nation. Some 15,000 questionnaires provided the basis for showing how college teachers learn about jobs, what formal placement procedures exist, and why college teachers choose the jobs they do. . . . Here is much hard data of considerable interest to any scholar about to ring up the moving company." John Calam

Sat R 50:74 D 16 '68 90w

BROWN, DOUGLAS. Against the world; attitudes of white South Africa. 253p $4.95 Doubleday

301.453 Africa, South—Race relations. Africa, South—Social conditions. Europeans in South Africa 68-11754

Racial segregation in the Republic of South Africa is examined here "in its traditional, administrative, and repressive forms. Mr. Brown, a correspondent for the Daily Telegraph and the Sunday Telegraph, condemns apartheid. . . . Yet, the book is not so much about ideology as it is about people, notably the Afrikaans-speaking Boers and the English-speaking white South Africans, with their different psychological, social, and physical responses to the . . . outpost that they have created." (Library J) Index.

"[Americans] can profit from reading [this book]. . . . Brown concentrates on the psychic damage that accompanies the policies of South Africa."

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 40w

"[Brown has] a clarity of insight, a capacity for human understanding, that are quite remarkable. . . . But this is no whitewash job. . . . Wrapped up in the warmth of his sympathy and some of the finest prose in contemporary political literature are a number of pretty sharp denunciations. . . . Yet in the end the book is disappointing. . . . It comes as a let-down when [the author] declines to offer any kind of conclusion. There is no final assessment of the South African case, no real look into the future, no suggestions for the policy-makers to chew on."

Economist 219:489 Ap 30 '66 500w

Reviewed by H. K. Flad

Library J 93:1640 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:13371 S 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 7 '68 220w

"[The author] has written this book, he explains, with the idea of giving white South Africans the sympathetic portrayal they deserve. They have probably never been so well understood by a foreigner. And the results are devastating, for Brown is as unsparing as he is sympathetic. Not surprisingly, his book was banned on receipt in South Africa. [It] is remarkable for evocations of the land and people. . . . The white South African who emerges is a large man, rarely petty, a strange mixture of earnestness, hardness of heart, cruelty and idealism. Whatever the world thinks, he is not a crude racist but a man who has been corrupted to a frightening extent by privilege." Joseph Lelyveid

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 12 '68 460w

Reviewed by Charles Miller

Sat R 51:24 J1 27 '68 600w

"This book takes white South Africans out of the pigeon hole in which the world normally keeps them and brings them vividly to life as ordinary people in a predicament which must be understood before any advice or judgment may be offered. Written in lively, tight language it is a book of considerable insight. . . . But like the country it describes this book is one of strange paradox. Not only does Mr. Brown's journalism become so slick at times as to be misleading, but also, despite his sympathetic and acute perception, there are important facets of the South African scene to which he is surprisingly blind. . . . The major weakness of the book lies in the political analysis of what should be done next. . . . For those visiting South Africa and likely to be seduced by the apparent calm, this book is well worth reading, but for those who have already seen below the surface, and who seek a direction in which to move, Mr. Brown is, alas, no help."

TLS p611 J1 14 '66 800w

BROWN, ELEANOR FRANCES. Bookmobiles and bookmobile service. 471p $11.50 Scarecrow

027.4 Bookmobiles

67-10192

A history of bookmobile service. One chapter is entitled "Choosing the Bookmobile," and the Appendix includes bid specifications for both the regular and trailer type bookmobiles. Another chapter deals with 'Operating Details' and presents material on physical upkeep and loading, charging methods, records and forms, insurance and safety measures, and schedules. The collection problems of staffing, urban and rural service, and publicity and public relations are dealt with. . . . [The] problems of standards and evaluation, costs and budget are also considered." (Library Q) Bibliographies. Index.

"No single comprehensive volume on the subject was available until Eleanor Frances Brown decided to write [this book]." These words from the preface by Gretchen K. Schenk indicate the dimensions of the field. [The book] is at the practical level. . . . [It] should be a most useful addition to the growing shelf of practical works which will help standardize and improve many of the activities of public and school libraries. It certainly should be found in every system library headquarters, and in all larger libraries." Harold Goldstein

Library J 92:3017 S 15 '67 320w

"Covering the minutiae of bookmobile service, this book is a worthwhile and needed contribution to the professional literature and will be a valuable resource volume for those concerned with this aspect of library extension. The many helpful suggestions and practical ideas presented reflects the varied and considerable professional experience of the author . . . who has served as a county librarian, head of a city library, and since 1963, head of the extension department of the Santa Ana, California, Public Library. . . . Considering the price, the book would be much improved with a greater variety in the typewriter composition and the use of justified margins. It also tends to be somewhat repetitious and would have profited by tighter editorial supervision." Frederick Wezeman

Library Q 37:407 O '67 750w

BROWN, GEORGE MACKAY. A calendar of love, and other stories. 156p $3.95 Harcourt

68-12582

These fourteen tales are set in the Orkney Islands. "The title story, and the collection's longest, records the . . . emotional conflicts of a young woman during a year when she experiences the sight of death, the dilemma of courting, the sudden and sharp shame of illicit love. . . . Other tales in the volume deal with a Viking and his crew; at a later moment in time, Saint Magnus the Martyr; still later, a youngster sent home from school in disgrace who, en route, meets a yarn-spinning old salt, a gravedigger, and an extraordinary lass." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:2131 My 15 '68 60w [YA]

"Many [of these pieces] are sketches—deft, graphic, incisive, but still sketches. To match the primitive emotions of his characters, Mr. Brown strains towards a runic style, manipulating refrains and incremental repetition, folk rhythms and local idiom. Full of crafty tinkers, lobster creels, kirkyards and hayforks, these stories exploit local color instead of extending it into a more universal art. Despite two stories that are rich and imaginative (the title story and 'Five Green Waves'), there is more geography than humanity in 'A Calendar of Love.' Too many aprons are raised to too many girls' faces." J. R. Frakes

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ap 28 '68 250w

"[The author is quoted] as saying that since 'there is much mediocrity in modern writing disguising its ordinariness in obscurity, and in all kinds of willful fads and fashions, I write as simply as I can.' The objective is laudable; but simplicity itself, overdone or carried too far, can result in something as artificial and pretentious as some of the fads and fashions Mr. Brown decries, and in these stories the author is altogether too self-conscious about his 'simplicity.' . . . 'Short stories' seems almost too modern a term to apply to these fourteen episodic fragments. . . . They are more like folktales, many of them rather grim and grey. . . . There is a lack of warmth and involvement, and I'm afraid these stories will leave many a reader as cold as Orkney on a winter's night." Eric Moon

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 270w

"At his best [Brown] can produce pleasant light character sketches, or acceptable Quiller-Couch-ish fables. At his worst, in 'The Storm Watchers,' a play for voices, he crosses [John M. Synge's] Riders to the Sea with [Thornton Wilder's] Our Town [BRD 1938]. Some of his literary echoes—a twentieth-century grave-digger with his Yorick; a sixteenth-century priest anticipating Donne's nineteenth Elegy—are unhappy. But his bold, clean narrative line is a strength and there are enjoyable incidentals."

TLS p132 F 16 '67 120w

BROWN, HARRISON, Jr. auth. The Cassiopeia affair. See Zerwick, C.

BROWN, HARRY. A quiet to place to work. 366p $6.95 Knopf

67-18597

An American novelist, Sam Culloden, settles with his wife and teen-age son in a Mexican town [Maldita], to find that detachment in which he can write his next novel. When 22-year-old Lalage enters his life, . . . Sam's resolutions crumble. He visits and socializes and becomes totally involved in a strange circle of American expatriates. His novel is stalled. His wife [Polly] queries whether it will take a death to unlimber his genius. . . . The deaths of an elderly man, a wealthy matron, Lalage's mother, and Lalage herself occur, all entwined and yet individually fated." (Library J) Portions of this book originally appeared in slightly different form in the September 1967 issue of Playboy magazine as a short story entitled A Small Buffet in Maldita.

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore

Best Sell 28:55 My 1 '68 400w

"[The author] has carefully researched his setting, half baked an intriguing collection of misfits and honed a stack of pedantic literary allusions. But he doesn't seem able to get on with it. As a result, his allusions are annoyances, his characters puppets, wasted in reflecting only the mad rectitude of the first-person hero, and the picturesque locale is revealed as sort of a Peyton Place South—at least as far as its gringo colony is concerned. And despite the setting there are only a few Mexicans in this work, the most believable of whom turns out, in the end, to be an impostor from Los Angeles." F. C. Shapiro

Book World p8 My 19 '68 400w

"[Despite] the succession of murder, suicide, fatal accident, natural death, and even a hint of patricide . . . the account escapes both sensationalism and crass violence. Mr. Brown handles character portrayal, setting, and motivation skillfully. A well-written novel of suspense but by no means a mystery, it is slightly reminiscent of previous books with the same setting and the same theme. Substantial and of lasting interest, I would expect it to appeal to a wide audience. For all general fiction collections." J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:1017 Mr 1 '68 200w

"The irony in the book's title is apparent almost before the author and his wife are through unpacking their gear; their finca is surrounded by as hairy a colony of human scorpions as ever disturbed a novelist's peace of mind. Consider: A decadent widow and her terrorized daughter; a much-married expatriate and her latest spouse, an ex-beach bum from Acapulco; a film-star debauchee who has the impact of human catnip; assorted fugitives from Norteamericano mores and law. . . . Brown is a companionable storyteller, with a penchant for Polonius-like ruminations. . . . Beneath the verbal lint are edifying vignettes of lush life south of the Border." Martin Levin

BROWN, HARRY—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p44 Ap 28 '68 200w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:31 Ap 20 '68 1300w

BROWN, HARRY JAMES, ed. The diary of James A. Garfield, v 1-2. See Garfield, J. A.

BROWN, JOE DAVID. Glimpse of a stranger. 279p $5.95 Morrow 68-14809

Paul Fraser, an American playwright living in London, "is depicted in a supposedly routine day—interviews, rehearsals, parties, rounds of drinking—which ends in attempted suicide prompted by his deep spiritual malaise. He goes to India to recuperate and comes under the influence of a lovely, mysterious Frenchwoman [Martine Valois] and her husband [who calls himself Bhajji], a European roué turned Hindu 'holy man.' After an ashram, a pilgrimage, and 'vision,' he is led to 'shake off cynical compromise and become a man of settled goodness.'" (Library J)

"There is much to be said for [this] novel. . . . [Mr. Brown] has a definite feeling for dialogue and tight organization, which keeps the book moving at a swift, clear and suspenseful pace. Too, there is a strong sense of the dramatically effective incident, which partially makes up for certain lack of depth in characterization that necessarily accompanies a style which is bent on presenting the externals of existence. . . . [This] sincere, well-told narrative . . . falters only in the last quarter, when Bhajji attempts to make the unknowable perceptible to Paul and to the reader. . . . Still, Brown's ability to depict the world-weariness of his protagonist and the sights and sounds of modern India is praiseworthy indeed." W. J. Lynch

Best Sell 28:83 My 15 '68 500w

"A compelling, curious story by the author of Kings Go Forth [BRD 1956]. . . . It suggests only a veneer of fiction with its serious discussion of theater, religion, and brief flashbacks to a Midwestern childhood in a fundamentalist Christian household. In spite of its undistinguished style, this book should appeal to the thoughtful reader in college and public libraries." R. R. Gambee

Library J 93:207 Ja 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p28 Mr 24 '68 100w
Time 91:98 Mr 15 '68 300w

BROWN, JOHN RUSSELL, ed. Modern British dramatists; a collection of critical essays. 176p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

822 English drama—History and criticism 68-14462

Twelve theater critics and scholars evaluate the plays of four contemporary British dramatists: "John Osborne, Harold Pinter, Arnold Wesker, and John Arden. . . . The commentators in this volume—including Robert Brustein, A. E. Dyson, Martin Esslin, and Raymond Williams . . . [attempt to] relate each play to others and each author to his contemporaries. They evaluate the meaning of such . . . labels as 'kitchen-sink drama,' 'theater of cruelty,' and other epithets that have been applied to the new English theater, showing how ideas of 'alienation,' 'black humor,' and 'the absurd' have been assimilated by the playwrights and have helped to create a modern theater." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Most of these articles have been previously published in such periodicals as Encore, The Critical Quarterly and Tulane Drama Review.

"[It is helpful] to have these essays collected in one volume. . . . The studies are well written and together they form a worthwhile guide to the current English-speaking stage." Paul Myers

Library J 93:1497 Ap 1 '68 80w

"Most of the criticism is reprinted from various periodicals and represents early appraisals of writers who may not yet have reached their peaks. It is not surprising that the best pieces here are those which look at specific plays—'Look Back in Anger' [by J. Osborne, BRD 1957] and 'The Homecoming' [by H. Pinter, BRD 1967]—and that the weakest are those which attempt to 'locate' the various writers in a theatrical context not yet established of definable. Also noteworthy are discussions of Arden's stagecraft and Pinter's dialogue, and Robert Brustein's analogy between the current English drama and American drama of the 1930's."

Va Q R 44:cxiii summer '68 140w

BROWN, JOHN RUSSELL. Shakespeare's plays in performance. 244p pl $7.95 St Martins

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Stage history 67-11318

The head of the department of drama in the University of Birmingham considers "the text and the actor, the closest points of contact between Shakespeare and those who perform his plays. The stage and stage-action are then considered—again in conjunction with a close study of the texts. [A] third section discusses the audience and the nature of its response; and the final chapters examine particular English productions from recent years, with the object of showing what today's theatre directors and actors have discovered about how to present the plays." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Almost all of Brown's book consists of revisions of articles which have appeared elsewhere. . . . The book lacks organizational unity, but the articles themselves are perceptive. Brown keeps his attention on the 'subtext,' the action of a play implied by the text itself, and in the chapters in which he comments on recent productions he discusses the success or failure of actor and director to make use of the subtext. The book will please those who prefer theatrical criticism to literary criticism of Shakespeare."

Choice 4:1114 D '67 130w

"The strongest impression left by this book is its author's practical experience of the theatre, his understanding of its needs and its possibilities. Thus he can also offer actors and directors a method of approaching the plays that will yield fruitful rewards, while the non-specialist reader and playgoer will find him an intriguing and enlightening guide to what is available from live performances."

TLS p10 Ja 5 '67 390w

"Brown is perceptive and his theatrical approach justifies itself time and again in close and subtle readings of the text. His major limitation is his disposition to project Stanislavski and Freud upon Shakespeare's characters—an understandable disposition for a modern director, perhaps, but not necessarily a sound one."

Va Q R 44:xxvi winter '68 140w

Reviewed by A. B. Kernan
Yale R 57:290 D '67 500w

BROWN, MARCIA. The neighbors: told and pictured by Marcia Brown. unp lib bdg $3.89 Scribner

398.2 Folklore—Russia—Juvenile literature. Animals—Stories 67-24046

This adaptation of a Russian tale by Afanas'yev "tells of the hare and the fox who decide to live cozily as neighbors, for 'the wind is cold and the forest is big.' But spring came, and the fox drove his friend from the house: 'weeping hot tears,' the hare ran off to seek help from other animals." (Horn Bk) "Pre-school to grade one." (Library J)

"Bold, exciting pictures with strong, simple background show the pathetic hare, the gray wolf, the great brown bear, and the fox and the cock—both brilliant red—shedding fur and feathers in deadly combat." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 43:740 D '67 90w

"[This story] is devoid of characteristic folk humor and unconvincing in its separation of these animals from their natural roles—especially in that the cock is the most articulate and that the fox, a natural dominant enemy of poultry, accepts his words. The story does not have apparent parable significance, nor is it clearly in the vein of cumulative tales." E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:858 F 15 '68 130w

"[A] rather pallid retelling of an old Russian tale of the fox outfoxed by a rabbit and a rooster. . . . The verses that are interspersed throughout the story are especially weak; the drawings also lack force, just bordering on Saturday morning cartoon kiddie-show style." Eve Merriam

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p70 N 5 '67 60w
 TLS p1117 O 3 '68 60w

BROWN, MARVIN L. The Comte de Chambord; the Third Republic's uncompromising king [by] Marvin L. Brown, Jr. 225p pl $8 Duke Univ. press

B or 92 Chambord, Henri Charles Ferdinand Marie Dieudonné d'Artois, duc de Bordeaux, comte de 67-23300

An account of the life of the "posthumous son of the Duc de Berry and grandson of Louis XVIII. Henri Comte de Chambord (1820-1833) never reigned in France and, when he died, the House of Bourbon died with him." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"The greater part of Mr. Brown's book indicates the reasons and beliefs behind Chambord's failure to take advantage of the favorable situation of 1871-1873. . . . Chambord's papers were destroyed after his death, but Brown has gathered his documents with exemplary industry and tells his story deliberately, with much detail of the pretender's life and ways. . . . [This] is the first English-language biography of the man whom the Orléanists rightly called Monsieur de Trop, and, despite the biographer's sympathy for his subject, the book does nothing to contradict that view." Eugen Weber

Am Hist R 73:1170 Ap '68 420w

"[This book] offers little that has not been previously known. Chambord's life in exile was very dull; so is this book when dealing with it."

Choice 5:251 Ap '68 180w

BROWN, PAMELA. The other side of the street. 186p $3.50 Follett

67-21175

Linda Knight's "main ambition is to get enough money to move her widowed mother, her brother, and two sisters out of their London tenement building into one of the private houses across the street. Although she feels she is not overly bright, money-making schemes abound in 13-year-old Linda's mind, ranging from collecting commissions from a youthful housecleaning brigade to winning top prize in a TV quiz show. Linda is finally instrumental in moving her mother across the street—when the widower realtor she consulted comes to call and ends up marrying her mother. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Book World p15 F 11 '68 180w

"Told in a rather irksome, all-girls-together style by the oldest daughter, [this] still provides some worthwhile vignettes ■ she chattily describes work in a boutique, the trials of a child-star in TV advertising, or confides some of the makeshifts of poverty." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '68 60w

Horn Bk 44:175 Ap '68 170w

"This is [a] delightful story. . . . Easy reading, sympathetic characterizations, and a glossy image of lower middle class London life." Madalynne Schoenfeld

Library J 92:4249 N 15 '67 130w

"There is in this sprightly story a quality found in so much British children's fiction, a sophistication of tone consisting in part of the treatment of child characters as interesting, and in part of the writing style itself, vigorous yet polished." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:35 Ja 27 '68 190w

BROWN, PETER. Augustine of Hippo; a biography. 463p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Augustine, Saint, Bp. of Hippo 67-13137

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:357 My '68 170w

Reviewed by R. L. Wilken

Christian Century 85:920 Jl 17 '68 650w

Reviewed by J. M. Cameron

N Y Rev of Books 11:30 Ag 1 '68 1700w

BROWN, PETER. The Chathamites; a study in the relationship between personalities and ideas in the second half of the eighteenth century. 516p pl $15 St Martins

920 Statesmen, British, Great Britain—History—1714-1837. Pitt, William, 1st Earl of Chatham. Lansdowne, William Petty, 1st Marquis of 67-18078

"The object of this book is to delineate the influence upon politics and society of two . . . eighteenth-century statesmen: William Pitt, the first Earl of Chatham, and William Petty, second Earl of Shelburne. . . . [Their contribution] is described in general sketches of their careers. These are followed by biographies of five of their . . . followers: Dr. Richard Price, a nonconformist minister; . . . Colonel Isaac Barré, a . . . soldier; John Dunning, First Baron Ashburton, a . . . barrister; . . . Jonathan Shipley, Bishop of St. Asaph; . . . [and] Sir William Jones, the classical scholar, orientalist, poet, and lawyer." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This study covers the era of George III to the successful break of the American colonies. . . . [The] five men variously associated with [Chatham and Shelburne comprise] the 'Chathamites.' . . . These men are unified as they are tied to Chatham and Shelburne over the question of reform; and the author's conclusion indicates all were important for contemporary and later reforms. With excellent research, documentation, and bibliography, this work contributes to the growing literature on the era's reform movement as well as biographic data on lesser known figures." Choice 5:1205 N '68 180w

"Both the title of this book and its subtitle . . . [are] misleading. The Elder Pitt is very far from being the central figure of the book and so far as it has one it is the enigmatic Shelburne. [Brown] has produced a curiously unarticulated, indigestible book. This is partly because he possesses a careless and unmerciful pen—unmerciful, that is to say, to his reader. . . . His sentences hammering out one after another with an absence of harmony (either of thought or style) . . . can only be called wearisome. . . . Yet underneath it all one senses that Mr. Brown has the true enthusiasm of the historian, and that this is, in a sense, a mind-clearing book. . . . He succeeds, here and there, in showing the importance of Shelburne's manifold influence in the larger scale of British political development—a complex and difficult achievement. Then all is suddenly muffled again in summaries of Dunning's case or the development of Unitarianism."

TLS p761 Jl 18 '68 900w

BROWN, RAYMOND E. Jesus: God and man; modern Biblical reflections. 109p $3.95 Bruce pub.

232 Jesus Christ—Divinity 67-29587

In the first chapter the author "exposes the data of the New Testament use of the title 'God,' and concludes that although as a norm 'God' means the Father, Jesus is called God in some texts. This is discussed in terms of the chronology of the texts, of their meaning with regard to Christ's divinity, and of the significance in understanding his humanness. In the second chapter he deals with Jesus' human knowledge, largely in the Catholic problematic. Again his approach is to unfold the biblical evidence of Christ's knowledge and his ignorance. . . . This book is made up of two articles previously published, in part, in different periodicals." (Library J) Part one appeared in Theological Studies and the second appeared in Catholic Biblical Quarterly.

"This re-publication is ■ great service to the many who do not have access to the original periodicals. Brown's balanced approach and clear, readable thought on these two topics will be welcomed by all interested in the current exegetical positions. Unfortunately, the limited nature of these articles precluded any reference to the work of B. van Iersel, Werner Kramer and Ferdinand Hahn in this area." F. J. Goetz America 118:238 F 17 '68 240w

"[The author] uses modern exegetical methods to determine what biblical evidence says about the New Testament use of the term 'God' for Jesus, and the human knowledge of Jesus. Father Brown insists that his intention is to determine as faithfully and as scientifically as possible the teaching of Scripture on these questions; the exegetical approach to a question will be different from the theological approach to the same question. Because of this insistence, the book is a record of his critical investigation into these areas. . . . Brown is faithful to the strict limits of exegesis. By its nature this book is technical and specialized. It is, however, easy to read and will prove to be an asset to any theology library or serious religion section." Richard Walz

BROWN, R. E.—Continued

Library J 92:4419 D 1 '67 150w

BROWN, ROBERT CRAIG, jt. auth. Canada views the United States. See Wise, S. F.

BROWN, ROSCOE C., jt. ed. The Negro almanac. See Ploski H. A.

BROWN, ROY. A Saturday in Pudney. 152p lib bdg $3.95 Macmillan (N Y) 66-15730

This story "tells of a jewel robbery, involving the disappearance of three-year-old Willy Buntley who witnessed it. His brother Dickie collects a posse of friends to search for him and their several lines of inquiry are . . . dovetailed into each other." (TLS) "Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by John Allen
Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 100w

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland
Horn Bk 44:419 Ag '68 160w

"Mystery fans have, no doubt, seen wilder things happen from their armchairs. The characters, among them a couple of West Indian children and a fat bully, provide some variety in the simple plot. Above-average writing brings the children and the London scene to life, though the author displays unrestrained enthusiasm for exclamation points." J. C. Thomson
Library J 93:866 F 15 '68 100w

"Younger, less practiced readers may find [following all of the adventures concurrently] difficult. Good readers (and certainly mystery buffs) will stick with this book to the end. It offers . . . an exciting plot with unexpected twists, and an unusual and satisfying depth of feeling." Joanna Foster
N Y Times Bk R p30 My 12 '68 200w

"The shifting of interest from one group to the next would never have worked if the children had not been clearly realized as individuals, but Mr. Brown has a feeling for character and a keen ear for dialogue that give the book distinction." TLS p439 My 19 '66 200w

BROWN, SEYOM. The faces of power; constancy and change in United States foreign policy from Truman to Johnson. 397p $8.95 Columbia Univ. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations 68-11436

The author "describes and contrasts the manipulations of the military, economic, and moral power of the United States by four presidents during the Cold War. He portrays the shift from the application of simple military force, or the threat of force, to the use of associated economic and political power under President Kennedy as being 'the most effective employment of American strength' (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In his chapter on Vietnam, Brown argues unconvincingly that Johnson had little choice but to escalate the war after his reelection in 1964; the decisions made by Kennedy and by Johnson's own subordinates, Brown contends, made the Americanization of the conflict inevitable. The most interesting aspect of Brown's study is the way in which he traces the continuity of the foreign-policy debate within succeeding administrations. . . . Brown relies on standard published sources, and thus there are few surprises in his study. But he has a gift for clear analysis that makes his book a useful contribution to the Cold War literature." R. A. Divine
J Am Hist 55:429 S '68 470w

"Brown identifies and analyzes the basic policy premises that have determined the international actions of the United States since World War II in this comprehensive account of recent American foreign relations. . . . He shows objective scholarship with a clear and incisive style. The book is directed to the serious student of international affairs, both professional and lay. Because the coverage of recent events is so complete, however, small libraries might find it useful as a reference work." Muriel Weins

Library J 98:758 F 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by K. W. Thompson
Sat R 51:40 S 14 '68 850w

BROWN, THOMAS ALAN. The aesthetics of Robert Schumann. 207p $5.95 Philosophical lib. 780.1 Schumann, Robert Alexander 67-29200
"Brown uses the keyboard music and journalistic writings of the German composer for his study [and attempts to relate the composer's work to] . . . the philosophical-aesthetic thinking of the period." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This valuable book makes a substantial contribution to the study of aesthetics, here particularly as applied to music. . . . Other books have been concerned with Schumann as a music critic, e.g. [L. B.] Plantinga, Schumann as Critic [BRD 1968]. Where they have often been laboriously heavy, even tedious, Brown's study is clearly stated, beautifully organized, and always to the point. Anything which might be thought of as a digression turns out to be part of the fabric in the end. The volume is profusely illustrated with cleanly printed excerpts from Schumann's piano scores. The book is very good indeed." Choice 5:1140 N '68 160w

"The present study perceptively suggests that classical motifs were preponderant in Schumann's aesthetic ideas in his early and later periods, while romanticism was dominant in the middle years (1830-1840). . . . Although of general philosophical interest and appealing to the informed layman, Mr. Brown's study will be most useful to musical experts." William Gerber
Library J 93:3563 O 1 '68 100w

BROWNJOHN, ALAN. The lions' mouths; poems. 54p $3.75 Dufour 67-28704

A collection of poems previously published in such literary periodicals as The Listener, The New York Times and The Times Literary Supplement.

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 30w

"These short poems are calm, often hesitant, and if they have a fault it is that of circling round the point rather than getting down to it. . . . Mr. Brownjohn's best work comes from his mature political concerns, and in 'Ode to Felix' and 'A Hairdresser's' he is sharply intelligent, exact, colloquial, and persuasive. There are some smaller poems of observation, too, such as 'Trio' and 'A Sunday Breakdown', which have the deft rightness of good anecdotes." TLS p125 F 16 '67 160w

BROWNLOW, KEVIN. How it happened here; the making of a film; introd. by David Robinson. 184p il $4.95; pa $2.95 Doubleday 791.43 Moving pictures 68-23756

This is the story of the making of "It Happened Here, the film of the supposedly successful Nazi invasion of England in 1940, begun by an eighteen-year-old schoolboy [in 1956], with no money or backing and a borrowed camera . . . [and] completed eight years later." (Publisher's note)

"It is almost painful to read of the technical difficulties which had to be overcome, the lessons that had to be learned, and the mental growth which was demanded in the eight years when this film . . . was in production." G. D. McDonald
Library J 93:4162 N 1 '68 90w

"Mr. Brownlow tells freshly, with some irony and some occasional anger, of his . . . battle to make and get shown his film. . . . It is a strange and—in that the film did get finished and turned out as good as it did—an encouraging story, modestly and unpretentiously presented." TLS p1082 S 26 '68 80w

BROWNLOW, KEVIN. The parade's gone by. . . 577p il $13.95 Knopf

791.43 Moving pictures—History 68-23955

In this history of silent films the author discusses "the early Vitagraph period, then the move to Hollywood; 'Birth of a Nation' and 'Intolerance' . . . Edward Sloman, William Wellman, Cecil B. DeMille, Josef von Sternberg, . . . Mary Pickford [and others] as directors; the role of the camera men and the art directors; the process of editing, tinting and titling; stunt men; stars; the influence of producers, notably Louis B. Mayer and Irving Thalberg and David O. Selznick; the time of the great comics. . . . There are two special chapters on the silent film in Europe, as well as . . . references to European films . . . One final chapter asks 'Where Do We Go from Here?' (Best Sell) Index.

"Mr. Brownlow's history of silent movies is a work of uncritical love, and is consequently disfigured by exaggerated claims of excellence, long plot summaries, and blobs of purple prose, but these defects are outweighed by the book's merits. . . . One gets divergent reports of the same episodes, characters, and devices, a slapdash, gossipy method which slowly accumulates a body of reasonably established fact . . . and creates a genuine sense of the enthusiastic, inventive, experimental, treacherous milieu in which these people worked. European films are treated very briefly, and financial details probably known only to the recording angel anyway, are hardly treated at all." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:156 D '68 190w

Best Sell 28:348 N 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by John Coleman

Book World pl D 8 '68 950w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway

Nation 207:701 D 23 '68 20w

"Mr. Brownlow has gathered close to 300 superb stills, many of them never before published. . . . As might well be expected of a competent young picture director and editor . . . Brownlow tells his story with close-ups, middle and long shots. No parade was ever better organized or more skillfully conducted, and it marches to a nostalgic melody of praise for the golden era of silent movies. . . . With scores of reminiscences . . . preserved for posterity by the labors of Mr. Brownlow, it may seem ungrateful and ungracious to say that his book has one major flaw—its fundamental thesis. 'The art of the movies was not 'killed' by the advent of sound.'" Arthur Mayer

N Y Times Bk R p1 D 8 '68 1700w

"In [this] fascinating new word-and-picture book . . . the silent-film era speaks up for itself. . . . The old greats—actors, directors, producers, stunt men—step up to Brownlow's notebook and tell it like it was in a prodigious series of interviews that make up half the book. These interviews and recollections, and . . . Brownlow's own knowledge of filmmaking . . . show precisely what was grand about the parade gone past so that the reader ultimately wishes that the whistle had never blown on the era and the silents had never learned to speak. Each chapter is a beautiful mix of personal reminiscences of the great . . . plus the author's own insight into a star, a trend or a technique." T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:104 N 11 '68 950w

BRUBAKER, STERLING. Trends in the world aluminum industry. 260p $6.95 Resources for the future; Johns Hopkins press

338.2 Aluminum 67-16035

This "survey of the world aluminum industry today centers on the prospects for the developed as against the less developed countries as sites for smelters and other processing facilities. The main topics discussed are consumption and production trends, the technological characteristics of the industry, trade patterns and the effect of company and national objectives on plant locations, . . . and technological changes which may . . . affect the industry in the future." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Brubaker has had to cut across a wide range of subjects, and has done an exemplary job of analyzing an important commodity. The book deserves an audience not only for its subject but for its method." M. A. Adelman

Am Econ R 58:626 Je '68 700w

"The emphasis clearly is on locational trends rather than on domestic or North American market structure and performance, as in [D. H.] Wallace, Market Control in the Aluminum Industry [BRD. 1938]. . . . This study is useful as a supplement to (and partly an updating of) Wallace . . . in microeconomics, but is much more useful as a careful study of the economic issues in establishing a major industry in underdeveloped areas."

Choice 5:1180 N '68 170w

BRUCE, I. A. F. An historical commentary on the 'Hellenica oxyrhynchia'. 177p $5.50 Cambridge

938 Hellenica oxyrhynchia. Greece—History—Sources 66-19605

This analysis is based on "both the London and Florence papyri which between them provide all the surviving fragments of the text [of the] Hellenica Oxyrhynchia, an anonymous history of events in the Greek world in the late fifth and early fourth centuries B.C. Dr Bruce begins with a brief description of the two papyri. He then discusses the Oxyrhynchus historian's style and method—his sources, chronology, bias, interest in causation, etc. The introduction ends with a résumé of the numerous theories of the author's identity. . . . The main part of the commentary is arranged in the form of notes on the sections of the Greek text, with occasional . . . notes on particular words or phrases." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

"The historical content of the two papyri has needed methodical, critical analysis for some time; this charge has been admirably met by Professor Bruce. . . . The commentary is not intended for the casual reader but for those seriously at work on the problems of the battle of Notium (Florence papyrus) or the events of the mid-390's described in the London papyrus. The commentary is to the Teubner text of V. Bartoletti (1959) and textual criticism is limited to variant readings which affect the sense of the narrative. The historical commentary is minute. . . . Bruce's command of the considerable modern literature is as impressive as his citation of it is spare and to the point. . . . This book is an important contribution both to the history of the period and to the science, or rather art, of source criticism." F. J. Frost

Class World 61:422 J1 22 '68 290w

TLS p766 Ag 24 '67 90w

BRUCE, LOIS MARGARET. Space ABC. unnp il $4; lib bdg $4.65 Bobbs

629.4 Space sciences—Pictures, illustrations, etc.—Juvenile literature. Alphabet books 67-21476

"This is a space alphabet book with a two-page spread of black-and-white photographs for each of the letters which introduce such words, names and acronyms as astronaut, Kepler Crater, LEM nosecone, quasar. Four pages at the end of the book briefly define each term. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Unfortunately the pictures will mean almost nothing to a reader bent on learning his alphabet. K, for instance, comes with a picture of the Kepler crater. It is hard to believe that a kangaroo isn't still the best bet." J. C. Waugh

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 60w

"A note on the jacket declares this to be a book for all ages. However, those who are learning to use the alphabet will find no clues from some of the pictures to suggest the word illustrated; those who are beginning to read will find the vocabulary difficult; those who can read and understand the explanations will find the book trivial." O. V. Fortier

Library J 92:4610 D 15 '67 110w

"If a very young reader is emotionally in the space age, the book will please him." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:151 D '67 100w

BRUNDAGE, BURR CARTWRIGHT. Lords of Cuzco; a history and description of the Inca people in their final days; with drawings from Huaman Poma. 458p $6.95 Univ. of Okla. press

980.3 Incas. Cuzco, Peru, Peru—History 67-15576

The author "covers the last generation of the independent Inca Empire: the reign of Huáscar, the civil war between Huáscar and his half brother Atahualpa of Quito, and the fugitive Inca state of Vilcabamba. Most of the volume is devoted to a . . . description of social and political life among the Incas of

BRUNDAGE, B. C.—Continued

Cuzco, the remarkable system of households of dead emperors and the living one, and the civil war." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Brundage's second book on the Incas fundamentally retraces, in greatly amplified form, the last part of his first volume, Empire of the Inca [BRD 1964], but with a separate and sharply defined focus on the Incas of Cuzco. . . . Within its smoothly flowing, attractive presentation, the volume conceals a complicated and distinctly debatable series of insights and interpretations that are inevitable, given the nature of the materials. . . . Ethno-historians are likely to argue a long time over this volume. One thing, however, is clear: It is a possible account, boldly and brilliantly done." Woodrow Borah

Am Hist R 73:1684 Je '68 320w

"A major contribution to our understanding of a vanished culture, [this] is so marred by failures of style and organization that only the specialist or the most passionate amateur will read it with much pleasure. . . . Working largely from Spanish-language sources, [Brundage] has made a great deal of this information available for the first time to the English-speaking reader. . . . This is an important study and a basic source for anyone seriously interested in the remarkable Inca state. . . . One wishes that the University of Oklahoma Press . . . had kept a tighter rein on Mr. Brundage's flights of prose, and perhaps had given him more assistance with the difficult job of ordering his topics. His flaws as a writer should not have been permitted to cripple this extraordinary work of cultural history." Robert Silverberg

Sat R 50:58 N 25 '67 450w

BRUNNER, HERBERT. Old table silver: a handbook for collectors and amateurs; tr. by Janet Seligman. 223p il pl $17.50 Taplinger 739.2 Silverware. Silversmithing 67-95446

The author discusses "silver tableware used from the 14th Century to the rise of Empire style in the early 19th Century. . . . He shows the chronological and the stylistic developments in hollow pieces, tea and coffee services, trays, eating utensils, and candlesticks." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of artists. General index. Originally published in 1964 entitled Altes Tafelsilber.

"Because [Mr. Brunner] emphasizes silver of northern Europe rather than that of France or England (although he includes pieces from those countries), he gives the reader rare information on important continental workshops. He includes an illustrated summary index of marks. . . . This handbook is recommended for libraries that need succinct information on continental silver." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:4145 N 15 '67 160w

"[This book] excludes ornamental pieces and those used about the house. . . . As [it] was written by a German for Germans [Brunner] is at his best when dealing with German silver. . . . The 261 half-tone figures are well chosen and reproduced. . . . While the book can be recommended for beginners, some qualifications must be made. Its unsatisfactory features are spot-lit by the bibliography, which remains that of the original 1964 German edition except for the addition of two later books on German marks. This is unfortunate because in recent months important books on English and foreign silver have appeared. . . . The original 1964 bibliography was not above criticism since it would seem to have been compiled without checking on the books listed. Some were trivial. . . . [However the translation] is excellent." TLS p1236 D 21 '67 320w

BRUSTLEIN, JANICE. See Janice

BRUTON, ERIC. Clocks and watches, 1400-1900. 208p pl $10 Praeger

681 Clocks and watches—History 67-14706

The author, who was editor of Horological Journal and Goldsmith's Journal, emphasizes "the development of the mechanism of timepieces and the characteristics which identify periods and craftsmen. . . . He discusses and illustrates timepieces from the earliest still-working Salisbury Cathedral clock to those made in the 20th Century. . . . He has also included a chapter of advice for the clock and watch purchaser." (Library J) Dictionary of craftsmen. Chronology. Index.

Economist 229:49 D 21 '68 90w

"[Mr. Bruton writes] in such a way that even the technical terminology becomes understandable to the layman. . . . Recommended both for special and general collections." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:2392 Je 15 '67 200w

"[This book adds little] to what has already been published, though [it provides an excellent and well-illustrated general historical survey. . . . [It is] well produced with first-rate half-tone plates and drawings of technical details."

TLS p58 Ja 18 '68 90w

BRYANT, SIR ARTHUR. Set in a silver sea. 359p $5.95 Doubleday

914.2 England—Social life and customs. Great Britain—Social conditions. Great Britain—History 67-15002

This is the author's second book "in a series on English social history, in which his aim is to show the nature of the English people, their way of life and how their society evolved. . . . [The first volume, The Medieval Foundation of England (BRD 1967) surveyed English history up to Wyclif. Here Bryant] picks up the story of English life in the London of Samuel Pepys. . . . Then he traces English life [up to the end of the reign of Queen Victoria] eschewing politics and wars except for their effects on English life. He touches on . . . sports, food, farming, kings, in palaces which stank, the leisured life of the wealthy, businessmen battling to gain a profit, the pleasant English countryside in the 18th Century, and the teeming cities and towns with their wealth, disease, and filth." (Library J) Indexes of subjects and of names and places.

Reviewed by Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:71 My 15 '68 550w

Reviewed by E. M. Yoder

Book World p14 My 12 '68 750w

"There are similar histories written perhaps with an erudition, an encyclopedic knowledge, equal to that displayed here, but where else will you find such artistry in the telling, such verve, such an unflinching felicity in quotation such a flair for discerning not only the picturesque and dramatic, but the truly revealing detail? All of which might still not amount to very much were it not for Sir Arthur's ability to plumb the deeper currents of thought and emotion underlying the scenes he so brilliantly reconstructs. . . . This is a book that no one who loves England can afford to neglect." Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor p9 My 11 '68 750w

"A drawback for the American reader is the need to have some acquaintance with the events in English history to which Sir Arthur often alludes. Nevertheless, the book presents a full, detailed picture of English life and society, the variety, the good times, and the violence. Sir Arthur has accomplished his task in masterly fashion. Recommended for public and academic libraries." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:749 F 15 '68 280w

New Yorker 44:92 J1 13 '68 110w

BRYANT, ROBERT H. The Bible's authority today. 235p $4.95 Augsburg

220.1 Bible—Evidences, authority, etc.

68-13429

"Recognizing that the significance of the authority accepted yesterday is being seriously questioned today by older persons as well as by youth, Robert Bryant seeks to clarify the main lines of the Bible's role in the Church and to help the reader appreciate the bearing of the biblical message upon his concrete existence in the world. He presents his argument in three parts: the background to the present situation, concentration upon vital issues implied in the interpretation of the biblical message for the Christian community, and his conclusions." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Bryant touches on most of the topics that awaken curiosity among laymen who have more than a superficial interest in the Bible. No startling new thesis, but some good sense."

Christian Century 85:561 Ap 24 '68 30w

"Although certain Christian groups may differ with some of Mr. Bryant's observations, all serious-minded Christians will find the work profitable. Recommended for purchase by libraries having a religious collection." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:2879 Ag '68 160w

BRYER, JACKSON R. The critical reputation of F. Scott Fitzgerald; a bibliographical study. (Archon bk) 434p $15 Shoe String 016 Fitzgerald, Francis Scott Key—Bibliography 67-24031

"This check list deals first with the reviews of each of Fitzgerald's books, then with articles in English on him, thereafter with books and sections of books discussing him. The fourth section combines foreign books and articles and the fifth lists various M.A. essays and doctoral dissertations on him. . . . In an appendix appears a chronology and a roster of Fitzgerald's first editions and first appearances in periodicals." (Am Lit) Chronology. Index.

Am Lit 40:112 Mr '68 90w

"Not descriptive bibliography but an annotated listing of what reviewers and literary critics said about Fitzgerald from [This] Side of Paradise [BRD 1920] on. . . . Excellent index. A book to assist scholarship, not baby it. All college libraries should buy Bryer whether they subscribe to Fitzgerald Newsletter or not."

Choice 5:607 J1 '68 80w

"[Bryer intends this compilation as] 'a reference tool assisting research already begun and . . . a bibliographical study stimulating new research by suggesting the problems involved in any assessment of Fitzgerald's works and literary career.' . . . Both purposes are well served by the annotations which accompany nearly every entry. . . . These annotations—lengthy and brief—reflect the same scholarly precision found throughout the text." John Kuehl

Mod Lang J 52:245 Ap '68 900w

TLS p826 Ag 1 '68 200w

BUBE, RICHARD H., ed. The encounter between Christianity and science. 318p $5.95 Eerdmans

215 Religion and science 67-13987

This book "is written for anyone who is personally confronted by the apparent conflicts of traditional Christian doctrine with the claims of modern scientific research. Its aim is to help those whose faith is threatened by the rise of doubts and questions, and to lead those who acknowledge the power of the scientific method to see that all the problems of life are not to be solved through the impersonal activities of science. [It] begins with . . . discussion of the nature of science and of Christianity so that the terms of the subject matter may be made clear. . . . Next, the methods of understanding both the natural world and the biblical record are investigated. . . . The remaining six chapters set forth the specific relevance of this discussion in astronomy, geology, the physical sciences, biology, psychology, and the social sciences." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index of subjects. Index of names. Index of scripture references.

"Of these essays full of creative bending and stretching by generally conservative Christians, perhaps the best is David O. Moberg's on social science. Many of the essays further the discussion of the intention of language in Scripture and in science."

Christian Century 85:688 My 22 '68 40w

"[The six contributors] are men of undoubted standing as scientists. . . . They do not try to fit matters discussed into the pattern of some particular theological or philosophical position. The book contains chapters outlining the nature of religion, and natural and biblical revelation. Specialists then present brilliant summaries of their findings in astronomy, geology, physical and biological sciences, psychology and social science, frankly noting implications for Christian theology. The point is well made that science can play a significant part in the understanding and exposition of Christianity. The book is recommended for public libraries."

Library J 93:2878 Ag '68 120w

BUBER, MARTIN. A believing humanism: my testament, 1902-1965; tr. and with an introd. and explanatory comments, by Maurice Friedman. 252p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

200.2

67-25379

A collection of the late philosopher's short pieces, pensées and poems gathered by him as 'an after-reading, a gleaning, in the exact sense of the word. . . . In the selection of what has been taken from the literary yield of all these years—the oldest piece stems from 1902, the newest from 1964—no other principle has ruled than this: that and only that belongs here which appears to me today as a valid, as a survival-worthy expression of an experience, a feeling, a decision, yes even of a dream." (Author's Foreword)

Choice 5:1119 N '68 140w

"Here, the distinguished philosopher and humanist . . . tries to define his own faith, a faith based not upon existing creeds but on his own understanding of man and nature. . . . Dr. Buber's writings always deserve attention and much serious reflection. Recommended for religion and philosophy collections." Howard Ozmon

Library J 92:4419 D 1 '67 140w

"The publisher calls these 'some of the most significant and meaningful of Martin Buber's writings.' They are for the most part anything but major, yet they are significant and meaningful. . . . The book includes some revelatory but not artful poetry, introductions to books, memorials to friends, and some moral equivalents of luncheon addresses. . . . Because of the fundamental unity of Buber's life, despite all the necessary shifts necessitated by the events of the century, these minor writings are not beside the point. . . . Existentialism is out of vogue; so is 'God-talk.' Yet Buber was in many ways an existentialist and one who talked of God. He has proved to be a more elusive target than his peers and a generation of theologues in a mood of putting-down-father has not concentrated on him. . . . He speaks to many today and as a survivor of many of his own spiritual sons, deserves attention." Martin Marty

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 14 '68 1500w

BUBER, MARTIN. On Judaism; ed. by Nahum N. Glatzer. 242p $5.95 Schocken

296 Judaism

67-28091

This collection of twelve addresses is divided into two parts: The early addresses (1909-1918) and The later addresses (1939-1951).

Reviewed by Hugh Nissenson

Book World p5 Ap 7 '68 650w

"Useful primarily to students of Buber, the material has some historical interest as well, especially as it reflects upon the Jewish world of western Europe at the turn of the century, outside the religious (orthodox) establishment. Libraries with limited resources might concentrate on more relevant works such as I and Thou [BRD 1938, and] Tales of the Hasidim [BRD 1947, 1949]."

Choice 5:636 J1 '68 140w

Christian Century 84:1527 N 29 '67 30w

"Culled from various editions, 12 of Buber's finest essays are presented here in felicitous translation. They are accompanied by a superb epilogue by the editor. . . . Buber's passionate love for Judaism and his conviction of its relevance for modern life is perhaps the fundamental underlying fact of all his writings. Students of Buber will therefore find the collection an indispensable introduction to his total thought." M. A. Cohen

Library J 92:4160 N 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by Martin Marty

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 14 '68 1500w

"There is passion in [these addresses], and a prose style that embraces both the analytic and the apocalyptic. . . . On Judaism . . . [reveals] much of the bedrock on which [Buber's] other writings are based. The earlier addresses in particular are rich in observation and insight. . . . Buber is not simply engaged in assigning priorities or in special pleading for Judaism. . . . The essence of Judaism, he insisted, . . . leads man to penetrate the very heart of the world with a passionate demand for justice. Whether Jewish, Christian, or secular humanist, anyone who shares this passion will find in these prophetic pages more than an ally or an exemplar. . . . He will also, if he listens attentively, learn a good deal about himself." W. R. Miller

Sat R 51:33 F 10 '68 1800w

BUCHHEIM, HANS. Totalitarian rule; its nature and characteristics; tr. from the German by Ruth Hein; with annot. by Kurt P. Tauber and the translator. 112p $4.50 Wesleyan univ. press

321.9 Totalitarianism 68-25417

This story of totalitarian rule as it has risen and flourished—or fallen—in the . . . twentieth century [draws] its examples largely from Hitler's Germany and Communist Russia. . . . [It discusses] the characteristic features of life under such a regime: the transformation of existing values and beliefs, the perversion of justice and morality; . . . and the obliteration of freedom and truth." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Originally published in 1962 entitled Totalitäre Herrschaft.

"[Buchheim] uses a holistic approach to attempt to penetrate the essence of totalitarianism. . . . [He] regards German National Socialism and Russian Communism as the only true totalitarian systems, relegating Mussolini's Italy or Franco's Spain to the category of authoritarian systems with some totalitarian tendencies. A brief review cannot even suggest the perceptive insights of this essay, which will come to occupy a major place in the literature of totalitarianism. The conclusion . . . is, one fears overly optimistic. A word ought to be said also about the high quality of the editing and the translation."

Choice 5:1218 N '68 200w

"Buchheim shows how the meaning of totalitarianism has changed from the 1920's when it was defined as a 'unitary' or 'authoritarian' . . . form of rule to the rise of the Third Reich and Communism when the definition was expanded to mean a total regulation of all social institutions to further the goals of the state. . . . To achieve its goal of controlling completely all life and thought, the state must set up a vast network of functionaries. The whole structure 'finally degenerates into a chaos of paralysis and excess organization.' Mr. Buchheim concludes that ultimately totalitarianism must of its very nature fail. The book is recommended for strong history and political science collections." Suzanne Lennon

Library J 93:3567 O 1 '68 180w

BUCHLER, A. Studies in sin and atonement in the Rabbinic literature of the first century; with prefatory note by the Chief Rabbi; prolegomenon by Frederick C. Grant. 461p $12.50 Ktav

296 Judaism. Sin. Atonement 67-11903

This is a reprint of articles by a Judaic scholar, former principal of Jews' College, London, evaluating and interpreting Rabbinic statement on five topics. These essays were originally published in London in 1928 as Jews' College Publications, No. 11. Contents: Chapter I. Obedience to the Torah, its source and sanction; Chapter II. The service of God for the love or the fear of Him and the right attitude to suffering; Chapter III. The defiling force of sin in the Bible; Chapter IV. The defiling force of sin in post-Biblical and the Rabbinic literature; Chapter V. Atonement of sin by sacrifice.

"[This reissue] will prove to be of great value to the scholar interested in first-century Jewish thought. With the exception of the Prolegomenon, by F. C. Grant, the work is identical with the original; Grant's evaluation of the doctrines discussed, particularly with reference to Christian scholarship, is most enlightening. While [G.] Moore's Judaism in the First Century of the Christian Era [BRD 1927] and Montefiore and Loewe's Rabbinic Anthology will continue to serve the undergraduate, scholars and upperclassmen involved in research projects or honors work in this field will find the book a valuable guide to sources; a fair knowledge of Hebrew will help with its full utilization. . . . It is a must for any library that wants to consider itself complete in this field."

Choice 5:1146 N '68 120w

"Adolf Büchler, who died in 1939, was probably England's foremost Judaic scholar when he completed these five interrelated essays. His studies are not limited narrowly to the literature of the subtitle, but include the Bible itself as well as Hellenistic and apocryphal Jewish literature. The Dead Sea literature was, of course, still unknown, and early Christian literature is generally not discussed; however, a new preface by Professor Frederick C. Grant makes up for these deficiencies somewhat. . . . Büchler's scholarship is superb, but his style is difficult even for the serious reader. If, as Professor Grant seems to think, the author set out to prove that Judaism was not a 'bookkeeping religion,' we have, at least, apologetics of the highest order. I feel, however, that the work with its many informative irrelevancies was intended mainly to advance scholarship. For academic, biblical, and serious Judaic collections." A. A. Greenbaum

Library J 92:4004 N 1 '67 150w

BUCHWALD, ART. Have I ever lied to you? 256p $5.95 Putnam

817 U.S.—Civilization—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. 68-15500

The author, who writes three columns a week for newspaper syndication, has collected nearly 120 articles on such topics as "the draft, the war in Vietnam, TV, paper dresses, drop-outs, space exploration, racial antipathies, Israeli-Arab animosities, Chinese communism, the Presidency, economics and others." (Best Sell)

"[Mr. Buchwald chooses] topics [that] amuse or bemuse or confuse him and he talks (or writes) about them with sly or slashing wit and insight. Open the book almost anywhere and you will find something that will make you smile or think or both."

Best Sell 28:16 Ap 1 '68 140w

"Art Buchwald is probably the greatest satirist in English since Pope and Swift. . . . His humor, though keen, is tolerant. It springs from his sense that the world is mad, which saves him from ethical or moral purpose. . . . [This] is a bedside book, but in quite the opposite sense from what is usually meant by that phrase. It should . . . comfort one on waking up in the ghastly dawn of another day, wondering whether one can churn another batch of the same sour cream. Then is the time to turn on the light and reach for Buchwald." Dean Acheson

Book World p1 My 26 '68 1300w

"[Mr. Buchwald's] column is one big trick that is not meant to deceive for a second. He likes to pretend that his highly individual style and opinions do not belong to him at all. His specialty is to seize on some topic in the news, hand it over to two imaginary characters . . . and allow us to eavesdrop. Then his points are made, his punchlines fired off inside quotation marks. . . . Mr. Buchwald is not always funny. He is sometimes irritating (perhaps when it is my prejudices he is pricking), and he can be ponderous. But at his deftest and lightest, he can knock you down with his feathers." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 16 '68

750w

Reviewed by Carol Tefft

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by S. W. Little

Sat R 51:94 Ap 13 '68 20w

BUCK, PEARL S. The new year; a novel. 255p $5.95 Day

68-11296

Kim, "the half-Korean 12-year-old son of an American, [Christopher Winters], who sired him during the Korean War, is brought to this country and is taken into his father's household at the insistence of the man's understanding wife. The father is campaigning for Governor [of Pennsylvania] at the start of the story and wins the election. The climax comes when he and his wife give a New Year's Eve party and introduce their son to the assembled guests." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 28:2 Ap 1 '68 650w

"Unlike many of [Pearl Buck's] earlier novels, this one, written in connection with her recent campaign to provide for Korean children, has a cause. A good story, well told, this novel should be in library fiction collections." Barbara Marconi

Library J 93:1017 Mr 1 '68 150w

"Although The Good Earth [BRD 1931] calls them on, Mrs. Buck long ago lost her grip on a younger reading audience. . . . This latest is a case in point. It centers on the reactions of scientist Laura Winters to the discovery of her husband's illegitimate . . . son, fathered while Chris was in Korea. The sad, compellingly needful boy may strike a responsive chord, but from the over-40's rather than the under-20's." C. L. Tefft

Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 Mr 24 '68 220w

BUCK, PEARL S. To my daughters, with love. 250p $4.95 Day

301.41 Woman

67-24634

Dedicated to the author's seven daughters, this book contains chapters on youth, love and marriage, children, woman's role and values to live by.

"Once more this distinguished author has given us a vitally important message, one that should be read by . . . anyone concerned with the problems facing society today. . . . In outlining the various problems each [woman] must face—education, love and marriage, sex, the Pill—she emphasizes the essential principle of responsibility. . . . For every library, and for prominent feature in young adult collections." Gillian Olechno

Library J 92:2796 Ag '67 200w [YA]

"This is the kind of book a wily father might give a son about to get married to alert him to some of the chips he might find on a wife's shoulder."

N Y Times Bk R p21 D 17 '67 100w

BUCKLEY, WALTER. Sociology and modern systems theory. 227p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

301 Sociology. System analysis 66-30824

"An exposition of the ideas of general system theory and a discussion of the way they apply to theoretical sociology. The first two chapters present a critique of existing 'models' of social structure and process, specifically the 'equilibrium' and the 'organic' models of society. . . . Chapters 3 and 4 deal with the basic concepts of system theory and an interpretation of certain directions in social psychology (Newcomb, Secord and Backman, Ack-off) in the light of these concepts. Chapter 5 deals with organization and institutionalization. The last chapter treats social control, process, legitimacy, and bureaucracy." (Am Soc R) Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

"The present volume calls attention to new developments in the so-called general system theory, which may lead the proponents of 'models of society' toward a more fruitful and rigorous methodology. . . . The book will be of interest to the social scientist receptive to the idea that a broadening of the conceptual horizon of the natural sciences can shed light also on social science. The author's outlook is, as one would expect, optimistic. At the same time, however, he avoids the facile tone of scientism that has marred a number of similar approaches to the subject." Anatol Rapoport

Am Soc R 33:463 Je '68 700w

"Included for criticism are the mechanical, organic, and process models, with special attention given to the efforts of Parsons and Homans. Every criticism of consequence ever launched against these models is marshalled once again, which makes the chapter must reading for hard-pressed graduate students in search of instant wisdom. . . . The book closes with an excellent discussion of the concepts of power, influence, and authority. . . . My opinions of this book are . . . mixed. Buckley has not written a book that will, as he intended, inform his colleagues. Neither does he talk to beginners. . . . However, he knows his subject, and he has presented an attractive conceptual framework that integrates cybernetic and information-theory concepts with an open-system theory view of human organization." P. E. Mott

Ann Am Acad 337:204 My '68 600w

"The book is both a theoretical advance and a good review of previous theories. The two concluding chapters apply Buckley's approach to different fields of sociology which have been most open to criticism under previous approaches. These chapters are often disappointing in their sketchiness and show that much needs to be done along these promising lines. For advanced undergraduates or graduates in sociology, Buckley succeeds in uniting such older concepts as evolution, homeostasis, and structure in a framework which clarifies their meaning—in itself an achievement of note." Choice 5:688 Jl '68 170w

BUCKLEY, WILLIAM F. The jeweler's eye [by] William F. Buckley, Jr. 378p $6.95 Putnam

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Politics and government 68-15501

A collection of articles written since 1962, presenting the author's views on social conditions, politics and American foreign policy. The material in this book has previously appeared in various periodicals including Esquire, The Saturday Evening Post, Commonweal and the National Review. Index.

Reviewed by G. M. Costello

America 119:165 S 7 '68 700w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:106 Jl '68 20w

"[Buckley] considers himself specially equipped to see where truth lies hidden, hence his claim of a 'jeweler's eye', with or without a loupe. But he is easy to read, whether one agrees with him at all times, sometimes, or not at all."

Best Sell 28:158 Jl 1 '68 100w

"An air of unreality permeates Buckley's cogitations, as if the complex affairs of men had been reduced to straight lines and plotted on graph paper. . . . Nowhere in these pages, for example, does Buckley take a stand on some recognizable American tradition. . . . [Nor] is there any defense of capitalism in these pages, perhaps because Buckley finds it uncongenial to be for anything, resembling in this regard your average radical journalist. What then is left? The answer, quite simply, is anti-Communism. . . . [Buckley] is far more willing than most men to contemplate nuclear war against Communism, and in what is surely the most remarkable essay in this book, he proceeds to demonstrate that an all-out nuclear war would not be as bad as 'pacifists and collaborators' would have us believe." Walter Karp

Book World p14 Je 30 '68 1600w

"Raspy, graspy short broadsides. . . . A rather heavy dose of Buckley, but even in reminiscence there are few dull moments, and the last two essays, tributes to dead sisters, ought to bring a tear even to thoroughgoing antisentimentalists."

Christian Century 85:874 Jl 3 '68 70w

Reviewed by R. C. Bergenheim

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 29 '68 400w

"One may violently agree or violently disagree with what acerbic 'Mr. Conservatism' has to say, but about the perceptive incisiveness of Buckley's mind and the clarity of his writing all must agree. One always knows just where he stands—and more important—why. Although this is a disjointed collection of . . . essays presented over a period of five years . . . each is independent in itself. . . . Topics range over a wide panorama of subjects from 'The End of the Latin Mass,' to 'Bobby for King,' and 'Truman Capote's Ball.' There are particularly enlightening evaluations of Herbert Hoover and Douglas MacArthur. . . . There is something here for everyone and very possibly this book, or certainly parts of it, may be among the most discussed literary releases of the year. It is generally recommended." W. C. Kiessel

Library J 93:2467 Je 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner

Nat R 20:753 Jl 30 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Mario Puzo

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 15 '68 1100w

BUCKMASTER, HENRIETTA. The lion in the stone; a novel. 464p $6.95 Harcourt

68-23579

"The year is 1969, at the opening of the 25th Session of the General Assembly. The UN, having resolved the Vietnam War, must now take action on an alarming confrontation between Russia and China over Mongolia. It is a period of tense and weary trial for Devar Morogoda, Ceylonese Secretary-General of the UN, who rejects nuclear-power politics. He explains his mission of negotiation: 'Unless we chisel at the stone, how will we know the kind of lion we have?' He is able to 'sculpt out' a fresh policy, relieving the threat of war and bringing China into the UN. During the same weeks, he also has a personal crisis, the discovery of his love for Senta, his brother's estranged Norwegian wife." (Library J)

Reviewed by R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 23:139 Jl 1 '68 550w

"As with the Matterhorn, [this work] makes demands on anyone who hopes to get to the top. Minimum requirements are political intelligence and an ear for a style that is almost Henry Jamesian in its subtlety. . . . [Miss Buckmaster's] latest book shows a new firmness, a welcome contemporaneity, an almost startling relevance to the issues of the moment. There is extraordinarily beautiful writing in it; witty, perceptive comment on life and art; intimate knowledge of diverse national characters, speeches, and cultures. There is a microscopic eye for psychological detail and a telescopic grasp of historical necessity. In short, it is a work—indeed an act—of sheer intellectual and spiritual audacity." Robert Peel

BUCKMASTER, HENRIETTA—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 6 '68 700w

"The characters other than Morogoda are scarcely more than shadowy figures, seen in endless talk and body movement—puffing of lips, stroking of hair, and so on. In spite of some tedium and defects of style, [the] book is an important, ambitious novel and is recommended for academic and public libraries." R. R. Gambee

Library J 93:2018 My 15 '68 190w

"As a novel, [the] book lacks the imaginative power required by these terrifying times. But it is not exactly a novel and is far from being a failure. Essentially, [it] is a political tract in fictional form, arguing the case for subordination of national interests to an international authority. . . . Questions of political realism here override questions of fictional realism, and this is fortunate because the political views of the characters are more convincing than their personalities. After encountering a couple of 'by joves' and 'jolly goods' in the first appearance of the British Ambassador, I feared the worst. But the worst did not occur. Though these figures lack human richness, they have what this novel most requires: ideological vitality." Robert Scholes

N Y Times Bk ■ p34 Jl 14 '68 700w

BUDD, RICHARD W. Content analysis of communications [by] Richard W. Budd, Robert K. Thorp [and] Lewis Donohew. 147p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

001.5 Content analysis (Communication)

67-16048

"A study of messages and the conditions under which they are produced, processed, and distributed. The authors [consider] . . . what kinds of people are communicating and what ways the environment of the communicator may have significantly affected the communication. . . . Introductory chapters show how content analysis can be employed in conjunction with other behavioral research techniques and examine communications in relation to their environment. Subsequent chapters discuss various aspects of the method—hypothesis formulation and systematic study; sampling; measurement; categories; direction; and problems of reliability and validity. The last two chapters center on . . . advanced statistical methods and the use of the computer." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Budd, Thorp and Donohew have written that rare tool for analysts, a cookbook with valuable recipes for content analysis. . . . They begin with hypothesis formulation where they reveal their preoccupation with mass media and journalism (they are all in schools of journalism or communications). . . . An especially good section deals with reliability and validity, problems which plague any communications research. . . . It is only in the last chapter of the book, a brief five pages that the authors consider content analysis by computer. . . . [However,] the book is a valuable tool which is much needed for current work . . . [and] should provide a stimulus for research work and further, theoretical offerings." E. B. Pirro

Am Pol Sci R 62:607 Je '68 390w

"A useful feature [of this book] is the frequent reference to existing studies that illustrate techniques. In a survey like this some intensity of treatment must be sacrificed for breadth of coverage. Statistical concepts employed are on a simplified level. A good, concise introduction to content analysis as a research technique, oriented toward journalistic research, although useful in other disciplines."

Choice 4:1401 F '68 120w

BUDER, STANLEY. Pullman; an experiment in industrial order and community planning, 1880-1930. 263p pl maps $7.50 Oxford

301.3 Pullman, Illinois. City planning

67-25456

"Based on a doctoral thesis, the author, a professor of history, studies one of 'the post-Civil War industrialists. Besides perfecting the sleeping car and devising highly original techniques for operating his business, he built a famous model town, Pullman, Ill., to house the workers in his plant south of Chicago. Although it is also . . . [a] biography of Pullman, this book is primarily a history of that town." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

"[Buder's book] includes the best biographical sketch of George M. Pullman in print and an encapsulated company history of Pullman's business enterprises. And, in seventy-five deft pages, it summarizes the context and the conduct of the Pullman strike. These topics, however, are ancillary to the author's major interest: the life cycle of a model town. . . . Buder's best writing and analysis are devoted to the value system that Pullman sought to express in his town and to engender in his workers; to the planning process and physical appearance of the town; to the social characteristics of workers and residents; and to Pullman's gradual loss of 'community identity.' . . . [Following the strike] the suburban expansion of Chicago interdicted and then subsumed the town. This fascinating story of lingering urban death is well told." J. P. Baughman

Am Hist R 73:1250 Ap '68 550w

"[The author's findings] shed little new light on what has already been published about Pullman, and most of the material cited has already been utilized. The weakest part concerns the Pullman Strike, the coverage being too abbreviated, adding little or nothing to what has already been written. Somehow the author has failed to convey the dynamic character of the struggle as it developed in the town. The style is clear and readable, although at times the story moves rather slowly. . . . Should have some value to sociologists."

Choice 5:562 Je '68 180w

Reviewed by Blake McKelvey

J Am Hist 54:906 Mr '68 700w

"In the current concern for urban development this type of book has validity and meaning. . . . As a case history, it makes a great contribution to the study of urban affairs. As a sidelight of American history, it also offers a picture of the freewheeling era that produced the railroad tycoons, and had the federal government taking a back seat to industry. Interestingly written, the book is certainly a significant contribution to collections on urban affairs, labor relations, and social and economic history of the United States." H. L. Roth

Library J 92:4516 D 15 '67 150w

"Bad times 'forced' [Pullman] to lower wages and lay off many of his hands. The result was the strike of 1894. Pullman won the strike, but lost his reputation as a philanthropic employer. Yet as Stanley Buder explains in this interesting study, [he] did not actually use his power as landlord against the strikers. . . . Nevertheless, such was the public clamor against his brand of paternalism that he had to abandon his tight control over the community, which then soon lost all its distinctive qualities and became a rather dingy slum."

N Y Times Bk R p30 F 11 '68 300w

BUEHR, WALTER. Automobiles: past and present; written and ill. by Walter Buehr. 96p $3.25; lib bdg $3.14 Morrow

629.22 Automobiles—Juvenile literature

68-12323

This "survey begins with an explanation of the way a motor car operates and the history of its development. After describing the first experimental automobiles, the author goes on to discuss the industrial innovations of Henry Ford. He then . . . reports on his visit to the modern Ford assembly line at River Rouge, Michigan, presenting a . . . picture of how a car is manufactured now." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades four to five." (Library J)

"Mr. Buehr has collected enough basic facts to start the next generation of car buffs well on its way." R. C. Bergenheim

Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 2 '68

140w

"This slim book is an adequate general introduction for the intermediate grades, though [J.] Bendick's First Book of Automobiles [BRD 1955] deals briefly with more aspects, [and S.] Corbett's What Makes a Car Go [BRD 1963] gives better descriptions of the workings of a car." M. C. Young

Library J 93:3966 O 15 '68 100w

BUFFIE, EDWARD G., jr. ed. Nongraded schools in action. See Beggs, D. W.

BUFFINGTON, ROBERT. The equilibrist; a study of John Crowe Ransom's poems, 1916-1963. 160p $5.95 Vanderbilt univ. press

811 Ransom, John Crowe 67-27550

The author attempts "to define the nature of the [American writer and critic's] poems, their characteristic ways and procedures. . . . [He] studies the poems from the first book, Poems about God [BRD 1919], to the latest Selected Poems [BRD 1963. His] particular concern is to show the dualistic cast of Ransom's mind and the difference it makes in the poems themselves." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"Unfortunately, some of Ransom's best known poems ('Janet Waking'; 'Bells for John Whiteside's Daughter') get little attention; unfortunately, too, Buffington's criticism is too frequently only long quotations linked by short transitions, rather like a freshman term paper. Perhaps one of the chief values of the book is its appendix, containing Ransom's various revisions of 21 poems; [his] artistry is better revealed by these revisions than by Buffington's criticism. . . . This book will serve to introduce the poet to undergraduates"

Choice 5:774 S '68 150w

"[Buffington] has a light touch with his pen, he says his piece and moves on, but the book is deeply pondered. The poems are glossed, but they are never burdened with the commentary. . . . When he recites a comparison, it is often just, but sometimes there is more to be said; as on the relation between Ransom's poems and Stevens's, a case in point. Mr. Buffington gives a good deal, but he could have given us more. One of the most useful chapters is an account of the revision of certain poems. . . . Buffington is mainly interested in questions of interpretation [and] nuances of dualism; . . . [and his] interpretations are very good."

TLS p902 Ag 22 '68 600w

BUGATTI, L'EBÉ. The Bugatti story; tr. from the French by Len Ortzen. 196p pl $5.25 Chilton co.

629.22 Bugatti, Ettore. Automobiles—History 67-27858

Devoted to Ettore Bugatti, the creator of Bugatti automobiles in the early part of this century, this "book of reminiscences by his daughter includes many of Ettore's letters, and lengthy quotations from [his] fragmented autobiography." (Library J)

"This charming book . . . [is] presented in a pleasing, distinctive style. . . . For public libraries." F. B. Davenport

Library J 92:3630 O 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by Anthony Carson

New Statesman 74:722 N 24 '67 1200w

BUGBEE, BRUCE W. Genesis of American patent and copyright law. 208p $6 Public affairs press

655.6 Copyright. Patents 67-26940

"This book attempts to trace . . . the early history of patents of invention and copyrights, placing emphasis upon the colonial and state precursors of the enabling clause which appeared in the Constitution of 1787 and of the Federal patent and copyright systems established in 1790. . . . In preparing [it] I examined British statutes and English Reports of cases, as well as State Papers and Patent Rolls in the Public Record Office in London. Among the American materials consulted were colonial and state statutes and legislative journals, together with the writings of prominent men . . . the Journals of the Continental Congress . . . the Records of the Federal Convention of 1787. . . . the early journals of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Annals of Congress, United States statutes, and reports of Federal court decisions." (Pref) Index.

"This work demonstrates how profitably the development of legal phenomena may be investigated by historians. This is not a legal treatise on patent or copyright law, although the concluding chapter does outline the existing laws enacted pursuant to the powers given Congress by the first article in the Constitution, and although, as the author observes, 'the American law of intellectual property can be fully understood only if its roots are known, and court decisions in this field have examined these roots again and again for guidance.'" Edward Dumbauld

Am Hist R 73:1232 Ap '68 700w

"A thoroughly documented and precise history. . . . [There is] a brief epilogue which both summarizes the past and more recent developments up to 1967. The important influence of English law—the Statute of Monopolies (1624) and the Statute of Anne (1710)—are given proper consideration, but the independent creativity of American development is emphasized. . . . This history merits serious study in the appraisal of current proposals for the drastic revision of these laws. . . . Recommended to all libraries."

Choice 4:1229 Ja '68 190w

"The book is based solidly on the periodical and monographic output of the past thirty years or so, as well as on the author's patient, tellingly detailed, well-articulated study of the American materials. . . . It could be wished, with some heartiness in the wish, that all but the first two and a half pages of the first chapter had been lost somewhere in transit or, at least, had been squeezed into an appendix. On page three, the author begins to lay out a background ranging from Edward Coke through a sprawling sample of American decisions. Students of law will not benefit from this chapter, and general readers may be rather frazzled instead of coming fresh upon the second chapter, where the excellent work begins." R. P. Fogarty

J Am Hist 54:870 Mr '68 260w

Reviewed by J. P. Roth

Library Q 38:462 O '68 600w

BUHOT, JEAN. Chinese and Japanese art; with sections on Korea and Vietnam; tr. from the French by Remy Inglis Hall; ed. by Charles McCurdy; maps by Henri Jacquinet and Pierre Simonet; drawings by Claude Abeille. 428p $8.95 Praeger; pa $1.95 Doubleday

709.51 Art, Chinese. Art, Japanese 67-9244

This book is arranged chronologically, it discusses painting and minor art, architecture, sculpture, ceramics, bronzes, jades, lacquers, and folk art. Chronological table. Bibliography. Index.

"A concise style of writing, consistently clear, makes it possible for Buhot to include a surprisingly large amount of information within limited space. Buhot had a distinguished career culminating in a lengthy association with the Louvre. Because he died in 1952, some of the newer discoveries of Oriental art historians are not included; but this is of minor importance. . . . Forty-six plates and 65 line figures are useful for convenient reference. High quality reproduction cannot be expected in this price book. Recommended as a valuable addition to both large and limited Oriental collections."

Choice 4:1371 F '68 150w

"An excellent art history of the Far East. . . . [Buhot's] book serves as an introduction and he has limited his material accordingly, but the overview he provides gives a skillfully integrated picture. Historical material is frequently boring, but not in Mr. Buhot's book; he discusses backgrounds and developments in a most interesting way. This book will be of interest to specialists and students of Oriental study, and art lovers will want it for their libraries." R. T. Doi

Library J 92:4399 D 1 '67 100w

BUISSERET, DAVID. Sully and the growth of centralized government in France, 1598-1610. 240p il pl maps $8 Barnes & Noble

B or 92 Sully, Maximilien de Béthune, duc de [68-79885]

This biography of Henry IV's minister emphasizes his "contributions to the financial and administrative development of French absolutism." (Choice)

"This erudite little book . . . fills a very real gap and fills it admirably. Students of French history will welcome the excellent and thorough analysis. . . . It is perhaps in the nature of the man that though his work and achievements emerge vividly, Sully himself remains but a shadow. . . . The arrangement of the secondary materials of the bibliography, purely alphabetical, detracts somewhat from its usefulness."

Choice 5:854 S '68 200w

"[This book is] the more valuable for dealing with a period that is not easily explored by the non-specialist. The book is less a biography than a study of Sully's administrative preoccupations. . . . The core of the minister's achievement lay in finance; and in this field also lies the major success of his biographer. Dr Buisseret gives a helpful description of the financial system, followed by a careful analysis of Suly's impact upon revenue and expenditure. . . . There remains a good deal on which one would like more discussion. . . . But within the limits set by its aims and its size this book illumines much about its subject."

BUISSERET, DAVID—Continued

Economist 227:56 My 4 '68 350w

"If it is not an entirely satisfactory book the fault lies mainly with [the] lack of more general studies to provide the necessary framework for it. The author . . . confines himself within fairly tight limits, never allowing attention to move away from his central subject for long. The result is a book which exhibits precision, economy and relevance, but may puzzle some readers by its occasional allusiveness. This once said, one can only praise Dr. Buisseret's careful and dispassionate scholarship, and the clear manner in which he presents his conclusions. . . . Suly's reputation is certainly enhanced by this scholarly and thorough biography, which employs the available materials with great skill. . . . This assessment is likely to remain definitive, unless some . . . new facts . . . emerge to modify it."

TLS p871 Ag 15 '68 900w

BULGAKOV, MIKHAIL. Black snow; a theatrical novel; tr. from the Russian by Michael Glenny. 190p $4.50 Simon & Schuster

68-19939

An autobiographical novel by the author of The Master and Margarita (BRD 1967, 1968) based on Bulgakov's experiences with his novel The White Guard which was dramatized as The Days of the Turbins and produced in 1926. "Sergei Leontievich Maxudov is a struggling author when a producer at the Independent Theater approaches him with the possibility of adapting his unsuccessful novel for the stage. Caught up in the . . . theatrical whirl, Maxudov is enchanted at first, until even his . . . naïveté is shaken by the constant feuds among the personnel. . . . This was written just before Bulgakov's death in 1940." (Publishers' Weekly) Originally published in Russian in 1965.

Reviewed by Oleg Ivsky

Library J 93:2256 Je 1 '68 350w

"[This book] is the autobiography of every writer riveted to the appalling necessity of dealing with publishers and editors, and, worse still, with producers, directors and actors. Its protagonist, a novelist and playwright, commits suicide as a result of these encounters. Bulgakov, who died a natural death in 1940, had sufficient grounds for doing the same thing. . . . [He] had more than one grisly experience with the Art Theatre, the last in connection with the production of his play Molière which was four years in preparation. After being utterly bowdlerized it ran for a total of seven performances. . . . [However, the work] suffers somewhat from having been left unfinished at Bulgakov's death. It lacks the polish of The Heart of a Dog [BRD 1963], and the perfect balance of hallucination and contrivance which Bulgakov achieves in this, and in his other great phantasmagoric works. The Master and Margarita and The Fatal Eggs." Patricia Blake

New Repub 159:24 Ag 3 '68 600w

Reviewed by Paul Green

New Statesman 75:115 Ja 26 '68 200w

Reviewed by Helen Muchnic

N Y Rev of Books 11:26 Jl 11 '68 850w

Reviewed by Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 21 '68 1000w

"A well-written, always funny, often sharply cutting story whose setting—the artistic and theatrical circles of Moscow in the mid-Twenties—is depicted with the trenchant strokes of a clear-sighted, ironic insider. . . . Bulgakov's most savage barbs are reserved for the generally respected Moscow Art Theater and its universally revered genius, Konstantin Stanislavsky, filmily disguised as the 'Independent Theater' and 'Ivan Vasilievich.' . . . Bulgakov does recognize Stanislavsky's mastery as actor, but in every other respect he debunks him mercilessly as a vain, eccentric autocrat devoid of taste. . . . There are many mavelous vignettes in this witty novel. . . . Bulgakov's power of satirical observation and his ability to write natural dialogue [make this book with its smooth translation] a delight to read and a delectable inside view of the Soviet theater and intelligentsia." Thomas Bishop

Sat R 51:49 Ap 27 '68 2000w

"[This] is a roman very much to be taken à clef. . . . It is a light novel, often highly amusing, and with the bonus of an in-chuckle for those who are familiar with the [Moscow Art Theatre]. . . . The attack, however personally motivated, has an unerring sense of the weaknesses and absurdities that could exist in such a devotedly self-absorbed organization as this famous theatre. . . . Bulgakov inserts an overlong (forty-page) account of how the hero came to write the novel that is being dramatized. . . . No doubt there would have been some changes and improvements if he had lived to complete the book. But even as it is, [this] remains a highly entertaining novel."

TLS p77 Ja 25 '68 600w

BULGAKOV, MIKHAIL. The heart of a dog; tr., with an introd, by Michael Glenny. 146p $3.95; pa $1.45 Harcourt

68-31233

This novel which was written in 1925 was never published in Russia and reached the West in manuscript form. "It starts, more or less, from the point of view of a Moscow street mongrel named Sharik. He strays into the hands of a certain experimenter, Professor Preobrazhensky, who is a specialist in transplanting glands and other parts of the anatomy from one person to another. . . . The doctor implants into Sharik certain organs from a good-for-nothing scallawag who has been killed in a bar-room brawl. Not only does this work but the dog turns into something totally unexpected: a walking, talking, bald-headed, conniving pseudo-human named Sharikov." (Christian Science Monitor)

Reviewed by Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 11 '68 400w

Reviewed by S. A. Haffner

Library J 93:2896 Ag '68 80w

Reviewed by Patricia Blake

New Repub 159:24 Ag 3 '68 600w

"As timely a piece of literary excellence as one could wish for. . . . The author is mordant and very funny. His style, through Michael Glenny's fine translation, has great strength and simplicity; the recommendation is unreserved. Especially good are Sharikov's early days of training for his new role before he becomes should we say, completely Bolshy." David Haworth

New Statesman 76:262 Ag 30 '68 240w

"Mr. Glenny suggests that the story is a parable of the Bolshevik revolution, that 'the dog' of the story is the Russian people, brutalized and exploited for centuries; the surgeon, 'the embodiment of the Communist Party—perhaps Lenin himself—and the drastic transplant operation . . . the revolution itself.' To my mind, this is only partially true. The parallels cannot be so explicitly drawn. After all . . . if the surgeon returns his homunculus to his original form, does this mean that Lenin wilfully returns the Russian people to their brutalized and exploited pre-revolutionary condition? But the story is indeed a cautionary fable on the menace of crude, illiterate, and unprincipled creatures suddenly exposed to learning and given status and a modicum of power." Helen Muchnic

N Y Rev of Books 11:26 Jl 11 '68 850w

Reviewed by Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk R p5 Jl 28 '68 410w

"The appearance of [this work] . . . firmly establishes Bulgakov as one of the few truly great writers produced by the Soviet Union during the half-century of its existence, and also as that nation's most accomplished satirist. . . . Now we have two publishers bringing out simultaneous versions of [this novel]. . . . Glenny displays a better command of slangy English, which gives him an advantage over Mirra [Ginsburg's translation in the Grove Press edition]." Maurice Friedberg

Sat R 51:24 Jl 20 '68 430w

Time 92:68 Jl 5 '68 500w

TLS p937 S 5 '68 600w

BULGAKOV, MIKHAIL. The master and Margarita; tr. from the Russian by Mirra Ginsburg. 402p $5.95 Grove

67-29909

BULGAKOV, MIKHAIL. The master and Margarita; tr. from the Russian by Michael Glenny. 394p $5.95 Harper

67-22898

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Ernst Pawel
Commentary 45:90 Mr '68 1600w

Reviewed by Thomas Miller
Commonweal 87:544 F 2 '68 800w
(Review of Harper edition)

Reviewed by Irving Howe
Harper 236:70 Ja '68 1300w

Reviewed by Donald Fanger
Nation 206:117 Ja 22 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:93 Ja 30 '68 600w (Review of Harper edition)

Reviewed by Rachel Trickett
Yale R 57:440 Mr '68 900w (Review of Harper edition)

BULL, ANGELA. Wayland's keep. 198p $3.95; lib bdg $3.59 Holt

67-17994

"There are two stories [here:] . . . the changing and developing relationships of the young cousins, Malinda, Sophie and Anna; and a mystery of a hundred years ago which comes to light as they learn of the ancient Keep bought by their great-grandfather, Wayland, when he was only 13. How did a boy, the eldest son of a fatherless, impoverished family, raise the money to buy the Keep? And why did his sister Emily die a few days later? . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (Book World)

"Mrs. Bull's strength of characterization is as fine as the suspense of the story itself: as we come to know the present-day young people, so we come to know Wayland and Emily and their brothers and sisters, and the two stories and the two periods in history are beautifully and credibly interwoven." Madeleine L'Engle
Book World pt 2, p32 (children's issue)

N 5 '67 160w

Horn Bk 44:64 F '68 150w

"As in her recent Friend With a Secret [BRD 1967], the author displays an easy familiarity with the mores of 19th-century England and a flair for writing in a Victorian manner modified for a present-day audience. Unfortunately, however, this plot is clumsily constructed. . . . The story progresses in skips and jumps from the present to diary entries to flashbacks. . . . Putting together the bits and pieces will be diverting for girls but, as with most jigsaw puzzles, the result, once assembled, seems of minor significance." E. S. Cullen

Library J 93:288 Ja 15 '68 150w

"The author has done a craftsmanlike job of making the three fascinated seekers vividly real and of introducing the past gradually: first the three girls talk about the Egertons, then there is a diary excerpt, then—and quite naturally—a chapter moves back to Wayland's time. The girls seem somewhat sluggish about guessing the answer to the one mysterious element of the story, but it is otherwise a can't-be-put-down book for girls." Zena Sutherland

Sat 50:43 O 21 '67 130w

TLS p1086 N 24 '66 110w

BULL, THEODORE, ed. Rhodesia: crisis of color; introd. by Gwendolen M. Carter [Eng title: Rhodesian perspective]. 184p $4.50 Quadrangle bks.

963.9 Rhodesia. Southern—Race relations.
Rhodesia, Southern—Politics and government 67-21642

"Bull, editor of the Central African Examiner (one of Salisbury's leading magazines before it ceased publication late in 1965 as a result of . . . censorship by the Rhodesian government), presents . . . an account of the political, social, and economic changes in Britain's colony from the first European settlement to the present day, with . . . attention to the separate development of the racial communities. The second part of the book is an assessment of British policy before and after Rhodesia's [Unilateral Declaration of Independence], and the likely outcome of the present deadlock." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 7 '68 220w

"[This book] reflects credit on editor Bull for fair play. Bull is not only in the anti-Smith corner of the brawl but a casualty as well. Yet he gives both sides conspicuously honorable, if not detached, treatment. In fact, if the book has any heavy at all, it is not Smith but Britain's Harold Wilson, who, in Bull's opinion, could and should have taken a much firmer anti-UDI stand from the very beginning. . . . Most of the book focuses on the historical, constitutional, and racial aspects of UDI as they relate to Rhodesia in particular and Africa in general. Noteworthy—and likely to open more than one eye—is Bull's breathtaking but educated guess about the future. If a black government ever comes to rule Rhodesia, one naturally assumes that it will do so over the dead body of South Africa; not so Bull. It's his opinion that should this transfer of power take place it might well be with South Africa's support. . . . Preposterous? By no means. The position is based on South Africa's increasingly accommodating posture toward black African states—which is animated, of course, by economic self-interest." Charles Miller

Sat R 51:33 O 19 '68 550w

"There is disillusion here for anyone under the impression that, in terms of racial politics, the Rhodesian tradition has always been much more liberal than that of its southern neighbour South Africa. For what emerges is the story of a society divided in practice on almost copy-book apartheid lines. . . . Part Two is a chapter in which Bull expresses some controversial, highly refreshing opinions of his own."

TLS p18 Ja 4 '68 430w

BULLER, SIR WALTER LAWRY. Buller's birds of New Zealand; a history of the birds of New Zealand; ed. and rev. by E. G. Turbott; with colour reproductions of the stone-plate lithographs by J. G. Keulemans from the second ed. 1888. 261p $25 East West center press

598 Birds—New Zealand

67-20253

It has been the editor's aim "to preserve Buller's popular history, omitting only those portions of the text not strictly related to the species under discussion. . . . [He gives] under the English name in bold capitals, the Maori name and the Latin name (with author and date of the birds' first description) in small type. Then follows a paragraph with up-to-date information on each bird concerned. Buller's text itself follows. . . . Only those birds which Buller had illustrated in his History, with a few additional species, are included." (N Y Rev of Books) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Turbott has made a real contribution in editing and bringing Sir Walter's highly readable text up to date. A beautiful book, with a sumptuous format, it is a real contribution to bird study. One of the outstanding books of the year for bird lovers." Walter Harding

Library J 93:3430 O 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by D. A. Bannerman

N Y Rev of Books 9:25 Ja 4 '68 2100w

"The selection which Mr. Turbott has made includes all the most interesting of the indigenous birds. . . . He has written a most valuable section . . . in which he outlines clearly and succinctly the status of the species in New Zealand today, adding field notes which have come to hand since Buller wrote. . . . Then, under a quite separate heading follows 'Buller's Text' from the second edition of the History, where he wrote informally on habits and environment. Mr. Turbott has given his readers a scholarly introduction to the book. . . . Splendid reproductions have been prepared in six-colour offset [which] exhibit some of the finest examples of Keulemans's work. . . . [Turbott] has not only edited Buller's text in the second edition of the History with great skill, but by his own valuable contributions has made the work a thoroughly up-to-date history of the finest New Zealand birds."

TLS p1195 D 7 '67 700w

BULLOCK, HENRY ALLEN. A history of Negro education in the South; from 1619 to the present. 339p $7.95 Harvard univ. press
370.975 Negroes—Education. Negroes—Southern States. Education—Southern States 67-20873

The professor of sociology at Texas Southern University "in the course of examining the educational opportunities of Southern Negroes from early colonial times to the present. [argues] that an unintended consequence of the slave economy was the creation of opportunities for the Negro which led gradually to his emancipation." (Publisher's note) Index.

BULLOCK, H. A.—Continued

"Bullock ranges from the portrayal of a literary movement, such as the Harlem Renaissance, to a description of the social mechanisms employed to make the Negro think of himself as a lesser being. . . . [He] incorrectly identifies the abolitionist Lydia Maria Child; he inexplicably omits John Hope Franklin from the list of Negro historians who received their undergraduate training in the South; he does not indicate the larger, nation-wide impact of vocational education, or that Negroes outside the South had been protesting against Jim Crow education since the 1840's. But putting these caveats aside, Bullock has produced a stimulating work that would richly repay reading by students and teachers in education, race relations, social history, and American thought." Benjamin Quarles

Ann Am Acad 376:212 Mr '68 500w

"[This] may provoke more research and discussion than a definitive work on the subject. . . . The subtitle is misleading as [Bullock] covers the 1619-1860 period in 14 pages, ignoring materials which his notes indicate he used for the post-Civil War period. No one has covered the subject so extensively for the period from Reconstruction to the Brown decision of 1954. . . . Recommended for college and public libraries."

Choice 5:239 Ap '68 180w

"This volume, winner of a 1967 Bancroft Prize, is difficult to classify. It is neither complete enough to qualify as a survey nor original enough to qualify as a monograph; it is . . . marred by several weaknesses of execution and conception. . . . [It] manages to describe developments in the most bitter and long-lasting conflict in American history with virtually no mention of struggle [or] alienation. At no time is the reader made to feel the weight of the personal and emotional stakes—on both sides—riding on decisions about Negro education in the South. . . . The second weakness of Bullock's work lies in his drastic oversimplification of the reasons for the great compromise. . . . [Moreover, he] fails to measure developments in Negro education against the larger context of American educational history. . . . Bullock's thesis rests on the unexamined assumption that a liberal education prepares people to fight for and support freedom and equality." R. L. Church

Harvard Ed R 38:772 fall '68 2150w

"The heart of the book is a discussion of the contributions of the Southern Education Board and the Slater, Jeanes, and Rosenwald funds to the development of a Negro school system that emphasized agricultural and vocational training. . . . Although the story Bullock tells is an important one and although he brings to it some valuable insights, his book is ultimately disappointing. In the first place it is thinly researched. Based almost exclusively on printed sources and secondary works, it ignores such rich manuscript collections as the American Missionary Association Archives and the Julius Rosenwald Collection at Fisk University. . . . Second, the book is primarily a study of educational policy; and its treatment of the Negro school as a social institution is sketchy at best. It fails to deal with such important questions as the position of the Negro teacher and the role of the school in reinforcing the class structure within the Negro community. The last chapters of the book review the familiar story of the desegregation crisis—a story which has been told far better elsewhere." A. H. Spear

J Am Hist 54:871 Mr '68 500w

BUNI, ANDREW. The Negro in Virginia politics, 1902-1905. 296p $6 Univ. press of Va. 320.9755 Negroes—Virginia. Negroes—Politics and suffrage 67-21659

"Beginning with 1865 in order to set the stage for disfranchisement of the Negro. Mr. Buni . . . traces the course of political activity in Virginia through a series of . . . episodes. He considers the aspects of early participation, disfranchisement, a renewed interest in politics, a slow change in party affiliation, abortive office-seeking, massive resistance, and 'political breakthrough' in the period from 1960 to 1964 . . . [based on] unpublished theses and dissertations, contemporary newspapers, and interviews with participants]." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by William Cheek

Am Hist R 73:1666 Je '68 390w

"Unfortunately, the author follows methodological routes which will satisfy few social scientists. [His] willingness to use one interview as an adequate sample for generalizing about the attitudes of all Negroes in Virginia during an election . . . to depend on the personal reminiscences of four informants for basic interpretations and generalizations . . . [and] on newspapers' analyses of electoral data for his basic interpretations, and his unwillingness to develop any tables of data indicate an approach to political analysis which few social scientists currently accept as adequate. . . . Raw data from secondary sources are spewed out page after page without any effort to treat the data systematically." Lewis Bowman

Am Pol Sci R 62:638 Je '68 900w

Choice 5:255 Ap '68 160w

"The book has the tone of ■ dissertation, but on the whole is well organized and clearly written. Basically, the author has tried to tell the story of the race issue in Virginia politics and the response of the state's Negroes to political life. He has done the first part better than the second, largely due to inadequate sources on Negroes' political activities and attitudes toward politics. [However,] he sometimes makes statements that this reviewer found inadequate and even jarring. . . . [For example, he] alludes at times to Negro political apathy, sometimes without explaining that much of this apathy was really fear. Virginia was not Mississippi, but it was not utopia either. These criticisms aside, Buni has written an informative and scholarly book." D. M. Reimers

J Am Hist 54:917 Mr '68 500w

"Mr. Buni provides not only much new information but a new point of view for such ■ study as this. He gives an understandable picture of the modern political scene in Virginia." W. S. Powell

Library J 92:4410 D 1 '67 120w

BUNTING, BAINBRIDGE. Houses of Boston's Back Bay; an architectural history, 1840-1917. 494p il $12.50 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

723.3 Architecture, Domestic. Decoration and ornament, Architectural. Boston—Historic houses, etc. 66-21334

Focusing on "approximately 1,500 architectural examples built during a 77-year period in a district created to be an urban residential area, Bunting shows how architectural style in the Back Bay evolved from Greek Revival through mansard and brownstone to McKim Classical while social, physical, legal, and other determinants remained constant." (Choice) Index.

"A highly specialized study. . . . The author is perceptive and receptive to the intentions of each style and to nuances of local treatment. He talks about muntins and streetscapes, varieties and uniformities in a way that could provide undergraduate and graduate students with an admirable example of approach and method. . . . 250 illustrations of good quality in black and white; an appendix lists by street location all the buildings of the district."

Choice 4:652 S '67 160w

"As the author suggests, the buildings of the Back Bay 'chart the course of architectural development' for the United States as well as for Boston for more than half a century. . . . The appendixes are a tribute to the careful persistent scholarship of the author. Included is a street-by-street listing of houses, churches, and other buildings in the area with accompanying data such as date of construction, ownership, and architect." M. H. Rice

J Am Hist 55:136 Je '68 550w

"Here is an excellent book. Although parts of residential Back Bay are now a century old, surprisingly little has been written about this brightest jewel in Boston's crown. So the book is twice welcome. Mr. Bunting, Professor of Art and Architectural History at the University of New Mexico, writes with authority yet with a clarity of style that makes for delightful reading. The book is generously illustrated by photographs of the houses described. And the Belknap Press has produced it handsomely. . . . Most of the photographs were taken by the author. They are much more than pictures of façades, for they expand the text and add to its meaning." E. P. Dean

New Eng J 41:128 Mr '68 1150w

BURBIDGE, GEOFFREY. Quasi-stellar objects [by] Geoffrey Burbidge and Margaret Burbidge. 235p $7.50 Freeman

523 Quasars

67-17457

"This monograph is a summary of the state of knowledge and speculation about quasi-stellar objects as of early 1967. The authors draw together . . . the observational data on this new class of astronomical objects and . . . evaluate the various theoretical or semiempirical ideas on their nature." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subjects.

"[This] summary of observations and theory of quasars is unsurpassed in its scope and quality of coverage. . . . The authors, who are actively engaged in the field, have summarized all the optical and radio data available up to early 1967. They present the observational facts in a clear, well-organized, easy-to-read form while in the theoretical sections they sort through and comment critically upon the multitude of explanations that have been advanced to explain these objects which are among the most enigmatic in astronomy. A most useful summary for serious students of astronomy and stands alone in this regard. Most of the sections will make fascinating reading for anyone with the equivalent of a good four-credit course in stellar astronomy. Tables, graphs, and the reproductions of optical spectra are good and useful." Choice 5:804 S '68 180w

"[This] is not written for the general reader, but is an excellent source book and textbook, discussing in some depth most aspects of quasi-stellar objects. . . . [It] should be invaluable to anyone who is seriously interested in quasi-stellar objects. It is an excellent critique and guide to the literally overwhelming number of published papers in this field. . . . Although the Burbidges make no secret of their present leaning toward a local model of QSO's, they have attempted to treat all the possible explanations fairly. . . . They have made an admirable effort to present the whole picture of our present knowledge of quasi-stellar objects." James Terrell

Science 159:291 Ja 19 '68 850w

Sci Am 218:148 Ja '68 290w

BURBIDGE, MARGARET. Quasi-stellar objects See Burbidge, G.

BURCHARD, PETER. Bimby. 91p il $3.50 Coward-McCann

68-23866

"This story recounts the crucial events of one day in the life of Bimby, a young American slave [living on the Butler plantation], St. Simon's Island, Georgia. Rumors are strong that the plantation and the slaves will be sold to cover the owner's gambling debts and that fact combined with the probably suicidal death of Jesse, the one-armed slave whom Bimby admires, lead to the boy's decision to run away. . . . Grade four and up." (Library J)

"In a postscript the author says that the Butler plantation really existed, that Miss Fanny referred to in the story was a famous English actress, Fanny Kemble, who married Pierce Butler but hated slavery and left him, and that the auction did take place. Bimby, though, is fictional—but he is very real." Polly Goodwin
Book World p16 (children's issue) N 3 '68 200w

Horn Bk 44:562 O '68 140w

"Avoiding both sentimentality and brutality, Mr. Burchard has created a believable and memorable book. His careful scholarship is unobtrusive due to the skill and economy with which he builds characterization and advances the plot, until Bimby's change from an unassuming slave boy to a youth passionately committed to freedom seems natural and inevitable. Good readers in fourth grade could handle the reading, but the book's indictment of slavery as an evil, brutalizing system, and its celebration of Bimby as a real, growing human being make it especially valuable for older readers, particularly those in junior and senior high who have been reluctant or unable to read longer, harder books." M. E. Sandahl
Library J 93:4401 N 15 '68 150w [YA]

"Simply written and illustrated by the author, 'Bimby' is a moving tribute to the human spirit and a valuable insight into a past that still haunts us." Robert Newman
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p33 N 3 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 61:29 D 21 '68 120w

BURCHARD, PETER. Stranded; a story of New York in 1875. 255p $4.50 Coward-McCann 67-24211

"Scottish ship's boy Gavin MacInnes was stranded in tough, brawling New York City. He was drawn into the web of the Dead Herrings, a political gang in the city's infamous Fourth Ward, a neighborhood which had spawned more criminals than any other in the country. Before he sensed trouble he had made a friend of gang member Ian Porter and fallen in love with Ian's sister, Maria." (Publisher's note) "Ages twelve to sixteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Gavin's adventures] are pitched just right: exciting but not implausibly heroic, colorful but neither sentimentalized nor brutal, slated with overtones of psychological truth, but not unpleasant. The historical background is first-rate. This is several cuts above the usual fare." Taliaferro Boatwright
Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 220w

Horn Bk 43:756 D '67 120w

"Although Gavin is able to take a stand for the right there is no hearts-and-flowers ending so typical of juvenile novels with social themes, nor does the author flinch from realistic depiction of the wretched life and inhuman squallor that faced many immigrants to this country. The novel is long, but, as an honest retelling in human terms of an often forgotten period in our history, it has unusual merit." John Gillespie

Library J 92:4257 N 15 '67 200w

N Y Times Bk R p28 F 4 '68 70w [YA]

BURCHETT, WILFRED G. Again Korea. 188p $5.95; pa $1.95 Int. puba.

951.9 Korea (Democratic People's Republic). Korean War, 1950-1953 68-19919

In this account of his trip north of the 38th parallel in 1967 "the author, who covered the Korean War and the Panmunjom truce talks for two years from 'the other side,' [describes] the reconstruction of North Korea. . . . He visits factories and farms, institutions of education and political centers. . . . [He recalls] the Panmunjom negotiations, with Vietnam in view, [and examines] the politics of partition of Korea; the role of Japan as an ally of the United States in the current situation; the life and thinking of Kim Il Sung; and the unique position of the North Korean Communists with respect to both Moscow and Peking. . . . Comparisons between the Korean situation and the development of the Vietnam war [are drawn] to show the meaning of their interrelationship today." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] book is larded with propaganda, but at least the more bombastic phrases are placed in quotations. Valuable for its information on Kim Il Sung, who is largely unknown in the West." J. M. Elrod

Library J 93:2509 Je 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by K. P. Yang
Nation 206:605 My 6 '68 1300w

"This book is convincing confirmation of what South Korean intelligence has been telling Americans for some time, with additional material. For example, Burchett extrapolates how the next round in the Korean War is likely to begin. . . . [His] revelations give an idea, though one highly colored with propaganda, of what we would be up against if . . . a new Korean War broke out. . . . Under the rules for books like this, the Communists wear all the white hats. . . . This political bias, coupled with grotesque misrepresentation of the economic and political conditions in South Korea, which Burchett portrays as being still under American 'occupation,' unfortunately will impair the credibility in much of Burchett's other material. But students of Korean affairs will be able to sift out the propaganda without difficulty." Robert Trumbull

N Y Times Bk R p10 My 5 '68 850w

"In some ways [this book] sounds like an essay on paradise rather than a report on what may be the poorest, most isolated ré-

BURCHETT, W. G.—Continued

game in the Communist world apart from Albania. Nevertheless, it is a useful work. . . . The author offers some useful reminders about the negotiations [ending the Korean War], including the fact that it took five months for both sides to agree on a ceasefire line. . . . Aside from Burchett's glowing account of North Korea's economic recovery, the most interesting segments of the book deal with Pyongyang's view of Vietnam. He quotes officials there as saying, "The Vietnam War is also our war." Murray Fromson
Sat R 51:29 Je 1 '68 800w

BURDEN, DENNIS H. The logical epic; ■ study of the argument of Paradise lost. 206p $4.50 Harvard univ. press

821 Milton, John—Paradise lost [67-948401

"This book is a study of the logic of the theme of Paradise Lost. It is especially concerned with the constraints within which the argument is made to move. It [suggests that] the account of the Fall is disciplined by the need to work to the best sense of the Genesis story. It argues that Milton, making Paradise Lost the right Christian poem, was very aware of how it could be made into the wrong un-Christian poem, and that this awareness made for extensive and dynamic application." (Pref) Index.

"If we are to see how Paradise Lost lives and moves in its intricate comprehensiveness we must prepare ourselves to look again at Paradise Lost and not at a series of propositions about it. Dennis Burden's book is an effort of this kind. It attempts to show that there is a distinct intellectual component in the aesthetic pleasure of reading Paradise Lost and that whenever Milton adds to or elaborates upon Genesis, he does so in the interests of greater cogency. It is ■ persuasive demonstration, though Mr. Burden's use of the phrase 'the logical epic' gives rise to some misgivings. . . . There are also times when Mr. Burden's involvement in his own way of approaching Paradise Lost leads him to statements that are excessive."

TLS p745 Ag 17 '67 600w

"The Logical Epic thoroughly and unanswerably demonstrates that blossoms do not grow carelessly in Eden and that not a tress of hair curls without theological sanction. Much of what the modern reader might consider bland, inconsequential gabble or arbitrary action is shown in the light of seventeenth-century exegesis to be the often exquisite concretion of theological points Milton's contemporaries debated with passionate seriousness. . . . Mr. Burden, sometimes in delectable, seldom in debatable, detail makes clear how exegetical logic is the source of poetic logic. While his essay will not take the professional Miltonist by surprise, it may vivify and make more tantalizingly visible what he has too hazily, if confidently, assumed. And, for the novice, the book provides an essential insight into the poem. . . . We leave Mr. Burden grateful for the industry and insight he has shown in removing the dust of centuries from the fabric of a great poem." Kenneth Connolly
Yale R 57:589 summer '68 1000w

BURDEN, HAMILTON T. The Nuremberg party rallies: 1923-39; foreword by Adolf A. Berle. 206p pl $5.95 Praeger

943.086 National socialism 67-20473

This is a "chronological account of the Nazi Party rallies and their role in the history of Nazi Germany." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:614 My 4 '68 50w

Reviewed by R. M. Hunt
Ann Am Acad 337:171 My '68 430w
Choice 5:669 Jl '68 140w

"Mr. Burden, who did much of the research for this, his first book, in Germany, has written the first study in English of the Nazi Party rallies. . . . Unfortunately, he gives too much space to speeches and not enough to the organization of the rallies and their meaning for the average German. The book contains a few errors in the account of foreign affairs between rallies. Otherwise, it is a very interesting story of a frightening phenomenon. . . . Recommended for any library." Keith Eubank

Library J 92:3996 N 1 '67 260w

"It may be that Mr. Burden's careful study, based primarily on press reports, tells us little that is not conveyed more effectively by ten minutes from one of Leni Riefenstahl's films. . . . But it has some excellent illustrations which show how efficiently these demonstrations were transformed from the amateurish gatherings of the 1920s to the streamlined pageants of the 1930s, and it reminds us of the extent to which Hitler and Goebbels and their assistants were pioneers in the exploitation of mass media and subliminal suggestion." James Joll

N Y Rev of Books 10:14 F 15 '68 300w

"It is the merit of Hamilton Burden's thoughtful and conscientious book that it reconstructs the key aspects of the Nazi seizure and exercise of power: the use of organization and propaganda. From 1923 to 1939 (with a two-year hiatus from 1924-26) the Nazis held an annual party rally. . . . Mr. Burden shows that from the very beginning these rallies contained all the key elements of Nazism: the romantic exaltation of the nation, the bitter anti-Semitism . . . the use of military and paramilitary organizations to threaten and intimidate. . . . [His] painstakingly researched book, by capturing the mood of these rallies, also recalls the atmosphere of the Nazi era. It makes clear that if the West was continually surprised by Nazi actions, it was because it heeded its preconceptions, rather than the evidence before it." Henry Kissinger

N Y Times Bk R p34 Mr 17 '68 950w

"Mr. Burden has produced a brief and richly illustrated monograph on . . . the disciplined masses, the semi-religious consecration of Party symbols, and above all the hypnotic personality of Hitler. Of great importance for the historian is Mr. Burden's research on the rallies of 1923, 1926, 1927, and 1929, before the Party came to power. . . . [This is] a highly readable and well-documented account of an aspect of the National Socialist régime that has never before been so carefully analyzed." Hans Kohn

Sat R 50:30 D 16 '67 650w

Va Q R 44:clxviii autumn '68 150w

BURENSTAM LINDER, STAFFAN. Trade and trade policy for development. 179p $6 Praeger

382 Commercial policy. Underdeveloped areas 66-26552

This is an attempt to provide a "theory of trade for backward and underdeveloped nations. [The author] discusses the theoretical and practical problems that these nations face in their trade with advanced countries, with similar developing nations, and with nations whose economy is even more 'backward' than their own. [His] analysis covers such issues as the import minimum, the foreign-exchange gap, attempts to increase foreign-exchange earnings, and the usefulness of customs unions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. First published in Mexico under the title Teoría del comercio y política comercial para el desarrollo.

Reviewed by Hiroshi Kitamura

Am Econ R 58:271 Mr '68 1250w

"A most refreshing analysis of the relationship of international trade to economic development. [A] highly readable and well referenced study. . . . Linder presents a comprehensive trade theory and trade policy for developing countries. The book does not invite comparisons but is required reading."

Choice 4:1289 Ja '68 120w

J Pol Econ 76:157 Ja '68 230w

BURGER, ROBERT E., jt. auth. Where they go to die: the tragedy of America's aged. See Garvin, R. M.

BURGESS, ANTHONY. The age of the grand tour. See The age of the grand tour

BURGESS, ANTHONY. Enderby. 412p $5.95 Norton

68-13483

An expanded version of the novel Inside Mr. Enderby, which was published in England in 1963 under the pseudonym of Joseph Kell. Middle-aged Enderby spends his days writing poetry in his bathroom. "Seated upon the oval, manuscripts in the bathtub, he is tuned in only on his muse. . . . Though an unattractive human being, he is a competent poet. An elegant widow captures him, cleans him up, and takes him out into the real world. In Rome on their honeymoon, he discovers he hates his wife and Rome and runs away. He has lost his innocence and his muse. His attempt at suicide is bungled. . . . The psychiatrists rehabilitate him into a clean and social bartender now named Hogg. But Enderby the poet keeps intruding, reasserts himself, and takes 'Hoggerby' to further episodes in Spain and Morocco. Wild picaresque adventures befall him as he flees his Hogg self and the police in a world not meant for poets." (Library J)

Reviewed by R. C. Baxter

Best Sell 28:126 Je 15 '68 750w

"In Anthony Burgess' novels his typical machoistic, gray-collar British 'heroes' are liable to smacks in the kisser that leave them gap-toothed or, as dictionary-driven Burgess might say, diastematic. Enderby likewise asks for a jab. . . . [This book] may be tolerated (just) by [Burgess'] admirers. . . . [Honey for the Bears (BRD 1964) was a] fine novel. Enderby, alas, is not. Its eponymous hero is a neglected poet, justly so, to judge from the examples of his work. An older, incomparably less sexy Lucky Jim and a younger, infinitely less engaging Gully Jimson compounded, he is the disgruntled slag of the industrial wastelands, petulant, slovenly, isolated, paranoid, hysterical. The insertion of this glob into the improbable machinery of a picaresque novel does not help matters." Bowden Broadwater

Book World p13 Je 9 '68 320w

Choice 5:620 J1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Irving Malin

Commonweal 80:262 N 15 '68 700w

Reviewed by Michael O'Malley

Critic 27:95 O '68 1150w

Reviewed by Earl Tannenbaum

Library J 93:2257 Je 1 '68 280w

Reviewed by R. K. Morris

Nation 207:58 J1 22 '68 950w

"Mr. Burgess brings on Enderby the English poet, part Brendan Behan, part Dylan Thomas. Mr. Burgess has written about artists before; a book on James Joyce [Re Joyce, BRD 1966] that shines with all the dazzle of his wild novels and a novel about Shakespeare, [Nothing Like the Sun, BRD 1964]. . . . It is by now widely known that Anthony Burgess is no ordinary novelist. There are novelists who could have created Enderby; there are fewer novelists who could have written Enderby's poetry for him—poetry that we aren't quite certain isn't parody; there are very few novelists who could have topped this and invented a Muse who reels off top-notch textual criticism of the densest of Enderby's poems (for Enderby, who is never wholly in on what his poems mean, and, of course, for us). Add to this Mr. Burgess' rolling prose rhythms and his canny aptitude for languages (such as the slang of expatriate Englishmen in Morocco), and the category in which we can place Mr. Burgess seems to contain Mr. Burgess alone." Guy Daventry

Nat R 20:613 Je 18 '68 500w

Reviewed by Theodore Solotaroff

New Repub 159:20 Ag 24 '68 2650w

Reviewed by John Wain

N Y Rev of Books 11:34 Ag 22 '68 600w

Reviewed by Benjamin Demott

N Y Times Bk R p5 Je 30 '68 1550w

New Yorker 44:87 Je 29 '68 200w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:37 Je 8 '68 1050w

"Author Burgess is sounding again an ancient warning of his trade: that the poet's natural enemies remain varied and dangerous. The hostile forces manifest themselves as rich but tasteless patrons, pop singers; and even other poets. . . . But the poet, Burgess also warns is a dangerous man—one of life's great survivors. In the wildly freewheeling last half of the novel, Enderby returns to claim his old poet's self. On the lam from all his would-be reformers—including the police—he ends up in the lavatories of Morocco, blissfully scribbling a long poem based on Hamlet. . . . How deep should well-amused readers poke beneath the jaunty black humor and Joycean wordplay? This remains a perennial Burgess puzzle. He is a composer and music critic, a one-time lecturer in phonetics, a learned, lapsed Catholic, and—not the least—a superb writer. . . . [In this book] with the most offhand, scurrilous charm, [Burgess] illustrates as well as preaches that the artist is the man who expresses for all men their unbuttoned true selves."

Time 91:93 Je 14 '68 550w

BURGESS, G. H. O. The eccentric ark; the curious world of Frank Buckland [Eng title: The curious world of Frank Buckland]. 242p Il $6.50 Horizon press

B or 92 Buckland, Francis Trevelyan

67-31628

In this biography of an English eccentric, author of Curiosities of Natural History, the director of the Humber Laboratory for Fish Technology "gives an account of Mr. Buckland's pioneering in the early development of both marine and fresh water fishery research and administration." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Buckland is remembered today primarily for a lectureship he established. His Museum of Economic Fish Culture has disappeared. As a bit of curiosa, the book may interest sociologists and science historians wishing to capture the flavor and character of early 19th-Century British life. Recommended for expansive collections." Harold Oatfield

Library J 93:2891 Ag '68 150w

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 21 '68 240w

"Unhappily, though [Buckland] is an amusing subject for an essay, he hardly possesses enough substance to hold together a full-length book. Dr. Burgess, however, . . . has given him the full treatment, and has shirked no pains to do so. Buckland's later involvement in fishery research is exhaustively covered, so are his efforts to render acclimatized for culinary purposes such beasts as elands and yaks and kangaroos. . . . We owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. Burgess for the immense trouble he has been at to give us so complete an account of the vicissitudes of a typical though not entirely eminent, Victorian."

TLS p298 Mr 21 '68 450w

BURGIN, TREVOR. Spring Grove: the education of immigrant children [by] Trevor Burgin and Patricia Edson; pub. for the Inst. of race relations. 112p $3.40 Oxford

372.942 Huddersfield, England. Spring Grove School 67-74053

"Two faculty members of Spring Grove School in England's Midlands describe . . . the way one community has met the problems of educating successive waves of immigrant children—Polish, Yugoslavian, Ukrainian, Italian, Irish, Indian, Pakistani, and West Indian." (Choice)

"A little volume of immense significance to all educators, perhaps particularly to those wrestling with the problems of urban education. . . . [The authors outline] the ingenious school mechanisms [the] staff has developed, the special audio-visual aids and teaching devices they have found productive, their evaluation procedures, and the uses to which they have put extra-school people and facilities. Pervading this highly readable and well organized account is the compassion as well as good sense of the writers and principal architects of the Spring Grove plan. This compassion and the commitment the staff has to the values of a multi-racial school go a long way in accounting for the success of their experiment."

Choice 4:1422 F '68 160w

"It is in their analysis of the society surrounding the school that Mr. Burgin and Mrs. Edson seem naive, even intolerant. . . . They recognize the varied ethnic backgrounds of their students, but except for their tolerance of different religious values, they seem more concerned with encouraging minority groups to eliminate their distinctive characteristics than with developing pride in them. Rarely do they question the validity of the 'Eleven Plus' examinations. . . . They declare that most of their students are terminal and therefore must be educated accordingly, in effect accepting second-class education for the children of what are assumed to be second-class industrial citizens. When the authors turn, however, from sociology to pedagogy and analyze their program, they are on much surer ground." Marvin Lazerson

Harvard Ed R 38:191 winter '68 1350w

Reviewed by R. F. Allen

Social Studies 59:228 O '68 210w

"The book is well written as well as extremely interesting. . . . [It] has the sense of the sympathy of the good and understanding teacher. . . . The authors have a vivid perception of the meaning of immigration which is often absent in most of the authorities who are responsible for the welfare of immigrants."

TLS p622 J1 13 '67 260w

BURI, FRITZ. How can we still speak responsibly of God? [tr. by Charles D. Hardwick]. 83p $2.50 Fortress press

230.01 God. Christianity—Philosophy. Faith 68-12329

In the first of three essays in this volume the author, a Swiss theologian and preacher, explains his "conviction that 'responsible personhood' is our human destiny . . . [and that] the 'voice' which calls us to responsibility from the realm of nonobjective reality . . . is 'the Word of God which has become flesh in Christ.' Five affirmations mark Buri's position: the biblical basis for Christian discourse about God; the necessity of 'mythological' assertions; the personal reality of the God who calls men to responsibility; the impossibility of objective verification of the reality of God; prayer as the proper form of a theology of responsibility. Two additional essays are included, Buri's Dudenian Lecture on 'The Reality of Faith,' given at the Divinity School of Harvard University in the Spring of 1967; and a . . . discussion . . . of the question of the reality of faith in H. Richard Niebuhr's The Meaning of Revelation [BRD 1941]." (Publisher's note)

"[In this volume the author] presents a view that contrasts with Barth and Bultmann on the one hand and the God-is-dead theologians on the other. Quite correctly, Buri sees a Christian atheism as directed against a particular conception of God and irrelevant to some other conceptions. . . . However, when Buri asserts that neither the Barth-Bultmann nor the God-is-dead type of theologian seems to have considered the question of the responsibility we take upon ourselves, I think his claim is inaccurate as well as unfair. . . . In the main, he deals more adequately with neo-orthodoxy and its surprising child, Christian atheism, than with the deeper challenge inherent in analytic philosophy. . . . The volume concludes with a sympathetic response to Richard Niebuhr's doctrine of revelation." C. S. Milligan

Christian Century 85:360 Mr 20 '68 500w

"[Buri] searches for an answer to the question of what is central in contemporary American theological discussion. His responses are provocative, as when he warns Americans not to become victims of theological arteriosclerosis; or when he writes that the way a theologian prays indicates what he means by responsibility. [This] book is a forthright attempt to define responsibility for theologians. . . . College teachers of both philosophy and religion, teachers of theology, and public libraries situated in communities with theologically minded readers will want to buy." G. M. Ruoss

Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 130w

BURI, FRITZ. Thinking faith; steps on the way to a philosophical theology; tr. by Harold H. Oliver. 100p $3.50 Fortress press

230.01 Christianity—Philosophy. Faith 68-10984

The author, a professor of dogmatics at the University of Basle, "proposes new understandings of ways in which philosophical categories can be brought into direct relation to the substance of Christian faith. Buri's endeavor is explicitly to allow philosophical categories to enter immediately the domain of theology in order that faith may be illuminated, clarified and purified." (Publishers' note) The first chapter is entitled Thinking as knowing and the concluding chapter is entitled Thinking faith Christian faith.

"[This book] represents a defense of natural theology and indicates Buri's shift from existentialism to a 'theology of responsibility.' [It] outlines an approach to rational thought with which Christian faith can coexist not only peacefully but productively. There is, says Buri, no intrinsic enmity between reason and faith. . . . But when [he] says, 'Today true Christian faith can be only thinking faith,' he means thinking faith of the particular sort he defends.

It is regrettable that, while he gives detailed attention to some themes that do not need it, Buri does not explain the meaning of unconditional responsibility to any appreciable extent. A more serious objection is that the whole business is too pat. . . . What is needed in this type of philosophy is not a critique of the boundaries of conceptualization (these are fairly obvious) but a justification for inferential reasoning and an examination of the relationship between that and faith." C. S. Milligan

Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 500w

"By using old terminology such as creation, redemption, sin, salvation, and so on, [Buri] shows that there is no need to avoid these terms nor is there an excuse to limit theological discussion by them. [He] states in both books that he is doing what he wishes all theologians would do: namely, be personally responsible for a thinking Christian faith. . . . College teachers of both philosophy and religion, teachers of theology, and public libraries situated in communities with theologically minded readers will want to buy." G. M. Ruoss

Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 130w

BURKE, CHARLES T. Puritans at bay; the war against King Philip and the squaw sachems. 261p il $7.50 Exposition

973.2 King Philip's War, 1675-1676

66-28838

Beginning with an account of "the half century of events leading up to [the war, the author describes] . . . relations between [the Wampanoag Indians] and the first settlers at Plymouth . . . [and the peace between them, which] lasted fifty-five years. . . . [He then tells how] open warfare began in 1675 and ended the following year with the death, beheading and quartering of Philip [the king of the Wampanoags]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"To what audience this book is directed is difficult to ascertain. The author could hardly have had specialists in early American history in mind, for the work is virtually undocumented, ignores manuscript sources entirely, and bears no evidence of awareness of most of the twentieth-century scholarship on Puritanism and New England. Moreover, Burke seems ignorant of the works of D. Leach [Flintlock and Tomahawk, BRD 1958] and A. Vaughan [Indian Fights, BRD 1967, and New England Frontier, BRD 1965] that focus on the very problems with which he deals. If, however, a popular audience is intended, the author simply does not write well enough. . . . Probably neither specialists nor the general public will read Puritans at Bay, which is, curiously enough, unfortunate. The author does have something to say: blame for the bloodshed in New England rests far more on the white man than on the Indian." J. M. Bumsted

Am Hist 73:213 O '67 380w

"There is little to recommend this book. It is not well researched, well reasoned, or well written. It fills none of the gaps left open by books previously published on the subject, nor does it offer new interpretations of the events it considers. . . . [such as:] why did a half century of generally peaceful and cooperative ethnic relations end in a nightmare of human butchery? In fairness to Burke it must be noted that he recognizes and tries to answer some of the tough questions his topic raises. . . . [But] he has overlooked much of the important primary material, while his use of secondary sources borders on the ludicrous. . . . Errors of fact and vagaries of interpretation abound. . . . For some of these flaws the publisher must share the blame." A. T. Vaughan

J Am Hist 54:628 D '67 380w

BURKE, EDMUND. The correspondence of Edmund Burke; 10v; v6, July 1789-December 1791; ed. by Alfred Cobban and Robert A. Smith. 494p $13.50 Univ. of Chicago press

B or 92 (58-5615)

"Of the 225 letters in this volume, about half are new, and this same proportion of new letters is maintained for the 164 letters written in whole or in part by Burke and for the 47 letters to him. . . . The letters tell of Burke's low state in the summer of 1789; . . . of his apparent indifference to the preliminaries of the French Revolution and his caution and slowness in reacting to it; of the importance of the activities of Dr. Richard Price and the Dissenters in shaping Burke's judgments about the possible impact of the Revolution upon England; of [his] early decision that war and help from outside France would be necessary to the success of a counterrevolution; of the agonies the Revolution brought into the relations among Burke and his long-time political friends; and, as the period ended, of the resuscitation of Burke's reputation." (Am Hist R) Index. For previous volumes see BRD 1959, 1960, 1964 and 1967.

"[This] covers a shorter period than any of the preceding five volumes . . . but it ranges more widely because for the first time in his career as a public man Burke was deeply concerned with a great cause that was primarily European rather than British. . . . This volume is a superb work of discreet editorial scholarship, and, in part because of the greater difficulties encountered in editing it, the most striking of the six magnificent volumes to appear thus far in the definitive Copeland Correspondence." C. B. Cone

Am Hist R 73:817 F '68 430w

Reviewed by A. F. Havighurst

Ann Am Acad 376:163 Mr '68 440w

"A great deal of praise has been lavished on the Cambridge/Chicago edition of Burke's letters, and most of it is undoubtedly deserved. . . . It has been a marvel of organization, of co-operation, of deft, capable, uniform, readable editing. . . . [Yet the] editors have an irritating habit of summarizing letters to or about Burke which should have been printed in full; they throw away a marvellous opportunity with Boswell by this sort of inappropriate parsimoniousness. . . . Still it cannot be denied that the correspondence of the years 1789 and 1790 makes enthralling reading to every political historian, to every political scientist, to everyone to whom a book of genius has an appeal, whatever his doctrine may be. . . . The man and his society, his critics, contemners, and the abjectly devoted admirers, almost come to life. Sadly it has to be said, nevertheless, that neither Edmund Burke, the events, the subject nor the generation ever inspire any real affection in the reader."

TLS p1083 N 16 '67 400w

BURKE, JONATHAN. The gossip truth [Eng title: Gossip to the grave]. 192p $3.95 Doubleday

68-11789

"To fill the doldrums of a London gossip column Jenny Clark invents Simon Sherbourne, a handsome, witty and somewhat mysterious frequenter of the best parties." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Jenny is] flabbergasted when, after she has been ordered to get a picture of the non-existent man-about-town, he appears at a party and identifies himself. Once you accept that premise, what follows is quite credible and amusing."

Best Sell 28:68 My 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p51 My 26 '68 80w

"A light bright tale of a girl reporter who invented a man who came to life; murder and Mozart are the trimmings."

TLS p69 Ja 18 '68 50w

BURKE, KENNETH. Collected poems, 1915-1967. 296p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

811

67-29786

This book "contains 107 previously uncollected or unpublished poems, besides the full text of The Book of Moments, and more of the graphic poems called Flowerishes." (Publisher's note)

"Apparently Kenneth Burke has never discarded a thought, a phrase, a line or a poem. They are all here—296 pages of bad verse. What can you say about a poet who rhymes 'ranko' with 'Franco'; who uses words such as 'on't, 'o'er glance, 'lotta? . . . The book also includes some pages of prose and aphorisms. These maxims, which are the really clever part of the book, are unfortunately arranged in trick typography so that they are difficult to read. A few poems in German are also included. Mr. Burke has perhaps summed up his poetic intentions when he writes, 'Insomniac, the poet is hounded by currish doggerel.'" M. M. Miller

Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 170w

"Burke is devoted to language because it is the realm of possibility. . . . Sometimes he changes a grammatical rule and applies the new sentences to their human equivalents; as in 'Six Grammatical Charades' he turns reportage into pageantry by eliminating from the English language its frigid possession of neuter gender. . . . Most of Burke's poems sound as if they were written by a Wandering Scholar, a wordman sleepless in a motel between late night and early morning. The corresponding themes include these: first and last things, dreams, insomnia, traffic, money, politics, contamination ('I'm ■ Rachel Carson man'), and Progress, hated for its siren songs. The poet yields to the mood, knowing that it is his own . . . and knowing also that any mood is eternal, so long as there are people around to compare it with their own. . . . The best poems have that air of finality which [is] a man's best answer to the public rot. . . . The daily things are transfigured, magical." Denis Donoghue

N Y Rev of Books 11:39 Jl 11 '68 550w

"The Great K.B. is a poet, too! Did you know that? Those of us who, smugly, have known it rejoice to see [this book]. . . . Burke is one poet of a thinker and one thinker of a poet. The voice is the same one we hear in his works of rhetorical and symbolic theory. It is unaffected, confiding, occasionally gaudy in its bright heartiness but sometimes taxing as well, and always ready to follow whither-soever the mind leadeth. . . . Some of his poems of love and death, and even of money and alcohol and heart trouble, are genuinely lyrical but he is rarely a 'pure' poet. Rather, he is a true sensibility of the critical spirit, and finds the comic his natural mode of expression. The colloquial and joking side of his writing is very much in a folk-literary tradition." M. L. Rosenthal

Sat R 51:72 Je 22 '68 500w

BURKE, WILLIAM JEREMIAH. Not for glory—who are today's great teachers? 206p il $4.95 Cowles

370.922 Teaching as a profession. Teachers 67-27193

The author, "a research member of Look magazine, visited more than 50 persons nominated since 1960 for the National Teacher of the Year Award, which is co-sponsored by the United States Office of Education, the Council of Chief State School Officers and Look. . . . Eventually, [he] interviewed five of those selected for each year [and reports here on those teachers]." (Library J)

"The experience of the discovery of good teachers by the author is not in question, nor the worth of the teachers he unearthed, but the authority by which he does so is not clear. By implication, the book deals with the philosophy, sociology, foundations, and psychology of education, but unfortunately, all this is couched in sentiment and even becomes mawkish. The writing moves fast but contains contradictions and is not carefully done. The book might have popular appeal as an introduction to teaching on either a college, or secondary school level. What this book lacks in depth can be found in Louise Sharp's classic, Why Teach? [BRD 1957]"

Choice 5:536 Je '68 150w [YA]

"[These] reports present a homey, yet dramatic picture of a representative group of creative teachers striving for the excellence found at the grassroots level in the profession. . . . Good for education collections, public libraries, and as vocational inspiration in Young Adult collections." E. W. Cummings

Library J 92:3634 O 15 '67 180w [YA]

Reviewed by John Calam

Sat R 51:80 Mr 16 '68 50w

BURKHARDT, DIETRICH. Signals in the animal world, by Dietrich Burkhardt, Wolfgang Schleidt [and] Helmut Altnr, with the collaboration of Helmut Albrecht [and others] tr. by Kenneth Morgan. 150p il col il $10 McGraw

591.5 Animal communication 67-29195

This "collection of papers by . . . German scientists deals mainly with the systems and genetically imprinted circuits that provide and control such . . . capabilities as radiant-heat eyes, infra-red and ultra-violet optics, data-processing in vision, echo location at night, acoustic demarcation of territory, electric location by fishes, and internal clocks of migrant birds. There are other . . . features: how the salmon migrates; the language of bees; what signals catch a male; gravity orientation under water; how bees see color; grasshopper songs." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:808 S '68 140w

"[An] exemplary collection. . . . A couple of dozen animals are looked at critically, and their signals and behavior patterns diagrammed for pictorial explanations; the studies are supported with many beautiful photographs. The presentation is for the more advanced and astute laymen. If there is ■ drawback, it is in the depth of the text. The main information is given, but the really interested reader is bound to keep asking, 'And then what?' Librarians with a large popular science business will see this as a stimulator more than a satisfier and should be well supplied with backup material in natural history." D. M. Simms

BURKHARDT, DIETRICH—Continued

Library J 93:2514 Je 15 '68 170w

"The book covers quite a bit of ground. Unfortunately, it does not cover all of it equally well. Several of the more sophisticated topics are poorly explained, and the diagrams, although generally helpful, are often insufficiently labeled. . . . The translation is unaccountably bad. Awkward in some places, . . . it is downright misleading in others. . . . These are real shortcomings, and the positive features of the book, including the stunning and superbly reproduced color photographs, do not entirely offset them. In its present hard-cover format, the book is an overpriced luxury. As a paperback, it would certainly be worth owning despite its faults, and might well meet with fairly general acceptance." Thomas Eisner

Natur Hist 77:90 N '68 550w

"[The] essays manage, both by caption and content, to maintain a popular interest that rarely flags, combined with an objectivity acceptable to scientific workers. . . . Interest is further titivated by thirty-two superb colour photographs—whose technical brilliance, however, rather overpowers their actual relevance (in discussing the giant nerve fibres of a squid, the photograph of an octopus is lamely introduced as 'a creature related to these creatures'). The text-figures and half-tone plates, on the other hand, are both elegant and to the point. . . . The book succeeds . . . in steering a nice course between the popular and the technical."

TLS p686 Je 27 '68 480w

BURKHARDT, ROBERT. The Federal aviation administration. 249p il $5.95 Praeger

353.86 U.S. Federal Aviation Administration. Aeronautics, Commercial 67-24672

The author traces the history of the agency that controls private and commercial aviation "from the establishment of the Aeronautics Branch under the Department of Commerce in 1926 to the present Federal Aviation Administration under the Department of Transportation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:868 S '68 140w

"[A] very fine reference volume. . . . [The] chapters that cover this agency's present functions will probably appeal most to readers. [The] discussions of air traffic control, safety and accident investigation, airport operations and sonic boom are most readable. A transcript of a taped conversation with a lost, inexperienced pilot is an amusing but vital example of the work done by this very necessary agency. Recommended for all large reference collections." W. N. Hess

Library J 92:3651 O 15 '67 150w

BURLAND, C. A. The ancient Maya; drawings by Elizabeth Hammond. 112p 11b bdg $3.29 Day

970.3 Mayas—Juvenile literature 67-10822

"The people, their history and the way of life, their religion and calendar, writing, and arts are summarized and placed in relation to other civilizations. [Chronology. Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"[The author,] retired from the British Museum, is a scholar who communicates skillfully with the uninitiated. His is a selection of interest-arousing information and informed conclusions recently made possible after years of archaeological discovery. Showing something of the method by which the mystery of the past is unraveled, he produces the best extant brief introduction to the Maya. . . . The format is clear, photographs are old, and the drawings informative." M. B. Stephenson

Library J 92:3860 O 15 '67 100w

"This is a fascinating book for any child with a real interest in history. The clear and highly informative text is enhanced by excellent line drawings and diagrams and by photographs of poignant and romantic beauty."

TLS p1162 N 30 '67 150w

BURLAND, C. A. The arts of the alchemists. 224p pl col pl $9.95 Macmillan (N Y)

540.1 Alchemy—History 68-10841

A "survey of the work of alchemists through the centuries. . . . Although alchemists have often been derided as charlatans, this account reveals that many of them, from ancient Egypt to our own day, have engaged in a serious and dedicated search for the inner meaning of the whole material universe. . . . The alchemists have firmly believed that the secret to the making of gold would be revealed by a power from above as a seal of approval, a symbolic reward for a lifetime of work and study." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a thoroughly attractive book because of its illustrations and its readability. Alchemy is a difficult subject for modern man to contemplate and the admixture of scientific thought, natural sciences, and occultism often defies the comprehension of today's reader. In this volume, however, the ambiguities of the problems presented to the alchemists and studied by them are appraised with sympathy. C. A. Burland, formerly of the department of ethnology at the British Museum gives explanations which make the seriousness of the alchemists' weird approaches seem as logical to us as they did to the practitioners." Lee Ash

Library J 93:1491 Ap 1 '68 200w

"The chief failure for the general reader of this volume . . . is that no real attempt is made in it to distinguish between the different aspects of the subject. There is admittedly a certain irrationality in the subject-matter—its adherents would say mystery—which makes analysis difficult, but not impossible. . . . Mr. Burland's lack of chemistry makes him rather too patient with the follies of his subjects. There are also some conspicuous omissions. Boyle surely deserves more than a paragraph, and Frances Yates's work on the Hermetic tradition could have been used profitably."

TLS p1266 D 28 '67 430w

BURNER, DAVID. The politics of provincialism: the Democratic party in transition, 1913-1932. 293p $6.95 Knopf

329.3 Democratic party—History 67-18618

The author seeks to show "how the rural Democrats, evoking the spirit of William Jennings Bryan, fought a strong rear-guard action on the grounds of nativism, prohibition and fundamental Protestantism. But the hope of the Democrats lay in the increasing political awareness of the immigrant urbanites. When Alfred E. Smith was nominated for President in 1928, the power of the city in the Democratic party was . . . demonstrated. Smith, however, was unable to unite the factions of his party. It remained for Franklin D. Roosevelt, aided by the Great Depression, to rebuild the party and carry it to victory in 1932." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. S. Goodman

Am Pol Sci R 62:987 S '68 750w

Choice 5:1211 N '68 200w

Reviewed by J. T. Patterson

J Am Hist 55:177 Je '68 390w

"Originally written by Mr. Burner, who is at present associate professor of history at State University of New York, Stony Brook, as a doctoral dissertation, the work reflects both the strengths and weaknesses of the genre. It is richly equipped with a complete scholarly apparatus. It is, however, somewhat pedestrian in style, and too often, Professor Burner develops points and arguments which border on the self-evident. Recommended for all collections of American political history." R. A. Gray

Library J 93:559 F 1 '68 240w

"A sensible, absorbing explanation of Will Rogers' 'I belong to no organized political party. I am a Democrat.' Mr. Burner dispassionately describes the feelings of both wings of the Party, rural and urban, during a period when they were at odds with each other. He . . . is both convincing and interesting, because his research has been thorough and his simple style is refreshing. And the past of this particular party may shed a gleam on its future."

New Yorker 44:187 My 4 '68 130w

"This is at once a stimulating and frustrating book. David Burner, a young political historian in the new intellectual-statistical mold, turns a phrase gracefully, synthesizes well, and trades boldly in large ideas. He is frequently informative and almost always suggestive. He has read widely in the secondary literature and dipped into a spate of manuscript collections. Yet his topic is so vast that he has left much unresearched. . . . He is at his best in reinterpreting or buttressing the theses of others, at his weakest in following through his own sharp perceptions. As a result, [this] is more a point-of-departure book than an exhaustive history. . . . What is new is the finding that the decline of the Republican party in the urban centers first became pronounced in 1924. . . . Burner's warm and sensitive treatment of [William Jennings Bryan] . . . is one of the high points of the book. . . . For all [its] deficiencies including several glaring errors which alter meaning, [this volume] abounds in excellence." W. H. Harbaugh

Va Q R 44:488 summer '68 700w

BURNHAM, JACK. Beyond modern sculpture; the effects of science and technology on the sculpture of this century. 402p il $15 Braziller 735 Sculpture. Art and technology 68-16106

In this "work on the nature, origins and future of modern sculpture, Jack Burnham . . . traces [and] explores the effects of technology on today's most original works. No longer is the 'free-standing human form' the look of today; sculpture moves, blinks, emits sounds, startles by its difference from traditional art. Burnham covers . . . the innovations of Edgar Degas, the work done by Noguchi, Henry Moore and Calder since World War II, and many young sculptors—for example, Hans Haacke and James Seawright. He even looks into the future where artificial intelligences will evolve their own aesthetics and make 'cyborg art.'" (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 229:xxiv N 9 '68 80w

"The beginning chapters [are] devoted to the traditional concept of sculpture as object, as opposed to the contemporary approach to sculpture as system. Professor Burnham, Northwestern University, is a sculptor and is concerned with the loss of spiritual qualities in art and the growth of materialism in current sculpture as a result of the effects of science and technology. The writing is frequently philosophical while liberally laced with quotations from literary and technical sources and is most absorbing in the chapters on automata, kineticism, light as a medium for sculpture, and robot and cybernetic art. . . . The book is well presented with . . . black-and-white illustrations; . . . it is recommended for larger art collections and schools with studio courses." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:4282 N 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 207:662 D 16 '68 30w

BURNHAM, JAMES. The war we are in; the last decade and the next. 351p $6 Arlington house

327 World politics 67-22705

"I have been writing for the National Review 'a regular column under the title, 'The Third World War.' This has been a kind of notebook of running commentary on the events, problems, methods and prospects of the war we are in. [The] chapters of this book are composed of various of these columns written over a period of a decade, grouped around eight key topics and chosen with the aim of clarifying by specific and contemporary illustration the nature and course of the war, both as it has developed in the past and as it is likely to do in the future." (p. 15) Index.

"Burnham, an excellent writer . . . has consistently devoted his considerable intellectual talents for the past quarter of a century to gloomy writings sometimes described as 'conservative' or 'right-wing.' For Burnham the Cold War was and still is the central fact of life in our time. . . . This book is a representative sampling of Burnham's writings [and] . . . ought to be held by every library, as an articulate and representative sample of a significant minority point of view prevailing in the U.S. since World War II. It may be more than an intellectual artifact of the period; it is at least conceivable that Burnham will be proved right on some points."

Choice 5:262 Ap '68 180w

Reviewed by C. B. Marshall
Nat R 19:1279 N 14 '67 950w

BURNIER, MICHEL ANTOINE. Choice of action; the French existentialists on the political front line; tr. by Bernard Murchland; with an add. chapter by Bernard Murchland; Sartre and Camus—The anatomy of a quarrel. 206p $5.95 Random house

050 Les Temps Modernes (periodical). Sartre, Jean Paul 68-14512

"In 1945 the journal Les Temps Modernes was founded by Jean-Paul Sartre and a group of Leftist intellectuals, the existentialists, including Simone de Beauvoir, Raymond Aron and Maurice Merleau-Ponty. This is the story of their protest and struggle to change the politics of France." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[In this] history of the journal . . . and of its political involvements, Mr. Burnier, a French journalist, places the real focus on Jean-Paul Sartre and his interest not 'in "revising" Marxism but in creating it,' largely in opposition to the French Communist Party. . . . Relatively little space is devoted to Merleau-Ponty or to Simone de Beauvoir; however, a fine appendix by Murchland . . . is rather a relief after the overacronymization and sketchiness of the main text. Library collections with such works as Wilfrid Desan's 'The Marxism of Jean-Paul Sartre' [BRD 1965] will profit from this account because of the detail it can provide." J. M. Perreault

Library J 93:2668 J1 '68 190w

Reviewed by B. C. Shafer
Sat R 51:25 Ag 3 '68 490w

BURNINGHAM, JOHN. Humbert, Mister Firkin & the Lord Mayor of London; written and il. by John Burningham. unp $4.95 Bobbs
Horses—Stories 68-1228

"Humbert, a working-class cart horse, realizes his dream of outdoing the snobbish brewery horses when the Lord Mayor's coach they have been chosen to pull breaks down and Humbert is on hand to take His Honor in [Mr. Firkin's] scrap iron cart. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. S. Libby

Book Week p18 My 21 '67 50w

Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 4 '67 90w

"The striking paintings which feature a lumpy horse, who looks like a relative of a Thurbur dog, set against an impressionistic view of the London streets are the main attraction of this minimal but good-natured, easy-to-read story. . . . Humbert's moment of glory seems overstressed in the story and will be short-lived with young children." Elinor Cullen

Library J 92:2443 Je 15 '67 90w

Reviewed by G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 7 '67 80w

TLS p1148 D 9 '65 110w

BURNS, E. BRADFORD. ed. Perspectives on Brazilian history; edited with an introduction and bibliographical essay. 235p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

981.072 Historiography. Brazil—History 67-13779

A collection of papers "on Brazilian historiography (three of them by José Honório Rodrigues), translated for the first time into English from Portuguese. Except for the German, Martius, the authors are all Brazilians, and with one exception, their articles are presented uncut. . . . [The editor] has contributed an introduction surveying the colonial chroniclers and historians [and, in the final chapter, a] review of Brazilian historiography that points up the slender material on the subject and the opportunities that lie ahead." (Library J) Glossary of Portuguese words used in text. Bibliography. Index.

"The criteria used by editor Burns for the selection of the essays were based on whether they probed Brazil's past, provided wider perspective, served as critical selective guides to the historical literature, and provided some discussion of the major problems posed by the study of the evolution of Brazil. . . . Nearly every essayist takes a position on Varnhagen, who is considered the father of Brazilian historiography, either to damn the man, praise him or do both. The major charges brought against historian Varnhagen are that he standardized the nation's past, demolished its distinctive features, and in the resulting history the Brazilian colors faded. The impact of this book on Brazilian historiography is what Frederick Jackson Turner's frontier thesis was for American historiography." J. M. Young

BURNS, E. B.—Continued

Am Pol Sci R 62:282 Mr '68 500w

"All of the essays are bibliographical and contribute much material toward fuller understanding of Brazil. A particularly important chapter is found in the essay of Caio Prado Jr. dealing with the reign of Dom Pedro II. . . . Caio Prado, Jr. has given an excellent summary of many of the basic books constituting the vast mass of scattered sources dealing with the Second Empire. A number of essays relate to works of the colonial period, and provide a handy reference for various subject areas in the romantic early history of Brazil. In this respect Burns includes an introduction which might more properly be considered to be a bibliographical treatment of colonial Brazil. In every respect it is as valuable a contribution as the writings of the other seven authors."

Choice 5:400 My '68 300w

"Students of Brazilian history will find it useful to have the view of insiders, so to speak, on the work of historians like, Southey, Martius, Varnhagen, and Capistrano, and to weigh judgments that sometimes conflict but remain provocative. This interesting collection of essays is recommended for subject and historiographical collections." J. A. Boromé
Library J 92:1830 My 1 '67 200w

BURNS, JAMES MACGREGOR, ed. To heal and to build. See Johnson, L. B.

BURNS, TOM, ed. Social theory and economic change. See Seminar on the theory of economic change, University of Edinburgh. 1965

BURR, ROBERT N. By reason or force; Chile and the balancing of power in South America, 1830-1905. 322p $7.95 Univ. of Calif. press
327.83 Chile—Foreign relations. Chile—History. South America—Politics 66-63190

This study provides on 'account of how Chile, a small internally disordered country, grew into a position of strength and authority in the international affairs of South America. Mr. Burr explores the policy of Chile with regard to the Great Powers and explains her shift from a non-interventionist role to that of an aggressive regulator of the balance of power in her continental sphere." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a pioneer work in the sense that it is the first major study of South American international relations to use an approach that has proved fruitful in European and US diplomatic history. Professionals will appreciate the thoroughness of the author's scholarship, his careful documentation, especially of archival materials, and his successful effort at objectivity. . . . But I am not convinced that his approach is necessarily the most valid one. . . . [There are] three areas where the volume might have been strengthened: had it placed less reliance upon official sources and more upon memoirs, newspapers, and literary works; had it related Chile's changing power position more closely to the socioeconomic transformation . . . [occurring] during the post-1875 era; and had Burr given us more of his own thinking on the justice of the claims of the various contenders in the disputes he discusses. No one is better qualified to make such judgments." J. J. Johnson
Am Hist R 71:1479 Jl '66 500w

"This is a most useful diplomatic history. . . . Although very largely dealing with terms of law, treaties, and diplomacy, [it] points the way to insight into national forces in Latin America. There should be a series of national interest studies for . . . other leading Latin-American countries. These would show, as the study does, that there is meaning beneath revolutions, caudillos, violence, and the apparent disorder of the national period. The balance-of-power theme is one guideline, and the book follows that guide very well." Harry Bernstein
Ann Am Acad 376:175 Mr '68 500w

BURROUGHS, PETER. Britain and Australia, 1831-1855; a study in imperial relations and crown lands administration. 419p maps $13.45 Oxford

354.94 Land tenure. Great Britain—Colonies. Australia—Economic conditions. Colonization [67-100191]

The author "sets out to examine 'the interplay between the demands of British policy and the response of colonial conditions,' and to assess 'the influence exerted by Wakefield's theory of systematic colonization on imperial land policies,' Western and South Australia, Van Diemen's Land, and especially New South Wales are the chief focuses for the elaboration of these themes." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Burroughs' complete reworking from original sources of a traditional topic is an excellent piece of revisionist history. . . . In the end, [he] comes back to a traditional position that 'Colonial conditions were bound to triumph over imperial policy, however enlightened,' but along the way he provides subtle and generally plausible corrections to the interpretations offered by such figures as Paul Knaplund, W. P. Morrell, June Philipp, Mills, Roberts, and others." P. J. Coleman
Am Hist R 73:1532 Je '68 220w

"A superb book which should be in every college library where there is any interest at all in the 19th-century British Empire. . . . It raises and satisfactorily answers so many questions of fundamental importance to an understanding of colonization, imperial rule, and dependency economics, as to make it required reading for anyone who wishes to pursue the vital link between land holding and empire. The research is selective but deep within its chosen channels, the writing is clear if unexciting, and the accompanying apparatus—bibliography, maps, index, and footnotes—are models."

Choice 5:1346 D '68 150w

"The author for the most part has used recent scholarship to good effect, but he has missed some good opportunities too. For example, he frequently speaks of 'colonists' and 'colonial opinion' when quoting from newspapers and local government reports. The conflicting interest groups, ideologies, and classes described by Michael Roe in his Quest for Authority in Eastern Australia, 1835-1851 [BRD 1967] are not to be seen in Burroughs' analysis. . . . Burroughs comes closer than previous historians to writing a balanced analysis of theory and practice or of intentions and results. Because of these shortcomings, he is still, like those earlier historians, slightly more adequate on theory than on practice. But only slightly and it will be difficult to improve on his overall analysis." J. A. Williams
Pacific Affairs 41:326 summer '68 550w

"One of the most valuable aspects of this book is the study of the stage of development of each of the colonies when the new system was imposed upon them in 1831. Understandably in this study of theory and reality, personalities are of no very great account; but the author's comments on that habitual scene-stealer Edward Gibbon Wakefield ('essentially a co-ordinator and popularizer') are sound and refreshing. . . . There has long been room for a new and comprehensive analysis which should examine not only the problems as contemporaries saw them but also the interpretations of a generation of historians since the pioneer work of Mills and Roberts. Mr. Burroughs offers just such a fresh analysis."

TLS p1263 D 28 '67 460w

BURTON, ARTHUR. Modern humanistic psychotherapy. 171p $6.95 Jossey-Bass

616.89 Psychoanalysis 67-27947

The author begins by "describing current humanistic/existential philosophical conceptions . . . [and attempts to apply these] concepts to psychological, behavioral, and psychiatric problems. . . . [pointing to a new] understanding of the neurosis/psychosis. . . . Innovations in psychotherapy . . . [are described, with] treatment histories that illustrate the humanistic approaches discussed in the text." (Introd) Some of the chapters have been previously published in such periodicals as Psychoiatry, and the American Journal of Psychoanalysis. Index.

"This book purports to show how ideas of the existentialists can be fitted into modern psychotherapy, but this goal is never achieved. It is loaded with old clichés . . . and abounds in name dropping—Sartre, Heidegger, Muggeridge, and Kafka are here, but only as adornments for Burton. The author, a California psychologist, has written several books and is now working on another. This one should be rewritten. Graduate students will find it simplistic; undergraduates will be confused."

Choice 5:559 Je '68 200w

"[Burton] fails to give evidence of his study of such workers as Karen Horney, Clara Thompson, Martin Buber, Gabriel Marcel, to mention a few, who bear directly on the question of what comprises an up-to-date 'Modern Humanistic Psychotherapy.' Elsewhere he limits the 'foundation of the ethical sense' to 'love.' One can dare to say that 'unity' can be had at the price of a monolithic emotion. What about the other emotions such as hate, curiosity, indifference, to mention a few? . . . [The author] reports success in the therapy of his clients which indicates some element in his approach not too well defined under the headings he himself has outlined. May be added to special collections in psychology where case histories of successful outcomes are desired."

Louis De Rosis

Library J 93:760 F 15 '68 300w

BURTON, HAL, ed. Great acting. 192p $8.95 Hill & Wang

792 Actors and actresses. Theater—England 67-23522

The author, "a B.B.C. television producer, presents eight interviews (expanded beyond the original televised versions on B.B.C.-2, 1965-67) with . . . British actors and actresses: Olivier, Thorndike, Richardson, Ashcroft, (Michael) Redgrave, (Edith) Evans, Gielgud, and Coward. Each interview discusses the beginnings, the problems, the development, and the constant dedication of an actor. Included with each interview is a . . . selection of photographs that span the individual acting years from childhood to the present day. A Time Chart, under annual (1903-67) headings of memorable theater events, lists all the plays performed by the eight actors." (Choice)

"A fresh, varied selection of photographs [is included]. . . . The constant emphasis on early disciplines, the telling photographs (over 250), and the detailed Time Chart make the book a valuable addition not only to collections specializing in acting, but also to those pertaining to 20th-century theater background."

Choice 5:515 Je '68 100w

"Almost every page contains potent lessons for the serious actor involved in the many-faceted, lifelong task of improving and growing in his work. A rich and valuable picture of the 20th-Century stage as seen through the eyes of some of the major actors upon it."

Mary Bozeman

Library J 93:769 F 15 '68 300w

"Everyone will have their own ideas about how many of these [actors] qualify for inclusion under such a title. But at least the collection is free from the fatal and common assumption that an artist's central mystery can be reached in the course of an hour's interview. You could read through this book without getting much indication of the 'greatness' of any of its subjects; what they do have to offer are some good stories about the profession and a great many tangential clues to their own ways of working. As in most casual reminiscences, the early years come out best. . . . The Olivier interview—one of the few extended statements he has ever made—is the outstanding piece in the collection, as much for its reflection of the successive theatrical ages through which he has worked as for its autobiographical content."

TLS p81 Ja 25 '68 300w

BURTON, HESTER. No beat of drum: il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 190p il $3.75; lib bdg $3.61 World pub.

67-23351

A novel "of penal colony life in the 1830s. Young Joe Hinton and his brother Dick are both exiled after the 'farm riots' [in England] in 1830. They are sent to Van Diemen's Land (Tasmania) where they were practically slaves in the effort to develop the frontier country. Everything ended well for Joe as he eventually won his freedom, married and settled down. But Dick's fate is harsh and the author gives a general picture of what happened in 'Devil's Land.'" (Best Sell) Bibliography. "Age twelve and up." (Book World)

Best Sell 27:391 Ja 1 '68 170w

"What happens to [Joe in Australia] . . . as well as his life in Hampshire and the long trip on the convict ship, make colorful and absorbing, if depressing, reading. The plot itself, however, is tiresomely conventional, in the Horatio Alger mode, and rather spoils the effect." Taliaferro Boatwright

Book World p10 D 31 '67 280w

"[This] does not whitewash the past, nor, on the other hand, does it serve up its horrors with relish. . . . Miss Burton makes us, not just her teen-age readers, part of the England of the 1830's personally concerned both with Joe and with the ordinary people of England and Australia." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 2 '67 80w [YA]

Horn Bk 44:68 F '68 290w

Reviewed by Shirley Ellison

Library J 93:301 Ja 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Robin McKown

N Y Times Bk R p26 F 4 '68 190w

"Though a moving reconstruction of village life during the Agrarian Revolution and the 1830 Labourers' Revolt, [this] is first of all a good novel, with real people. It is not concerned with well-known figures, nor does it openly campaign against a rigid justice which regards a parish orphan's life as of less value than a pedigree mare's, though we understand the personal tragedy involved when Joe Hinton's sweetheart is transported for a childhood prank. . . . When machinery deprives the young men of the dignity of work, their demand for a living wage brings most of the village to trial at Winchester and deportation to Van Diemen's Land, after a frightening scene in which the enraged mob cannot be checked by reason. . . . [Joe] is reunited, by romantic but realistic coincidences, with his Mary. After the powerful anguish of the earlier part, we feel he deserves it."

TLS p1078 N 24 '66 330w

BURTON, LINDY. Vulnerable children: three studies of children in conflict: accident involved children, sexually assaulted children and children with asthma. 277p $6.50 Schocken

155.45 Problem children. Child study 68-21683

This study investigates "personality characteristics associated with three types of child problem behaviour. . . . Each group of children is discussed separately and each is compared with a group of 'normal' children. The part played by prolonged environmental stress, constitutional vulnerability and transitory needs is considered. [The author suggests] that problem behaviour is frequently an attempt on the child's part to wrest from an indifferent environment satisfactions necessary for normal personality growth." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:3769 O 15 '68 100w

"The theme is absorbing, the treatment painstakingly thorough. Each study discusses previous work in the field, states the author's hypotheses and describes in detail the application of various tests to the subjects, concluding with a brief discussion of the findings. The rigidity of approach, which betrays the book's origin as a Ph.D. thesis, makes it one for the specialist rather than the general reader, despite the universal interest of its subject. . . . Nearly all these children appear to have been socially as well as emotionally vulnerable but social factors lie outside Dr. Burton's centre of interest, nor is she concerned with questions of prevention or therapy. One finding of the second study hints at the compensatory role the school could play if it wished."

TLS p1048 S 19 '68 700w

BURTON, MAURICE. Animals: il. by Edward Osmond. 96p $4.95; lib bdg $3.71 Watts, F.

599 Mammals—Juvenile literature 67-26378

This introduction to the "kinds of mammals found throughout the world gives information on their location, size, habits, etc., [and] also includes observations of these animals by the author. . . . Grade five and up." (Library J)

BURTON, MAURICE—Continued

"This English import places some emphasis on animals found in Britain, but this in no way detracts from the general usefulness of the book. There are several well-labeled illustrations on each page to attractively supplement the text." Helen Armstrong
Library J 93:3966 O 15 '68 90w

"The essential apparatus of reference is there—neither too little nor too much of it: a full list of contents, an index, and simple cross-reference between chapters. Given an introduction to such devices, no eight-year-old should have special difficulty in using the book. . . . The illustrations, moreover, are, while attractive, essentially sober. . . . [The book] may be a little too plain, a little characterless . . . [but] there is little to fault in the text . . . [which], if marred here and there by small literal errors . . . [is] decent, clear, well-organized and reliable."
TLS p1081 N 24 '66 410w

BURY, J. P. T., ed. Romilly's Cambridge diary, 1832-42. See Romilly, J.

BUSH, GEORGE S. The strange world of insects; il. by Joseph Sibal. 159p lib bdg $3.86 Putnam

595.7 Insects—Juvenile literature 68-15041
"Among the insects described and illustrated . . . are some that are dairy farmers; . . . some that build cities; . . . some that field armies. . . . The author also portrays the day-to-day struggle for existence of insects, the interrelationship of species, their food and habitat, and their natural protection." (Publisher's note) Classification table and index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"Students, particularly those interested in the science of biology, will treasure this clearly written and well-illustrated volume. The author might try to cover too much . . . but he does convey the fascination that comes from the study of ecology of the insects and their effect on man. . . . In addition to two useful appendices there is an excellent classification table and index that lends to the reference value of the volume for the high school library."
Best Sell 28:172 J1 15 '68 60w [YA]

Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 7 '68 30w

"[This book] sometimes lapses into a condescending writing style inappropriate to the goodly amount of detailed science information that it presents. Insect intelligence, camouflage, and life cycles are covered and there are detailed discussions of various bees, ants, spiders and butterflies. The illustrations are numerous but in a single color, always awkward visual aids for identification purposes. Nevertheless, this is attractive supplementary material particularly for use with the science-shy." J. F. Waters
Library J 93:4411 N 15 '68 60w

BUSH, VANNEVAR. Science is not enough. 192p $4.50 Morrow

501 Science—Philosophy 67-29843

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 221:136 F '68 360w
Choice 5:803 S '68 200w

Reviewed by R. E. Gibson
Science 159:1225 Mr 15 '68 2250w

BUSHMAN, RICHARD L. From Puritan to Yankee; character and the social order in Connecticut, 1690-1765. 343p $8.95 Harvard univ. press

917.46 Connecticut—History. Connecticut—Social conditions 67-17304

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. S. Cohen
Am Hist R 73:896 F '68 390w
Choice 5:549 Je '68 170w
Reviewed by R. D. Birdsall
New Eng Q 41:125 Mr '68 1250w

BUSHNELL, DON D., ed. The computer in American education; ed. by Don D. Bushnell [and] Dwight W. Allen, with Sara S. Mitter; commissioned by the Assn. for educ. data systems [based on the proceedings of a conf. sponsored by the Association and Stanford univ. School of education]. 300p $5.95; pa $3.95 Wiley

370 Education—Electronic data processing 67-22407

Gathered here are "eighteen papers which were presented at a 1965 conference on the present and future role of the digital computer in American education. Twelve papers deal mainly with instructional uses of computers; six deal with administrative uses." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The papers are written by several well-known educators and major figures in the field of educational data processing. Unfortunately, the book, like its predecessors, lacks depth. Although the range of topics is too broad, it is a welcome addition to a rapidly developing field. Of particular value is the extensive, partially annotated, bibliography on instructional and administrative data processing, and on research and general applications. An annotated list of selected conferences on educational data processing is also included."

Choice 5:386 My '68 130w

Reviewed by C. R. Johnson
Library J 93:70 Ja 1 '68 200w

BUSK, SIR DOUGLAS. The craft of diplomacy; how to run a diplomatic service. 293p $6.95 Praeger

341.7 Diplomatic and consular service. Great Britain—Diplomatic and consular service 66-18894

The author "describes the proper functioning of missions, the duties of embassy and consular officials, the structural and personnel problems that confront modern diplomatic services, and the human and material resources that are needed to meet the needs of national representation overseas. He gives a 'dictionary' of diplomatic terms and functions, and appendices on grades, personnel, and emoluments, and on procedures for selecting recruits to the service." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] longtime member of the British Diplomatic Service has written an authoritative and instructive book in which he frequently compares the British Service with the American Foreign Service. His book is commendable for its presentation of the art and practice of diplomacy, and useful for a better understanding of the foreign service as a career, cultural interchanges, and foreign aid. It is highly recommended for foreign service institutes, government libraries, and the political science collections of larger academic libraries. Most general readers, seeing the title, will undoubtedly avoid this book; this is unfortunate because it is written with verve, drama, humor and frankness." Perry Armin
Library J 92:3046 S 15 '67 120w

"[This book] should be of the utmost value to [the] newer nations. It can also benefit those in older nations who are concerned lest their representation in world councils not be up to the standard currently required. Sir Douglas takes pains to make clear early in his book that he is talking about the 'craft' rather than the 'art' of diplomacy. However, much of the 'art' keeps creeping in. . . . It will be comforting to American Foreign Service officers—and I hope many of them will read this book—to learn that the British have had much the same problem as the Americans in countering criticism of the manner of and standards used in selecting members of the Service." J. M. Allison

Sat R 51:58 Mr 23 '68 850w

"Far from examining the craft of diplomacy, which by any rational definition means its skillful conduct, the author limits himself to a simple description of the mechanics of the British Diplomatic Service overseas, with occasional glances at the organization and methods of others. Within this straitjacket, the book has value. The author is himself a former Ambassador and can enlarge on and interpret with humanity the recent exhaustive report by the Plowden Committee on the representational services of the Crown overseas. . . . The trouble about the book is what it leaves out. The author makes occasional criticisms of the way things are done but more often sounds like the housemaster of a minor public school on speech day. . . . [He] never stands back from his subject to consider what sort of Diplomatic Service the British government now needs, and to what ends it should be directed in the post-imperial age."

TLS p196 F 29 '68 650w

BUTLER, IRIS. The great duchess; the life of Sarah Churchill [Eng title: Rule of three]. 379p il $7.95 Funk

B or 92 Marlborough, Sarah (Jennings) Churchill, Duchess of 68-13267

A study of the first Duchess of Marlborough and her relationships with Queen Anne and Abigail Hill, who replaced her as the Queen's confidante. Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has command of an easy narrative style, a gift for felicitous quotation, and, at any rate as far as women are concerned, considerable psychological insight. Her deficiencies become apparent when she occasionally attempts wider historical judgments or tries to describe complicated political characters with whom she is out of sympathy. . . . The narrative is skilfully woven around a wealth of quotation from the letters exchanged between Anne (Mrs Morley) and Sarah (Mrs Freeman). . . . The central picture of Sarah is clear-sighted and fair. . . . The picture of the third woman—Abigail Hill—is rightly in subdued colours, unflattering but not unkind or unfair. When she is writing about women the author is, for the most part, penetrating, acute and astringent. When she writes about men her judgment is apt to be affected by her emotional predilections. This is particularly and regrettably so in the case of Marlborough, who is depicted as virtually faultless."

Economist 223:vii Ap 15 '67 800w

"Iris Butler performs the double feat of being lively while paying meticulous attention to her original source material. Her analysis of the political and social background against which Sarah was so glittering a figure is masterly and avoids both overromanticism and overzealous attention to the crudeness of the reality. If the book is to be criticized, perhaps one could mention a slightly irritating repetition when a point has to be made. . . . The book is an excellent one and is recommended for public and academic libraries." A. J. M. Pedley

Library J 93:1996 My 15 '68 100w

New Yorker 44:187 My 4 '68 100w

"Miss Butler's book is considerably the longer [than David Green's biography, Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, BRD 1967]. Both writers have included a good deal of unpublished material, with Miss Butler making greater use of Lord Spencer's manuscripts at Althorp. . . . The relationship of the two women is described by Miss Butler with great discernment. . . . [She] guides us with intuition and skill through the complexities of this story, with all its tensions and recriminations. She brings out Sarah's entire lack of consideration for the Queen, the unrelenting possessiveness of her attitude, and the saddening and embarrassing scenes that constantly occurred. . . . [Miss Butler] pursues the story of the Duchess to the end, with all its storms and tribulations. But for these later years Mr. Green's book is the more detailed."

TLS p375 My 4 '67 700w

BUTLER, SAMUEL. Hudibras; ed. with an introd. and commentary by John Wilders. 463p $16.80 Oxford

821 [67-110276]

"An introduction explains the editorial principles, surveys the few available facts of Butler's life and the general outlines of his thought, and provides a . . . historical and critical essay on the poem." (Choice)

"The only edition of Hudibras based upon modern editorial principles. Wilder has collated all the early editions of the poem. The copy-texts are the first editions (1663, 1664) of parts I and II, with substantive variants introduced from the first revised edition of both parts (1674); original readings are printed in an apparatus below the text. Part III is based upon the first edition published in 1678. In both 'accidental' and substantive features, this text may be said to come closer to the poet's intentions than A. R. Waller's. . . . Whereas the latter included only Butler's random annotations (collected at the end of the first two parts), Wilder reprints them (on the appropriate pages) and adds, at the end of the text, over 100 pages of commentary. . . . Index to the introduction and commentary; two remarkable portraits of Butler."

Choice 5:620 J1 '68 210w

"[This poem] is still one of the most brilliant specimens of that popular English art, resentful grumbling; and Mr. Wilders's new edition has a fine apparatus of notes to make it quite clear just what the grumbling was about. Butler . . . had been working as a clerk and a steward for various members of the aristocracy and the gentry, while watching England being ravaged by their quarrels. Suddenly, it seems, the irritations of years found expression. In the four sharp beats and the snapping rhymes of Hudibras's lines he found an ideal form to put over his contempt for all the self-delusion and chicanery—to say nothing of the violence—he had witnessed. The early sections of the first part of Hudibras have an imitable wit and bite: Mr. Wilders's notes show how precise many of the references were."

TLS p1049 S 19 '68 430w

BUTTER, P. H. Edwin Muir; man and poet. 314p $7.50 Barnes & Noble

828 Muir, Edwin 67-1820

The author "interprets Muir's development as a writer . . . [commenting] on all the forms of writing the Scottish man of letters undertook and gathering myriad impressions of the man from varied sources." (Choice)

"[This careful biography] will remain a good introduction to the man and poet; it should be in all college and university libraries."

Choice 4:1378 F '68 100w

"This [is] a useful book. However, a book can be useful without being completely satisfactory. The predictable difficulties of writing a biography shortly after the subject's death, especially when working with his widow, are intensified by Butter's uncritical admiration of Muir. But this is perhaps less distracting than Butter's tendency to interject his own reflections wherever he has the chance, on subjects ranging from psychoanalysis to the advisability of Scottish poets writing in Scots. His diverse essays add little to our understanding of Muir, and sometimes distort otherwise valuable materials. . . . A more scrupulous objectivity would have greatly benefited the reader." Karl Malkoff

Poetry 112:206 Je '68 280w

"One has the strong impression that some important critical points remain to be made by those who are willing to treat Muir rather more roughly—and therefore, in the end, more seriously—than Professor Butter does in his diligent sympathetic, useful, but uncritical book. To take first the main shortcomings of the book: the central question—how good a poet was Muir?—is simply not tackled at all. . . . Commentary restricts itself to the 'meaning' with few added desultory remarks on style. . . . No analysis is offered of the actual language, metre and texture of any of the poems. . . . The interest of the book, therefore, is not in what it says about the poetry so much as in what it says about Muir's life and character."

TLS p601 J1 6 '67 750w

BUTTINGER, JOSEPH. Vietnam: a dragon embattled. 2v 663:667-1346p $18.50 Praeger

959.7 Vietnam—History 66-13632

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Virginia Thompson
Am Hist R 73:890 F '68 500w

Reviewed by H. J. Benda
Ann Am Acad 337:176 My '68 900w

Reviewed by P. J. Honey
Pacific Affairs 40:402 fall-winter '67-'68 700w

TLS p27 Ja 11 '68 1300w

BUTTINGER, JOSEPH. Vietnam: a political history. 565p il maps $10 Praeger

959.7 Vietnam—History 68-23351

"The only completely fresh material in [this] work is its final chapter on the Americanization of the war . . . [in Vietnam, bringing the account up to] the beginning of June, 1968. . . . The rest [of] this volume is an abridgment of the [author's] earlier books, [The Smaller Dragon (BRD 1958) and Vietnam: A Dragon Embattled (BRD 1967, 1968).] (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

BUTTINGER, JOSEPH—Continued

"The present volume is a skillful condensation of [the] previous volumes. . . . This is an important and valuable study which is recommended to every literate and concerned American."

Best Sell 28:273 O 1 '68 120w

"The bulk of [this book] covers only [1945 to 1963. These] . . . years have been well covered already in books by E. J. Hammer [Vietnam: Yesterday and Today, BRD 1966] and Bernard F. Fall [The Two Viet-Nams, BRD 1967] among others. This new account is straightforward but unilluminating. . . . The interpretation of history made here is that of most American political scientists and government officials. Events are moving so rapidly in Asia . . . that probably now is not the time nor America the place to write a political history of Vietnam." Collin Clark

Library J 93:2385 Ag '68 180w

BUXTON, JOHN. Byron and Shelley; the history of a friendship. 289p il $5.95 Harcourt

821 Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron, 6th Baron. Shelley, Percy Bysshe 68-24385

In this study of Byron and Shelley's relationship the author "analyzes their motives, interprets their poetic works, and evaluates their humanistic and Calvinistic behavior." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] more literary gossip than literary criticism. . . . [Buxton] makes many interesting suggestions about mutual influences, but they are more recommendations for further study . . . than they are scholarly studies themselves. . . . Buxton's control of [his] material is excellent: his style is at once highly detailed and precise without being labored. . . . Mr. Buxton is at his best when describing . . . the summer in Switzerland in 1816 when the two poets had their initial meeting . . . [and] August 23-24, 1818, when Shelley visited Byron in Venice, rode with him on the Lido, and again spent most of the night in talk. . . . The purpose of the book is so completely achieved by these descriptions that all the rest of the biographical detail seems finally irrelevant." Barbara Gelpi

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 12 '68 700w

"Mr. Buxton spends most of the time on the externals of the relationship, building it up circumstantially from the letters and journals and recollections and memoirs. It is a competent, even elegant, piece of literary history."

Economist 227:xvi Ap 27 '68 240w

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips

Library J 93:3140 S 15 '68 170w

"What grew from the poets' interchange can be tracked in and out of a kind of close poetical-biographical chase. Enthusiasm does lead Mr Buxton into a verbal banner-waving. . . . Well, if the reader is pricked into looking up the poems . . . again, something may well have been achieved." Naomi Lewis

New Statesman 75:874 Je 28 '68 190w

"Here is a subject for a well-equipped inquirer to explore with all the imaginative, psychological, factual and intuitive sights at his command. Of these four requirements . . . Buxton selects the factual-safest and most superficial—to provide his framework. What he offers, with much careful detail about dates and incidents, is a part-biography. . . . In order to watch their coincident periods, Mr. Buxton gives long stretches of 'The Years Apart', devoted mainly to the movements of the Shelley party. The reward . . . is a climactic passage or two expanding why they met . . . how the meeting of temperaments was conducted, what literary or imaginative influences arose from it. Had the proportions been reversed . . . Buxton might well have hauled up from the depth discoveries . . . of great luminosity. . . . Only the final chapter with its summing-up comes belatedly to grips with the true subject."

TLS p549 My 30 '68 550w

BUXTON, JOHN. A tradition of poetry. 189p il $6.95 St Martins

821 English poetry—History and criticism 67-13753

"Buxton is an Oxford don who . . . views English 16th- and 17th-century literature from its aristocratic milieu. . . . [His] choice of literary figures, [to each of whom he devotes a chapter, includes] Wyatt, Surrey, Gascoigne, Drayton, Waller, Fanshawe, Charles Cotton, and Anne Finch, Countess of Winchilsea." (Choice) Index.

"[Buxton's] previous books, Sir Philip Sidney and the English Renaissance, and Elizabethan Taste [BRD 1964] are better than this one . . . [which] tends to belabor biographical anecdote and impressionistic praise of aristocratic gentility, to the exclusion of thorough literary analysis. . . . [Buxton is best] on translations, especially of Virgil, and on possible biographical motivations of Renaissance poetry. Graduate students will need these essays on the less major figures, but Buxton's earlier works . . . will serve the undergraduate better."

Choice 5:948 O '68 240w

"A collection of essays on poets as unfashionable as Drayton and Fanshawe and as minor as Charles Cotton and Lady Winchilsea. . . . Because he values poetic individuality, Mr. Buxton respects the poet who stays within his range, however limited that may be. . . . Though all were bookishly inclined, both readers and writers, none was a scholar. They are the courtier poets. . . . Buxton uses a trained and discriminating ear to detect the authentic voice of poetry."

TLS p801 S 7 '67 700w

BUZZATI, DINO. Larger than life; tr. by Henry Reed. 154p $3.95 Walker & co.

67-23102

In this novel by the author of The Tartar Steppe (BRD 1952) and A Love Affair (BRD 1964) "a few Italian scientists construct, in an uninhabited area [of the Alps] a vast electronic installation that functions as a living human being, with sensory and intellectual faculties far beyond our own. . . . They give it the spirit of a beautiful but radically imperfect dead woman named Laura, its inventor's first wife. As any reader can guess, it inevitably turns malign and its human spirit must be destroyed. . . . Endriade [is] the machine's inventor." (New Yorker)

"The human body as a complex city is [the central metaphor of this book]. . . . A cross between a philosophical Gothic novel like Frankenstein and the scientific romances of H. G. Wells, [it] fails to convince because at its core is an undigested lump of Latin mush about love. Like The Great Gatsby [by F. Scott Fitzgerald, BRD 1925], it is about an egoist's obsession with a spiritually inferior woman, but its characters are too thinly conceived—as is the custom in science fiction—to live any sort of palpable moral life." Richard Freedman

Book World p10 O 22 '67 700w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 20 '67 160w

"[What] is the interest of such a book, with its frayed plot and machine-made characters? The answer is that Buzzati has used these conventional materials as the framework for a novel about human concerns. . . . When Laura's spirit is smashed, leaving only a vast calculator, the forces of life have been defeated by those of death. [This] is a cautionary fable, warning us ultimately not against the robot brain but against our own robot hearts. . . . The seriousness of Buzzati's themes is not in question. But his science-fiction clothing of them does not seem a profitable direction. . . . His gift seems wryly comic, more closely related to Svevo than to Kafka." S. E. Hyman

New Yorker 44:122 Je 1 '68 1850w

"This variation on an ancient mythological theme is read-at-a-sitting parable with science-fiction overtones, and it is skillfully put together." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 50:33 Ag 26 '67 30w

BYATT, A. S. The game; a novel. 285p $4.95 Scribner

68-12487

"Cassandra and Julia Corbett, sisters, have been rivals since childhood. Now in their late thirties, Cassandra is an Oxford don, while Julia, married to a Quaker social worker, writes successful novels of domestic life. As children, they played 'the game,' a Brontëan affair of medieval battles and courtly romance. In adolescence, both had loved Simon, a weak neurotic man who discarded the idea of the ministry to become a herpetologist. Simon's return from the Amazon is the catalyst which rekindles the old hostility between the sisters and prompts Julia to write a novel obviously based on Cassandra's affair with Simon. Cassandra commits suicide; Julia has won 'the game.'" (Library J)

"To enjoy this novel one must prefer reflectiveness to action. Reflectiveness is the characters' talk, their thoughts, and their journals. There is a story here but it unfolds rather than proceeds. Unless we quickly accept the principals as persons worthy of our concern we shall not much care what happens to them. The story will not compel us; it is too leisurely and too often moves by implication rather than narration. . . . While this is not another of those novels about Academe, it does presuppose in the reader an awareness of certain strains in the literature of England. To understand Cassandra, and she is much more difficult than Julia, it is well to know something of the tangled Arthurian romances. And to enjoy the book it is imperative to understand Cassandra." Joseph Flannery

Best Sell 28:2 Ap 1 '68 470w

Reviewed by Malcolm Bradbury

Encounter 30:72 Jl '68 1150w

Reviewed by A. C. Ringer

Library J 93:1018 Mr 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Eric Rhode

New Statesman 73:54 Ja 13 '67 20w

"A rare blend of ideas and personality. . . . [this] is a book of uncommon subtlety. . . . What is so admirable about Mrs. Byatt's treatment of her characters is her blending of what they are with what they believe. The father's passive idealism, Simon's belief in original sin, Cassandra's view of the order and harmony of the universe, and Julia's ritualistic religion are truly part of the action. Yet the author doesn't sacrifice emotion to philosophy; her book is cumulatively exciting." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 Mr 17 '68 220w

"Mrs. Byatt's protagonists have not enough substance to carry their philosophical load. Only Cassandra has the weight to at least command respect. Formidable, grotesque and extremely vulnerable, she stands out as the novel's most real character. The author unfortunately shares her heroines' tendency to manipulate; and The Game suffers from a suffocating design of symbols, patterns and complementary characters. Although it is a work of intelligence, full of illuminating comment and perceptive observation which carry it quite out of the ordinary, the total effect is of artifice. As with the later novels of Iris Murdoch (the influence is unmistakable) one is frequently dazzled, less often convinced."

TLS p41 Ja 19 '67 470w

BYFORD-JONES, W. The lightning war. 229p il maps $5 Bobbs

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967- 68-15806

This is "a journalistic account of the military developments of the war." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 119:560 N 30 '68 70w

"[This book is] written in a racy, journalistic style that captures some of the emotional feeling of the war. Frankly pro-Israeli, [the] accounts of the battles and the drama behind the lines are compelling reading." Ronald Steel

Book World p1 Je 23 '68 450w

Reviewed by David Shavit

Library J 93:1627 Ap 15 '68 100w

"The conduct of the war is the main topic discussed by Byford-Jones. Since he seems to be familiar with the thinking of a number of the top Egyptians, his information is particularly relevant. . . . [The book is informative but] contains errors that could have been eliminated by consulting a few standard reference works." Emil Lengyel

Sat 51:27 Jl 20 '68 340w

"[The book adds] little that is positively new to the narrative or events. . . . [It] suffers from faulty proofreading. . . . There are rather too many attempts at spurious elevation of language inspired by the biblical background.

Nevertheless . . . it is personal and vivid with much eyewitness material. The political background is well done."

TLS p102 F 1 '68 240w

BYRNES, ROBERT F. Pobedonostsev; his life and thought. 495p il $15 Ind. univ. press

B or 92 Pobedonostsev, Konstantine Petrovich 68-14598

A biography of the nineteenth-century lawyer, writer, translator and scholar who "was the tutor of Czar Alexander III and Czar Nicholas II, a senator, member of the Council of State and the Council of Ministers and . . . religious dictator of Czarist Russia for 25 years." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Byrnes brilliantly analyzes the life and thought of this man whose influence has never been well defined but always condemned. Pobedonostsev . . . was most effective in halting the moderate effort in 1881 to ameliorate the causes of discontent in Russia, and in preventing badly needed reforms in the Russian Orthodox Church. Although Pobedonostsev enjoyed western Europe, he was deathly afraid lest liberal political ideas destroy Russia. . . . Mr. Byrnes has used the life of Pobedonostsev to illuminate the political, intellectual, and religious life of the last half of 19th-Century Russia. This book should fascinate both the specialist and the general reader. Young people, 14 to 17 years of age, will also find it attractive." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:2645 Jl '68 260w [YA]

"This splendid book by [the] professor of history at Indiana University is the first biographical treatment of Pobedonostsev in English. . . . The scholarly Byrnes sedulously avoids the dramatic and, if anything, underplays his subject's role, particularly in the reign of Nicholas II and as an influence on Dostoevsky's novels. This careful separation of complex reality from cliché is an achievement twenty years in the making. . . . Byrnes in 1963 was named visiting scholar at the Institute of History in the Soviet Academy of Sciences. The opportunity to delve into Soviet archives enabled him to flesh out the picture of Pobedonostsev found in Western sources, adequately compensating the reader for much of the repetition. . . . Pobedonostsev's work as a publicist seeking to influence opinion on behalf of this orthodox vision is astounding; Byrnes's bibliography of his published writings runs to ten pages. . . . [However] there is precious little empathy between biographer and subject." William Parente

Sat R 51:27 Ag 17 '68 1150w

BYRNES, ROBERT F., ed. The United States and Eastern Europe. See American assembly

C

CABANIS, JOSÉ. The battle of Toulouse; tr. from the French by Herma Briffault. 159p $4 Coward-McCann

68-11868

The narrator, a middle-aged bachelor living in the south of France "has abruptly terminated a long and unsatisfying love affair [with Gabrielle]. . . . He has put her on a plane and has then ended the relationship with a letter. Now he withdraws to the country, where he intends to compose a long historical novel about the Napoleonic wars, after the fashion, he hopes, of War and Peace. But as he tries to write, his mind wanders back to Gabrielle. . . . Gradually he retraces the course of the liaison to its origins, all the while trying to organize the materials for his novel, which he never finishes. The long introspective effort draws his thoughts back to childhood, to recollections of his mother, and to a flash of self-discovery." (Atlantic)

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:134 Ap '68 280w

Reviewed by M. E. Kelly

Library J 93:207 Ja 15 '68 200w

"The reader quickly sees Gabrielle as an entirely selfish creature and not much else. But it is herein that the novel's main deficiency lies. The reader is not really comfortable in the certainty that Cabanis himself is entirely aware or convinced of this. For a character to exist with compelling success her creator must know her. Yet both Cabanis and his narrator seem to be exploring, exploring, when all has long been quite clear. . . . Where [Cabanis] does satisfy is in the excellence of individual scenes. The irony is that the best scenes are the Tolstoyan evocations of the life of an ancestor living at Nollet at the time of the battle of Toulouse—Mme. de Cantalauze—who is treated as cruelly by her husband as the narrator is treated by Gabrielle." Peter Sourian

CABANIS, JOSÉ—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 17 '68 800w

"[This book], although sufficient in itself, continues a preceding novel and, generally speaking, the other half-dozen works of José Cabanis, all of which depict a person strongly resembling the author and a provincial world very much like the one he must know. Solitude and the impossibility of love are his main themes, developed through superbly written depictions of nature, episodes fleetingly suggested or evoked, and analysis of sentiment. Cabanis works in a fictional genre that is notably French—the intimate narrative—and stands with Marcel Jouhandeau as one of the contemporary masters of this delicate art. [This volume] which won the Renaudot prize in 1966 and is the first of Cabanis's novels to be translated into English is an exceptionally fine specimen." Laurent LeSage

Sat R 51:40 Mr 16 '68 600w

CADELL, ELIZABETH. Mrs Westerby changes course. 220p $4.95 Morrow

68-12146

"Gail Sinclair, a secretary in a publishing firm in London, gets innocently drawn into a bit of intrigue when the author of a best seller, Mrs. Stratton, [her sister-in-law] Mrs. Westerby and her godson Julian are journeying from Bordeaux to the Basque country in separate cars. Due to Mrs. Westerby's subterfuge, both cars are detoured and the travelers find themselves in a mountain village cut off by construction work from the highway. The tension between the two sisters-in-law . . . builds up during the overnight stay in the village. . . . The true meaning of the tension between the two women is finally explained and Gail and Julian are now free to acknowledge their mutual interest in each other." (Best Sell)

"This is a novel that can be read in one or two tries. It is light, it has a bit of suspense, and it also has a standard melodramatic climax where the 'good guys' become the 'bad guys' and vice versa. . . . This book is recommended to anyone looking for a light novel with just a dash of intrigue to keep one interested." Elizabeth O'Rourke

Best Sell 27:439 F 15 '68 440w

"Something of an enigma, [Mrs. Stratton] is a perfectly acceptable figure in what is largely a mystery tale. But none of the other characters is convincing. . . . They go from London to Sussex to the French Pyrenees, gliding over the surface of events without ever becoming people. But suspense will surely keep readers reading right up to Mrs. Cadell's skillful, all-ends-tied denouement." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 18 '68 170w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:99 Ja 1 '68 20w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 100w [YA]

"The pound may fluctuate, but not Elizabeth Cadell. A generous heaping of sentiment, a soupçon of suspense, whipped together with some tidy plotting and presto—we have [this book]. Of course the secret ingredient is the author herself, who keeps her characters alive, like Tinker Bell, by seeming a believer in them. [In] this latest soufflé, . . . things work themselves out, not necessarily as you might have expected." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ja 21 '68 100w

CAESAR, GENE. Incredible detective; the biography of William J. Burns. 224p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Burns, William John 68-12816

The life and career of the founder of a detective agency. "In writing his biography

Mr. Caesar had access to the Agency files in New York." (Library J)

"Why worry about James Bond or Matt Helm or the countless other fictional detectives? Here is a real-life detective whom the movies themselves would find hard to believe. Yet he is really true." D. F. Lawler

Best Sell 28:187 Ag 1 '68 550w

"This enthralling story . . . will hold the attention of any crime or mystery buff and will interest any reader who enjoys biographies. William J. Burns was a colorful figure from early in the century to his death in 1932, and his exploits frequently received attention from the press. . . . Though Mr. Caesar has tried to be objective about his subject, the admiration shows through, and with cause. His study of Burns can be recommended for general purchase." D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:2480 Je 15 '68 180w

"Despite its rather flamboyant title, this work is thoroughly objective and occasionally sharply critical. There are fascinating case histories." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 S 28 '68 30w

CAGE, JOHN. A year from Monday; new lectures and writings. 167p $7.92 Wesleyan univ. press

818

67-24105

In this collection of lectures, essays and other writings completed since his book Silence (BRD 1962), the author shows "that he is less and less interested in composing music and more and more interested in improving society." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Cage's writing does not tell us what to think as much as it makes us think in a particular way. He is as much concerned with the structure of his writing, and therefore the structure of thought, as he is with the particular ideas that are expressed verbally. . . . In these days of tough-minded and tough-postured art, the use of the word 'spiritual' is suspect, but it must be said that John Cage demonstrates in an unpretentious, subtle and forceful way the profound spiritual basis of avant-garde art, at a time when many people prefer to dismiss the most important works of our day by considering only the surface." Michael Kirby

Am Scholar 37:362 spring '68 2000w

"John Cage has long been associated with avant-garde music, but his writings reveal the extraordinary range of his other interests. . . . This second collection of his articles and lectures is even more unconventional in style and much more far-ranging in content than Silence. . . . Cage is infuriating, irritating, stimulating—and fun! . . . This is a book which should be read by everyone who wants to know what the arts of today are about." B. D. Henry

Library J 93:552 F 1 '68 220w

"Variegated, amusing, capricious and troublesome, Silence was better. . . . Cage continues to write like Gertrude Stein as told to Daietz Suzuki and edited by William Burroughs. He continues to compose his lectures by chance operations. . . . But the mystic fervor with which Silence challenged the comforts and constraints of musical tradition is missing. Cage's utopianism is still tepid, expressed like the musings of a man who, having finished his lifework, has retired—to play guru. . . . [But] while waiting to renounce everything (except mushmooing), Cage is capable of elfin brilliance, of being perfectly clear for all this obscurity." Howard Junker

New Repub 158:39 Ja 6 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Tim Souster

New Statesman 76:322 S 13 '68 800w

"Like Buckminster Fuller and Marshall McLuhan. . . . Cage foresees the electronic transformation of society. . . . The message is similar; the medium, however, is utterly unique. . . . Many of the ideas . . . will be familiar to students of Silence. The difference is mainly one of emphasis. . . . [The ideas are not] especially profound or even strikingly original, and yet I have no doubt that [this book] will be read like Scripture by the young. Read and enjoyed . . . and rightly so. . . . Tune into [Cage] at any point . . . and you find yourself traveling at high speed along the new electronic wavelength." Calvin Tomkins

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 21 '68 1150w

CAHALANE, VICTOR H., ed. The imperial collection of Audubon animals. See Audubon, J. J.

CAHN, STEVEN M. Fate, logic, and time. 150p $5 Yale univ. press

149 Fate and fatalism. Free will and determinism 67-24491
An historical and critical analysis of fatalism. Cahn presents, and examines, "the fatalistic arguments of Aristotle and Diodorus Cronus . . . [as well as] modern versions of fatalism, such as those of Prior and Taylor. . . . The author proposes a clear distinction between the analytical form and the synthetic form of the law of the excluded middle and points out that failure to so distinguish has been the source of confusion in all the arguments so far both for and against fatalism. By establishing the above distinction, Cahn [attempts to] show that fatalism is untenable and that therefore man has free will." (Choice) Bibliography.

"An extremely interesting and thorough analysis of the problem of fatalism. . . . Both in presentation and criticism, Cahn makes full use of modern logical and analytical tools. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:353 My '68 100w

Reviewed by Storrs McCall

J Philos 65:742 N 21 '68 1950w

"According to Professor Cahn, of Vassar, the probable veracity of the universal experience of free will palpably outweighs, and therefore cancels, the probable veracity of all arguments against free will. . . . This [is a] closely reasoned treatise. . . . The analysis, although occasionally technical, is remarkably clear and can be followed by readers who possess some facility for abstract conceptual manipulation." William Gerber

Library J 92:2782 Ag '67 100w

CAIRD, JANET. Murder scholastic. 215p $3.95 Doubleday

68-11801

In this mystery set "in a Scottish school at Dunrose, not far from Glasgow, a handsome Senior Professor is murdered by having metal compasses stuck into his back. Later, one of the woman teachers is found hanged." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:477 Mr 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1023 Mr 1 '68 50w

"The excellent Janet Caird is mildly disappointing in her third novel, her first conventional book. Unlike her highly original openers, this is a straight whodunit about murders in a school, with an idiot heroine who keeps prowling where she shouldn't and getting into misunderstandings with her true love. But it is still worth reading for its splendidly alive creation of a small Scottish town near Glasgow, complete with all its varied and contradictory cultural patterns. This is social anthropology in the manner of the late E. C. R. Lorac." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk ■ p38 Mr 31 '68 100w

"The third of Janet Caird's pleasant Scottish murder stories. . . . [This time] there is a slight overbalance of romance as against honest investigation."

TLS p543 Je 15 '67 50w

CAIRD, JANET. Perturbing spirit. 214p $3.95 Doubleday

67-15364

In this second novel by the author of In a Glass Darkly (BRD 1967) "Sinbad Mazeron, an enigmatic figure comes to the small Scottish town of Fauldston just in time to take on the responsibility for directing the annual festival in which costumed villagers parade to Merlin's Mound, and everyone drinks Merlin's Mead. Mazeron assures them it will be a financial success and that forever after Fauldston will be on the tourist trail. But strange accidents occur, and nothing is quite what it seems." (Library J)

"[Has] a true aura of the occult. An eerie tale, neatly wrought." Henry Erhart

Best Sell 27:233 S 15 '67 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:2608 Jl '67 70w

"A story completely sui generis; charming, witty, satiric and disturbingly eerie." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p14 Jl 30 '67 180w

"Caird's second novel is interesting both in plot and construction. Again she has written about the Border Country. . . . At a level ■ little higher than that of the good romance-thriller she has nicely blended the elements of that genre with an impressive Gothickry that does not topple into unacceptable glamourie."

TLS p1008 N 3 '66 80w

CALAS, ELENA, jt. auth. The Peggy Guggenheim collection of modern art. See Calas, N.

CALAS, NICOLAS. The Peggy Guggenheim collection of modern art; text by Nicolas Calas and Elena Calas. 263p pl col pl $25 Abrams

708 Art, Modern. Guggenheim, Peggy, collection 66-26654

This volume is a record of a collection, located in Venice, of the "work" of twentieth-century artists.

Choice 5:186 Ap '68 190w

"This is perhaps the finest private collection of 20th-Century art extant. A summary of the many schools which constitute our century's art, it . . . brings together paintings, sculpture, and collages by famous and obscure artists of our time, regardless of style or medium. There are 186 works illustrated here, 48 of them in color; most have an additional descriptive annotation. Many of these will be new to art lovers, and since the running commentary is so short as to be negligible, and the annotations, in many instances, give no more than the date and size of the painting, the book must be considered expensive. . . . Useful as collateral material with a good text, the Calas's book is recommended only for the largest collections." R. L. Enequist

Library J 92:3986 N 1 '67 140w

CALDER, NIGEL, ed. Unless peace comes: a scientific forecast of new weapons. 243p $5.75 Viking

355.07 Arms and armor. Military art and science [68-96919]

The editor "has persuaded fifteen [scientists] from various parts of the world to write . . . [of] what we may expect in terms of future warfare in their particular fields 'unless peace comes.'" (Harper)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 50w

Reviewed by B. T. Feld

Bul Atomic Sci 24:35 N '68 900w

"It would fill a page just to list [the contributors'] specific areas of knowledge but the discussions include not only changes to be expected in 'conventional' warfare, but in atomic, biological, and chemical warfare ('ABC' is the term in U.S. usage), as well as the possibilities in psychological weaponry. . . . The quiet restraint, the general excellence of the writing, added to the expertise of the authors, lend all too real a sense of absolute authority and conviction to this important book."

Harper 237:79 Ag '68 250w

Reviewed by K. J. Frohlich

Library J 93:2883 Ag '68 200w

"The book is rather conservative in its approach. . . . The potential for misuse of the 'second generation' of psychic agents (tranquillizers, hallucinogens and the like) is barely treated. . . . nor is the revolution in electronic miniaturization traced adequately. . . . Most seriously, perhaps, no attention is given to the future technology of guerrilla war and counterinsurgency. And yet, even with these important omissions, the book illuminates perhaps the greatest of the many ironies of the arms race: that it often feeds upon breakthroughs in civilian fields. . . . The contributors themselves [are not] immune to the air of cruel paradox which pervades the volume. Some of them lapse into manners of expression which belong to the future they warn of, a future in which man is reduced to something less than a machine." John Gliedman

Nation 207:433 O 28 '68 1750w

"[The contributions here] are clearly intended to shock and appall. The intention is achieved, not through raucous prophecy and admonition, but rather through a fairly detached, even-toned recitation of technically attainable possibilities for conducting wars of the next decade, and, equally important, the political tensions that may be created simply because of the existence of unfamiliar and potentially devastating means of warfare. . . . The chapter titled, 'How to Wreck the Environment,' is the most frightening, and, it must be emphasized, most speculative. But at the same time, it should be noted that its author, Gordon J. F. MacDonald, a young and internationally renowned geophysicist, is probably the most knowledgeable in military affairs of all the contributors to the volume. . . . [The message of this book] should command the most respectful hearing, and the contributors . . . are to be commended for helping to sound the alarm." D. S. Greenberg

CALDER, NIGEL—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 28 '68 1450w

CALDER, PETER. See Calder, R.

CALDER, RITCHIE. Man and the cosmos; the nature of science today. 219p $5.50 Praeger 500 Science 67-24676

"In the first two chapters of this book Calder, a British scholar [and recipient of the 1960 Kalinga Prize for the 'promotion of the common understanding of science'] . . . is concerned with the nature of science today. That is, he deals specifically with the methodology and philosophy of modern science in relation to the methods and speculations of the ancient 'natural philosophers.' In the remainder of the volume he gives a summary of the major current findings of modern physical and biological sciences. Mr. Calder emphasizes cosmology, nuclear and quantum physics, relativity theory, geophysics, and molecular biology." (Library J) Index.

"Calder, long known for his talent in presenting science accurately to laymen, has written another gem. He has managed to skillfully combine elements of philosophy of science, historical perspective and intimacy, and current ideas in the hard sciences in a stimulating package. We are lead enjoyably yet rigorously through the history of an idea, made aware of the impact and difficulties of changing concepts, and given to understand the personal foibles and idiosyncracies of great men."

Choice 5:1324 D '68 190w

"As a whole, [this] book is a readable and useful summary for the layman. Like a few other popularizers, [the author] emphasizes too much the now-obsolete Bohr theory of distinct electron orbits rather than the modern notion of discrete energy levels and undefined positions for the electrons; excepting this reservation the book is reliable in its details. Mr. Calder deserves particular praise for good explanations of still unsolved problems, for example, elementary particle theory. His book is recommended for public and academic libraries." J. W. Wiegell

Library J 93:1642 Ap 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Jane Oppenheimer

Natur Hist 77:75 Ag '68 360w

"Lord Ritchie-Calder tackles [many questions but] his style is declarative, flat and monotonous, his metaphors trite, . . . and his jargon ponderous. . . . He is a serious and worthy scientific journalist and students of the history of science may find something of value, but for the ordinary reader, it is heavy going." Brenda Maddox

New Statesman 76:877 D 20 '68 280w

"The author's principal interest lies . . . with the comprehensive current survey. How things now stand, for instance, with the manganese nodules in seawater, the neutrino in the atom, the nucleic acids in the body is laid out neatly and clearly. . . . Mr. Calder from time to time introduces sensible observations on . . . such matters as the nature of science, the character of scientists, and that celebrated 'scientific method.' . . . To his task he does not bring the same depth of understanding, grace, or philosophic concern that V. Weisskopf revealed in 'Knowledge and Wonder' [BRD 1963], which recently traversed much the same ground. But probably the most important thing about a book of this sort is that it be both clear and responsible in the report of its information. . . . Calder has furnished accurate accounts of the things he deals with. He has brought off what he set out to do." E. S. Morison

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 23 '68 400w

TLS p1228 O 31 '68 460w

CALDWELL, ERSKINE. Deep South; memory and observation [Eng title: In the shadow of the steeple]. 257p $6.50 Weybright & Talley 917.5 Southern States—Religion 68-12867

Son of a Reformed Presbyterian minister in the South, the author of Tobacco Road (BRD 1932) testifies that "the basic beliefs of many Southern churches have been left untouched by the changes affecting the rest of U.S. Christianity. . . . [Caldwell] toured the rural Southern states every summer for the past three years, visiting revival meetings and churches. . . . [He] notes that sermons in backwoods churches still concentrate heavily on sins of the flesh . . . [and] that many devout Southerners still cannot see the disparity between their concern for personal salvation and their anti-Negro prejudices." (Time) Only part one has been published with the English title.

"[This] is an informal study of the godly gyrations of the backwoods South. . . . Primitive religion in the South (holy-rolling, we call it) is nothing new to Caldwell. . . . From a safe distance the younger Caldwell studied the querulous sects which his father held in stern, if charitable contempt. . . . [He] offers some amusing vignettes. . . . He deals with the surface for the most part, but his insights are shrewd and ring of truth. Those who would enter the dark forest of the Southern rural soul, the tangle of wrecked psyches that makes Bilbos possible, may enter it here." E. M. Yoder

Book World p5 Mr 24 '68 900w

"The book has great value for its understanding of Southern religion in its many manifestations. Caldwell writes with sympathetic candor about the various fundamentalist groups as well as the more traditional and established denominations. . . . A valuable book for anyone who wants to understand the Southern mind, both Negro and white, in the 1960's."

Choice 5:468 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:1622 Ap 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara

New Statesman 72:795 N 25 '66 270w

Time 91:62 Mr 22 '68 600w

"[This] is a bleak book in every way—brief, sketchy, with no truly original insights or even startlingly exact descriptions. It is in essence a glimpse of the Christian Church in the Deep South through the life of Mr. Caldwell's father . . . [whom] emerges as a folksy eccentric, even at times a caricature, rather than a rounded portrait. . . . [He is depicted as a] radical Christian, forever trying to get back to the heart of Christianity and being side-tracked and sabotaged by his congregations. . . . [He] could well be portrayed as a tragic figure of heroic proportions, but the tone of this sketch is gently ironic, often folksy, occasionally mud-dily Madison Avenue. . . . [Caldwell] is one of the white southerners who could have done the soul-searching necessary for the Deep South's survival . . . [and] across Mr. Caldwell's failure falls the shadow of the white backlash, the cosy liberal rationalizations for suppressing the radicals like young Stokely Carmichael."

TLS p1191 D 22 '66 700w

CALDWELL, ERSKINE. Miss Mamma Aimee. 210p $5 New Am. lib.

67-16941

"The title character is a middle-aged matriarch . . . who preserves a medieval-type manor house and all the family hangers-on . . . [including] Graham, the violent, mentally defective son. Matters are brought to a head in the story when a . . . preacher named Raley Purdy arrives. . . . Miss Mamma wants to keep the preacher and so invites him to make free with the favors of her daughters [Connie and Velma]. This is violently opposed by Graham, the feeble-minded brother, and by Katy, the avaricious sister-in-law. . . . [The novel] culminates in the murder of Miss Aimee by the half-witted Graham." (Best Sell)

"Erskine Caldwell is still plowing up God's Little Acre [BRD 1933] along Tobacco Road [BRD 1932]. This latest novel is more of the decadent South, replete with incest, nymphomania, adultery, fornication, oppression of the negro, violence, feeble-mindedness, alcoholism, laziness, poor syntax, and general rot. The novel is an amalgam of 'Journeyman' [BRD 1935], the above-mentioned novels, and parts of scores of Caldwell short stories and tales. To update the work there are references to Martin Luther King, the civil rights movement, and folk singers. However, the hard core of the characterization and narrative is the same formula Caldwell has used for the past 35 years. . . . No doubt this book will sell splendidly in paperback form in every drug store in the country." S. J. Laut

Best Sell 27:70 My 15 '67 430w

"As usual, Mr. Caldwell cannot seem to make up his mind whether he is writing low comedy or high tragedy and, in the absence of either, settles for easy ribaldry." J. C. Pine

Library J 92:1850 My 1 '67 230w

"[With this book] we are back in Caldwell's Georgia but now it is the decaying aristocracy we are concerned with and not your po' white trash. . . . Like most southern writers Mr Caldwell is able to write about negroes as if they were characters like the other characters in their novels and not adverts for integration; in [this book] there is a compassionate and timely study of the new Negro, fired by the ideas of Martin Luther King. [This] is a well-told tale, each chapter ending with a spur on to the next, filled with riotous characters and comic situations, and guided by a kindly if unflinching hand." Stanley Reynolds

New Statesman 75:555 Ap 26 '68 140w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p33 My 7 '67 130w

TLS p521 My 23 '68 420w

CALDWELL, JANET TAYLOR. See Caldwell, T.

CALDWELL, JOHN C., jr. auth. Let's visit Italy. See Bartlett, V.

CALDWELL, TAYLOR. Dialogues with the devil. 198p $4.95 Doubleday

817 Satire, Good and evil

67-11736

"In an exchange of letters between Beelzebub and the Archangel Michael, we are made directly aware of a catalogue of modern scourges beloved of the devil: egalitarianism, water pollution, Freud, masculine women, insubordinate children, climate control and deodorants for men. . . . Satan is considering the Apocalypse in this series of polemics and rebuttals, which leads to a continuing discussion relating to the omniscience of God, and the nature and result of man's possession of free will." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Using a literary letters format, [the author] makes Lucifer and Michael exchange judgments, some theirs and some hers. Sophistication levels vary. Intrinsic interest is often high: Lucifer is not against God or good; he is merely sure he can 'do it better.' . . . Freedom of will takes a real dubbing: Lucifer is sure man will always choose grossly or intellectually (about the same). God has an internal public relations problem: the archangels know no more of his will than humans do. No answers emerge here; no serious reader will expect any. These are lightsome variations on classic melodies, 'suitable for discusional change ringing. Otherwise probably for the general rather than academic reader.'"

Choice 4:996 N '67 140w

"The author assures us that this phantasmagoric extension of the Lucifer myth is 'not a theological book,' but theological positions (Catholic) are enunciated with categorical finality as she contemplates 'problems of Good and Evil.' . . . The letters are scathing indictments of the degradation into which man has fallen (woman much lower). The crucial point is that God endowed man with free will. 'That,' said Lucifer, 'is my opportunity.' . . . The book has overtones of anti-intellectualism: a special hell for scientists is provided. The question Why did God permit Lucifer to corrupt man? remains unanswered. Only a blind faith and obedience to God's Natural Law is required. The style is too turgid, the theme too involved for popular reading. Await demand." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:1030 Mr 1 '67 220w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p43 Je 11 '67 190w

"[C. S. Lewis in The Screwtape Letters, BRD 1943, composed] a series of letters from one of Hell's staff to a junior Tempter on his first assignment in the world. . . . Miss Caldwell attempts something much more exacting, for she presents Lucifer himself, and, as though that were not problem enough, puts him into correspondence with the Archangel Michael. She is an experienced novelist, but it must be said that the two contestants use a style that is disconcertingly alike. . . . One misses the verve, and the wit, of Lewis. But the real fault of the book is that it lacks bite, roaming too widely over unknown planets."

TLS p926 Ag 29 '68 340w

CALDWELL, WALLACE EVERETT. The ancient world [by] Wallace Everett Caldwell [and] Mary Francis Gyles. 3d ed 654p il maps $9.95 Holt

913.03 Civilization, Ancient. History, Ancient 66-13290

"This revised edition . . . incorporates archaeological and other source material that has become available in recent decades. The first third of the book has been extensively rewritten and two new chapters have been added." (Social Studies) Bibliographies. For first edition see BRD 1938.

"Gyles is to be complimented for having undertaken the task of adding valuable new material to this book 30 years after its initial publication, while maintaining the original structural basis and the well balanced approach of alternative explanations by many other scholars in the field. . . . Its many charts, comparative time-tables and up-to-date bibliographies make [this] a very thorough and useful reference book for the advanced college student. However, anyone who is trying to relate antiquity to the events of today will find the book dry, cumbersome, and unimaginative. Its stodgy factual narrative is scholarly, but written at the expense of not creating enough interest to effect deeper research."

Choice 3:938 D '66 180w

Social Studies 58:337 D '67 60w

CALHOUN, JOHN C. The papers of John C. Calhoun; v3. 1818-1819; ed. by W. Edwin Hemphill; pub. for the South Caroliniana society. 772p $10 Univ. of S.C. press

973 U.S.—History—1783-1865 (59-10351)

Covers eight months of the South Carolinian's career as secretary of war—August, 1818 through March, 1819. "All papers written by Calhoun himself that are known to have survived from the eight months are included, together with a large selection of his official papers as well. The extant personal papers are quite few in number, and each is published in complete, verbatim transcription. The official papers are so numerous . . . [that] only those that seem most important to the editor, for one reason or another, are reproduced in full. Many of the remaining official documents appear only in condensed abstracts; but the reader is told where he can examine them in unabbreviated form if he wishes to do so." (Pref) Bibliography. Index. For volumes one and two see BRD 1960 and BRD 1963, respectively.

"Most of the approximately three thousand documents printed or summarized in this volume deal with routine matters: inquiries about pensions, requests for appointments to West Point, expenditures and supplies for the army, dealings with the Indian tribes, reports to Congress, preparations for Major Stephen Long's intended explorations of the Rocky Mountains. Altogether these documents reveal that Calhoun was an industrious and systematic administrator and that his grasp on the affairs of his department was firm. Yet it all makes dull reading." James Rabun

Am Hist R 73:1637 Je '68 320w

"This third volume of the Calhoun Papers is meticulously edited. . . . Future historians may be grateful that the editor included such a mass of source material. . . . The editor has written an excellent introduction, and he has prefaced the letters for each month with a brief guide to their contents. . . . Much of [Calhoun's] attention was devoted to Indian treaties. . . . In the exercise of his latter duty, he had to deal with the problem of Jackson's seizure of the Spanish forts. Calhoun's action in this crisis has been the subject of great historical controversy, to which this volume contributes valuable information." Clement Eaton

Ann Am Acad 376:190 Mr '68 600w

"The third volume of [this work,] like the second, documents an office (the War Department) and its affairs to a greater extent than it reveals the nature of the extraordinary man who presided over that office. . . . Among the four to five thousand items printed, largely in abstract, in this volume, which covers only eight months, the personality and the development of Calhoun are frequently lost to view in the maze of department business. . . . All personal papers are printed in full, as are a number of Calhoun's official letters. But the official correspondence is so large that most of it (including some letters to Jackson) can only be abstracted, and some two thousand items are omitted altogether. More complete transcriptions are included, and more documents are omitted than in the preceding volume—both steps that this reviewer applauds." J. A. Munroe

CALHOUN, J. C. —Continued

J Am Hist 55:125 Je '68 450w

"In this second year of his long tenure as Secretary of War, Calhoun continued his reorganization of the War Department to introduce system where chaos had existed. . . . Although the editor continues to maintain the high standard expected in a good letter press edition, he shows a tendency to cast Calhoun in a more favorable light than conditions and the documents warrant."

Va Q R 44:1xxix spring '68 100w

CALIFORNIA. UNIVERSITY. University at Los Angeles. West Indies study program. The democratic revolution in the West Indies. See Bell, W., ed.

CALLAHAN, SIDNEY CORNELIA. Beyond birth control. 248p $4.95 Sheed

301.42 Marriage. Sexual ethics 68-13848

The "author of The Illusion of Eve [BRD 1965, writes] . . . about 'the relationship of sexuality and Christianity'. . . . Arguments over contraception, she believes, are only the beginning of a needed reappraisal of the church's attitude toward the sexual relationship in marriage, hence the title of this book. . . . [She views] sexual fulfillment as a giant step on the road toward godliness. She urges the church to 'show that Christianity knows that bodies and emotions exist,' and to cease being identified with 'repression, inhibition, competition, aggression, and authoritarianism.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by Don Browning

Christian Century 85:944 Jl 24 '68 500w

"Callahan presents here a positive and balanced understanding of human sexuality from within a Catholic context. Her essay is not a profoundly scientific treatise from the theological, anthropological or psychological viewpoint; but it is a very satisfying personal reflection, using the insights of many sciences to develop her thesis. . . . A sense of balance and complexity characterizes Mrs. Callahan's analysis. . . . The few disagreements I have with [her] presentation are primarily a question of degree rather than substance. . . . I wholeheartedly recommend [her] book for a thoughtful Christian reflection on the understanding of human sexuality. College teachers will find here an excellent introductory book for supplementary reading and/or class discussions." C. E. Curran

Commonweal 88:386 Je 14 '68 900w

"This is a well-written, thoughtful presentation which will be inspirational reading for many Catholic laymen. How the clergy, to whom it seems basically addressed, will respond to it, is questionable. For public libraries and Catholic colleges." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:1903 My 1 '68 200w

"[The author] argues for Christian acceptance of the positive value of eroticism. . . . She also believes that there is a potential good in contemporary society's greater concern with sex. 'Along with eroticism,' [she writes] the ideals of commitment, love, even of chastity and romance, may stage a comeback. Tender concern could flourish; the playboy could become a man.' Nevertheless, Mrs. Callahan suggests that some kind of erotic restraint is socially necessary—and that monogamous marriage is perhaps the most constructive form of human union."

Time 91:71 Ap 19 '68 200w

CALLOW, JAMES T. Kindred spirits; Knickerbocker writers and American artists, 1807-1855. 287p il $7.50 Univ. of N.C. press

700.97471 American literature—New York (State). Artists, American. New York (City)—Intellectual life 67-26032

An "interdisciplinary study of the mutual influence of Knickerbocker writers (such as Irving, Bryant, Cooper, and Paulding) and American artists." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is the most detailed and comprehensive coverage of the topic so far available. [Callow's] voluminous footnotes and his forty-two pages of precise notes drawing on reviews and comments in more than a dozen contemporary magazines testify to his pioneer scholarship. He has drawn on many hitherto unused and unpublished manuscripts, and his interpretations are temperate and judicious. Emphasis is on the paintings of such men as Asher Durand, Thomas Cole, Thomas Doughty, and John Quidor, but Callow also has much to say of landscape planning, parks, and architecture. . . . In general the book helps to impress the reader with the extent to which, before writers such as Emerson and Hawthorne emphasized inwardness and . . . introspection, the literature of the Knickerbocker era was concerned with the surfaces of life symmetrically ordered that aroused pictorial interest. Callow is to be congratulated on a scholarly, polished, readable, and nicely illustrated study." H. H. Clark

Am Hist R 73:1634 Je '68 440w

Choice 5:938 O '68 210w

"[This] is more of an exploration than a narrative. The evidence is too often presented in bulky, undigested form; chronicling becomes an end and not a means. From his eagerness to communicate the fascination and inherent richness of this material, the author rarely takes the interpretive stances which his labors certainly entitle, even demand him to take. . . . Despite its analytical looseness, Callow's book invites the interest of any student of Jacksonian culture; its chronicles, appendixes, and bibliography constitute a source which can spawn enough interpretation to satisfy the most demanding dialectician." Neil Harris

J Am Hist 55:130 Je '68 550w

CALVIN, B. T. LEE, ed. Improving college teaching. See Improving college teaching

CALVINO, ITALO. Cosmicomics; tr. from the Italian by William Weaver. 153p $3.95 Harcourt

68-24386

"The twelve tales that make up the book are recounted by a character named Qfwfq . . . whose experience goes back to the beginning of time. Whatever species Qfwfq presently belongs to—and this is not clear—it seems that he has recapitulated the whole history of evolution in his personal experience, and thus remembers being a number of higher and lower animals at various epochs in his past." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[An] imaginative, new-trend, sometimes thought-provoking book that will appeal, I fear, to a limited audience, that the majority of the reading public will quickly lay aside. It interoscultates linguistic experimentation with vivid inventiveness in a bold way that can only be appreciated in small doses. . . . One or two of the stories seemed as interminable as the millennia that have passed in the period of Old Qfwfq's existence. This is extremely sad, because Mr. Calvino's imaginative writing is sometimes beautiful prose. The very discerning reader can find symbolic messages covering philosophical, social, and psychological problems; but he risks frustration and boredom in the process. One could only suggest that the book be read at a series of brief sittings." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 28:205 Ag 15 '68 300w

"At one juncture, after [Qfwfq's] girl friend Ayl has fled underground from the newborn first colors, he pleads, 'Come, let me take you outside'—and that, really, is what Calvino is saying to orthodox readers of orthodox fiction, inviting them far outside the usual social and economic, moral and psychological matrices into what is, in effect, the first biography of all: a poignant, freewheeling account of Creation itself. . . . Far-fetched? No, it was all at hand all along; Calvino has simply had the complex wit to identify it and make it relevant." Paul West

Book World p4 Ag 11 '68 750w

Reviewed by Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 29 '68 700w

Reviewed by Patricia Schuman

Library J 93:4306 N 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by Michael Feingold

New Repub 159:34 N 2 '68 1000w

Reviewed by D. J. Enright

N Y Rev of Books 11:22 N 21 '68 1650w

"Calvino brings a number of people to mind: the better science-fiction writers, Jorge-Luis Borges, the later Beckett and Kafka. He differs from the science-fiction writers in focusing on the poignant possibilities, the ambiguities and inevitable maladjustments of scientific progress, rather than on its glamorous gadgetry and cocky perspectives. Though his metaphors are not as high caliber as Borges's, he has none of the Argentinian's rather heavy mock pedantry and bibliomaniac dryness. His situations are more dimensional, more amusing, less severely chichi, than Beckett's ashcans and primeval ooze. His landscapes might be by Tanguy, Chirico or Klee. And, while he never approaches the depth or intensity of Kafka, he is still quite a good cosmicomic in his own right." Anatole Broyard

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 25 '68 600w

CALVOCORESSI, PETER. Suez ten years after; introduced by Peter Calvocoressi; ed. by Anthony Moncrieff. 160p $3.95 Pantheon bks.

962 Egypt—History—Intervention, 1956. Suez Canal. Sinai Campaign, 1956 67-23530

"The material in this book was gathered and presented on the BBC in a series of programs in the summer of 1966. French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau, Gamal Nasser, David Ben-Gurion, and numerous others who had been directly involved in the crisis were interviewed for these programs." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The contributions by participants . . . are sometimes confusing (Pineau, for broadcast purposes, was interviewed and spoke in English, a language he does not use well) and are not important. . . . The reflections of the commentators are sometimes enlightening, acute, and intellectually stimulating. In some cases, however, they were falsified by the Arab-Jewish War of 1967." Choice 5:538 Je '68 200w

"An interesting, thought-provoking study of the emergence of the 'Third World' concept. The book includes a good chronology of the events leading up to the crisis and an excellent bibliography. The approach is fair and the style straightforward." Joan Dillon

Library J 93:894 F 15 '68 100w [YA]

CAMERON, ALISON STILWELL. Chinese painting techniques. 226p il col il $15 Tuttle 751.4 Painting. Painting, Chinese 67-15140

"Beginning with the materials and equipments—brushes, ink, inkstone, colors—there is a . . . chapter on basic strokes and the painting of Chinese characters; this is followed by lessons in painting bamboo, pine and plum trees (leaves, stems, blossoms) . . . with another series of nine lessons on landscape painting. The use of color is then treated, after which there are lessons on painting flowers, birds, insects, human figures." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

Best Sell 27:386 Ja 1 '68 190w

"Chinese painting is probably one of the few art forms which can be learned from a book since repeated tracings of the teacher's work is one of the basic steps. . . . Each lesson includes examples of common mistakes and ways of avoiding them. If the student is artistically inclined, patience and close attention to the lovely illustrations and competent text should result in an improved skill in this delicate and difficult technique. A simple perusal of the text will aid in a better appreciation of the philosophy and method of Chinese painting. Highly recommended for high school and public libraries." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 93:176 Ja 15 '68 150w

CAMERON, IAN. The lost ones. 220p $4.50 Morrow

68-31912

When Donald Ross, "hot on the trail of dying whales, disappears, his father has a double incentive to find son and treasure. Clues point to an isolated, inaccessible Arctic island, defended on land by the taboo of a fanatical Eskimo tribe and by guardian killer whales in the sea." (Library J)

"[This is] a book that most junior high students and a few older students will find exciting, suspenseful, and informative. In truth, there are a few parts which made me gasp. This is the type of book that goes on a special shelf in my library: the shelf of wholesome, exciting books for my boys when they get a little older." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 28:25 Ap 15 '68 190w [YA]

"Written with a fullness of detail characteristic of a real expedition, the fictional quest involves treacherous treks across ice and sea, close brushes with death-dealing dolphins, imprisonment by mysterious blond people of the North, and burial alive in the fumarole of a dead volcano. The novel sustains the compelling tenor of truth throughout." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:341 Je '68 70w

Reviewed by R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:1160 Mr 15 '68 70w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:2739 Jl '68 70w [YA]

"The atmosphere of bleak, frozen, Arctic isolation is created with skill, and the book has all the suspense, danger, mystery, and romance one could want. The pace is wonderfully sustained in a chain of triumphs over disasters, and the story line is simple and strong. This is a topnotch adventure story." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:73 N 9 '68 80w [YA]

CAMERON, JAMES. Point of departure; an attempt at autobiography. 318p $5.95 McGraw B or 92 67-30051

Some passages in this autobiography of the British journalist have appeared previously in such publications as Atlantic Monthly, Picture Post and New Statesman. Index.

"Men of [Cameron's] own trade, men who know, praise him for his honesty, objectivity, detachment, compassion, perception, liveliness, wry humor and a flair for vivid prose. He has all these things in a unique assemblage and, as from a ship hurriedly packed, one never knows which will be unloaded next. For this reason those who read for entertainment, for inside knowledge of world affairs they supposed they already knew, for the sketch of an honest man tormented by our mad world, for an illustration of the power of the English language in the right hands, for all this and more will accept gratefully this rare offering." Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 27:414 F 1 '68 440w

Reviewed by E. M. Yoder

Book World p5 My 19 '68 900w

Reviewed by H. S. Hayward

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 9 '68 800w

"Cameron flies in the front row of the world's professionals who report the world's news. Yet, in the most modern sense of clinical reporting in depth and breadth, he is not a professional at all, but an amateur. He has a concern for the things, and above all the people, he writes about so well. It shows through all his writing, for he does not believe that the objective reporting of big events is possible. It shows through this sketch of his life and career, with its rows and resignations over what he saw as points of principle, and his revulsion from the pain and waste and senselessness of the wars he has seen so much of, and from the fact of the nuclear bomb that he has watched three times at first hand." Economist 224:123 Jl 8 '67 250w

Reviewed by Bill Katz

Library J 92:4497 D 15 '67 150w

Reviewed by Studs Terkel

Nation 207:730 D 30 '68 500w

Reviewed by Malcolm Muggeridge

New Statesman 74:37 Jl 21 '67 1000w

Reviewed by John Meeklin

N Y Times Bk R p14 Ap 21 '68 900w

New Yorker 44:134 F 24 '68 230w

CAMERON, JAMES—Continued

"Cameron's 'attempt at autobiography' contains very little autobiography in the usual sense. The emphasis is professional, not personal. There is an immensely moving portrait of his father, a good man, a journalist and forgotten novelist who died of drink, and a poignant memory of the death in childbirth of Cameron's first wife; but very little else that is 'personal.' Yet in the more significant sense, the book is intensely personal—continuously alive, beautifully told, uncommonly honest, and in an odd and touching way vulnerably intimate. Cameron tells how it was to be a foreign correspondent in all the world's stricken places in these hideous, intermittently exhilarating postwar decades; but the reader is always aware of his passionate subjectivity lying utterly exposed, one thin layer of skin beneath the surface." S. M.

Newsweek 71:30 Ja 29 '68 650w

Reviewed by S. W. Little
Sat R 51:109 Mr 1 '68 100w
TLS p661 J1 27 '67 460w

CAMP, L. SPRAGUE DE. See De Camp, L. S.

CAMPBELL, ALAN K. Metropolitan America; fiscal patterns and governmental systems [by] Alan K. Campbell and Seymour Sacks. 239p $7.95 Free press

336.73 Metropolitan finance 67-14373

The authors "attempt to describe, compare, and evaluate fiscal patterns and governmental systems in urban and suburban areas in the U.S. and between different areas within the U.S." (Choice) Bibliography, Index.

"[These] two distinguished students of metropolitanism . . . have brought together an enormous amount of data and a sophisticated methodology to explain variations in metropolitan fiscal behavior. . . . [Political scientists] might wish that the authors had pushed their search for independent variables further back in the funnel of causality, to borrow a metaphor from the voting studies. The assignment variables might then have been used as control variables in partial correlation analysis. Partly for this reason, I suspect that the book will find a wider audience among economists than among political scientists. . . . [Nevertheless] this book reflects both excellent research and reasoned analysis." R. L. Lineberry
Am Pol Sci R 62:621 Je '68 1000w

"The level is adequate for use of college seniors and graduate students in political science or public policy. It is easily read but would require some basic knowledge of statistics to be fully appreciated."

Choice 5:381 My '68 100w

CAMPBELL, ARTHUR. Guerrillas; a history and analysis. 344p maps $6.95 Day

355.4 Guerrilla warfare 68-19650

In this description of the development of "guerrilla warfare from its inception in Spain in 1808 to the present day . . . [the author] takes the major guerrilla wars of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and treats them one by one. His separate accounts are linked by a series of narratives . . . [intended to show] the various developments of this form of fighting. . . . [Final chapters] summarize the essential ingredients of success in both guerrilla and counter-guerrilla warfare." (Publisher's note) Glossary of foreign words. Bibliography, Index.

"As a serving officer in the British army [Campbell] has had first-hand experience of the fighting he analyses in Burma, Malaya and Cyprus. His book can therefore be strongly recommended as a vade mecum to this elusive form of conflict. . . . To put his subject in perspective, the author, who introduces excerpts from the abundant literature of guerrilla warfare with his own brief essays, describes the emergence of the guerrilleros in the Peninsular War, the British experience in the South African War and the Arab revolt. . . . [He also] shows how guerrilla warfare is an immensely complex operation, and how shifting emphasis between military action and political counter-objectives holds the key to victory. . . . Classic conceptions of warfare emerge, the jargon of unconventional warfare is discounted, and basic Clausewitzian principles are clearly restated. . . . Drawing on his case histories, the author analyses in abstract detail the structure of both insurgency and counter-insurgency, a distillation that will be of especial value to the general reader."

Economist 226:36 Ja 6 '68 500w

"In order to cover all the chosen aspects of the campaign concerned, I have found it necessary to invent a narrator for each personal account and to relate his adventures in my own words.' That's too bad, because Campbell's announced approach causes the book's downfall. . . . Part of the book is military analysis complete with organization charts. . . . To understand guerrillas, read Mao, Ho, and Ché; Campbell is good only for alternate yawns and laughs." Collin Clark

Library J 93:2134 My 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by John Buechler

Library J 93:2487 Je 15 '68 200w

CAMPBELL, BERNARD G. Human evolution; an introduction to man's adaptations. 425p il $8.95 Aldine pub.

573.2 Evolution. Adaptation (Biology). Man—Origin and antiquity 66-15197

"After introductory chapters on certain principles of evolution and the radiation of primates, [the author, a British anthropologist] considers . . . the adaptations of man and other primates related to posture, locomotion, feeding, sensory perception, brain size and function, reproduction, and social structure. Discussions of structure are . . . interwoven with functional considerations [underlying] . . . the selective forces that were operating during human evolution. The book concludes with a summary chapter on the origins of man." (Choice)

"Campbell has written a very clear, detailed, and comprehensive account of the morphological changes that have occurred in the evolution of the single, existing species of man. . . . The detailed record of human evolution, by its very nature, must be incomplete. But a great deal of information has accumulated, enough, in fact, to need systematization, and this systematization the author has done very well indeed. . . . The only adverse criticism the reviewer can make . . . [is that] the author seems to strain natural selection a bit in explaining the deterioration and disappearance of organs that have lost their original function and have become relics. . . . [However,] the book is definitely recommended to students; it includes a list of references, a glossary, and an index." Conway Zirkle
Ann Am Acad 372:192 J1 '67 380w

"Probably the best book of its kind to appear since Le Gros Clark's Antecedents of Man [BRD 1961]. A must for all college libraries."

Choice 4:310 My '67 100w

Reviewed by Vincent Caccese

Library J 92:1847 My 1 '67 100w

"Each part of the skeleton, from head to toe is . . . described in its adaptive responses in the course of evolution. This approach makes the story far more meaningful and more truly dynamic than the standard methods of the past. For the general reader, this collection of many specialized technical studies, presented in extremely clear terms, opens up an exciting new appreciation of the significance of many of the physical capacities of man that we usually take for granted. . . . [This book] makes good reading, but it has its exasperations as well. . . . Again and again [Campbell] makes easy deductions for which there is no proof. . . . The cautious reader should have a saltceller handy for some of the speculations." H. L. Shapiro
Nat R 76:68 Je '67 700w

Reviewed by J. Z. Young

N Y Rev of Books 8:16 Ap 6 '67 650w

"[This book] represents a radical change in that it includes scarcely any mention of genes, no extended account of primate anatomy, no attempt at a historical review of the science of paleoanthropology, and no technical details about bloodgroups, hemoglobins, transferrins, and the like. . . . The author proceeds through three kinds of inferences, starting with a few selected facts derived from human fossils and ignoring the historical and controversial details. . . . [He] aims at reaching a not well-informed audience by means of clear writing, simple line drawings, common synonyms in parenthesis following technical words, and a 27-page glossary. For those who want to learn more a 14-page bibliography is provided. . . . The success of this book when used as a text in anthropology courses will depend on the teacher's ability to supply missing details and argue for other points of view." T. D. Stewart

Science 160:675 My 10 '68 650w

Sci Am 217:132 J1 '67 50w

CAMPBELL, HOPE. Why not join the giraffes? 223p $3.75; lib bdg $3.48 Norton

67-18685

"Suzie Henderson, at 16, would like to live a conventional life with a father who goes to work every day and a mother who wears an apron. Instead, her father writes television scripts at home, aided by her mother when she isn't busy painting or redecorating their Riverside Drive apartment. Her 15-year-old brother is the lead guitar for a combo known as the Giraffes, leaving Suzie as baby-sitter for her younger brother. When a boy 'in a tie and jacket' moves into the house, she invents a new name for herself, to disassociate herself from her unconventional family. Discovered, she decides to shame the faint-hearted young man by pretending to be even further out than her Beatlesque brother. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"'When you're really yourself,' Suzie Henderson's father told her, 'you can be free for other people, not just free from them.' This is the lesson Suzie Henderson learns in a book that is full of laughter and joie de vivre. . . . Hope Campbell deals with a serious theme lightly; she never preaches. Her characters are honest and believable; her New York is the city in which I live. And the book is fun." Madeleine L'Engle

Book World p26 (children's issue) My 5 '68 200w

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 100w

"The story covers the contemporary Greenwich Village scene with detail and accuracy and also, is very faithful in its portrayal of several different kinds of teen-agers. The writing is, in general, little better than the typical 'Suzie glared at him and stomped . . . to the kitchen' style of teen-age fiction. Adolescent tribulations of the sort highlighted in Sunday supplement articles are presented with a wry humor that invites readers to self-examination and laughter, which has the effect of reducing the realities surrounding these current problems." Madalynne Schoenfeld

Library J 93:878 F 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 110w

CAMPBELL, JACK K. Colonel Francis W. Parker: the children's crusader. 283p $5 Teachers college press

370 Parker, Francis Wayland 67-20114

A biography which "tells of Parker's experiences as teacher and supervisor in New Hampshire, Illinois, Ohio, and Massachusetts, and as a teacher educator in Cook County and Chicago. It gives some attention to his childhood and includes a chapter on his Civil War participation." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Campbell ably pictures the struggle that is the lot of a real educational reformer. . . . One wishes that he had told more of the actual operation of Parker's methods, had omitted some interesting but irrelevant details, and had either speculated less on others or supported his speculations better. But reading this book will prove rewarding to all who are interested in vital issues in education and in educational reform." W. H. Cartwright

Am Hist R 73:1245 Ap '68 450w

Choice 5:1013 O '68 110w

"Parker, one of the most frequently mentioned progenitors of the progressive education movement, finally has emerged from an academic limbo. . . . Campbell recounts in minute detail the vicissitudes of Colonel Parker's life and documents the widespread assumption that this pedagogue was highly individualistic, even idiosyncratic. The strengths of Campbell's book lie in his thorough research, his painstaking examination of official records, newspapers, and relevant collections of documents. . . . Such a detailed, chronological biography is appropriate for Parker. Campbell makes quite clear that Parker was not a theorist, that his power was in his personality, not in his ideas. . . . [The book] is a good one, . . . it is not, however, all that might be done about Parker. The questions which Campbell either fails to treat explicitly or passes over lightly are significant ones for understanding the character of the educational reform movement in the United States at the end of the nineteenth century and the first half of the present one." P. A. Graham

Record 69:810 My '68 1100w

CAMPEELL, MARY MASON. The New England buttery shelf cookbook; receipts for very special occasions; il. by Tasha Tudor. 192p $5.95 World pub.

641.5 Cookery—New England 67-22907

"The Buttery (Buttry) in a New England farmhouse is the room adjacent to the kitchen where were kept the special dishes, punch bowls, pudding bowls, preserves, crocks, special platters, the breadboard, the milk pails and the churn—and the book of recipes for such special occasions as New Year's Day Open House, Valentine's Day, Easter, Weddings, Afternoon Teas, Picnics by the River, Fourth of July celebrations, birthdays, Thanksgiving and Christmas." (Best Sell) These recipes are taken from the author's family buttery book which dates back to her great grandmother's time. Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 28:204 Ag 15 '68 150w

"This book is required reading for all nostalgic New Englanders by birth or proxy. The charming illustrations by Tasha Tudor, Mrs. Campbell's neighbor, embellish the author's loving prose descriptions of 'Special Occasion Days' and the recipes that honor them. . . . The book is well organized, lies flat when opened, has readable type, and clear instructions. The recipes, treasured for generations by Mary Mason's family and friends, are tempting and often unusual. Recommended as a welcome gift or for library purchase." A. L. Alexander

Library J 93:4141 N 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p28 D 1 '68 30w

CAMPBELL, MICHAEL. Lord dismiss us. 384p $5.95 Putnam

68-10826

"Carleton, the gifted and popular second prefect of Weatherhill School, is shaken from his aloof insensibility by the discovery that he is in love with a junior boy, while he in turn is loved by Ashley, his eccentric teacher. Ashley is destroyed by the strength of his forbidden desires, but Carleton, with youthful resilience, emerges unharmed. . . . [The characters range] from the insensitive new headmaster, who . . . attempts to rescue the school from moral corruption, to the boy who regularly steals the prefect's cake (despite the vigilance of his housemaster concealed in a shower stall), and on to the grotesque chaplain sniffing oranges for relief from his unwholesome protégés." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:450 Mr 1 '68 210w

"By mistake or mistaken design, Mr. Campbell tosses his material all unsorted, juicy, squirmy, icky and shapeless—credible with incredible—right into the reader's unready hands. His method is, in one sense of the term, dramatic. At least he provides no detached, authoritative, viewpoint-character who might help the reader add up interpretations of what is going on. . . . When the last page is turned one might ask, Is life really like this in an English public school? And as daylight returns, one concludes that life isn't like this anywhere except in a runaway, slipshod didactic novel. Didactic? Yes, that's what I conclude the real thrust of this book to be. The author wants to teach us to be kind and tolerant toward the varieties of love we are tolerant toward. But in a novel about homosexuality the didactic author has to be extraordinarily careful to keep the wrong people from getting his moral wrong." R. V. Cassill

Book World p6 D 31 '67 900w

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 18 '68 350w

Reviewed by T. J. Pedley

Library J 92:4522 D 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by Miles Burrows

New Statesman 73:911 Je 30 '67 350w

"It is the basis of Ashley's fate that he has not only to see Carleton play his earlier role, but himself to attempt a replay with Carleton as his partner. This is the tragedy of Mr. Campbell's tragi-comedy. . . . For most of the time, however, it is the comedy of 'Lord Dismiss Us' which makes the strongest impression: the Head and his wife and teenage daughter, the masters and the other boys are extremely funny and (with only a few exceptions) deeply authentic. . . . [The novel is not fault-free. There are occasional descents into melodrama—though the melodrama is expertly handled. . . .] Yet this is a distinguished performance. . . . It is not often one finds a novel that is so elegant, poignant, elegiac—and so horribly, so painfully funny." J. D. Scott

CAMPBELL, MICHAEL—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ja 14 '68 800w

Reviewed by Wilfrid Sheed

Sat R 51:29 Ja 20 '68 850w

"It is difficult in a brief space to do justice to this extraordinary and brilliant novel. It is funny and tragic, extravagant and yet controlled. Its characters leer and grimace and startle like gargoyles, and like gargoyles they have a compelling liveliness. The tone, a little strident, a little hysterical, lifted just clear of realism yet never allowed to bolt into fantasy, is held confidently and without faltering throughout."

TLS p433 My 25 '67 430w

CAMPBELL, ROBERT, ed. Spectrum of Protestant beliefs. 106p $3.95 Bruce pub.

280 Theology. Protestantism 68-17118

The editor has chosen five spokesmen: "Radical, liberal, confessional, new evangelical and fundamentalist." He presents to each 21 topics, including such issues as the Trinity, original sin, pre-marital sex, inter-racial marriage, Vietnam, on which they are to state their position concisely. (Critic)

"[The contributors] discuss both living issues and dead symbols in pithy paragraphs. Bob Jones, Jr., at the fundamentalist right of this spectrum and William Hamilton at the radical left have things easy, and their answers are clear and lively. The right-wing speakers tend to be cocksure, unemphatic and more interested in scoring points than in compelling understanding or empathy, while toward the left there is evidence of flux and instability. The book holds interest, but it almost looks like a Catholic plot to portray Protestantism as chaotic and plotless. It is hard to picture any outsider being drawn to the faith witnessed to in these pages, or to imagine very many insiders being inspired by the witnesses."

Christian Century 85:204 F 14 '68 120w

"In his Preface the author describes this book as 'an attempt to present to Catholics a picture of Protestantism as it exists in America today.' This complicated task is confused further by the liberal-conservative spectrum existing within the traditional denominational lines. . . . Confinement of these attitudes and beliefs in so small a space seems an impossible task. However, Father Campbell has produced an interesting and valuable little book—a task he made possible by deciding not to include the big names of developmental theology. He chose instead a group whose views, he felt, were typical of a large identifiable segment of popular Protestant beliefs and attitudes."

Critic 26:93 Ap '68 200w

CAMPBELL, THOMAS F. Daniel E. Morgan, 1877-1949; the good citizen in politics. 196p il $5.50 Western Reserve univ. press

977 Morgan, Daniel Edgar, Cleveland—Politics and government 66-28143

"For over forty years the public career of Daniel E. Morgan was closely related to the development of one of the largest metropolitan communities in the United States. . . . [His] career not only spanned all three branches of government but it also touched [the] important reforms which occurred in Cleveland during his . . . public life. Dr. Campbell has examined each of these reforms." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Campbell has done an excellent job of placing Morgan in his milieu, of explaining his career in terms of current individuals and events as well as his subject's own ideas and background. At times, however, one almost loses sight of Morgan in the swirl of events. This well-written, thoroughly researched account, nevertheless, contributes to our knowledge of the progressive movement at the local level. Campbell reveals an impressive knowledge of people, publications, and movements in early twentieth-century Cleveland, and his footnotes and bibliography provide many leads for those working in this area." P. L. Silver

Am Hist 73:614 D '67 330w

"An excellent account of Cleveland's politics. Morgan, of Welsh descent and a lawyer by profession, served on Cleveland's city council, charter commission of 1913, as city manager, state senator, and a justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio during the 1940's. These positions, most of them appointive, are described by Campbell in detail. Although not utilizing the psychological insights offered by Richard Hofstadter in Age of Reform (BRD 1955), Campbell has written a lucid biography. This work, based mainly on primary sources, is recommended for anyone who wishes to go in depth into urban history."

Choice 4:1309 Ja '68 170w

"Campbell's treatment of both Morgan and the politics of his day reads like a sketchy chronicle. Neither subject ever comes alive, and even the chronicling is incomplete and unclear. One never knows, for example, whether Morgan's City Club expressed its objections to political repression in the early 1920s by inviting Wobblies, Communists, and Socialists to address it or whether the Club's 'courage' consisted in its discussions about the Wobblies, et al. . . . In general there is almost no coverage of Morgan's business career or of his personal life; . . . [and] it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that this is another of those political biographies that is neither much on politics nor much of a biography." R. M. Abrams

J Am Hist 54:431 S '67 700w

CAMPION, THOMAS. The works of Thomas Campion; complete songs, masques, and treatises with a selection of the Latin verse; ed. with an introd. and notes by Walter R. Davis. 521p il $6.95 Doubleday

784 Songs, English 66-24309

"This volume is the first edition of the works of Thomas Campion since Percival Vivian's edition of 1909. In addition to a new . . . text of Campion's English works . . . it contains prose translations of selected Latin panegyrics, elegies and epigrams, accompanied by the Latin text." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of first lines.

"This fine and usable edition, which should serve admirably for many years to come, includes . . . the music for a number of the songs (with the original tablatures realized and transcribed into modern notation, with accompaniments suitable for keyboard instruments). Manuscript sources and early printed editions are listed separately, along with modern editions of Campion's verse and music. The otherwise excellent bibliography of secondary studies rather surprisingly fails to note G. L. Finney's very relevant Musical Backgrounds for English Literature: 1580-1650 (1962). . . . Each work has its own introduction, with much valuable background. These essays and the general introduction are extraordinary in their compression; but at times the reader may wish that Davis had permitted himself more extensive illustration and demonstration."

Choice 4:1238 Ja '68 180w

Reviewed by M. I. Prochilo

Library J 92:1624 Ap 15 '67 180w

"Without comparing this editor's lists of variant readings closely with Vivian's, it is impossible to prefer one text to another; but it seems fairly obvious that Davis has done a careful job of collation in the preparation of his texts, and that his decisions have not been made lightly. Occasionally, one may be troubled both by his explanations and by his failure to explain difficulties. . . . Davis provides useful introductory and explanatory notes for Campion's Descriptions of the three masques created by himself. . . . The biggest surprise to the present reviewer, lies in the roughly one hundred pages given over to Campion's Latin poetry. . . . Who would have guessed that this most delicate, unadventurous, and self-controlled lyricist was capable of these sustained rhapsodic flights?" B. H. Bronson

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:707 Je '68 1300w

CAMPOS, ROBERTO DE OLIVEIRA. Reflections on Latin American development; introd. by Benjamin Higgins. (Tex. Univ. Inst. of Latin American studies. Latin American monograph) 168p $5 Univ. of Tex. press

338.98 Latin America—Economic policy. Latin America—Politics. Economic assistance 67-64859

In these articles, Dr. Campos "examines relations between the United States and Latin America from a variety of angles, and outlines the basic problems of economic development, of governmental policy, and of public and private administration. He . . . [also examines] the relationship of foreign trade and foreign aid to economic development, and he . . . [discusses] the Alliance for Progress—its history, its purposes, its accomplishments, and its failures." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author] is able to offer some perhaps revealing insights into the way North Americans . . . view the needs of their Latin American neighbors. . . . The tone is that of political economy as distinguished from the conventional textbook style of economics, and for that reason [this book] should command interest far beyond the limits of the economics profession. Detailed reiteration of particular points in essay after essay is somewhat of an annoyance. Despite this characteristic fault of such collections, Campos' style makes especially enjoyable reading."

Choice 5:1336 D '68 220w

"As a prominent economist, ex-ambassador of Brazil to the United States, and as the man who laid down president Castelo Branco's economic program in the capacity of Minister of Planning, Mr. Campos is entitled to be heard with respect. . . . He analyzes the economic and political tensions between the United States and Latin America from the time of the Monroe Doctrine up to the Alliance for Progress, during which he offers opinions on Fidelismo that certainly seem to be borne out by developments since he wrote his lines. On the Alliance he is not so pessimistic as many other writers, but he sees much that must be done on both sides to make it work most effectively. This work, in which Mr. Campos also treats monetarism as opposed to structuralism on the matter of inflation, is recommended for the specialist on Latin American economy." J. A. Boromé

Library J 93:748 F 15 '68 210w

"Campos applies to the problems of underdevelopment a Jesuit-trained mind. . . . the discipline of an economist and a long experience as a banker and diplomat. . . . Many of these essays reflect the arguments he proffered for generous and effective aid. . . . Time and again he emphasizes that a strict accounting view on aid can never work. . . . To Sr. Campos, American insistence on the swift execution of national plans or reforms as a necessary condition for aid arises from a misunderstanding of underdevelopment. Underdeveloped countries are inefficient because they are underdeveloped. Wastage is inevitable and the developing countries must show patience. These are powerful essays by a rational man who rejects the shibboleths of romantic nationalism and the easy solution of explaining away difficulties by the creation of foreign devils."

TLS p749 JI 18 '68 1200w

CAMUS, ALBERT. Lyrical and critical essays; ed. and with notes by Philip Thody; tr. from the French by Ellen Conroy Kennedy [Eng title: Lyrical and critical]. 365p $6.95 Knopf 844 French literature—History and criticism 167-967661

A "consolidation of much of Camus's major reflective prose—L'Envers et L'Endroit, Noces, L'Été—with selections from his critical writings on Sartre, Simone, Gide, Melville, Faulkner, Jean Grenier, all of which are joined by Camus's comments about himself, including three interviews." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sister M. A. Weinig
Best Sell 28:341 N 15 '68 650w

"It is pleasant to read through this collection of essays which show Camus insisting on his weaknesses and dealing not with the 'great' problems but with his experiences as a young man—his travels, his observations of Oran and Algiers, his memories of the old men and women of his childhood, and his awakening to the Mediterranean life and culture which in his later works he juxtaposed to Northern Europe's wintry, gothic world. What the lyrical essays in this book offer the reader is a certain amount of the basic material for Camus' more complex works and the beginnings of a style and way of observing that he would later master so well. . . . Such a collection as this seems to me especially valuable for those who know the major works for which Camus is famous. Simply because those works are so intense, so occupied with the themes of a civilization, it is good to have small, sometimes rough pieces which show a great writer close to the stuff of experience he would later refine and set into parables for an age." Jack Richardson

Book World p6 S 29 '68 1000w

Reviewed by R. M. Brown

Commonweal 89:356 D 8 '68 100w

"Reading these essays is a revealing journey into the delicately balanced, sensitive, and penetrating nuances of a superior mind and spirit. . . . As Philip Thody writes in his introduction, this collection is a record of the ideals that inspired Camus, revealing his explorations of the philosophical and aesthetic problems he met in his fiction. . . . [It] will appeal not only to scholars but also to the informed layman." G. O. Carey

Library J 93:3005 S 1 '68 320w

Reviewed by Donald Lazere

Nation 207:569 N 25 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Theodore Solotaroff

New Repub 159:27 D 21 '68 2900w

Reviewed by John Weightman

N Y Times Bk R p5 D 15 '68 1050w

"Of great interest are the critical essays, which have the doubly illuminating fascination of criticism of one creative artist by another. They reveal a surprisingly informed interest in Christian metaphysics and linguistic philosophy, and reflect Camus's admiration for the classical tradition in French literature . . . and for order in art. . . . There is a review of the unknown Sartre by the unknown Camus, which is of more than historical interest. . . . The whole collection illuminates the work of Camus."

New Yorker 44:64 D 28 '68 230w

Reviewed by J. W. Burrow

Sat R 51:41 O 12 '68 1000w

Time 92:118 N 8 '68 900w

"The 'Lyrical' part of this book is a translation of three essay collections—Betwixt and Between, Nuptials, and Summer—and the first two, written in 1937 and 1938, show us the two or three great and simple images that underlie [the author's] writing: the brilliant sunshine and the black cemeteries of Algeria. . . . In the best of these early essays—or in the fragments of them where Camus is truly 'lyrical'—the feeling is communicated directly. . . . His criticism, like that of many artists, is most interesting for what it tells us about himself. . . . The critical pieces are less difficult to translate than some of the essays in Nuptials and Summer. . . . But even there Mr. Thody . . . manages well and, at the risk of occasional clumsiness, stays close to the text."

TLS p709 Ag 3 '67 700w

CANE, MELVILLE. All and sundry; an oblique autobiography. 253p $4.75 Harcourt

818

68-18182

"This assembly of prose and verse is preponderantly autobiographical. It starts with two memoirs, recollections of early childhood in Plattsburgh, New York, my birthplace, and later, in New York City, through the public-school years. The other writings go as far back as undergraduate days at Columbia and proceed to the concluding article, 'Becoming a Poet,' just completed. They, too, are essentially biographic." (Foreword) Some of the material in this book has previously appeared in such publications as Columbia Literary Monthly, The American Scholar and The Atlantic Monthly. Index of titles.

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl

Am Scholar 37:705 autumn '68 1200w

"Naive, nostalgic. These words describe this hodge-podge collection of a man nearing ninety, a successful lawyer, and an indefatigable scrivener. . . . The work should be an encouragement and possibility for any writer in his leisure moments. Recipe: Take a few early impressions and happenings in early youth. . . . Add scraps of information about uncles and parents. Intermingle a series of correspondence on topics of current interest, some early and some later poems. . . . Spice the mixture with good humor and a definable sense of integrity. . . . Nevertheless, this is quite a unique book. Some of Mr. Cane's short poems are well worth quoting." Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:47 My 1 '68 300w

"This is an uneven gathering of prose and verse, reminiscence and legal essays, biographical notes, undergraduate writings reissued, and sidelights on life at Columbia University at the turn of the century and in the Manhattan whirl. . . . [The author] has had a lifelong avo-

CANE, MELVILLE—Continued

cation of writing light verse. His verse style gives these parts of the book more life and color than other parts. Some prose pieces are mild and dated; others, notably his childhood memories, and the profiles of relatives, eccentric and otherwise, have real entertainment value. . . . Although its appeal may not be wide, his book is recommended; it should interest New Yorkers, especially older ones." F. N. Jones

Library J 93:1134 Mr 15 '68 130w
New Yorker 44:175 My 18 '68 130w

CANNING, JOHN, ed. 100 great kings, queens and rulers of the world. 671p pl $6.95 Taplinger
920 Kings and rulers—Biography [68-95825]

Short biographical sketches, arranged in chronological order, "of individual rulers from Cheops, who reigned from ca. 2900 to ca. 2875 B.C., to John F. Kennedy. In addition to kings and queens, rulers who seemed to partake wholly or to a large extent in the royal mystique are included." (Library J) Index.

"May be worth acquiring for the Junior High School Library."

Best Sell 28:374 D 1 '68 80w

"George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Franklin D. Roosevelt are represented. . . . The book worldwide in scope, includes sketches of Montezuma, Chulalongkorn, Meiji Mutsuhito, Sun Yat-sen, Mao Tse-tung, and Cetewayo, ruler of more than 250,000 Zulus in the mid-19th Century; Julius Caesar, Attila, Richard III, Henry VIII, Louis XIV, and Peter the Great. This is a very good biographical reference work." P. E. Edlund

Library J 93:2994 S 1 '68 100w

"Canning, the English editor, uses the adjective in his title to describe 'those whose significance for good or bad was considerable.' . . . The only living figures he discusses are de Gaulle and Mao Tse-tung, Moses, David and Solomon are here as are Pericles, Asoka, Harun-al-Rashid, Genghis Khan, . . . and just seven women from Cleopatra to Victoria. In moderately journalistic prose, lit up by picturesque touches, the biographers show how each subject earned his epithet." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:60 N 16 '68 170w

CANNING, VICTOR. The python project. 282p $4.95 Morrow

68-19427

"Rex Carver, a private detective and accomplished storyteller, narrates what happened to him when he took on a routine case of recovering a stolen bracelet and so found himself involved with British Intelligence, a gang of kidnappers, a foreign government, and the police. . . . [The case takes] him from London to Paris to Tripoli to Spain." (Best Sell)

"A fine suspense thriller that unfortunately is too sensual to be recommended widely."

Best Sell 28:105 Je 1 '68 80w

"Canning arranges his bookings like a seasoned travel agent and manages brawls and boudoir scenes with the dry wit we have come to expect from this master of elegant espionage. But I did find myself objecting to lethal weapons missing close-up targets with great regularity 'as if by some miracle.' Chandler liked to call that having God sit in your lap."

A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p14 Jl 21 '68 210w

"Canning is an old pro whose pen has lost none of its cunning, as convincingly demonstrated in [this] effective blend of a medium-boiled British private investigator caper and the spy story. . . . This is spy fiction at its bewildering best." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p40 Je 9 '68 170w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 Jl 27 '68 30w

TLS p1022 O 26 '67 80w

CANNON, MICHAEL. The land boomers. 247p pl $13.50 Cambridge

330.9945 Victoria, Australia—Economic conditions. Victoria, Australia—History 67-10259

An "account of the developmental craze that overtook Australian speculators in Victoria in the 1880's and of the collapse that followed." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Earlier accounts of the land boom written by H. G. Turner and others personally involved in the scandals were incomplete and partial. [This study] is, therefore, welcome. Description is Mr. Cannon's forte. He captures, vividly in places, the changing public mood of excitement and despair. He is less successful, however, in drawing conclusions and providing explanations. His description of the characteristics of the boom does not offer an analysis of its origins or the causes of its collapse. . . . Cannon has, nevertheless, reopened inquiry into this facet of Australian history, cleared away some misconceptions, produced considerable new evidence, and laid the groundwork for further studies. The material is, unfortunately scantily documented, and notes are furtively hidden at the end of the book with an exceptionally tedious and confusing method of citation." Peter Burroughs

Am Hist R 73:577 D '67 390w

"A careful, sparsely written account. . . . Cannon tells the story in some detail, much of it colorful and most of it new, and he turns his account upon personalities rather than upon analysis. Unhappily, the book is succinct but poorly written, and Cannon makes little effort to show the reader why the relatively obscure financiers with whom he deals are important to any larger context. As a case study of a land boom or of several Victorian scandals, the book is excellent; as an analysis of late 19th-century Australian economics, it is deficient. Accordingly, although [it] can be recommended to anyone interested in Australia, in financial history, or in Victorian politics, it is peripheral to all but the largest collections."

Choice 4:735 S '67 200w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

Pacific Affairs 40:426 fall-winter '67-
'68 180w

CANNON, POPPY. The new New can-opener cookbook. 314p $4.95 Crowell

641.5 Cookery

68-11069

This is a newly revised edition of The Can-opener Cookbook (BRD 1953) and The New Can-opener Cookbook, compiled by the food editor of the Ladies Home Journal. Glossary. Index.

"Obviously Poppy Cannon . . . has a built-in audience: all those who purchased and enjoyed her previous efforts to transform canned goods into culinary delights. Frankly, I'm unimpressed by this latest venture. The section on soups is creditable, but I have serious reservations about any book that suggests the use of canned potatoes (pasty and bland) or macaroni (a mushy disaster)." Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 My 12 '68 60w

"[The author] has included up-to-date newcomers to the food canning, freezing, and dehydrating scene. . . . Although most of the ingredients suggested are easily obtainable, she includes a list of food specialty shops over the country where one might buy the unusual, such as the wild violets she suggests as a garnish for a Parisian salad. There are menus for various occasions; each recipe is accompanied by informal, but pertinent comments; and the time required for preparation is estimated for the benefit of the busy hostess." Audrey Cahill

Library J 92:4414 D 1 '67 210w

CANNON, POPPY. The presidents' cookbook; practical recipes from George Washington to the present, by Poppy Cannon & Patricia Brooks. 545p il $9.95 Funk 641.5 Cookery, American. Presidents—U.S.

67-28076

The authors present "recipes and menus enjoyed by the Presidents. . . . The stories behind each dish provide . . . historical background on the manners of the day. There are anecdotes about White House guests, recipe-borrowing, redecorating, and table setting. Together with the recipes these tales reflect the Presidential characters, their regional origins, their ways of life." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The vigor and variety of America is charmingly revealed in this history of the food served by each of our Presidents. . . . [The authors] have combined light social history with anecdotes and recipes to make a book of lasting value. Elegance and grace vie with the hearty and homespun. The recipes are subordinate, though of great promise. . . . This history of diet and eating customs is fascinating; the authors show shifting currents of foreign influence and eras when the indigenous reigns. For general reading or study, suitable for public libraries, and certain to be a well-enjoyed gift." Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:79 Ja 1 '68 130w

"[This] is marvelous reading and intriguing cooking. Excellently researched and clearly written. . . . The recipes are either known favorites, or they come from contemporary cookbooks and cooking traditions; they are authentic of their time in feeling, even though they have been adapted to modern cooking. (Personally, I wish they had been adapted to a lesser extent.) Even if you have never cooked in your life, or never propose to do so, I highly recommend this book as good entertainment." Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 2 '68 200w

CANTOR, NORMAN F. The English: v 1. A history of politics and society to 1760. 526p pl $10 Simon & Schuster

914.2 Great Britain—Politics and government. Great Britain—Civilization 67-17891

"I have tried in this book to present to the general reader an understanding of the course of English political and social history from about 450 A.D. to the middle of the eighteenth century. . . . A subsequent volume will be devoted to England since the industrial revolution." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:614 My 4 '68 90w

Reviewed by F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 27:433 F 15 '68 280w
Choice 5:1205 N '68 140w
Christian Century 85:52 Ja 10 '68 40w

"Professor Cantor of Brandeis University views constitutional development as the central theme of English history, and in this first of two volumes he gives, in fact, an extensive and detailed commentary on English constitutional history rather than a general survey. Professor Cantor is at his best in the Middle Ages, but he is bored by the 18th Century and tends to substitute acrid criticism for sober evaluation in his last chapters. But this is a very personal book, lecture-derived, and academic feuds can get quite hot. His discussion of historians is integrated with his text, an interesting innovation which should have been more fully developed for the benefit of the advanced student who will gain much from a careful perusal of this book. Recommended for all university libraries." R. R. Rea
Library J 93:72 Ja 1 '68 100w

"[This book] is concerned with two fairly distinct things, muddled up together, chapter by chapter. It is, first, a set of fairly reliable reflective discourses upon constitutional history, interpreted along the most traditional whiggish lines as a story of the slow evolution of political liberties. . . . [and] second, a series of historiographical sketches of the personalities and writings of the leading historians of the last fifty years, modeled rather on the style of Time Magazine. . . . These snappy and condescending critiques of colleagues are the jam sandwiched between the starchy layers of constitutional history. They prove that Mr. Cantor has kept up with the literature. What is odd, however, is that he is almost wholly unaffected by what he has read, in his old-fashioned adherence to the institutional and constitutional story of the growth of democratic government." Lawrence Stone
N Y Rev of Books 10:21 F 1 '68 1950w

"If the mark of a great historian is to enthrall and at the same time to infuriate the reader, Norman Cantor must be numbered among the giants of our age. His power to synthesize convincingly and to conjure up a rich and imaginative picture of English history is unsurpassed, and he has given to the historical genre a refreshingly modern orientation. . . . The 16th century marks a change both in history and in Cantor's style and handling of events. Suddenly the sharp rationalist and devotee of bureaucratic expertise becomes the emotionally committed advocate, and the convincingly witty, almost epigrammatic, generalizations of earlier chapters give way to bizarre caricatures of reality. . . . Mr. Cantor has brewed some strong medicine; some readers are not going to like the taste one bit; others will call it quackery; but most people, I think, will enjoy the medicinal effects." L. B. Smith
N Y Times Bk R p10 Ja 21 '68 800w

"Professor Cantor's facts are usually accurate, and his prose, infelicitous though it be if taken sentence by sentence, has pace. . . . It is indeed, the breathless, unconsidered style of the lecture room, full of the historic present, that most irritating of tenses, and replete with slapdash phrases meant to startle a mulish audience. . . . Cantor's book is as near to television history as one is likely to find in print. . . . The book rattles on from one glib generalization to another, as remarkable for what is omitted as for what is said, for believe it or not, there is absolutely no mention in this history of English society of one of its most remarkable achievements—the colonization of America." J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:23 Mr 30 '68 750w

CANTOR, NORMAN F., ed. The history of popular culture; ed. by Norman F. Cantor and Michael S. Werthman. 788p $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

910.03 Civilization—History 68-10355

"This anthology treats man and his leisure from the time of ancient Greece to the present. The editors have chosen works by authorities that include Edward Gibbon, Johann Huizinga, Will Durant, G. M. Trevelyan, Frederick Lewis Allen, and Marshall McLuhan among others. Topics range from the Roman circus to American football. Most of the articles have been shortened for inclusion, but omissions are indicated and all sources are given. The book is divided chronologically into seven parts, each of which has an editor's introduction placing the articles in historical perspective." (Library J)

"An ambitious and somewhat unique attempt at social history that places primary emphasis upon man's leisure time activities from Periclean Athens to psychedelic celebrations in the Haight-Ashbury district. The reading is interesting and may motivate further depth study of a particular period in Western civilization. Proper use of this work requires adequate economic and political knowledge of the particular social setting. The post-1700 sources and settings are almost entirely Anglo-Saxon and Continental leisure is ignored. The section covering events after 1914 is really an accounting of popular cultural trends in the U.S. . . . This book is recommended as a guide for any library collection." Choice 5:613 Jl '68 110w

Reviewed by T. M. Wagenknecht
Library J 93:2514 Je 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Carol Kalamaras
Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 70w [YA]

"The obvious problem of selecting subjects to cover has been solved well enough. The less obvious but equally difficult problem of selecting the actual passages has not been solved at all well. Nearly all the 200 items in the book are written at second or third hand; only a couple come from participants in or observers of the enormous range of activities described. The result is that a book which seems—and ought—to be interesting has such a uniform and impersonal tone that it manages to become boring. This is a pity, for it contains a great deal of information about all kinds of things that people have done during more than two thousand years—especially in the fields of popular art, sport, religion, and sex." TLS p642 Je 20 '68 120w CANTRIL, HADLEY, jt. auth. The political beliefs of Americans. See Free, L. A.

CAPON, ROBERT FARRAR. An offering of uncles; the priesthood of Adam and the shape of the world. 182p $3.95 Sheed

230 Theology. Christian ethics 67-13753

"The relation between the city of man and the coming of the kingdom of God is suggested to Fr. Capon by a history that is rooted in the relevance of ordinary events: a threatened divorce, a chipped bedstead in an abandoned building, the conflicts of family life, sorrow, joy, death. But it is man who is the agent in each of these occurrences. . . . At the intersection of a double priesthood—Adam's and Christ's—Fr. Capon perceives both the challenge and direction of the Church's pastoral mission . . . [which] must take its cue not from abstract interpretations or psychedelic puzzles but from contemplation." (America)

"Pastoral theology has seldom spoken to the modern world with such wonder, wisdom and historic immediacy as is shown in this eminently sane and provocative book by an Episcopal priest, practicing theologian and father of six children. In its litany of things great and small, and their tragic and hopeful conjunctions, its author amply demonstrates that ultimate theological issues still press significantly on daily occurrence and common matters. With a clarifying spirituality worthy of St. Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus, Fr. Capon has restored to pastoral theology its rightful (but long neglected) charm, and renewed its traditional (but often forgotten) relation to speculative issues. In doing so, he has managed to produce an uncommon and altogether delightful book. I can think of no one who could not profit from it." D. A. Drennen

CAPON, R. F.—Continued

America 116:224 F 11 '67 450w

Reviewed by Jean Deuss

Library J 92:1494 Ap 1 '67 60w

"In a style that is simple, apt, eloquent, vivid, concrete, [this book] touches on every little thing, but also reaches down to every deep thing and up to every high thing, and so provokes in the reader a wonderful perturbation in the rediscovery of the glory of life. He who speaks to us in these pages is a person, and it is the splendor of this person that he is a heretic to our times. . . . [Father Capon] is also, quite properly, something of a philosophical theologian. . . . So far as I am concerned his handling of chronos and kairos beats anything I have found in Bergson or in Tillich." R. E. Fitch

N Y Times Bk ■ p10 F 12 '67 650w

CAPONIGRO, PAUL. Paul Caponigro [phot. by the author]. 57p $5.95 Aperture, inc.

770 Photography, Artistic 68-437

Most of the forty-eight black-and-white photographs in this volume are studies of natural phenomena taken in New York State and New England. Chronology. Bibliography.

"After an introduction which is pure nonsense, this monograph presents Caponigro as another photographer working in the straight, unmanipulated approach to both subject and medium which has defined the mainstream of serious photographic work for the past half century. Caponigro's own comments are much less labored than what others say about him; neither, happily, is necessary to explain the photographs. This is the third monograph of a series from this source (Alfred Stieglitz, by Dorothy Norman; and E. Weston, The Flame of Recognition, [BRD 1966]), but to suggest that Caponigro's work is of equal importance is, at best, quite premature. Recommended primarily for art and photography libraries which have the Stieglitz and Weston monographs."

Choice 5:1122 N '68 80w

"Most of Paul Caponigro's works show him to be a copyist. . . . Because of poor composition and sometimes lack of it, the viewer is prevented from becoming a part of these photographs. However, I see him come into his own with six photographs. . . . 'Water Pool and Clouds Reflect,' 'Bald Head Cliffs,' 'Revere Beach,' 'Apple,' 'Tree Stumps,' and 'Fungus' give the feeling of eeriness, loneliness, seclusion, and waste." P. I. Land

Library J 93:2852 Ag '68 90w

CARAS, ROGER A. North American mammals; fur-bearing animals of the United States and Canada. 578p il col il maps $19.95 Meredith

599 Mammals. Zoology—North America. Fur-bearing animals 67-10485

This volume has been designed "to help the reader locate, identify, watch, and photograph our native mammals as they pursue their normal lives in their natural habitats." (Natur Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Caras has written a lucid handbook (too bulky for field use) reinforced with pertinent pictures and appendices. He strikes a balance between the fieldbook and scholarly reference. Every type of North American mammal is discussed: flying (bats); swimming (whales); tree dwellers (squirrels); etc. Caras uses the mask of an observer and teaches without pedantry the history, Latin name, habits, domestication, and peculiarities of the animals. . . . Appendices have a useful taxonomic table, breeding habits list, habits (e.g. hibernators), topological inhabitants, state and province listings of native animals, national parks and wildlife refuges, addresses of conservation organizations, . . . brief information about wildlife photography, and a too limited index. Popular in style, but excellent as a candidate for an introduction piece or the 'recreational' reading room. Price prohibits across-the-board recommendation."

Choice 4:1219 Ja '68 290w

Reviewed by W. C. Roselle

Library J 93:1012 Mr 1 '68 220w [YA]

"Chatty directions, helpful hints, and sensible warnings encourage and fortify the mammal watcher. The author's enthusiasm and sympathy enliven every page. A serious reader may find the informal style too colorful in spots. . . . More serious criticism results from the plethora of loose statements with a considerable number of inaccuracies, several mistakes in range maps, and some poor choices of localities to observe designated species. While the book offers a great deal of useful knowledge with interest and vigor, it has more than its due share of errors." V. H. Cahalane

Natur Hist 77:70 Ja '68 280w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:41 N 18 '67 50w

Reviewed by Peter Farb

Sat R 50:44 N 25 '67 230w

CARDIF, MAURICE. See Lincoln, J.

CAREFOOT, G. L. Famine on the wind; man's battle against plant disease, by G. L. Carefoot and E. K. Sprott. 231p il $5.95 Rand McNally

632 Plant diseases

67-21605

"This book is about some of the important fungus diseases and a few of the viruses that have influenced the history of many countries of the world. All but three of the chapters concern plant diseases that have affected and still affect basic foods." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:134 S '68 50w

Choice 5:365 My '68 130w

"An exceedingly important contribution to a general understanding of the worldwide toll in agriculture exacted by plant pathogens, this book is more than a technical account of the consequences of plant disease caused by fungi, bacteria and viruses. It tells dramatically how proud armies have been decimated, the verdant countryside blasted and whole populations wiped out by these insidious killers. It also records the careful, patient and painstaking work by which scientists have resolved some of the riddles of rusts, blights, smuts, and other plant diseases. Highly recommended to younger readers as well as to adults." W. E. Osgood

Library J 92:3050 S 15 '67 110w [YA]

"This book tells the whole tale briefly for a dozen crops of men: it should become a standard, almost in the classic mode of [P. H. de Kruif's] Microbe Hunters [BRD 1926]. The bibliography too is rich and inviting."

Sci Am 218:136 F '68 550w

CAREY, JOHN, ed. The Dominican Republic crisis, 1965. See Hammarskjöld forum. 9th. New York, May 2, 1966

CARLISLE, MADELYN, jt. auth. The true book of rivers. See Carlisle, N.

CARLISLE, NORMAN. The true book of rivers, by Norman and Madelyn Carlisle; il. by Darrell Wiskur. 48p $2.50 Childrens press

551.4 Rivers—Juvenile literature 67-1964

A book about rivers, their origin, basins, geological effects, use, and pollution, as well as information about dams. "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"This easy-to-read book with large print and pictures that cover most of each page gives the appearance of a book for primary grades. However, the many general, unrelated statements with insufficient explanation and illustrations that, in many cases, are not detailed enough, would confuse second- and most third-grade children. Slow readers in fourth grade might find the book helpful if they did not reject it for its young-looking format." Irene Davis

Library J 92:1728 Ap 15 '67 70w

TLS p594 Je ■ '68 90w

CARLSON, BERNICE WELLS. Recreation for retarded teenagers and young adults [by] Bernice Wells Carlson [and] David R. Gingle. 316p il $4.95 Abingdon

790.019 Mentally handicapped 68-11469

The authors "present a philosophy of recreation for retarded youngsters and young adults and discuss the educational and rehabilitative values of various types of recreation. In Part I they deal with 'Understanding the Maturing Retardate and His Social Needs.' In this section they provide a case study of a teen-ager mongoloid girl with an IQ of 45 and they demonstrate the various types of recreation that can be helpful. . . . In Part II they discuss the techniques of organizing a recreation program. Parts III and IV consist of a large series of recreation activities." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The text is well organized and easy to read and, as a consequence, should be instructive to a wide range of people who work with retarded individuals."

Choice 5:876 S '68 80w

"This book is an excellent resource guide for those who are working with the mentally retarded in education and rehabilitation programs." Claude Ury

Library J 93:1015 Mr 1 '68 120w

CARLSON, MARVIN. The theatre of the French revolution. 328p il $10 Cornell univ. press

792 Theater—France. France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799 66-16740

"Carlson deals with the French theater from the fall of the Bastille to the rise of Napoleon . . . relating every event of the Revolution to the drama and showing how everything that happened during the period was reflected in the drama." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The author . . . writes for the general public rather than for the professional historian. Nevertheless, the latter will find Carlson's keen professional insights, dramatic flair, and literary skill rewarding. This vivid chronicle . . . is divided into ten chronological periods. Carlson also describes and illustrates those innovations in costume acting, mise en scène, architecture, decor, organization, enterprise, and genres that make this period significant in the history of the theater. Despite his title, he deals only with Paris. . . . Although he recognizes that contemporary memoirs are highly biased, he sometimes cites them uncritically in contexts that may mislead the reader." D. L. Dowd

Am Hist R 73:827 F '68 400w

"A pioneer study in a field slowly coming to be recognized as the most important branch of dramatic scholarship. . . . Excellent bibliography; chart of the major theaters operating during the period. No library should be without a copy of this important book."

Choice 4:1129 D '67 100w

"Carlson's historical account . . . is mainly of sociological and anecdotal interest. It is well known that the revolutionary years produced no dramatic works of enduring quality. . . . Professor Carlson tells the tale with clarity and competence, striking a nice balance between the narration of theatrical events and summaries of the contents of plays. However, it is perhaps a pity that, in a study which appears to be authoritative, he should have given his many quotations from French sources in English translation, without the original texts."

TLS p1086 N 16 '67 550w

CARLSON, NATALIE SAVAGE. Ann Aurelia and Dorothy; pictures by Dale Payson. 130p $3.95; to libs & schools $3.79 Harper

68-10781

"Ann Aurelia, living with a new foster mother in a new part of town, is friendless and lonely until she meets Dorothy, a Negro girl her own age. After that, summer is fun for 'A.A.', as Dorothy calls her. Later, going to a new school is made easier for the new girl, too, because Dorothy is there to show her the ropes. All is fine until the return of Ann Aurelia's mother, who had deserted her for a man who wanted mother but not child. . . . Ages eight to twelve." (Book World)

Book World p35 (children's issue) My '68 110w

"[The author] isn't peddling any clichés like 'poor, oppressed white girl finds love and comfort and goodness in black home.' All the people in this story . . . black and white, are normal, decent people. The black girl is no miracle of maturity. If she is the natural leader of the two, this is because she knows the district better and for the moment has the more stable background. And what is exceptionally well-realized is the girls' enjoyment of each other. This is no forced friendship for the sake of a 'mixed' story." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor pB1 My 2 '68 160w

"The author has taken a number of disparate elements and produced a novel of realism and humor for younger girls. . . . [The episodes] are subtly blended with humor and excitement. The normal home situation of a Negro girl, Dorothy, is contrasted with the off-again, on-again home of white Ann Aurelia through the friendship of these two imaginative and fun-loving fifth-graders. The result is a highly plausible and readable story, fashioned to help children comprehend the confusing contemporary scene of social ills such as broken homes."

R. P. Hennige

Library J 93:1796 Ap 15 '68 160w

"This is a slight, trite story wrapped around a potentially dramatic theme—a young girl's decision to return to the mother who once abandoned her. . . . There is also a somewhat improbable rescue of a teacher who nearly drowns on a school outing. Ann Aurelia likes her latest foster mother . . . and she is upset when her real mother returns and wants her back. A.A. finally agrees, but the decision loses much of its impact when, in another improbable twist of the plot, her mother rents an apartment in the same neighborhood. . . . Dale Payson's pictures are a happy addition to an otherwise ordinary book." Alice Fleming

N Y Times Bk R pt 2 p34 My 5 '68 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:38 My 11 '68 90w

CARLSON, WILLIAM HUGH. In a grand and awful time; essays from the librarian's desk on twentieth century man and his books; il. by Nelson Sandgren. 158p $6.50 Ore. state univ. press

020.8 Library science. Books and reading

67-16715

"This book is a collection of selections from the cover sheet commentaries that [prefaced] the monthly lists of new books issued by the Oregon State University Library during the two decades (1945-65) when Carlson was its librarian, plus some added appropriate and updated comments prefacing each group of essays. . . . [Titles include] 'A Library Is a Living Thing,' 'Prestige and the Egghead,' 'Retrieval Is Retrieval Is Retrieval,' 'Too Damned-Library Like,' and 'Schizophrenia among the Soviets.'" (Library Q)

"The mood of these writings is whimsical, though there is certainly no lack of sincerity. . . . In all of the pieces there is remarkable precision in the author's observation and a cheering good-naturedness about every topic. Here is an excellent sampler of informal writing which should be welcomed by all who care about books and libraries." R. K. Burns

Library J 93:169 Ja 15 '68 180w

"[Carlson] seizes upon, if not the mot juste, perhaps . . . the essai juste, to give important insights in the significant areas of modern librarianship. . . . Perhaps the best approach to this brilliant, perceptive volume, which will merit reading by neophyte and hardened veteran librarian alike, might be to begin by reading the essay on 'Atmosphere, Tone, and the Library,' which in less than 1,200 words seems to . . . say more about the 'innards' of librarianship as a profession than whole shelves of library literature dealing with this [topic]. Carlson has performed an act of creative editorship in this careful selection of 103 essays from among the hundreds he had available and combining them into meaningful and related groups" E. M. Oboler

Library Q 38:189 Ap '68 950w

CARMICHAEL, JOEL. Karl Marx: the passionate logician. 262p pl lib bdg $4.05 Scribner

B or 92 Marx, Karl 67-24047

This biography of Marx discusses "the philosophies which influenced him and the development of his ideas." Bibliography. Index.

"Carmichael does an excellent job of presenting the man and his ideas, as well as his influence, to young readers. But the young reader in mind will have to be serious and mature when picking up the book, ready to make an effort to understand the ideas as they are presented."

CARMICHAEL, JOEL—Continued

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 70w [YA]

"A substantial, well-written biography. . . . The author explains in the Preface that he has 'dealt with Marx's ideas only insofar as they were related to his life and merely hinted at the subsequent, or more external, manifestations of his personal influence,' but the absence of this aspect is sorely felt, and surely the 'external manifestations' are what motivate people today to read about Marx. This can serve as a mature introduction to Marx's life and ideas, with only the barest indication of influence on Russian and other social systems." L. M. Spain

Library J 93:301 Ja 15 '68 140w [YA]

"As a straight biography, this is reasonably adequate—neither hagiographical . . . nor demonological. . . . Mr. Carmichael's account of Marx's doctrines, however, is very short-winded, and his criticism of them displays an apparent naivety. . . . The book is recommended by its publishers for sixth-formers and first-year university students. The former, one fears, would find much of it obscure, while the latter need a more meaty introduction to Marx's thought against a far less sketchy historical background."

TLS p1305 N 21 '68 240w [YA]

CARMICHAEL, STOKELY. Black power; the politics of liberation in America [by] Stokely Carmichael & Charles V. Hamilton. 198p $4.95; pa $1.95 Random house

301.451 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations 67-22656

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Andrew Buni
America 118:90 Ja 20 '68 380w

Reviewed by R. H. Turner
Am J Soc 74:199 S '68 330w
Choice 5:227 Ap '68 120w

Reviewed by Murray Polner
Christian Century 85:267 F 28 '68 360w
Economist 227:51 Ap 6 '68 280w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita
Library J 93:1335 Mr 15 '68 150w [YA]

Reviewed by Max Geltman
Nat R 20:300 Mr 26 '68 900w

Reviewed by Edmund Ions
New Statesman 75:384 Mr 22 '68 420w

Reviewed by Christopher Lasch
N Y Rev of Books 10:6 F 29 '68 2100w
TLS p393 Ap 18 '68 2600w

CARNEVALI, EMANUEL. The autobiography of Emanuel Carnevali; comp. & prefaced by Kay Boyle. 264p il $5.95 Horizon press

B or 92 67-27908

Published posthumously, this is the autobiography of a twentieth century Italian poet and writer who died in 1944 in Bazzano, compiled from material in his only book, "A Hurried Man," published in 1925, from letters he wrote to the compiler and from chapters of an unfinished novel. He had been an associate editor of Poetry Magazine in 1919. He describes his early years in Italy, his career in the United States as a poet, and his experiences as a patient in the hospital ward in Bazzano. Index of literary figures and artists.

"The writing is fierce and sensitive, spare and sensuous. It evokes men and women whom [the author] loved or hated, often both, [and] captures major and minor literary figures of the 1920's in stunning epigrams. . . . The book as a whole forms what could be described as one of the best long poems of the 20th century. Fine preface; pictures of Carnevali and friends." Choice 5:480 Je '68 280w

"It is a lucky time that has its true poet, its Rimbaud," writes Kay Boyle in the preface to this extraordinary book, "and in the 1920's Carnevali suddenly and almost inexplicably took on this role. He was the rebel, the man on the run, the stranger beating his head against the stars. . . . She began [in 1933] to gather the poems and sketches [Carnevali] sent her and to weave them into this beautiful record of a brilliant and courageous talent. No academic or public library should fail to acquire this important and exciting book." Arthur Curley

Library J 93:541 F 1 '68 330w

"Boyle's compilation of Carnevali's efforts at autobiography—interspersed with his poetry—brings him excitingly alive with all his fierce tormented power. Carnevali may actually have been a second-rate poet, but he makes a first-rate dramatic hero. . . . [His] account of his life is compelling. . . . In 1921 he was returned to Italy, to a sanitarium near Bologna, in and nearby which he lived for the rest of his life. . . . [This book contains] a good deal of material which is not in 'A Hurried Man.' There are new portraits of characters around him as the felt world of hospital and village pressed in, differently from the pressure of the rented rooms in New York and Chicago. In Bazzano the world retracted its radius, and the men and the women he met became sharper to his eye; his pen became sharper too." N. H. Pearson

N Y Times Bk R p32 D 10 '67 1000w

CARNEY, JAMES. comp. & tr. Medieval Irish lyrics. 103p $5.50 Univ. of Calif. press

891.6 Irish poetry—Collections. Poetry—Collections 67-16657

This volume gives the texts of poems by Irish authors in the original Gaelic or Latin with an English translation on the opposite page. Mr. Carney's introduction "places the medieval Irish lyrics in their social and historical context." (Publisher's note) Some of the translations were first published in books on Irish literature.

"Translating from the Gaelic poses problems of tone and attitude rather than language, as if apprehensions of reality and angles of vision varied with the idiom. Carney performs the task nimbly. . . . Several poems . . . have frequently been done, and one wishes this high scholarship had centered on new work."

Choice 5:1314 D '68 180w

"[This] is a tantalizing volume. . . . The editor-translator's scholarship is obvious from the wisdom of his selection and his lucid if brief introduction. . . . [What does emerge] is the sweep and splendor of Irish poetry. . . . The Latin poetry is not high-toned and aureate at all, as one might expect. If anything, the Irish is . . . the more literary and courtly. . . . The chief fault of this volume lies in the verse translations that . . . are not in themselves striking, and seem to me sometimes misleading. . . . I can only wonder why, when Professor Carney has so well explained the principles of Irish prosody, he then offers us as translations poems rhymed according to a system that he says would be shocking to Irish ears." Daryl Hine

Poetry 113:35 O '68 950w

"[Dr. Carney] has made a selection of religious and nature poems, most of which have been attributed to scribes and hermits. . . . [He] does not attempt to reproduce the internal assonantal patterns of the Irish text, but most of his rhymed versions are spirited. . . . Sometimes the translator is forced by the exigencies of rhyme to pad a line. . . . Dr. Carney has chosen some delightful extracts from the Latin poems of Sedulius Scottus. . . . There is an excellent introduction, intended for the general reader, but Dr. Carney has odd notions. . . . He believes that 'bardic poets, when praising their princely or royal patrons, could assume, through a well-established conceit, the completely feminine role of king-lover.'"

TLS p206 F 29 '68 240w

CAROE, OLAF. Soviet empire: the Turks of Central Asia and Stalinism. 2d ed 308p maps $7 St Martins

958 Soviet Central Asia—Politics 67-12825

The author "sees 'no grounds for reviewing the conclusion (of the first edition) that the Russian presence in Central Asia remains today, more than ever, the primary example of imperial colonialism of an Asian or African territory by a European power.' The only changes for the second edition . . . are the addition of an Introduction . . . and a brief bibliography of significant works published from 1960-1965." (Am Pol Sci R) Three revised maps are included. Annotated bibliography. Index. For first edition see BRD 1954.

Reviewed by R. F. Rosser
Am Pol Sci R 62:661 Je '68 1050w

"Fifteen years ago this book was a classic of its field. It was informative, erudite, and beautifully written. Although it was primarily intended as a scholarly discussion of Soviet policy toward the Eastern Turkish and Iranian peoples under Stalin, it became a moving jeremiad against the constraints of Marxist mumbo-jumbo and brutal oppression, and the courage of conviction on the part of its eloquent author only heightened its greatness. One of its finest qualities is its ability to sweep hundreds of years—even millennia—in its astonishing perspective. Unfortunately, the second edition has become badly out of date by default. . . . [its introduction] is woefully insufficient to encompass all of the events of the past 15 years. . . . The maps have been enormously improved. With all its faults, the second edition is still . . . a book without which any library is far the poorer."

Choice 5:669 J1 '68 140w

Reviewed by R. A. Pierce
Pacific Affairs 41:434 fall '68 330w

CAROZZI, ALBERT V., ed. & tr. Studies on glaciers. See Agassiz, L.

CARPENTER, DON. Blade of light. 181p $4.50
Harcourt 68-12567

Simple "is ill-coordinated, partly mad, ugly and ineffectual. . . . At the beginning, . . . [he] is released from a mental hospital. The book thereafter alternates between two different time periods, one describing Simple's high school days and leading up to the crime which got him locked up at 17, the other dealing with his return to the world outside the mental hospital and leading toward his confrontation with his enemy, Harold Hunt. Harold is the man whose machinations caused Simple's crime." (Book World)

Reviewed by R. J. Shea
Book World p16 F 4 '68 350w

"The book is uneven; Mr. Carpenter drops characters whom one would like to see more fully developed and the novel lacks the driving intensity and the tight structure which made the earlier Hard Rain Falling [BRD 1966] so memorable. He has failed to clear the hurdle of the second novel, over which so many able writers stumble. This one just misses being a fine book. For large fiction collections."

A. C. Ringer
Library J 93:207 Ja 15 '68 140w

"Carpenter is disturbing for the wrong reasons. Blade of Light is a novel that truly reads as if it were the work of two people, one a deadpan Nathanael Westian creator of claustrophobic settings and monstrous characters and the other a woman's magazine writer with a dirty mind and a penchant for advertising slogan prose. Naturally one knows that good writers can sometimes write very badly indeed, but the switches in style and tone are so complete [here] that one doubts if even the most astute of literary guessing game panelists could divine the work as the product of a lone hand. Yet there are three or four scenes in the novel that show a masterly hand at work." Stanley Reynolds

New Statesman 74:503 N 1 '67 150w

"[Carpenter] stands among new American novelists of the 1960's gifted with conscience and destined for literature. . . . With language bulging with muscle and rippling with emotion, he works a mine abandoned in the 1930's. He struggles with a social ill so far beyond remedy it leads to despair, callousness, or, as here, art of startling intensity. Like his first novel, . . . Carpenter's second picks up where Depression Naturalism left off, and turns on the passion of a forgotten tradition. The new configuration is our affluent welfare society, a society that protects its psychiatric losses but cannot secure them with love or bless them with health. Consequently a new outsider forages for hope in the urban jungle and digs up disasters. This is the outcast Carpenter touches and fills with the breath of sadness and a strange dignity." Webster Schott

N Y Times Bk p4 F 4 '68 650w

Time 91:94 Ja 19 '68 260w

TLS p1077 N 16 '67 130w

CARPER, JEAN. Bitter greetings; the scandal of the military draft. 205p $5 Grossman pubs.

355.2 Military service, Compulsory 67-14137
The author argues that the draft survives "because of strong pressure to preserve it on the part of certain legislators, draft officials, defense officials and officers, and even a large segment of the public. . . . She feels that the Selective Service System we now have is not only unnecessary but so fundamentally unfair, corrupt, and against American principles that it should be done away with immediately. Our fundamental problem, she says, is that instead of a manpower shortage we have too many men. Therefore, our whole deferment system is based on ruses and is full of gaps and inconsistencies." (Library J) Index.

"This is a vicious and dismal tirade against Selective Service. . . . The nation is not in a panic and the author offers no evidence acceptable to this reviewer that Selective Service attempts the creation of a situation resembling panic, or that Selective Service has falsified its figures. . . . The author states: 'In writing this book, I believe I am contributing to the nation's welfare, but it is doubtful that General Hershey will agree.' It is certain that this reviewer will not agree." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 27:158 J1 15 '67 600w

"[Miss Carper] presents a devastating case against Director Lewis B. Hershey and the Kafkaesque nightmares of military powers that oversee and control a nominally civilian function. Well written and dispassionate prose serves to intensify the awfulness of the entire operation. This work lacks the authority and depth of inquiry of [B. K.] Chapman's Wrong Man in Uniform, but stands several cuts above the superficial tone of [J.] Sanders' Draft and the Vietnam War [both BRD 1967]. Should appeal to a wide audience."

Choice 4:1316 Ja '68 140w

"Here is an all-out attack on the draft, its policies, procedures and administrators. As for solutions, [the author] feels that a universal service program is also dangerous, although more equitable; Miss Carper's solution is a volunteer army with a lottery to keep things going during the changeover. For general collections." George Adelman

Library J 92:1939 N 15 '67 170w

CARPOZI, GEORGE. Red spies in Washington [by] George Carpozi, Jr. 252p il $4.95 Trident press

327 Spies

68-14285

Among the stories told in this account "of espionage activities undertaken by personnel of the Soviet Embassy, and in one instance the Czech Embassy, are those of the Czech effort to 'bug' the State Department, the . . . conviction of Lt. Col. Whalen . . . [and] of Pentagon courier Sgt. Robert Lee Johnson, and the effort to obtain details of the Surveyor program through John Huminik. [The last chapter examines the espionage activities of the United States]." (Best Sell) Index.

"[The] last chapter is a jumble intended to provide some purpose for the collation, but is so full of obviously unfounded and simplistic generalities as to be pointless. The substantive chapters are full of irrelevant detail and implausibly uncolloquial conversation. The book is replete with factual errors and impossibilities. . . . Such patent unreliability renders the book suspect insofar as it purports to go behind mere newspaper accounts. . . . The public is entitled to more than third rate journalistic prose, hackwork reporting, and execrable binding. Not recommended for any person who reads the newspapers." C. J. Maguire

Best Sell 23:151 J1 1 '68 400w

"This book complements Red Spies in the U.N. [BRD 1965], which Mr. Carpozi wrote with the late P. J. Huss. The style is much the same with no documentation and no indication of what is an actual recorded conversation and what is the author's version of what might well have been said in the circumstances. Mr. Carpozi claims that 'every word is true, taken from official records,' but does not support this assertion. Throughout, the FBI is presented as a consistently omniscient body. . . . Some stories are well known, such as the Alger Hiss affair; others are less familiar and sometimes are presented with names changed to protect the participants. What could have been a useful survey of Soviet spy activities, designed to alert citizens to dangers close to home, loses virtually all of its impact by poor presentation. Not an essential purchase." Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1490 Ap 1 '68 200w

CARR, ARCHIE. So excellent a fishe; a natural history of sea turtles; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history. 248p pl $5.95 Natural hist. press

598.1 Turtles

67-15371

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1264 Ja '68 100w

Reviewed by E. E. Williams

Science 159:417 Ja 26 '68 700w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:145 D '67 200w

CARRIER, ROBERT. The connoisseur's cookbook; drawings by Charles Pickard. 505p col pl $15 Random house

641.5 Cookery, International

66-21499

The author of Great Dishes of the World (BRD 1965) leads the user "through the intricacies of selecting basic ingredients for recipes and equipment for the kitchen, planning for shopping, entertaining, and cooking—from the listing of culinary terms to directions for basic sauces and on to . . . sophisticated dinners for connoisseurs. He gives over 1000 recipes from which the reader can choose." (Library J) Index.

"Any cook will enjoy this large, comprehensive, beautifully illustrated volume. Mr. Carrier gives unusual detail in directions for specialties such as souffles, pancakes, and pastries, noting the pitfalls in preparing such dishes. In excellent chapters he covers various kinds of meats. In 'A Guide to Cheeses' he describes many kinds and suggests the appropriate companion wines. If the librarian can stretch the budget, this cookbook is well worth its hefty price. Heartily recommended for libraries and a beautiful gift book!" R. G. Dorman

Library J 93:188 Ja 15 '68 150w

"[This book is] distinguished by gastronomic plain talk and mouth-watering color plates that are really still lifes of great dishes. . . . The recipes themselves are by and large classic but not designed just for royal weddings. They all can be made by an experienced amateur in an ordinary kitchen if Carrier's straightforward directions are followed. . . . One warning: this is not a cooking course for beginners. Though Carrier does define his terms and gives plenty of advice on everything from utensils to choosing a pigeon . . . the recipes themselves are not nearly so detailed as those in Julia Child [Mastering the Art of French Cooking, by S. Beck, L. Bertholle and J. Child, BRD 1962] and will occasionally require an act of faith from neophytes. They are also not shortcuts." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 70:102 D 4 '67 650w

CARROLL, FAYE. South West Africa & the United Nations. 123p $5 Univ. of Ky. press

968.8 Africa, Southwest. United Nations

67-29339

"This is a compend summarizing the relationships between the League of Nations, its successor the United Nations, and the Republic of South Africa in connection with the latter's World War I mandate over the former German territory of South West Africa. . . . In the last chapter Carroll gives an evaluation of what influence and implications for the future the UN actions may have toward the solving of this problem of an area that South Africa considers under its sovereignty and the UN still views as a mandate." (Library J) Index.

"An objective study of one of the most perplexing problems facing Africa. . . . The dispute between the Republic of South Africa and the U.N. has existed since the inception of the U.N. in 1945. Both sides of the issue have been examined in recent publications: [T.] Molnar, South West Africa [BRD 1968], states the case for the Republic; and A. Lowenstein, Brutal Mandate, A Journey to South West Africa [BRD 1962], urges independence and majority rule for the natives. . . . Carroll, in this scholarly study of the complex legal, political, and moral problems involved brings the issues into proper perspective. Especially valuable for students of Southern Africa and should be included in all Africana collections."

Choice 5:554 Je '68 200w

"[This book] will be a useful supplemental reading in courses in political science and history dealing with international relationships and the treatment of mandates and trusteeships." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:4164 N 15 '67 200w

CARROLL, PAUL, ed. The young American poets; a big table book; introd. by James Dickey. 508p $4.95; pa $2.95 Follett

811 American poetry—Collections 68-18505

"This anthology contains over 300 poems by 54 . . . young poets [who have] emerged on the American literary scene since 1960. . . . Their work ranges from poems in experimental styles which explore . . . new subjects and experiences to those written in more traditional styles about the perennial themes of . . . love, death, and indignation or irony about social, political or moral barbarism. Each poet is introduced by a full page photograph and biography." (Publisher's note) Many of the poems were first published in one of the quarterlies or little magazines.

"No matter what they say in this anthology it should interest the contemporary student. . . . Libraries looking toward tomorrow might get a fairly valid review of it by purchasing this mixed bag."

Choice 5:480 Je '68 110w

"There are enough poems included here for the reader to get a feeling for the work of each poet. . . . It is not seemly to predict whether or not these poems will be read 25 years from today. This anthology is for now and many beautiful poems tell us that our language is in safe hands." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2663 Jl '68 170w

"Many of the poets in this book see themselves as literary revolutionaries. . . . They are so convinced that they are the heralds of the future, that . . . they have no hesitation about setting down, in verse lines, all the prosy minutiae of their lives. . . . For all their concern about the world, you find comparatively little evidence of that world in their work—and even this is apt to be grudgingly filtered through a thick soup of self. . . . They do not seem to have learned that technique is one of the strategies that emancipates a poet from the tyranny of his egoism. . . . On every other page of the book you'll find these 'new' poets raiding the cemetery. . . . They write hand-me-down poetry in somebody's else's voice." Anatole Broyard

New Repub 159:23 N 9 '68 3000w

"The variety of styles and voices reflects Poet-Editor Paul Carroll's belief that designating schools of poetry is a rather arbitrary and listless business. . . . He has included many good examples of lyric and pastoral verse, in addition to the intensely personal expressions of Weltschmerz and separation that are still much favored by young poets. But unlike much of the so-called academic poetry, these poems rarely intimidate with pretentiousness or with allusions to obscure mythologies. Missing, too, is the musty odor of coterie and connoisseurship. The best of these poems are searingly democratic and deeply committed to some new form of humanism that has yet to reveal a clear pattern."

Time 91:93 Je 14 '68 1000w

CARSE, JAMES. Jonathan Edwards & the visibility of God. 191p $4.50 Scribner

285 Edwards, Jonathan

67-24040

The author views "Edwards as a major prophet of American civilization who understood better than anyone else the fundamental failure of his countrymen to match the practice of their faith with their profession of it. . . . [He] maintains that 'what Edwards preached and wrote in all of his sermons was a radical this-worldliness.' The 'vital center of this thought' was the concept of 'visibility,' an insistence that 'the faith of a man be proved authentic by its visibility, by its beauty.' By refusing 'to accede to the principle of private judgment in matters of religious and ethical importance,' Edwards repudiated . . . 'nearly all Americans after him,' for whom 'the chief characteristic of religious faith, and all things divine was their invisibility.'" (New Eng Q)

Reviewed by O. E. Winslow

Am Lit 40:400 N '68 450w

"Carse's argument is pertinent but over-emphasized; Edwards' ideas on 'visibility' are not as radical as he states, but can be found in Luther, Calvin, and the early American Puritans. Secondly, Carse denies any vital connection between the Great Awakening and the Revolution; yet such a link has recently been demonstrated by A. Heimert in Religion and the American Mind [BRD 1967]. . . . Yet the book, its bias taken into consideration, is a valuable contribution with an interesting thesis, serving with ID. J.] Elwood's book [Philosophical Theology of Jonathan Edwards, BRD 1962] as the best initial access to Edwards' theology."

Choice 5:512 Je '68 300w

"In spite of the author's highly subjective and romantic methodology, his book might have been a more faithful guide to Edwards had Carse some sympathy for Edwards the man. . . . Nor is Carse in sympathy with his subject's theology. . . . What he actually approves is his own reductionistic reinterpretation of that thought. . . . [He] dismisses the profoundly Calvinistic intent of the New Englander's work and infers from his theology of the 'visibility of God' something quite close to the death-of-God trivia. He attempts to make Edwards imply that if no people emerged (none did) that was self-evidently the people of God, then 'there is no God, and no ultimate society—only an inevitable victory for the powers of darkness.'" Ronald Goetz

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 500w

"Carse, professor in the department of religious studies at New York University, demonstrates in this study Jonathan Edwards's prophetic penetration of the present emphases in theology. These include the roll of the community of believers in authenticating faith and witnessing to it, and the belief that faith in God must issue from experiences of life, with its relationships in this world, and that faith must be payable back into life. . . . The reader senses in Edwards's story the indefinable appeal of a certain pristine quality of high seriousness, and down-to-earth earnestness that is also a portion of the American birthright. Recommended for academic libraries." Lawrence Mills

Library J 92:3630 O 15 '67 200w

"[The author] constructs his interpretation of Edwards from the position of absolute and unashamed historical presentism. . . . I do not mean to imply that Carse substitutes his presuppositions for scholarship, for he obviously knows well his difficult subject. But he would likely be the first to acknowledge that an equally competent but politically or religiously conservative student of Edwards might reject the entire thesis of this study as a distortion, if not a basic misunderstanding, of the main thrust of Edwards' work. Notwithstanding such certain disagreements, all who feel the excitement of the effort to decode Edwards will be indebted to Carse for a clear and appealing book—a rarity in Edwardsean studies." C. W. Akers

New Eng Q 41:302 Je '68 1100w

CARSE, ROBERT. Early American boats; ill. by Hans Zander. 95p $4.50; lib bdg $4.28 World pub.

387.2 Boats and boating—History—Juvenile literature 68-26974

The author describes "the characteristics and functioning of (for example) a Penobscot canoe, a pinnace, and a shallop. [He] deals with the boats of the high seas and the harbors, the lakes and the rivers: jolly boat, dory, schooner, ketch and cutter, not to mention dugout, bull-boat and gundalow." (Christian Science Monitor) Index. "Ages nine to thirteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Christian Science Monitor pB12 N 7 '68 30w

"From utilitarian birch-bark canoes to shapely schooners, boats played an important economic and social role in colonial America. Tracing the history of boats by geographic region and describing their construction in detail, the author keeps us swimming in fact. The illustrations pleasantly complement the briny text and a helpful glossary of sea terminology is included, without which the reader might feel adrift."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p57 N 3 '68 50w

CARSE, ROBERT. Ocean challenge; the new U.S. merchant marine. 104p il $3.25; lib bdg $3.03 Norton

387.5 Merchant marine—U.S.—Juvenile literature 67-6153

The story of the growth and "technical achievement by the United States Merchant Marine . . . from its decline after World War II to its present vitality. Mr. Carse outlines the use of automated equipment for ship building, loading, and unloading, as well as such modern achievements as the use of television cameras in the handling . . . [of] ships in crowded ports. Modern aids to navigation and the latest ideas in ship design and power plants are explained. The author describes large, streamlined cargo vessels presently in service that are faster than all but a small number of passenger liners. . . . Jet-skimmers, hydrofoil ships, and numerous other radical designs are also discussed." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grade seven to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:182 Ag 1 '67 80w

"Simply written and illustrated with pertinent photographs, this book is an up-to-date account of a most important lifeline, modern ship transportation." Oscar Wright

Library J 93:301 Ja 15 '68 110w

CARSE, ROBERT. Ports of call. 344p il maps $7.95 Scribner

973 U.S.—History—Colonial period. Harbors 67-21336

The author "shows the development of 12 Atlantic and Gulf ports from the time of their settlement through the early 19th Century. . . . [describing the] colonial trade and the ships that carried it . . . commerce, piracy, manners and morals, religion, personalities, and the events of the time. [including] sections on Salem and the China trade, and life in pre-Revolutionary Charleston." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Some [ports], like Castine, are practically unknown and the author's research and description will be enjoyed by the reader. Others, like Philadelphia and New York, are really too complex for such a short treatment. Unless prevented by the price most libraries will find the book a more than welcome addition to their shelves. . . . Grade eight and up."

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 80w

"[This] book is essentially unfocussed, and [Carse] has failed to harmonize the various topics he touches upon. . . . Lacking a definite unifying theme, he meanders, and the book becomes chiefly a collection of facts. It whets the reader's appetite, but does not satisfy." R. W. Ryan

Library J 92:3636 O 15 '67 130w

"Carse has traced the ebb and flow of fortune in [various] . . . colonial seaports, ranging south from Castine, Me., to New Orleans, effectively building up a picture of what life was like in the days when the seacoast was our frontier. Inevitably, some chapters are livelier than others, which occasionally seem a little overburdened with researcher's curiosa, but the pieces interlock to form a colorful historical mosaic."

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ja 7 '68 190w

CARSTEN, F. L. The rise of fascism. 256p $6.50 Univ. of Calif. press

321.94 Fascism—Europe 67-21223

"This is a book on the history of the principal Fascist movements [during] the 1920s and 1930s . . . [in] the countries in which Fascism originated and achieved power: Italy, Germany and Austria. . . . [The author also includes] sketches of the Fascist movements in several European countries outside the triangle Rome-Berlin-Vienna." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by John Thayer

Am Hist R 73:1516 Je '68 550w

"Author of The Reichswehr and Politics, 1918-1933 [BRD 1967], and resident in Berlin during the climactic years of the Weimar Republic, Carsten (University of London) is concerned in this study with the development and maturation of Fascist movements. . . . The intent is laudable, but the execution leaves much to be desired. Aimed at a student audience, it reads like a textbook, offers familiar narrative and little comparative analysis, and seems to ignore the nature of Fascist ideology. . . . The book is rigidly compartmentalized, and the conclusion, allegedly given to comparative examination, is anemic, to say no worse of it."

Choice 4:1033 N '67 150w

"The best chapters are those on Germany, detailing events to which [the author] was an eyewitness. To date, this is the best study on the origins of Fascism. . . . Recommended for libraries generally." Keith Eubank

Library J 92:4410 D 1 '67 250w

"In the last analysis, the rise of Fascism 'was due', in Professor Carsten's words, 'to a maladjustment of capitalist society'. . . . [He is] no doubt right in saying that the orthodox left-wing view of the rise of Fascism 'is a gross oversimplification of a very complex process'. . . . [His] survey, which uses a certain amount of new material from the Nazi archives at Koblenz, covers much the same ground as [E.] Nolte's Three Faces of Fascism [BRD 1965], but (rightly, I think) with less concern for theory and more for fact." Geoffrey Barraclough

CARSTEN, F. L.—Continued

New Statesman 74:636 N 17 '67 250w

"This book will stimulate discussion of a number of interesting questions about the nature of fascism and the reasons for its success in some countries and not in others, and it draws attention to the problem of distinguishing what in fascism is the result of earlier intellectual and political doctrines and what was produced by the immediate social and economic conditions of Europe in the 1920s. . . . [Carsten is more] concerned to differentiate between the historical circumstances which gave rise to Fascism than to sketch a general pattern into which all Fascists movements can be fitted, but he does, in his conclusion, suggest certain characteristics—single-party authoritarianism, anti-communism, racialism, dynamic personal leadership—which . . . should at least tell us what to look out for." James Joll
N Y Rev of Books 10:17 F 15 '68 800w
TLS p726 J1 11 '68 380w

CARSTENS, PETER. The social structure of a Cape Coloured reserve; a study of racial integration and segregation in South Africa. 264p il maps $10.10 Oxford

309.168 Africa, South—Social conditions
67-1086

In this study of Steinkopf (population 4,000) "emphasis is on the social structure (the economy, family, classes, government, church, belief systems, group leadership), but some attention is given to history (periods of tribalism, missions, European rule) and to social change (development of a mixed economy, trade, the nuclear family, government schools, etc.)." (Choice)

Reviewed by B. M. duToit

Am Anthropol 70:139 F '68 460w

"[This] is an excellent addition to sources for the comparative study of small communities. . . . Especially interesting to rural sociologists is the emergence of the small town as a focal point. Association is increasingly based on class, occupation, and common interests; control becomes more formal; new class structures emerge based on European physical features, family and lineage reputation, legitimacy, wealth, occupation, education. Carstens relegates discussion of race to an appendix and gives indirect attention to the apartheid concept."

Choice 4:756 S '67 200w

"A straightforward, unpretentious account. . . . The material is well organized and, while not writing with the same skill as anthropologists like Colin Turnbull, Dr. Carstens has provided a clear picture of what life is like in a society which, already changing, will surely be transformed in the next generation. One of the most interesting chapters analyses the function, and effect on society, of the Dutch Reformed Mission Church which ministers to 95 per cent of the Steinkopf population. The book is a welcome addition to that solid shelf of African studies which owe so much to the methods and teaching of Malinowski and Radcliffe-Brown."

TLS p366 Ap 11 '68 150w

CARTER, ANGELA. The magic toyshop. 189p $4.50 Simon & Schuster

68-13031

"Nicely brought-up Melanie, orphaned at 15, is sent with her younger brother and sister to live with an unknown uncle, a brilliantly eccentric toymaker. The menage includes [Aunt Margaret], the aunt, struck dumb on her wedding night and able to communicate only by means of blackboard and chalk, and her two younger brothers [Finn], a gifted painter and . . . [Francie], a brilliant musician. . . . [Uncle Philip], who rules the household with monosyllabic violence, occupies himself after nightfall with his real passion: the creation of a theater of life-size puppets." (Publisher's note)

"It would be difficult to classify [this book]. Let's call it weird. . . . Any point, if there is one, to this story of the girl's first days in her new home is certainly vitiated by the erotic maunderings of the heroine's imagination, scenes of seduction and incest, and suggestive of things even worse."

Best Sell 27:446 F 15 '68 90w

"Reading this book can be a fascinating experience for a special kind of reader and I am prepared to say this is an extraordinary, even brilliant piece of writing. Like Angela Carter's Honeybuzzard [BRD 1967], this story is weird and definitely not for children. Yet, the brilliance of her descriptive powers evokes for me hundreds of Erik Blegvad sweet-and-nostalgic pictures. . . . In this short novel there are a series of nightmarish incidents—many of which are very much charged with sex. It is highly recommended as a work of contemporary portentous literature." William McCleary

Library J 93:570 F 1 '68 170w

"Beneath its contemporary surface, the novel shimmers with blurred echoes—from old tree myths, from Lewis Carroll, from 'Giselle' and 'Coppelia,' Harlequin and Punch. It can be read as a paradigm of the war between the generations—or, more easily, as a simple fantasy. Even so, the plot is grossly implausible, and seems constantly to be taking directions that surprise the author as much as the reader. All this is reprehensible and often irritating, and the reviewer should no doubt remonstrate. And yet the book succeeds, awkwardly but firmly welded together by the heat of its author's imagination. It leaves behind it a flavor, pungent and unsettling, which owes as much to its imperfections as to its virtues." John Wakeman

N Y Times Bk R p38 F 25 '68 700w

New Yorker 44:133 F 24 '68 160w

TLS p593 J1 6 '67 370w

CARTER, E. F. Dictionary of inventions and discoveries. 193p $6 Philosophical lib.

608 Inventions—Dictionaries 67-2078

"The purpose of this work is to set out in alphabetical order the scientific, technological, and kindred inventions, discoveries and developments which have been made since earliest times, indicating to whom each is attributable, together with the year in which they were made or introduced, if known. This knowledge has been gathered from . . . literary and factual sources." (Introd)

"However slender it might be, had Carter been able to fill his book with accurate information on inventions and discoveries it would have been a good buy. Including inventors and discoverers broadened the scope but weakened the work, since the coverage is far too sketchy and the selections too erratic—Gauss, Helmholtz, Steinmetz, Wallace, and many others are left out. In addition, there are many errors of omission and commission, and a fair number of typographical and alphabetizing mistakes. . . . Since basic reference works provide most of this information, purchase is not recommended."

Choice 4:395 Je '67 130w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:58 My 20 '67 90w

CARTER, GWENDOLEN M. South Africa's Transkei; the politics of domestic colonialism [by] Gwendolen M. Carter, Thomas Karis [and] Newell M. Stultz. 200p il maps $6.50 Northwestern univ. press

968 Africa, South—Politics and government
67-15937

The authors "went to South Africa at various times to gather data for the . . . analysis of the political and economic development in the Transkei." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The reorganization of the South African state," wrote a geographer recently, 'is one of the unique aspects of present day Africa. . . . Whatever the moral implications of this form of apartheid . . . the process and the results are of absorbing interest.' [The authors] prove the point in a truly superior piece of work that is of greater significance than the title suggests. . . . The first 'Bantu Homeland' to appear on the map is the Transkei, which covers a large area of tribal reserves in the eastern Cape Province. The authors have concentrated their study on the sequence of events leading to the creation of this Bantustan, [placing] these events in the broader setting of policy formulation relating to the whole area of separate development: their work is admirably comprehensive. . . . [The book] sets a standard of excellence in the academic coverage of South Africa's efforts at self-partition that will not easily be surpassed. . . . [It] is an important book." H. J. De Blij

Ann Am Acad 375:227 Ja '68 700w

"The historical treatment, analysis, and evaluation are admirably accomplished. The book is concise, well written, and scholarly. Very good bibliography. Its only drawback is that it was evidently completed in about 1964 but it was not published until 1967, making one wish that it could have been updated prior to publication. Highly recommended for libraries at all levels."

Choice 5:392 My '68 150w

"[The authors'] analysis is limited only by whatever measures officials took to impede their study. The conclusion is foregone, but the assembling of facts is important and the documentation is excellent. For large and special collections." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:3647 O 15 '67 210w

CARTER, SAMUEL. Cyrus Field: man of two worlds [by] Samuel Carter, III. 38up il $8.95 Putnam

B or 92 Field, Cyrus West. Cables, Submarine 67-10949

A biography "of the man who pioneered the first transatlantic cable . . . [and who was] equally at home and honored in America and in England. He was also at home in two other worlds, since he was a [businessman and a] . . . God-fearing Massachusetts Puritan until the day of his death. [The author] chronicles Field's life in both of these regions and gives an account of life in nineteenth century America." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"An exemplary piece of biographical writing. The subject is studied in detail but with a light hand. [Field] comes alive as a real man of his times, neither over-praised nor under-defended. Academic and public libraries will definitely want a copy of this book." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 27:415 F 1 '68 390w

Reviewed by Bernard Weisberger

Book World p10 Mr 17 '68 750w

"[Field] was a man devoted to family, a great traveler, and a person of lovable character. . . . This excellent book [may be considered] an economic history of New York City in the 19th Century, or the biography of a successful economist and a scientist, or even the story of a distinguished humanitarian. . . . Delightful to read, [Carter's] bibliography is also a reference note of great use. Young adults will find this an important introduction to the period." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:68 Ja 1 '68 160w [YA]

CARTIER-BRESSON, HENRI. The world of Henri Cartier Bresson. (Studio bk) 210p il $14.95 Viking

779 Photography, Artistic 68-23211

Cartier-Bresson has had two major exhibitions of photographs at the Museum of Modern Art, one in 1946 and one in 1968. This book is a retrospective collection of his work from 1929 to the present day and consists of two-hundred ten photographs taken in Europe, America, Asia and Africa. The major part of the text is a reworking of the ideas on photography set forth in Cartier-Bresson's The Decisive Moment (BRD 1953).

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 20w

"Time stands still. The moment is captured. Comedy and tragedy are always present. Cartier-Bresson's style stems from his camera technique to stop motion dead in its tracks. Split-second timing has been dominant throughout his photographic career. . . . [He] is the only photographer to have had two one-man shows in the Louvre. One might not agree with his views about photography, but they have made him one of today's top photographers. This book is an important collection of his major works. I recommend it highly for specialist, informed and general readers." P. I. Land

Library J 93:3548 O 1 '68 180w

"The photographs in this latest book span a period of nearly 40 years and include many old friends, pictures that were used in his earlier work; but most have been taken in the last 15 years and add significantly to his photographic record. . . . [Cartier-Bresson's love of people] is what [this book] is all about. Very nearly all the pictures deal with ordinary people in ordinary life; seldom are they concerned with the unrolling news developments of our time. . . . [However] for those of us who treasured—and still treasure—"The Decisive Moment," it is a disappointment to observe that the layouts and print quality of this newest book do not measure up to the earlier one and have kept it from reaching the heights the photographs themselves have reached." Carl Mydans

N Y Times Bk R p7 Jl 21 '68 1000w

TLS p1331 N 28 '68 370w

CARTWRIGHT, FREDERICK F. The development of modern surgery. 323p il $6.95 Crowell 617 Surgery—History 68-11287

An "account of the major accomplishments in surgery over the last 150 years. . . . The book closes with a discussion of transplanted organs." (Library J) Bibliography. Indexes of subjects and names.

Choice 5:649 Jl '68 130w

"Dr. Cartwright has chosen so well that the whole exciting story emerges through a wealth of scholarly research and living historical detail. He gives special emphasis to his two greatest interests, anaesthesia and Lister. . . . [His] felicity as a writer makes this a book that succeeds for both the lay and professional reader, no small accomplishment and I can enthusiastically recommend it for medical, academic, and public libraries." M. L. Garvey

Library J 93:1009 Mr 1 '68 200w

"Dr. Cartwright has a fascinating reference to the work of the women surgeons with the Russian army in the Russo-Japanese war of 1904. . . . The whole of surgical progress as it affects all the organs of the body is described in a readable and unpatronizing manner, and Dr. Cartwright offers an excellent example of how to wear great knowledge lightly."

TLS p315 Mr 28 '68 500w

CARVAJAL, LUIS DE. The enlightened; the writings of Luis de Carvajal, el mozo; tr, ed, and with an introd, and epilogue by Seymour B. Lieberman; pref. by Allan Nevins. 157p il $6.95 Univ. of Miami press

B or 92 Jews in Mexico. Inquisition

67-28272

Memoirs, letters and Last Will and Testament of a young Jew of Mexico City who was burned at the stake during the Inquisition on December 8 1596. Bibliography. Index.

"Carvajal's writings reveal the beliefs, thoughts, feelings, and reactions of a sensitive, spiritually illuminated, and religiously indomitable mystic. They also uniquely portray the life, religious practices, family relationships, cohesiveness, devotion, and steadfastly borne tribulations of the Jewish community in Mexico. . . . [The introduction is] an excellent example of research scholarship. . . . [Lieberman] includes English translations of certain of Carvajal's liturgical verses and prayers that were widely recognized for their literary merit as well as their spirituality." R. S. Chamberlain

Am Hist R 73:1685 Je '68 550w

Choice 5:788 S '68 180w

"Although it does not neglect the monstrous cruelty of the Inquisition, this beautifully printed and illustrated volume, representing years of patient research in the archives of Spain and Mexico, concentrates on the victim. Joseph Lumbroso (the Enlightened) was the name assumed by Luis de Carvajal after he experienced a vision in the cell to which he was assigned following his first arrest by the Inquisition. . . . The translator and editor . . . has made a judicious selection from among [Carvajal's letters and memoirs] to dramatize the extraordinary faith of the martyrs and the ugly uses to which the name of the Prince of Peace was put to spread the blessings of Christianity. . . . Dr. Lieberman's introduction . . . contains a valuable recapitulation of the early history of the Jews in Mexico, the first having settled there with the legions of Cortés." A. L. Sachar

Sat 51:35 F 10 '68 500w

"[These] highly interesting . . . [pieces] provide a vivid and moving personal narrative of Luis's misadventures and pious meditations down almost to the day of his execution, and illustrate how profoundly under Philip II all

CARVAJAL, LUIS DE—Continued

Spanish religious life, Jewish as well as Christian, was rooted in Biblicism, a sense of martyrdom, and a strong otherworldly spirituality."

Va Q R 44:1xxvii spring '68 200w

CARVER, P. L. The life of a poet; a biography of William Collins; with a foreword by Edmund Blunden. 210p $5.95 Horizon press

B or 92 Collins, William 67-27910

In this biography of the eighteenth-century poet, the author has gone back "to the documents—to the wills, parish registers and so on—to reconsider the old evidence in the new light that these throw on it." (TLS) Index.

"An old-fashioned biography: meticulous in its accumulation and presentation of detail. . . . It concentrates on Collins' life, not his works; it adds substantially to the scanty collection of facts previously available. . . . [Carver's] new dating of some poems is illuminating. His contributions to knowledge are often significant, although sometimes an apparent obsession with trivia . . . substitutes for the presentation of substantial facts. Despite its dryness of tone and its irritating stylistic mannerism (including an infuriating dependence on the editorial 'we'), this book supersedes all previous biographies of its subject."

Choice 5:620 J1 '68 140w

"Carver's book is academic shoptalk; behind the dense critique of previous biographical studies, the figure of Collins shows but dimly. General readers might better go back to [Dr. Samuel] Johnson's [Lives of the Poets]."

N Y Times Bk R p26 Mr 31 '68 200w

"A book of the utmost interest. . . . It soon becomes clear that, though the old story was basically right, many of the emphases were wrong. Collins, for example, had always previously been represented as descending from a long line of Chichester tradesmen; Mr. Carver demonstrates that his paternal grandfather was a clergyman. . . . More important still, because it touches upon the poetry, is the curious account here given of Collins's supposed relations with Alexander Carlyle, the Scottish minister and autobiographer. [Much] must necessarily remain speculative, but Mr. Carver does not press his points unduly and the great merit of his book is that it does constantly make us think again about Collins. He reasons closely and precisely from his documents."

TLS p197 Mr 9 '67 700w

CARVIC, HERON. Picture Miss Seeton. 209p $4.95 Harper

68-17039

"Miss Emily Seeton, interrupting a young hood in the process of what turns out to be murder, prods him with the point of her umbrella and utters a mild admonishment. She then proceeds blithely to Plummergen, her new home in the English countryside, unconcerned that she launched a well-occupied wake. There are Superintendent Delphick and Sergeant Ranger, whose prevailing emotion is astonishment. There are minions of the drug racket, into whose dealings Miss Seeton is innocently wont to poke her umbrella." (N Y Times Bk R)

"There is suspense here, along with humor, romance and an assortment of real people. May Mr. Carvic and Miss Seeton enjoy a long life."

Best Sell 28:211 Ag 15 '68 70w

"Before he wrote 'Picture Miss Seeton' Heron Carvic must have known Miss Christie's Miss Marples very well indeed and was probably well acquainted with G. K. Chesterton's Father Brown too. Miss Seeton is elderly, English, intrepid and only dimly aware that danger exists at all. . . . Though Mr. Carvic's touch is a shade heavier, nearer caricature than Miss Christie's, his book certainly belongs on the lower shelf of the same bookcase."

Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 22 '68 100w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:101 S '68 180w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2263 Je 1 '68 110w

"When a person off in a corner by himself begins to emit strangled noises that are gradually identified as heroically contained mirth, he is likely to be regarded with some suspicion and concern. In my case, the cause was [this mystery]. . . . I found [Miss Seeton] an unqualified joy. Her adventure demands three things: sequels, a film version and consideration when the 'best first novel' awards are passed out." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ag 11 '68 140w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:116 S 14 '68 40w

CARY, WILLIAM L. Politics and the regulatory agencies. (Mich. Univ. Law school. The Thomas M. Cooley lectures, 16th ser) 149p $5.95 McGraw

353.09 Independent regulatory commissions 67-11874

A former 'Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission . . . [in lectures given at the University of Michigan attempts to describe] agency viability in a political context. . . . The discussion is shaped by two questions posed in the opening pages: what political forces are at work on the [federal] regulatory commissions, and what reasonable standards of effective performance should the commissions be expected to meet? . . . Through reference to a set of hypothetical and genuine cases, Cary endeavors to describe a line separating . . . interference from . . . guidance and oversight." (Am Pol Sci R)

"The chapter on agency vitality is perhaps most revealing of the strong and weak points of Cary's analysis. He is at his best when concentrating on obstacles to vigorous administration, including . . . [among others] the 'claim' that an agency has become the captive of industry. . . . [While] Cary's analysis of obstacles to administrative vitality draws extensively from the experience of other agencies . . . the same cannot be said of his suggested remedies. [He] gives an illuminating account of the rejuvenating devices employed by the SEC . . . but he does not show that these devices would be appropriate for the variety of agencies with which he is ostensibly concerned." J. E. Moore

Am Pol Sci R 61:1129 D '67 950w

Reviewed by M. N. McGeary

Ann Am Acad 372:165 J1 '67 430w

"In references to the work of agencies other than the SEC, Mr. Cary is sometimes the ex-chairman who has talked with other commission heads, sometimes the impatient citizen, and sometimes the inquisitive professor of law. But he is nearly always the impressionist whose less than fully buttressed conclusion is that wholesale reform of the regulatory agencies (as advocated by others) is not needed. . . . He can and does speak meaningfully of the political context within which the SEC sought to define the ideal and reach for the possible. The political context is described with candor and, in spots, with a hangover of irritation. . . . An interesting book which provides a fresh comment on a vital subject by a thoughtful man of action."

E. D. Etherington

Pol Sci Q 82:646 D '67 550w

CASA, FRANK P. The dramatic craftsmanship of Moreto. 187p $5 Harvard univ. press

862 Moreto y Cavana, Agustín 66-18244

An "assessment of the literary value of five of [the 17th century Spanish dramatist's] plays: San Franco de Sena, a hagiographic comedia; El Licenciado Vidriera, whose source was Cervantes' novella; Antíoco y Seleuco, a tale of ancient origin; El Valiente Justiciero, severely criticized because of its dependence on a Lope work; and El Lindo don Diego. [The author] evaluates earlier criticism before proceeding to his . . . analyses of the Moreto plays and their presumed sources." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Moreto here receives a careful [analysis]. While not denying the dramatist's indebtedness to others, Casa provides ample evidence of Moreto's integrity, creativeness, and frequently markedly original handling of theme, character, and story. This volume represents a valuable addition to studies of Golden Age theater and is recommended for student and scholar alike."

Choice 4:1385 F '68 140w

"This book [is] a valuable point of departure for the urgently needed re-evaluation not only of the plays of Agustín Moreto y Cabaña but also of those of his contemporaries who, like Moreto, have suffered from the neglect of the critics across the history of literary criticism during the past couple of centuries. . . . In his analysis of five of Moreto's plays . . . Professor Casa shows how Moreto adapted, revised, introduced new characters, and improved on or gave greater depth to the original characters of the play. . . . There is a valuable bibliography." A. V. Ebersole

Mod Lang J 52:167 Mr '68 410w

"Casa successfully rebuts the stupid charge of plagiarism often made against Moreto and shows some of the merits of one brilliant play and two passable ones. He also makes a good case for the play derived from Cervantes's novel El licenciado vidriera (The Glass Licenciate). Moreto took from Cervantes only what suited his different, dramatic purpose. One essay is open to criticism. Moreto's Antochus and Seleucus is indeed indebted to Lope's greatest tragedy El castigo sin venganza (Punishment without Revenge), and at the same time differs from it. . . . Casa's book is honest and mostly to the point."

TLS D986 O 19 '67 170w

CASE, MARGARET H. South Asian history. 1750-1950; a guide to periodicals, dissertations and newspapers. 561p $17.50 Princeton univ. press

016.954 Asia—History—Bibliography 67-21019

"More than 6,000 articles and dissertations are classified under [the] following major headings: (1) areas not primarily under British control, (2) areas primarily under British control, (3) nationalism and politics, (4) economic history, (5) social history, (6) cultural history. Almost all entries are in English. . . . Criteria for selection are contribution of fact or original interpretation based on archival research, contemporary reporting, or direct personal observation. About 650 dissertations related to subject and accepted through 1965 for Ph.D. and D. Litt degrees in a number of countries are also included. Finally, the Guide lists over 500 English and Indian language newspapers published in South Asia since beginning of 19th century, with publication dates and information regarding extent of holdings from 40 libraries around the world (majority in U.S.)." (Choice) Indexes of authors, of dissertations, and of subjects.

"Important reference work for research on history of India-Pakistan subcontinent during past two centuries. . . . Over half [of the entries] are briefly annotated. . . . Not a complete inventory of journal articles (this task is now under consideration in London), but deliberately selective. . . . Curious omissions and sloppy indexing can be found very occasionally in the Guide; but it brings together valuable source material previously widely scattered or unknown and thus belongs on the reference shelf of every college library."

Choice 5:325 My '68 200w

"This bibliography is a research guide in the best sense of the term. It is indispensable for serious study in the field covered." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1128 Mr 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Peter Harnetty
Pacific Affairs 41:455 fall '68 390w

CASSADY, RALPH. Auctions and auctioneering, by Ralph Cassady, Jr. 327p pl $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

658.8 Auctions

67-25051

An account of the history, techniques and economic importance of auctioneering. The author discusses national variations in methods of bidding, "the strategy and tactics of selling and buying at auction, the role of the auctioneer, . . . the employment of 'rings', . . . [and the] use of computers and communication devices such as television. . . . [Also considered are the] legal aspects of auctioning." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Cassady has performed a splendid service in providing economists with a scholarly and comprehensive treatment of auction practices. This book . . . provides a wealth of observations on the sophisticated price adjustment mechanisms operating in those markets most closely approximating the competitive markets of economic theory." V. L. Smith

Am Econ R 58:959 S '68 2000w

"Cassady, professor of marketing and director of the Bureau of Business and Economic Research, University of California, Los Angeles, makes a thorough study of one of mankind's oldest marketing devices—the auction. The completeness of his work is based on 11 years of reading, study and travel. . . . Recommended for larger business collections." R. L. Waters

Library J 92:4406 D 1 '67 80w

CASSATT, MARY. The graphic art of Mary Cassatt; introd. by Adelyn D. Breeskin; foreword by Donald H. Karshan; organized [and publ] by the Mus. of graphic art, New York. 111p 85il $8.50; pa $4.50 Smithsonian inst. press

760

67-30432

This is a catalog designed "to accompany the 1967-68 circulating exhibition of Mary Cassatt's graphics." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography.

"The introduction . . . is brief but informative. The selection of 85 prints, all of which are well reproduced, gives a balanced view of her range, skill, and originality as a printmaker. . . . [The] list of exhibitions featuring prints, and the selective bibliography are up to date and useful."

Choice 5:763 S '68 170w

"The specific contribution of this book is not the brief commentary, perceptive as it is, but the reproduction of a large number of Mary Cassatt's graphic works in a format intended for the informed art public. The first of a projected series on printmakers, this book is recommended for academic libraries and art collections." Delores McCole

Library J 93:2852 Ag '68 120w

CASSELLS, LAVENDER. The struggle for the Ottoman Empire, 1717-1740. 226p il maps $6.95 Crowell

940.2 Turkey—History. Turkey—Foreign relations 67-26100

An examination of a "period in the history of central Europe, the Balkans and Turkey. The book begins with the capture of Belgrade by Prince Eugen of Austria, and ends with the Peace of Belgrade, by which the city was once again restored to the Turks." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:845 S '68 150w

"The achievement of this book is to demonstrate that there need be nothing arid or boring about eighteenth century diplomacy if you take the trouble to unravel how the grand diplomatic ploys adumbrated in Vienna, Paris and St Petersburg were actually put into practice by each court's foreign envoys. . . . Miss Cassells does not allow her theme either to overwhelm her or run away with her. She avoids purple patches and writes crisply but with plenty of humour. The tangled web of diplomacy is sorted out in a way that is both scholarly and intelligible. It is brought to life because it is related to the characters, ambitions and foibles of the different rulers and their ministers."

Economist 221:926 N 26 '66 500w

"Essentially a re-examination of Vandal's account of the mission of the French ambassador Villeneuve to the Sultan. This was originally published in 1837 and has been used by countless historians. Unfortunately Miss Cassells has not looked again at the archival evidence but bases her book on the material selected and printed by her predecessor eighty years ago. To judge by her footnotes, the only unpublished source which she had used consists of some volumes of despatches from British diplomatic agents at Constantinople, Vienna, St. Petersburg and Paris. To make Villeneuve's activities intelligible to the general reader [the author] devotes one third of her space to an account of the military, political and diplomatic background. . . . [She] has read widely and with some discrimination the primary and secondary sources published since 1837, but here too there are some curious omissions." D. B. Horn

Engl Hist R 83:402 Ap '68 210w

"Cassells tells the story well, and the background is new and lively. The general reader will enjoy the account of inanities and stupidities which surrounded the various royal courts involved, while appreciating the diplomatic skills of the two remarkable Frenchmen,

CASSELS, LAVENDER—Continued

Cardinal Fleury and his Ambassador in Turkey, the Marquis de Villeneuve. The book will also be useful to scholars and informed readers." J. C. Shipman

Library J 93:2865 Ag '68 160w

TLS p746 Ag 17 '67 2200w

CASSERLEY, J. V. LANGMEAD. In the service of man: technology and the future of human values. 204p $4.95 Regnery

301.2 Technology and civilization 67-28493

The author, an Episcopalian minister and theologian, "sees modern technology's offer to man of new heights of freedom and fulfillment as contingent on man's ability to maintain his heritage of religious and human values. . . . He decries extreme conservatism, in which all change is resisted, as much as he does radicalism, in which change is immediate regardless of the cost, he would like to see the two points of view meet in the middle ground of democratic dialogue." (Library J)

"The theme of this cultured writer reminds one of T. S. Eliot on tradition in poetry. If Casserley's descriptions mislead, it is only because one forgets his warning not to try to imagine the future, but to try to develop the ability to conceive it speculatively. When the warning is heeded, he makes needed sense." W. L. La Croix

America 118:234 F 17 '68 550w

"Despite some discursive prophesying about the effects of technology that would have been better left to others, this is an excellent statement of a reasonable conservatism, a statement that could well have a healthy influence on the national political scene." George Adelman

Library J 92:4160 N 15 '67 190w

CASSILL, R. V. La vie passionnée of Rodney Buckthorne; a tale of the great American's last rally and curious death; a novel. 243p $5.95 Geis; for sale by Grove

63-16149

"The novel brings Buckthorne to his destiny via escape from a jerkwater Wyoming university. Gipsy scholar, ex-Communist and Wallace radical, fake Ph.D. and five-times married, Buckthorne ran out of luck if not aficionados at Vistular University. . . . Besides that he got a coed pregnant. . . . On the lam in New York and flirting with defenestration, Buckthorne notes a classified ad for a Greenwich Village apartment. He subleases it [and] . . . soon imagines himself falling under the double sex spell of both the young girl who leases him the apartment and its absentee owner. . . . an aging lady painter. . . . Sequentially he serves four different women, sometimes in tandem, before embarking on the Grand Prix sex-orama that reduces him to a living skeleton." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The essentially mythological pattern is never explicit. I began reading with the assumption that this is a realistic story, and though I was increasingly puzzled by implausibilities, it was not until I was halfway through and began to come across phrases borrowed from [Joseph] Campbell—'night-sea voyage,' 'master of life and death'—that I recognized what Cassill was up to. . . . But a story so deliberately meaningful as [this] ceases to have any real emotional effect. The characters and situations are not persuasive enough in themselves to keep one content at the realistic level, while at the mythological level one feels there is nothing really unique or personal to what Cassill is saying." Thomas Rogers

Book World p18 J 2 '68 800w

"High comedy satirizes attitudes towards sex, academe, and the culture explosion. The prism of Mr. Cassill's lively prose reflects cogent ambiguities with curious overall effect. His description of 'The End of the World Show'—an art happening in a brokendown hotel—is worth the price of the book. Mr. Cassill, critic and teacher, is a writer whose previous work has deservedly earned warm praise." Earl Tannenbaum

Library J 93:1498 Ap 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:800 Je 17 '68 130w

"Because Cassill has always weighted his writing with gravity, one tends to look for a hard center in [this novel]. . . . Some targets . . . he hits without letup. But his attitude toward Buckthorne is at least ambivalent, at best troubled. Buckthorne believes it's the destiny of erotic man—and that's every man—to search for his certainties in 'the magnetic field' of the vagina. The boy in Cassill thinks so, too. But another part of him—the thinking man—knows and finally shows such to be a scenario for disaster. As a consequence, the plot runs wild. Buckthorne has rubber for soul, Cassill's intent gets fogged, and the novel bursts with mirth and life. In his staggering confusions Rodney Buckthorne has millions of compatriots." Webster Schott

N Y Times Bk R p4 My 19 '68 800w

Time 91:107 My 24 '68 100w

CATHER, WILLA. The kingdom of art: Willa Cather's first principles and critical statements, 1893-1896; sel. and ed. with two essays and a commentary by Bernice Slotte. 489p pl $8.95 Univ. of Neb. press

818

65-15275

"This book provides selections from Willa Cather's critical work published in newspapers and college magazines prior to her removal from Nebraska to the East. In an appendix appear essays on Carlyle and on Shakespeare (1891) and an uncollected short story (1893) in which use is made of the Virginia background. In another appendix two interviews with the author are reprinted from newspapers (1913 and 1915). [There is a] check list of the author's 'critical and personal writing' (1891-1896) . . . [and a] commentary which incorporates new biographical material." (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index.

Am Lit 39:441 N '67 130w

"This addition to the canon of lesser Cather texts is largely an analysis of the newly recovered pieces she wrote for the Nebraska State Journal during 1895-96, just after her university graduation. Most are fugitive weekly literary columns or play reviews, but as a whole they throw light on her own formative artistic ambitions. . . . Admittedly, they are not exceptional discoveries, but they are useful information. A bit over-edited." A. B. Myers

Library J 92:1161 Mr 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by J. J. Murphy

N Y Times Bk R p12 N 19 '67 550w

The CATHOLIC WORKER (periodical). A penny ■ copy. See Cornell, T. C., ed.

CATLIN, GEORGE. O-kee-pa; a religious ceremony, and other customs of the Mandans; ed. and with an introd. by John C. Ewers. centennial ed 106p col il $12.50 Yale univ. press

299 Indians of North America—Religion and mythology 67-20336

In 1832, the author visited the villages of the Mandan Indians and viewed first hand the four-day O-Kee-Pa ceremony. Mr. Catlin's description of the torture ceremony "is reprinted here, complete with a reprinting of the very limited and separately issued Folium Reservatum, which [describes] . . . some of the more outré sexual carrying-on at O-Kee-Pa." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[Catlin's] magnificent paintings and word renditions of the four day event are classics in the history of the West. . . . A brilliant introduction is supplied by Ewers. Letters supporting the authenticity of the Okipa, editor's notes, [and] a fine bibliography . . . are also included in this new edition."

Choice 4:1369 F '68 170w

"The 13 color illustrations, drawn by Mr. Catlin, are handsomely reproduced, and half of them will give exquisite shivers to many imaginative readers. This book is only for the most serious collections about the American Indian, and for large academic or public libraries." Lee Ash

Library J 92:3436 O 1 '67 240w

CATLIN, GEORGE E. G. The stronger community [Eng title: The grandeur of England and the Atlantic community]. 217p $5.95 Hawthorn bks.

327.09 North Atlantic region—Politics. Great Britain—Foreign relations 66-24526

The author seeks to demonstrate "just why the 'Third Force' concept is a monumental blunder—the effects of which, if it is unchecked, could disturb the world for a century or more. [He] argues further that the Common Market, excellent as it was in its original conception, has become too narrow, exclusive and protectionist as a tight little group of north-western European countries; it must widen its horizons to take in the entire Atlantic Community, including the United States—or else lapse into the worst kind of old-fashioned anarchic nationalism." (Publisher's note)

"A summing up of a great deal of the thought of a prominent political scientist. It is, however, highly miscellaneous, consisting for the most part of very impressionistic sketches rather than of propositions which are backed up by detailed scholarly evidence. It covers a multitude of topics, including such items as 'The Grandeur of England,' 'Racialism,' 'United Europe,' 'East-West Relations,' and the like; and it concludes with some interesting and insightful comments on the future of the Atlantic community. . . . [However, the book] contains much material which is quite irrelevant to the central theme. It cannot be favorably compared with some of the large number of books published recently on NATO and other Atlantic affairs."

Choice 4:1175 D '67 150w

"If George Catlin's eloquent denunciations . . . convince us, [General de Gaulle] here is the evil genius who has revived nationalism in his own country, encouraged it elsewhere, and thus halted the march to Atlantic Union. As one of the pioneers of the Atlantic Union idea, Catlin continues to fight fiercely for a much broader political association of Europe and the United States than even the present European Economic Community plus Great Britain. He naturally detests as utterly disastrous de Gaulle's concept of Europe as a Third Force."

Robert Lekachman

N Y Times Bk R p1 Mr 26 '67 280w

CATLING, PATRICK SKENE. The experiment. 317p $5.95 Trident press

67-25380

This novel concerns "a small Ohio college that established a sex institute to gain fame and money and to make a scientific contribution. Dr. Beatrice Schumann is appointed head, and she immediately sets in motion a series of . . . events. Prostitutes and homosexuals are recruited, movies are made of all possibilities, faculty members are called in to perform, and eventually the entire town is somehow involved with sex as studied and approved by science." (Library J)

"Presumably satirizing the sexual research begun with Kinsey, [this book] becomes more than a little nauseating. The only reason for giving notice to [it] is to warn prospective buyers against wasting their money and their time. Librarians particularly will surely not wish to spend budgeted funds on this ephemeral trash."

Best Sell 27:477 Mr 15 '68 30w

"[In this novel] scientists are satirized to within an inch of professional survival, and the scientific method as applied to sex and love can never again be the same. It's all quite moral in its conclusions and innuendos; but the descriptions of lab techniques and interviews, although often terribly funny, may cause a gasp here and a seizure there. The book is too long, but as a commentary on sober-faced, clinical sexual investigation, it's great fun. Most librarians will want to read before adding." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 93:207 Ja 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara

New Statesman 74:644 N 10 '67 700w

"Unfortunately, Mr. Catling approaches his tempting theme with a mixture of perspectives that negate one another. He mingles pure satire of 'The Digby Institute,' (and the two cold fish who manipulate the controls) with the sentimental love story of the sex institute's hostess and its architect. Punctuating these parallel histories are some peppy intermezzos in the coition conservatory that further confuse the author's status as an Olympian moralist. The result is not the '1984' of the libido one might expect from the opening chapters."

Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 11 '68 100w

Reviewed by Jack Kroll

Newsweek 71:85C Mr 4 '68 250w

"[This book's] laboured, unsubtle treatment of the celebrated 'Human Sexual Response' project [by W. H. Masters and V. E. Johnson, BRD 1966] will not put off readers with appetites for extremes of kinkiness and perversion. The 'satire' never interferes with the set-piece descriptions of the various stages in the 'experiment' and by the end the whole project has swelled into a mass orgy."

TLS p1053 N 9 '67 120w

CAUGHEY, ROBERT R., jr. auth. The legal base for universities in developing countries. See Hannah, H. W.

CAVALLARI, ALBERTO. The changing Vatican; tr. by Raymond T. Kelly. 215p $4.95 Doubleday

262 Catholic Church

67-19075

The author "spent a year in the . . . offices of the Vatican, interviewing Pope Paul himself as well as such leading Church figures as Cardinals Koenig, Agagianian, Colombo, Bea, and Ottaviani, and numerous Vatican officials. Cavallari's intention was to find out exactly how the Vatican . . . works, and just how it is changing. . . . [The book discusses] the difficulties involved in 'up-dating' religious faith without sacrificing dogmatic truth; the de-westernization of the Church's world outlook; dialogue with other Christian faiths and non-Christian faiths, with agnostics, atheists, communists; the dilemmas of overpopulation and poverty." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Originally published 1966 entitled Il Vaticano che cambia.

"[The] special correspondent for Milan's respected moderate newspaper Corriere della Sera, has written a topflight journalistic report on the [2d Vatican] Council's effects upon the Vatican as a historical and political, rather than as a spiritual, institution. His thesis may be characterized by two frequently repeated words: 'reform' and 'liberty.' Central topics are the 'Secretariat of State' and the 'Curia.' . . . Mr. Cavallari's report will prove fascinating to almost any reader. It belongs in all but the smallest public libraries, most academic libraries, and all Catholic libraries." C. E. Zakrzewski

Library J 92:3043 S 15 '67 150w

"Signor Cavallari's uncommitted liberal Italian mind gives him advantages over many commentators on Vatican affairs, including theologians. He is a friendly observer of a world power, not a theorist or a moralist. Though he knows the Roman Church well, he never indulges in complicated distinctions and never uses the jargon of long words and turgid phrases. No one is better equipped to provide pen pictures of the torn world of the Vatican from which disputed value judgments derive. . . . [On several] questions Signor Cavallari is perhaps kinder to Vatican incumbents and other church spokesmen than a reviewer would be. He takes a mild and understanding view of the reign of Pius XII and the famous 'silence' during the war. . . . This book will be read by all who want a modest, clear and up-to-date picture of Vatican personalities, of how they operate and how their minds work."

TLS p1085 S 26 '68 650w

CAVES, RICHARD E. Britain's economic prospects, by Richard E. Caves and associates. 510p $7.50 Brookings

330.942 Great Britain—Economic policy. Great Britain—Economic conditions

68-31833

"American and Canadian economists, assisted by British economists and officials, have made this study of the British economy. . . . [In Part I they] discuss fiscal, monetary, and income policies. In Part II they describe the balance of payments and British trade performance. Part III covers economic growth, markets, collective bargaining, industrial efficiency, . . . and science and technology. A section containing suggested policy priorities concludes the book." (Library J) Index.

"This study, an excellent and thorough coverage of the recent and present problems of the British economy, is one that should be purchased by academic libraries and large public libraries." D. E. Thompson

Library J 93:3001 S 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Wassily Leontief

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 O 10 '68 250w

"[This is an] admirably conceived and remarkably performed . . . inquiry. . . . It is always risky for economists to investigate the policies and workings of another country's economy. . . . Evidences of hurry, jejune-ness, and banality occur in this work. Yet it is . . . important and valuable. . . . The North American authors . . . have trodden delicately on our dreams and economystics. But their general message is exemplary in tone and content. . . . They do not, by their perceptive work, justify any pessimism about the kind of future we might make for ourselves. Our ship can be refitted."

CAVES, R. E.—Continued

TLS p1066 S 26 '68 950w

CAYNE, BERNARD S., ed. Merit students encyclopedia, 20v. See Merit students encyclopedia

CECIL, LAMAR. Albert Ballin; business and politics in imperial Germany, 1888-1918. 388p $9 Princeton univ. press

943.08 Ballin, Albert. Hamburg-American Lines. Germany—Politics and government—1866- 66-21830

The author "studies the interaction of business and politics, of businessmen and politicians, and provides . . . data on two . . . aspects of Anglo-German relations: first, their economic rivalry in international shipping and their race in naval construction; and second, the fear of social revolution and the lack of liberalism as an accompaniment to industrialization in Germany." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Ballin, the managing director of the Hamburg-American Line, was not only a great tycoon but an intimate of the Kaiser, an amateur diplomat, and a party to political intrigue at high levels. His career is, therefore, worthy of the painstaking research it has received in this study, which utilizes an impressive array of microfilmed documents from the German archives as well as the records of the Hamburg-American Line itself. Even more impressive is the author's success in digesting and organizing this great bulk of material. The result, despite occasional disconcerting errors of syntax, is a pleasant and informative narrative. The main thread through the book is Ballin's Anglophilia. . . . [But this is] a solid contribution to scholarship. The author has not avoided all the shoals, but we shareholders can rejoice that he has brought his vessel safely back to Cuxhaven." E. E. Kraehe

Am Hist B 73:519 D '67 500w

Reviewed by E. L. Pinney

Am Pol Sci R 62:270 Mr '68 550w

"[The life of Ballin] has been exhaustively examined previously, by no fewer than six biographers. There is possibly sufficient new material in this reworked doctoral dissertation to justify a short journal article. . . . Ballin was neither a particularly interesting person nor a typical representative of German big business. His position with the largest steamship company in the world gave him a platform from which to launch widely heard opinions, but these usually boiled down to some version of 'what's good for Hamburg-American is good for Germany.' This detailed examination of his actions and views, then, does not take one very far in exploring 'the interaction of business and politics, of businessmen and politicians' in Germany."

Choice 4:1418 F '68 160w

Reviewed by Fritz Redlich

Pol Sci Q 83:480 S '68 1200w

CELA, CAMILO JOSÉ. Mrs Caldwell speaks to her son (Mrs Caldwell habla con su hijo) in the authorized English tr. and with an introd. by J. S. Bernstein. 216p $5.95; pa $2.45 Cornell univ. press

68-16379

In this novel the author tells the story of "an eccentric English widow. . . . It takes the form of 215 short letters, supposedly recovered from the Royal Insane Asylum where Mrs. Caldwell herself died. . . . Mrs. Caldwell's letters speak in an intimate tone to her [dead] son Eliacim; she recalls incidents from their past life, sometimes embroidering them with her own fantasies. And she tells him of her more recent experiences, including love affairs. She had been unhappily married, and Eliacim was, she reveals, the fruit of a liaison with

"the man on the second floor who was always so helpful." (Sat R) Originally published in Spanish.

"An offbeat but compelling work of art which contains some of Cela's best writing. If there is a common thread running through the chapters, it is [Mrs. Caldwell's] increasing madness and the gradual revelation of a weird, castrating mother. The translation is excellent. Obviously the novel is not for the general reader, whoever he is; the book does belong in serious fiction collections." F. L. Cinquemani

Library J 93:1915 My 1 '68 100w

"The atmosphere of [this novel] is euphuistic and rarefied [and it is] avant-garde in technique. . . . In Chapter 173 [Mrs. Caldwell] and a mournfully playful Cela arrange the words of a sentence about icebergs in 24 different ways. . . . In spite of its occasional strange beauty, the novel finally seems just that irrelevant: a madwoman interminably addressing a dead person who was never very real to her in the first place. Primarily, Cela seems intent on reproducing through poetic means (metaphor and elaborate conceit, oblique allusion, and evocative repetition) the texture of Mrs. Caldwell's mind. . . . If it were some kind of material. . . . But obsessive madness tends to be circular, boring for any length of time." Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk R p46 My 26 '68 700w

New Yorker 44:109 Je 15 '68 200w

"Cela employs verbal associations in a surrealistic vein to portray the thoughts and hallucinations of a mind descending into insanity. . . . Mrs. Caldwell admits she could never take any interest in anything that was not her son. She creates her own private symbolism, illuminated by incipient madness, which allows her to express her deepest feelings and desires in a poetically veiled manner. . . . At times Mrs. Caldwell describes scenes that may lack roots in psychological reality, but that is in keeping with her character as a madwoman. . . . Somehow there is more of literature than of life in these pages. There is no real heart-beat here. It is as if an artistic experiment were being conducted before the reader, who is interested but uninvolved. Contributing to this feeling is the relative poverty of content, the episodic structure, the scanty characterization, and the fact that at the outset the author has removed all suspense. It may be because in this work Cela is writing outside his usual Spanish habitat that he does not show to best advantage." Francis Donahue

Sat R 51:65 Je 22 '68 700w

CÉLINE, LOUIS FERDINAND. Death on the installment plan; tr. from the French by Ralph Manheim. 592p $7.50 New directions

66-18692

The author's journey to the End of the Night (BRD 1934) "was a semiautobiographical story of a doctor, known in the book as Ferdinand Bardamu. . . . Death on the Installment Plan records an earlier stage in Ferdinand's life." (Time) For an earlier translation by John N. M. Marks see BRD 1938. Originally published as Mort à crédit.

Best Sell 50:383 Ja 15 '67 150w

"Céline's nocturnal and nihilistic view of life, though it spares nothing of human degradation, is, at times, pierced by rays of compassionate humor and poetry. The translator's attempt is 'to give an idea' of Céline's style: its explosiveness, Rabelaisian masculinity, use of living speech—in short, his 'language of hatred.' The effect is to make the existential predicament tangible and thereby intolerable, and Manheim has been most successful in this new and excellent translation. Céline is a 'must' for every library collection."

Choice 4:426 Je '67 180w

Reviewed by George Woodcock

Commonweal 85:628 Mr 3 '67 1000w

Reviewed by S. L. Simon

Library J 91:5427 N 1 '66 190w

Reviewed by Denis Donoghue

N Y Rev of Books 8:20 Je 15 '67 1050w

"In a prefatory note . . . Mr. Manheim makes the claim that the previous translator seemed shocked by Céline's style and tended to ennoble his language. Mr. Manheim has restored the three-dot breaks between sentences that threw French critics into a rage, and has pushed Céline's prose style closer to the language of the French underworld, that special form of argot Céline referred to ■ the 'language of hate.' In the new version, the language is sullen, vicious, broken-mouthed, served up in unending bursts of pistol fire, at times dangerously close in tone to late-thirties George Raft dialogue. . . . I have now read Céline translated by three separate gentlemen . . . and whether he is being 'ennobled' or offered down-and-dirty, there is only one voice, totally unharnessed, treating language barriers with contempt, barreling through them as though they did not exist." B. J. Friedman

N Y Times Bk R p1 F 5 '67 750w

"The new Manheim translation makes more accessible to U.S. readers the astonishing virtuosity of Céline's style, which broke out of the formal gavotte of French grammar and syntax—and used all the resources of thieves' argot, slum slang, and the shoptalk of pimps, prostitutes, bums and pickpockets—to demonstrate the power and quality of his love of life and hatred for those who must live it. Coprological images . . . crowded this doctor's mind. Still, his language no longer shocks; today's black comedians, Genet, Burroughs and Terry Southern, seem like mere comics compared to Céline, who has more colors than black. He makes the reader pick over acres of some vast garbage dump; yet he leaves him with the belief that the mutilated body of someone of great value lies buried in the stinking trash. In English, there has been no one like him since Swift, and in French, there has been no one like him at all."

Time 89:71 Ja 13 '67 1200w

CENDRARS, BLAISE. To the end of the world; tr. from the French by Alan Brown. 253p $5 Grove

68-21263

This novel "describes the last flamboyant years of one Thérèse Eglantine, a great French actress who is nearing eighty. The novel opens 'with . . . the aged actress making love with a tattooed legionary in ■ sordid hotel near Les Halles. Thérèse's best friend is shown to be a beautiful young woman who was born without legs, and whose servant is a tongueless American Negro. . . . [The action moves] from the rehearsal at which Thérèse strips naked and recites Villon's famous lament for vanished beauty, to her [funeral]. . . . This [novel] is set in the hysterical days following the Liberation of Paris and is based in part on director Louis Jouvet's famous 1946 production of Giraudoux's The Mad Woman of Chaillot [BRD 1949]." (Publisher's note) Originally published in French as Emmène-moi au Bout du Monde.

"Presumably, this novel was written out of humorous exasperation with Parisian theatrical bigwigs, but recognition of Mr. Cendrars' models (or victims) is not necessary for enjoyment of the exuberance, the fantastic inventions and exaggerations, the explosive absurdity of language which are the book's distinction. The heroine is a ragbag old actress with the temperament of Falstaff and the shape of a lath, and nothing much happens except a collision between an acting company and the police." Phoebe Adams

■ Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 80w

"The heroine is a 79-year-old actress of phenomenal energy and spirit; her background is existential and absurdist theatrical life plus a Brechtian under-world-police-legionnaire bombardment of events, a static interference with the steady neon glow of her fierce-funny impetus to realize her career as fully as possible before death finishes her and it. A stylized, raucous, harsh and happy story for most public and college library collections." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:2258 Je 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara
New Statesman 73:231 F 17 '67 230w

Reviewed by Peter Sourian
N Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 4 '68 900w

"[Not] a book for anyone whose ideal of old age is an Eventide Home, for life here goes on and on in a fierce crescendo, defying all thoughts of entropy. Death, when it comes, is just as dynamic. Cendrars is not a writer to tolerate abstraction and in this novel flesh and blood are taken as the measure of most things. . . . But his fantasy is tacked firmly in place on top of the material world, and various figures from real life—Proust, Helena Rubenstein, Jeanne Moreau and Cendrars himself are introduced for the purposes of comparison. A brief preface explains that this is actually a roman à clef and warns us, predictably, that the keys to it are the keys to falsehood. . . . [But] the party sometimes becomes rather private, and the fun somewhat wearing."

TLS p121 F 15 '67 550w

CEPEDA, ORLANDO. My ups and downs in baseball, by Orlando Cepeda with Charles Einstein. 191p $4.95 Putnam

B or 92 Baseball

68-15042

The winner of baseball's 1967 National League Most Valuable Player Award "attempts here to set straight the record of his playing career. Cepeda points up his career highlights, offers playing tips, and replies to charges that he faked injuries and would not hustle, that Cepeda and other non-white players lacked the pride and quick-thinking ability of whites (an accusation attributed to manager Alvin Dark), and that Cepeda failed to hit in the clutch." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Ray Robinson

Book World p12 My 12 '68 300w

"Interesting, if subjective, reporting."

Library J 93:2129 My 15 '68 100w

CHABOT, G., jt. auth. Urban geography. See Beaujeu-Garnier, J.

CHABRUN, JEAN FRANÇOIS, jt. auth. Auguste Rodin. See Descharnes, R.

CHADWICK, NORA K., jt. auth. The Celtic realms. See Dillon, M.

CHADWICK, ST JOHN. Newfoundland; island into province. 268p maps $9.50 Cambridge

971.8 Newfoundland—History [67-12206]

This "history of Newfoundland, from the establishment of settlement on its coasts through the attainment of responsible government and Dominion status, to its ultimate federation with Canada as the 10th province, [displays] the fullness of constitutional progress from colony through province." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Chadwick acted as an adviser to the National Convention that prepared the way for Newfoundland's shift from government by commission to provincial government. . . . Most of the volume is devoted to the events of the twentieth century. The contribution to the published history of Newfoundland lies in the final chapters concerning federation with Canada in 1949. Still, the discussion is a reflection of official documents rather than an analysis of the political forces involved, even though his 'illustrative' history is intended to explain Newfoundland to natives." Gerald Panting

Am Hist R 73:1266 Ap '68 400w

"[This is a] straightforward, documented, and scholarly account . . . [which] presents the panorama of British colonial constitutional development in microcosm. Briefly tracing the early colonial career Chadwick delves deeply into 19th-century growth of the island, its economic importance in fisheries, diplomatic problems, and the desires of Great Britain, France, and the U.S. The problems of the Labrador dispute, the rights on the fishing banks, Crown colony relationship, and the voluntary relinquishment of independent status for confederation with Canada are dealt with in clarity and depth. . . . Excellent appendices. Without doubt, this well documented study is the definitive historical work."

Choice 5:255 Ap '68 200w

TLS p1255 D 28 '67 800w

CHAFETZ, HENRY. The compleat swindler. See Hancock, R.

CHAGALL, MARC. The Jerusalem windows; text and notes by Jean Leymarie [tr. by Elaine Desautels]. rev ed 111p 24il 60col il $7.95 Braziller

748.5 Hadassah-University Medical Center, Jerusalem. Synagogue. Glass painting and staining 67-9083

"The original edition . . . [BRD 1963], is now a collector's item. The present edition . . . takes ■ through the visual metamorphoses of each window, from the first rough sketch through finished drawings, paint, colored paper and textile collages, to the finished window. Facing each full page reproduction is the appropriate Biblical text." (Publisher's note)

CHAGALL, MARC—Continued

"Besides the full-color reproduction of each of the twelve windows, there are included here full-color sections or details of each window. The symbolism is rich and the color magnificent. M. Leymarie's general introductory essay and the comment on each window are most helpful."

Best Sell 27:273 O 15 '67 160w

"Whoever spends an evening with this bright book will find that it creates its own Indian summer glow. Chagall's stained glass windows are among the few truly great works of religious art in our time."

Christian Century 84:1326 O 18 '67 50w

"The fly-leaf describes the present publication as a 'first revised edition'. 'Revision', means a great reduction in format, a reduction in size of several plates, a loss of quality in the reproductions, and the omission of some forty pages which included a description of Chagall's glass-painting technique and reproductions of various related drawings. Jean Leymarie's effusive text is unamended. The new make-up brings the final design opposite to the actual window. This is advantageous for study purposes but makes more obvious Chagall's limited understanding of the medium."

TLS p500 My 16 '68 140w

CHALIAPIN, FEODOR IVANOVICH. Chaliapin; an autobiography as told to Maxim Gorky; with supplementary correspondence and notes, tr. from the Russian; comp. and ed. by Nina Froud and James Hanley. 320p il $10 Stein & Day

782.1

67-25616

"The Gorky text comprises [over half the book. The remainder includes] prefaces and appendices: correspondence and notes; letters between Chaliapin and Gorky; and letters from both to others." (N Y Times Bk R) Chronology of Chaliapin's Opera Repertoire. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p11 S 1 '68 600w

Reviewed by John Beaufort
Christian Science Monitor p14 F 15 '68 550w

"[This translation] is of extraordinary quality, not only as a self-portrait of Rembrandtesque perception, but also as a dreadful account of imperial Russia, hopeless with poverty and alcohol. There is not a dull page in the autobiography. . . . This is a book for those who remember Chaliapin's singing . . . for historians who can study the clash of social, political and economic forces in two civilisations through the experience of an artist and a full man, and for those to whom personality means something very different from the shadows on the box."

Economist 226:51 Ja 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by P. D. Miller
Library J 93:1890 My 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Simon Karlinsky
Nation 206:704 My 27 '68 2400w

"A first look at the volume, and at the prefatory note by Nina Froud, stirred my reminiscent curiosity and made me reach to the high shelves for the two previous American publications of the singer's memoirs [Pages From My Life, BRD 1927, and Man and Mask, BRD 1932]. Mrs. Froud dismisses these earlier versions scornfully, but she herself does not, probably cannot, guide us through the maze of Chaliapin's revisions, contradictions, or even prevarications; she reckons lightly with them, and with the apparent crowd of Chaliapin's collaborators, editors and translators. . . . Clearly [this] has been an exhaustive labor by persons eminently qualified, perhaps the first ones to deal with Chaliapin as the monument that he is. It is interesting, in places fascinating. But it does not read like a text by Gorky. . . . The defect lies not in the translation, but in Chaliapin himself—a fountain of vagueness and confusion." Marcia Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 4 '68 1000w

New Yorker 44:127 Je 1 '68 200w

"[The book] though lightly touched occasionally by streaks of the genius of Chaliapin and that of Gorky, is incomplete as a portrait of the great singing actor and disorderly as narrative. . . . A wholly admirable feature . . .

is its illustrations, beginning with the frontispiece, a reproduction in color of a Golovin portrait of Chaliapin as Boris Godunov, Eighty-nine other pictures depict him in his roles at various stages of his career down to 1919, often with renowned contemporaries, including Gorky, Moskvina, Nemirovich-Danchenko, and Rachmaninoff. They, also include interesting examples of Chaliapin's own drawing and painting. . . . The great performing artist comes to life more in the pictures than in the text"

Herbert Weinstock

Sat R 51:28 Mr 2 '68 550w

TLS p107 F 1 '68 850w

CHALL, JEANNE S. Learning to read: the great debate; an inquiry into the science, art and ideology of old and new methods of teaching children to read, 1910-1965. 372p il $8.50 McGraw

372.4 Reading. Reading—Psychology 67-29197

The author is concerned with the need to change the methods and materials used to teach children to read. Following "analysis of experimental research, interviews with authors of various reading methods and materials, and visits to more than 300 classrooms in the United States and England . . . [she presents] evidence in favor of 'early stress on learning the code' [phonics] rather than the initial emphasis on sight words and their meaning, which is typical of the basal readers. . . . [The author then analyzes] not only the texts for children but also the directives for teachers. . . . [Her recommendations for improvement are to] change the method to include a beginning code-emphasis program; provide stories of interest to children; reevaluate grade levels of vocabulary and story content; develop new reading tests; and improve reading research." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Martin Mayer
Book World p7 Ap 14 '68 600w
Choice 5:386 My '68 170w

Reviewed by I. A. Richards
Harvard Ed R 38:357 spring '68 4000w

"This is a book educators concerned with reading instruction have needed for years. . . . More nearly a reference book than a text, it is based on secure research techniques and extensive study of the most basic aspects of reading instruction. Complete bibliographies of several kinds and a good index make it valuable for use in the library. Public libraries as well as academic libraries should include it in their collections since laymen can make use of it. . . . [It] will provide solutions that may enable educators and laymen to come to grips with problems in reading instruction." J. C. MacCampbell
Library J 93:184 Ja 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by Helen Featherstone
New Repub 159:26 Ag 31 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Jason Epstein
N Y Rev of Books 10:26 Je 6 '68 4100w

Reviewed by Lou LaBrant
Record 69:720 Ap '68 1250w

"[This study] indicates that the child who begins with systematic phonics . . . achieves early superiority in word recognition. . . . Since research points to the need for code emphasis in beginning reading, why do those responsible for teaching reading ignore the evidence? Dr. Chall answers by citing 'the influence of the prevailing climate of opinion' and the American educator's passion for consensus. It has become fashionable to stress meaning rather than mere sounding of letters, so we all do it. . . . [Moreover,] nationwide acceptance of the basal readers by school administrators is a commentary on their way of operating. Most adoptions result from salesmanship, not from analysis of content or from the lessons of research. . . . [This book is] aimed at teachers, administrators, curriculum directors, and their teachers in the colleges of education." Nancy Larrick
Sat R 51:63 Ja 20 '68 1450w

The CHALLENGE of development, theory and practice; a sourcebook; ed. by Richard J. Ward. 500p il maps $5.95; pa $3.95 Aldine pub. 338 Economic development. Underdeveloped areas 66-28315

"Articles making up this volume were selected from . . . papers delivered in 1963 at a United Nations conference on 'The Application of Science and Technology for the Benefit of Less Developed Areas.' . . . A third of the book is devoted to general planning models and to human resources factors in development.

The remaining two-thirds of the book . . . [ranges] from the role of plant genetics in food production to . . . essays on how to build a railroad, how to organize a textile industry, etc. . . . [The] intent of the editor was to provide a kind of miniature encyclopedia of concepts and case problems in applied development work suited to the needs of the pragmatic minded administrator." (Am Econ R)

"This collection is distinguished by the unusually wide range of subjects covered and the heavy emphasis on descriptive technology and case studies of new enterprises and social overhead projects. . . . [The section on] 'Developing Human Resources' is the most disappointing section of the volume in that it shows little recognition of the theoretical work being done on the economics of investment in public health, education, etc. . . . The case studies in parts three and four are written by specialists who are knowledgeable about the industry or project discussed, but engineering or industry data must be related to broader economic concepts if maximum benefits are to result. . . . The many articles on aspects of agricultural development . . . are generally well done. . . . Despite the limitations noted, this volume is worth having on one's shelf." Morton Paglin

Am Econ R 57:1332 D '67 1200w

"The selected papers primarily emphasize the technical problems found in a wide-ranging field of topics from development programming banks to irrigation systems and social institutions. In spite of this scope, however, the collection manages to avoid much of the contemporary debate on the subject of economic growth and development that can be found in such books of readings as [G. M.] Meier's Leading Issues in Development Economics. Some of the articles may be read with profit, but the volume on the whole fails to live up to the book's claim of being 'a comprehensive survey of the theoretical and practical problems of economic development.'"

Choice 4:1288 Ja '68 170w

J Pol Econ 75:908 D '67 210w

CHAMBERS, BRADFORD, ed. Chronicles of Negro protest; a background book for young people documenting the history of black power; comp. and ed. with a commentary by Bradford Chambers. 319p il $4.50; lib bdg $3.75 Parents mag. press

301.451 Negroes—History. Negroes—Civil rights. Negroes—Moral and social conditions 68-16998

"Forty-two documents relating to black protest appear in this book. . . . They range in content from early colonial documents on slavery, through the turbulent nineteenth century, down to the 'Riot Commission' Report of 1968." (Best Sell) Index.

"Some [of the documents] are given in full, the more important ones—some in a shortened form that does not dilute or distort their significance. . . . This forms valuable background material for study and is recommended for every library, although the book has been deliberately edited for young people. Available sources of the documents are listed."

Best Sell 28:194 Ag 1 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:295 N 22 '68 20w [YA]

"The subtitle of 'Chronicles of Negro Protest' is accurately descriptive. Mr. Chambers has prepared careful commentaries, principally historical, so that each of the documents in his anthology is put in the proper context and each focuses a light on the history of the American Negro. The compilation begins with Genesis. Chapter 9, and ends with an excerpt from the U.S. Riot Commission's report. Some of these documents are well known, some less so. . . . but many of the earlier documents by Negroes are unknown. They touch upon every aspect of the race problem . . . that Negroes struggle against today." Saunders Redding

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p5 My 5 '68 500w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT. Moth in a rag shop. 163p $4.95 Bobbs

68-27630

"Detective Hank Moody's primary concern here is with the stabbing of a female junkie, the discarded wife of an oil-company executive." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The rag shop of the title is the Ninth Precinct station of the New York Police. Lower East Side. [The author of this first novel] relies on the police procedural technique and a devious psychological plot, but [it is] an auspicious enough beginning, though not, as the jacket claims, in a class with Chandler or Hammett."

Best Sell 28:241 S 15 '68 70w

"One of the most difficult tasks a writer can set himself is that of capturing the atmosphere of a newly risen environment. . . . Chambers makes a brave attempt at providing a colorful bohemian East Village background, but the place—as new in its way as Brasilia—keeps slipping through his fingers. . . . The intended scheme of crime-and-punishment reads more like war-and-peace as the rather tired detective shifts from a mad round of unconnected crimes to the comparative tranquility of his talks with the artist." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p16 O 20 '68 190w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:4168 N 1 '68 90w

"The squalor and oppression of the Ninth Precinct form an effective backdrop for the author's unusually fine treatment of emotional dependence. Mr. Chambers's writing is more polished than his preoccupation with the now obsolete shock value of four-letter words would suggest." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 13 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:35 D 28 '68 40w

CHAMBERS WILLIAM NISBET, ed. The American party systems; stages of political development; ed. by William Nisbet Chambers and Walter Dean Burnham. 321p $6.76; pa $2.50 Oxford

329 Political parties

67-28029

"Historians and political scientists came together in April 1966 at a Conference on American Political Party Development at Washington University, St. Louis. This book resulted from that conference; five historians and five political scientists have contributed chapters on [cultural and socio-economic] . . . aspects of American parties considered in an historical perspective. Several chapters cover specific historical periods: the establishment of the first party system (the 1790's to roughly 1815); the second party system (the 1830's to the 1850's) the party system which existed from the Civil War to the Depression, and the contemporary period, from the Depression to date." (Choice) Index.

"An introductory essay by historian William N. Chambers outlines a theory of 'political development' à la Almond, LaPalombara, and Weiner, and speculates on such questions as whether parties are dependent or independent variables. Samuel P. Hays develops a community-society conceptual scheme, à la Tönnies and Merton, and Theodore J. Lowi uses a functional theory. In spite of the lack of agreement, or perhaps because of it, the book is of considerable importance to students of parties who would like to extend their horizons and relate parties to other parts of the political system. It is a worthy companion to LaPalombara and Weiner, Political Parties and Political Development [BRD 1967]."

Choice 5:554 Je '68 140w

"There is so much of worth here that all who are remotely interested in the development of American political parties had better peruse the volume, not only for the analysis it offers but also for its stimulation to further study and research. The value of this collection does not lie so much in the presentation of new material or new ideas; in general, each essay represents an extension of ideas already formulated and of work already undertaken and published by the respective authors. The great merit of the book is that the results of these labors have been brought together in a meaningful interdisciplinary synthesis, the success of which is a tribute both to the planners of the conference and its participants. . . . Students of American politics, historical or contemporary, would do well to read the book." R. W. Johansen

J Am Hist 55:108 Je '68 420w

"Some of the essays are simply a rehash of the individual author's earlier writing, but some surprises and new discussions do emerge. So-rauf, for example, recants his earlier position on functional analysis of American political parties. The developmental model encouraged him to view critically the assumptions of the functional model which stasiologists have applied so pervasively in recent years. The new model also encourages historian Samuel Hays to emphasize the 'community-society continuum' as an analytical tool. This is a welcome and helpful addition to the stasiological literature."

CHAMBERS, W. N.—Continued

Va Q R 44: cxxlii summer '68 150w

CHAMPION, LARRY S. Ben Jonson's 'dot-ages': a reconsideration of the late plays. 156p $6.50 Univ. of Ky. press

822 Jonson, Ben 67-29338

The author studies four plays—The Devil Is an Ass, The Staple of News, The New Inn, and The Magnetic Lady—in light of his claim "that what has been taken as a loss of intellectual capacity is actually Jonson's bitter satirization of the decadence in the popular theater." (Choice) Index.

"Champion restores to scholarly interest Jonson's work subsequent to his first folio. . . . The Devil Is an Ass and The Staple of News have long deserved such revitalization but the significance of The New Inn and The Magnetic Lady remains in question. The book validates for this neglected period the insights of Jonas Barish (Ben Jonson and the Language of Prose Comedy). The study does not incorporate the contemporary milieu. . . . Recommended for scholars of Jonson and of the decline of Renaissance drama."

Choice 5:796 S '68 200w

"Mr. Champion alludes to the theater without appearing to know very much about it, and his earnest argument, spattered with Jonsonian illustrations that are dully cerebral, make a book worthy enough to gain a nod from the dean of a graduate school, and as useful as a treatise designed to teach the reader to swim on top of a kitchen table. Jonson gets no useful hearing as a playwright partly because Mr. Champion in his study has no interest in the theater." James Sandoe

Library J 92:4158 N 15 '67 110w

CHAMPNEY, FREEMAN. Art & glory: the story of Elbert Hubbard. 248p il $5.95 Crown B or 92 Hubbard, Elbert 68-20472

A biography of the author of A Message to Garcia and founder of the Roycroft shops, who was associated with the arts-and-crafts movement in the period 1890 to 1910. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. K. Bortorff

Library J 93:1471 Ap 1 '68 130w

"A miscellanist responsible for some 7,000,000 printed words, a complex mixture of iconoclast, homely philosopher, charlatan and front man for Big Business, Hubbard was an authentic celebrity when he went down with the Lusitania in 1915. . . . Despite the streak of chicanery in Hubbard, which Mr. Champney deals with fully and objectively, the author-craftsman was, he argues, a figure of genuine significance. . . . In slangy, racy vernacular an outrageous metaphor, the sage of East Aurora gave voice to social protest, gibbed at preachers and professors—and shook up the self-educated, of whom he was a conspicuous example. . . . It seems unlikely that this careful biography will be superseded, or that we will have a more entertaining account of the American as maverick intellectual." Gerald Carson

N Y Times Bk R p10 S 8 '68 750w

CHANDLER, MAURICE. Ceramics in the modern world; man's first technology comes of age. 192p il col il $5.95; pa $2.45 Doubleday 666 Pottery 67-10554

In this account of the development of ceramics the author discusses "chemical composition, refractory operations, firing, glazing and decorating techniques." (Library J)

"An exceptionally well written and well illustrated book. . . . Every high school library should have a copy. . . . Unlike so many books of this kind, this one is nontechnical, and it covers the areas of traditional and modern ceramics. A well deserved emphasis has been placed on the recent scientific developments in the traditional ceramics. . . . [Three areas] have not been included: glass, cement, and porcelain enamel."

Choice 5:803 S '68 140w

"[The author handles the technology] with scientific authority. . . . To illustrate his text he has selected a great number of excellent black-and-white and color photographs and descriptive graphics. The book is highly recommended for general reading, for reference and study." Marian Veath

Library J 93:2676 J1 '68 170w

CHANIN, JOHN. Kicking to win. See Summerall, P.

CHAPIN, HENRY. The search for Atlantis. 105p il maps $3.50 Crowell-Collier press 913 Atlantis—Juvenile literature 68-12715

"Assuming that the legendary Atlantis did exist, the author expounds the two most likely sites: the destroyed island of Thera in the Aegean and the kingdom of Tartessos on the Atlantic coast of Spain. He supplements contemporary scientific views toward these two possibilities with material on the cultural and social mores of these areas and their peoples. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:172 J1 15 '68 90w

"A simple, brief discussion of the investigating still going on to determine the location of a land long said to be submerged beneath water. . . . Most interesting is the description of the methods now being used to supplement legends found in literature, and artifacts discovered by archaeologists. The studies of geologists, meteorologists, seismologists, and oceanographers are currently adding their evidence in an attempt to clarify what actually happened at the dawn of man's history in the Mediterranean world. An account to whet the curiosity of a young lover of archaeology." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:438 Ag '68 130w

"This broad overview of life during the second millennium B.C. shows that conditions were conducive to the existence of a real Atlantis. Although the text is straightforward exposition, and lacks the vitality and excitement that properly belong to a description of an archaeological search, it will serve as a valuable adjunct to teachers and readers interested in prehistory." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 93:2119 My 15 '68 120w

CHAPMAN, A. H. Put-offs and come-ons; psychological maneuvers and stratagems. 258p $5.95 Putnam

158 Human relations

68-20948

"The emotional forces which push people apart, such as anger and sexual frigidity, are put-offs, says Dr. Chapman, a Kansas City psychiatrist, and those forces which bring them harmoniously together are come-ons. Maneuvers and stratagems are the behavioral patterns people and social groups employ to achieve their ends. . . . He illustrates his theories with a variety of case histories from his . . . practice. [He includes] discussions about sex, normal and abnormal; suicide; the stratagems of mothers and fathers with children; marriage; alcoholism; and even the maneuvers and stratagems which flourish within psychiatric treatment on the instigation of patient or doctor. In the final chapter he discusses the same forces at work within social groups." (Library J)

Reviewed by T. O'Hara

Best Sell 28:163 J1 15 '68 550w

"While Dr. Chapman has used [Eric] Berne's book [Games People Play, BRD 1966] as his model, he has written a work that is much broader in scope and far more penetrating. . . . That the value of a psychological inquiry of the type made by Dr. Chapman may be limited to our intimate affairs, does not prevent the author from applying his mind and method to public issues as well. He describes the motives and methods of a child's temper tantrum, and then later in the book uses the same analysis to explain our most painful civil disorder, the race riot, which becomes a mass tantrum. . . . Dr. Chapman conveys an interesting picture of human nature. Oddly enough, it is very much like the 'brutish man' of Thomas Hobbes. Indeed, the qualities which the English philosopher attributed to man—fear, envy, lust for power—are the very same qualities that motivate Dr. Chapman's strategists. . . . The civilized world hounded Hobbes, day and night, for his cynicism; now we may well make a best seller out of this cheerful little book, which tells us that we are not only wretched but stupid besides." Richard Karp

Book World p5 J1 7 '68 800w

"Aimed at the Games People Play market, this book has more immediate appeal than that title because it is slicker and covers only surface games, skipping the variations and complexities of Berne's book. . . . Though only touching on the intricacies of interpersonal relationships, this book may well alert the unwary young adult involved in such games; it's a magnetic title and a potential circulator on the self-help shelf." Carol Tefft

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Allen Angoff

Library J 93:2670 J1 '68 210w

CHAPMAN, FRANK M. Frank M. Chapman in Florida; his journals & letters; comp. & ed. by Elizabeth S. Austin. 228p il $7.95 Univ. of Fla. press

574.9 Natural history—Florida 66-30436

"The wife of the curator in ornithology of the Florida State Museum has edited the papers of the eminent ornithologist Frank M. Chapman (1864-1945) that were presented to the museum by the American Museum of Natural History, where Chapman was curator from 1908 until 1942. The miscellany includes Chapman's journals written in Florida from 1886 to 1934; an account of the yellow fever epidemic of 1888; Chapman's letters to Joel Allen, his superior at the museum; letters to him from T. Gilbert Pearson and William Brewster; his journal of the first ornithological exploration of the Suwanee River; a list of Chapman's writings and Oliver L. Austin's list of the birds of the Gainesville region." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Two groups of bird students will be attracted by this slight book: those who share Austin's views—just this side of idolatry—of Chapman, and those interested in Chapman's December-April notes of birds and fauna in Florida, mostly around Gainesville (1886-1912). . . . Most valuable for Oliver L. Austin, Jr.'s comparison of Gainesville bird life today with Chapman's observations and a bibliography of Chapman's writings. . . . Sketchy index. . . . [Chapman] was too good a writer to have approved publication of these raw notes, newspaper clippings, and inept biography for the general public."

Choice 4:1264 Ja '68 140w

"The book is interesting for descriptions of Florida wild life and for its insights into Chapman's life. It will be needed in ornithologic collections as well as in Florida libraries, but not in general ones, especially if they have a copy of Chapman's Autobiography of a Bird-Lover [BRD 1933]." Elizabeth Thalmann

Library J 92:2148 Je 1 '67 170w

"My immediate discovery when reading Mrs. Austin's resurrection of the young Chapman's jottings, . . . was that here we find a main source of the Handbook [of Birds of Eastern North America, BRD 1932], not only of its ornithological substance but even of the very phrases . . . that were to be organized within a decade into a work that set a wholly new standard. . . . The whole picture of then relatively primitive Florida in this book is one of the allure and charm of a near-tropical environment that was quite exotic to most contemporary Americans. It reflects also the history of slowly changing public sentiment regarding natural resources (too little and too late in many instances). . . . [Chapman's] association with colleagues, either younger or older than he, are made delightfully available. . . . Possibly the book may not prove as thoroughly nostalgic to every reader as it has to me. But naturalists in general will recognize it as a precious human and scientific document rescued from oblivion."

R. C. Murphy

Natur Hist 77:72 F '68 600w

CHAPMAN, GERALD W. Edmund Burke: the practical imagination. 350p $5.95 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Burke, Edmund

67-17305

"I have divided chapters to correspond with the five great issues or crises of [Burke's] career—America, Ireland, Constitutional Reform, France and India—not for the sake of geographical neatness, but because these were the great political crises in his lifetime. . . . I have made an interpretive summary and analysis of his actual thinking about each crisis. . . . My method is heavily 'quotative'. . . . [The book is] a hybrid of biography and history of ideas."

. . . In Chapter I, and off and on throughout the book, I have discussed some of the background from which Burke's thought emerged." (Foreword) Chronology of events in the life of Burke. Bibliography. Index.

"Had Chapman's Burke been published ten years earlier, when it appears to have been completed, it might have had a salutary effect on the new image of Burke. Perhaps it still may, in spite of a major scholarly deficiency that makes it now appear as an unconscious anachronism. Nowhere . . . does Chapman hint that he is aware of, much less has used, any of the abundant Burkean studies of the past decade. . . . There is much to be said for independence, even perhaps a certain isolation from contemporary confusion, in the critic if not in the historian. A simple statement in the preface, however, might have acknowledged this as a book of 1957, not 1967. The reader then would at once see it as, in effect, a reprint, he would adjust his expectations accordingly, and no doubt he would be pleased." D. C. Bryant

Am Hist R 73:1528 Je '68 500w

"Each of five tightly argued chapters surveys the development of Burke's opinion on one of the great issues, or crises, with which he dealt. . . . The 'ideo-biography' which results is an austere, but persuasive, interpretation not only of the views of the master, but of their impact. The useful bibliography and very helpful notes introduce other interpretations, so that an interested student can here find a well defined thesis—that Burke's thinking typifies the union of 'perhaps the two greatest achievements of English culture to date—its literary imagination, and its success in practical politics'—and a critique of much recent work on Burke."

Choice 5:389 My '68 200w

"It is significant that Mr. Chapman is himself a professor of English literature, and his rounded and thoughtful reinterpretation of Burke is auspicious for literary studies. . . . One of the charms of Burke is that, since he took so much into consideration, we can quickly find whatever we wish, provided we separate it from the context. Mr. Chapman's scrupulously honest study does not use Burke in this way. He is constantly aware of Burke's thought developing in its context, and he aims for no special doctrine except what emerges from Burke's total example."

TLS p232 Mr 7 '68 1800w

CHAPMAN, JOHN D., ed. Oxford regional economic atlas: United States & Canada. See Oxford regional economic atlas: United States & Canada

CHAPMAN, WALKER. The golden dream: seekers of El Dorado. 437p il maps $10 Bobbs 980 El Dorado. America—Discovery and exploration. South America—Description and travel 66-30498

This is the story of the pursuit of El Dorado and conquest of South America by European explorers during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Bibliography.

"[Chapman] offers contemporary readers a summarized and sensational story of European lust for South American gold and silver. It is obviously intended for popular appeal. Apparently founded upon primary and, clearly, many secondary sources, this work frequently seems somewhat unscholarly. . . . Nevertheless, [it] gives readers a very graphic account of human credulity and greed in the colonization of the Spanish Main. The exploits of British, German, and Spanish explorers seem particularly realistic in Chapman's colonial setting of the 16th and 17th centuries. His swashbuckling approach to the international struggle for America should attract a large audience as well as abundant applause. Serious students of history, however, will probably prefer to read the older and established studies of South American conquest."

Choice 4:1168 D '67 130w

"This book moves at a fast pace. . . . It has value as a general historical survey of the South American conquest, even though the coverage of the material often is too swift to be meaningful to readers not well informed on the history of South America. Although it is particularly suited to the needs of public libraries, its bibliography may make it appropriate for academic libraries as well." A. D. Trejo

Library J 92:1154 Mr 15 '67 210w

CHAPMAN, WALKER. The search for El Dorado. 272p il maps $4.95 Bobbs 980 America—Discovery and exploration. Explorers. El Dorado 67-23036

"While most of the book deals with the many attempts made during the sixteenth century to discover the golden kingdom, it first treats of previous Spanish exploration of the New World, showing how the legend of El Dorado came to inspire men, and carries the story up to the death of the myth in the nineteenth century." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index.

"The pursuit of the myth of El Dorado makes an interesting book and the various episodes will appeal to young readers, as well as awaken in them the exploration of many regions in South America. . . . The volume will be a welcome introduction to background studies of South America."

Best Sell 27:429 F 1 '68 90w [YA]
Horn Bk 43:762 D '67 140w

"The story of [the explorers'] travels as told by Mr. Chapman is absorbingly vivid. Each adventure is more fantastic than its predecessor and even Walter Raleigh figures in the search. An excellent bibliography is included." E. M. Crawford

Library J 93:302 Ja 15 '68 150w

CHAPMAN, WALKER. For other books by this author, see Silverberg, R.

CHARLES-ROUX, EDMONDE. To forget Palermo; tr. by Helen Eustis. 304p $5.95 Delacorte press

68-10376

"Gianna Merl, travel writer for one of America's most popular women's fashion magazines, is haunted by her memories of Sicily, . . . and her own youthful and tragic love affair there. She is appalled by the emotionally impoverished landscape of New York. . . . Then she discovers Mulberry Street, the heart of New York's Italian community. American-born Rocco Bonavia, the local political leader, and his neighbors seem to have been transplanted intact from the old country. This renewed contact with her past only sharpens Gianna's nostalgia, which she communicates to the successful but strangely restless Rocco, who becomes the victim of fateful and violent consequences." (Publisher's note) First published in French as Oublier Palerme.

Reviewed by Toby Stein
America 119:45 Jl 20 '68 400w

Reviewed by L. G. Crane
Best Sell 28:140 Jl 1 '68 500w

"[This] is yet another exercise on a theme one would have thought worn to a nubbin: Old Europe is a civilized continent and Europeans are on the side of life; America is a wilderness inhabited by gruesome automata. It is not only rich old women who suffer by contrast with their European counterparts. . . . There is of course no use losing one's temper over this sort of rubbish. We have heard it too often and from better writers. . . . What there is of story hangs on improbabilities, and there are a number of lines that lead, as it turns out, nowhere. . . . Like many foreign writers, Mlle. Charles-Roux has a tin ear for American conversation in general (her Sicilians, on the other hand, talk in fake-Italian hyperbole) and none at all for the special argot of fashion. Not that it matters. This is an almost pointless fable, concocted of half-truths and sentimentality. It has nothing to say about either world that hasn't been said better by the natives." Eleanor Perenyi
Book World p5 My 26 '68 900w

"The stories of New York and Sicily are interwoven, back and forth, vital and exciting and sometimes satirically funny, and come to a strange and violent climax. . . . The author's pictures of fashion-editorial and Park Avenue life in New York are not apt to make friends for her in those circles but they provide good fun for anybody else."

Harper 236:93 Je '68 200w

"Nothing confirms the horrid suspicion that France's most important literary prize is now only a series of wrong decisions, annually made with immense pomposity by dull old men, as does this first novel by Edmonde Charles-Roux, a former editor of French Vogue—who, regrettably, writes like one. 'To Forget Palermo' won the Prix Goncourt in 1966. . . . Perhaps many Francophiles will decide that it is indeed what its golden orange jacket proclaims—an 'immense, tender and tragic love story,' because some venerable Parisian experts settled for it. That is rubbish. It is a sentimental book, written by an amateur whose talent is for schoolgirl imagery, not much more." Gloria Emerson

N Y Times Bk R p4 Jl 14 '68 800w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Easton
Sat R 51:51 Je 8 '68 550w

CHARMET, RAYMOND. The museums of Paris [tr. from the Italian by James Brockway]. (Great galleries ser) 152p il col il $8.95 Meredith

703.4 Paris—Galleries and museums

68-31929

"Omitting the Louvre, subject of two earlier volumes in this series, [this book] . . . gives brief sketches of about 30 art museums or museums which include works of art. Among them are such major ones as the Musée de l'Impressionisme, Musée National d'Art Moderne, Musée de Cluny, Musée Rodin, Musée Jacquemart-André, Musée de l'Armée, and some smaller ones, such as the Musée Delacroix, Henner, Moreau, and Victor Hugo. Selected major works are shown in illustration." (Library J) Index.

"The color plates are superb and one wishes all the plates were in the same carefully registered color. For high school libraries and others of higher level this should be a budgeted acquisition. The introduction and running text is adequate and not overwhelming."

Best Sell 27:468 Mr 1 '68 200w

"The highly glazed full-page color illustrations . . . do not appeal to me. . . . Written for the general reader, [this] will prove helpful in general collections of college and public libraries." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:2473 Je 15 '68 130w

CHARPENTRAT, PIERRE. Living architecture; baroque, Italy and central Europe; phot. by Peter Heman; pref. by Hans Scharoun [English tr: Carol Brown]. 192p il maps $7.95 Grosset

720.9 Architecture, Baroque 67-20408

The author "examines the most important Baroque buildings produced in Italy, Germany, and Central Europe from 1600-1800. . . . The major emphasis is on the structural principles of the buildings examined, almost all of which are ecclesiastical." (Choice)

"[This volume] relies on the most overpublicized examples of ecclesiastic baroque, and many plans and elevations directly out of Hans Koepff's Baukunst in Fünf Jahrtausenden . . . to illustrate a highly informed and well-written commentary. . . . Charpentrat's specialty is obviously German Baroque of the 18th century. He presents all the well-known examples . . . in great detail and with fluid word pictures. The great landscaping revolution, the new relationship of house elevations to city plazas and streets, and the pan-European phenomenon of a Baroque residential architecture that reshaped the cities, remain unmentioned. . . . Perhaps there should be a moratorium on Baroque publications. No other era so relied on the fourth dimension of movement through space. Photography, as the very excellent photos of Peter Heman prove, must remain a static recording device which somehow makes Baroque boring." Sibyl Moholy-Nagy

Arch Forum 128:81 My '68 650w

"Little distinction is made between Baroque and Rococo styles. . . . The text is much better when concerned with buildings outside Italy. Inaccuracies concerning Roman Baroque seem to confirm Charpentrat's sympathy for the North. The text is marred by many misprints. This is unfortunate since the plates are of very good quality. Indeed, the main value of the book lies in the plates and the excellent plans and elevations. Recommended especially for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:614 Jl '68 100w

THE CHAS. ADDAMS Mother Goose; il. by Charles Addams. unp $4.95; to libs & schools $4.43 Harper

398.8 Nursery rhymes

67-24372

The rhymes are traditional Mother Goose, the illustrations are pure Charles Addams "from the farmer's wife, seen sullenly cutting off the tails of those three blind mice with an electric knife, to Little Miss Muffet, scared half out of her mind by the size and leering grotesqueness of that big spider who sat down beside her." (Book World) "Grade four and up." (Library J)

"Who but Charles Addams would take the old lady and turn her into a ghoulish cauldron of evil derring-do? Addams, master New Yorker cartoonist and black-humor prankster par excellence, has thrown tradition to the winds and taken matters into his own bedeviled hands, transforming those endearing Mother Goose characters into gleefully wicked and outrageous beings. . . . In his macabre, funny way, he has given Mother Goose a dimension even she would shudder at—but only for a moment, because the wit and candor of it all are too irresistible and insanely comic to take exception to. Addams' style and originality make his tampering with tradition completely and hilariously acceptable. And I suspect grownups will take to The Chas. Addams Mother Goose with as much alacrity as the little ones. The appearance of a wild, crazy, mixed-up Mother Goose is, after all, not an everyday occurrence." John Gruen

Book World pt 2. p2 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 500w

"Of course, there will be those who will object to such macabre interpretations as that of 'Pease Porridge Hot' (in a witch's cauldron), 'Dr. Fell' (a fiendish doctor turning on a Rube Goldbergish array of switches while a strapped-down patient looks on in alarm) or 'Boys and Girls Come Out to Play' (in a cemetery). The rhymes are untouched, but the illustrations are good gruesome fun for adults and young sophisticates. The publisher's 'all ages' designation, however, might well exclude the traditional Mother Goose audience of kindergarten to third grade as it is doubtful that they would appreciate the visual incongruities that are the basis for this novelty approach to the nursery rhyme." Della Thomas

Library J 92:4615 D 15 '67 170w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 30w [YA]

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 74:602 N 3 '67 30w

Reviewed by G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 29 '67 120w

CHASE, STUART. The most probable world.
239p $5.95 Harper

901.94 Civilization, Modern 67-28803

The author sets forth his "view of the achievements, hazards, and forces shaping the world of the 21st Century. . . . [Mr. Chase has] taken 10 major trends to discuss. These are total technology, population, living space, megalopolis, energy, the mixed economy, automation, the arms race, nationalism, and one world. In some way each of these presents a critical challenge to human wisdom and skill, yet in most of them also lies great hope for man's progress." (Christian Science Monitor) Bibliography.

Reviewed by A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 27:415 F 1 '68 550w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p14 F 15 '68 350w

"In this tour de force Stuart Chase, social science popularizer extraordinaire, has given us another of his lucid, readable, informative, provocative discourses. With incisive organizational and editorial skill he achieves the seemingly impossible as he traces the growth of technology and applied science from Galileo to the present and of economic and other social sciences from Ricardo to Galbraith. What could have been amorphous is solid, structured, and logical and sets the strong foundations for Chase's extrapolations and predictions. . . . Chase [says] if we do not destroy ourselves in nuclear wars we have and will create the social and scientific tools to deal with overpopulation, urban degeneration, air and water pollution, and all the concomitant malfunctions of the emergent society. Urgently, ardently recommended for general, high school, and college collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 92:4516 D 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:894 F 15 '68 70w [YA]

"The world Stuart Chase writes about is the one that most probably will evolve (if any evolves). . . . As his generous footnotes and appended reading list attest, Mr. Chase has synthesized a formidable amount of material in producing this brisk survey. As usual his vision is as lucid as his prose. A realist, he views the coming decades with a qualified optimism. It all depends on the if's."

N Y Times Bk R p41 My 5 '68 210w

CHASIN, HELEN. Coming close, and other poems; foreword by Dudley Fitts. 54p $4.50; pa $1.45 Yale univ. press

811

68-13900

A collection of poetry by "this year's winner of the Yale Series of Younger Poets competition." (Sat R)

"When [the poet] addresses herself to supermarkets and washing machines I find her delightful, highly perceptive, and right at home. She is at her best with subjects of home, children, childbirth, love, and so on. . . . I admit to bias, and think women, certainly not a few men, will enjoy [her book]." Bill Katz

Library J 93:1905 My 1 '68 90w

"[This] book contains too many flat and unconvincing poems and, far too frequently, a kind of sophisticated first-date insistence on cleverness of language, a mode which might ungenerously be described as Dormitory Mandarin. . . . [It] is not a compelling book. Still in all, there is in several poems a tentative moving out into the mind and body of love, and this is where I think Miss Chasin's most hopeful talent lies. . . . At times the jumps of her mind give us glimpses of something more than the obvious, other than the odd. How deep the thrust may eventually go one cannot say." Michael Goldman

N Y Times Bk R p66 D 8 '68 450w

"[This book] is full of pleasant, good writing, poems that come close but seem ultimately trivial. They are exercises by a talented poet preparing for bigger challenges." Judson Jerome

Sat R 51:34 Je 1 '68 240w

"Intoxication with odd images—a bristly crust of phrases—gives most of the poems an original and lively texture. But [the] dazzling word-play rarely adds up to more than a cleverness of surface. It is difficult to feel—to barely believe—the truth of experience most of [these] poems assert. For my taste, Miss Chasin's writing is too unrelievedly mannered, too unnatural in rhythm and syntax . . . too earnestly preoccupied with exploiting off-key nuances, irregularities of sound and image, to be vividly expressive. . . . [Her] best writing is to be found in the least self-absorbed poems, the ones in which she extends her scope outward to comment ironically on the contemporary scene: 'Alabama, 1964,' 'The Hippies of Harvard Square,' 'Napalm.'" Lawrence Lieberman

Yale 58:143 O '68 260w

CHASTEL, ANDRÉ. The crisis of the Renaissance, 1520-1600 [tr. from the French by Peter Price]. (Art ideas hist) 217p il col il col pl $21.50 Skira

709.03 Art, Renaissance. Sixteenth century 68-20498

"Chastel, professor at the Sorbonne . . . here discusses the European art of the 16th Century, the period of Mannerism. He sets the art of this period—including architecture and garden art, painting, sculpture, graphic and applied art, and the ephemeral art of pageants—against the background of politics, social conditions, literature, religion, and philosophy." (Library J) Index of names.

"The fifth of the projected ten volumes of the series Arts, Ideas, History, which the Swiss firm of Skira is producing with its usual unparalleled excellence, is concerned with the tensions which marked the end of the Renaissance in Europe, tensions which concerned the Reformation and its Counter-Reformation. . . . [The text is] translated with admirable ease . . . [and is divided] into four major divisions. . . . Image and Speech, Unity of the Divided West, Naturalism and Symbolism, Pageantry, Court Art and the Marvelous. The text is illustrated, or better illuminated, by 60 tipped-in color plates, all in superb reproduction, and by as many black-and-white plates, mostly in fold-out four-page displays."

Best Sell 28:151 Jl 1 '68 230w

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 60w

CHASTEL, ANDRÉ—Continued

"[Chastel] weaves into a stimulating presentation the often contradictory characteristics of the art of . . . the period from the Sacco di Roma to the Counter-Reformation. He shows the creations of the age . . . as the continuation of the revolution begun by the creators of the Renaissance. He discusses the great trends rather than the individual artists in this book which is perhaps more a social history than a history of ideas. The colored illustrations are well selected and of high quality although the black-and-white ones are less satisfactory. There is no bibliography. . . . The book is highly recommended for the larger public, college, and research libraries." J. L. Dewton
Library J 93:2849 Ag '68 250w

Reviewed by Rackstraw Downes
N Y Times Bk R p96 D 1 '68 70w
Va Q R 44:[clxxvii] autumn '68 130w

CHATMAN, SEYMOUR, ed. Essays on the language of literature; ed. by Seymour Chatman [and] Samuel R. Levin. 450p $7.50 Houghton 420 Language and languages. English language. Literature—History and criticism 67-920

The editors' purpose in this collection of papers "is to 'reconcile' linguistics and literary studies: to 'repair a rift' that has widened steadily since both linguistics and literary criticism divorced themselves from the older philological tradition. The essays are mostly either by linguists on literary subjects . . . or by literary critics with a linguistic interest, . . . but there are also essays . . . trying to embrace both disciplines. . . . The essays are clustered around the topics: Sound Texture, Metrics, Grammar, Style and Stylistics, and Literary Form and Meaning." [There are] introductions to each section." (Choice)

"No bibliography or index. Although the overall impact of this anthology may lack either the hybrid vigor or the shower of sparks one hopes for from a conjunction of disciplines, yet the material is well selected and essential for further progress in this direction. For every college library."

Choice 4:812 O '67 200w

"Although the book contains some early articles, such as O. Jespersen's 'Notes on Metre' (1900), the emphasis is on the highly productive 1950's and 1960's. . . . Aestheticians will be interested mainly in the essays in the last two sections, which include J. Miles on eras in English verse, M. Beardsley on the language of literature, I. A. Richards on poetic process, M. Croll on baroque style, and J. C. Ranson on the need for 'an ontological critic.' Two recent essays by M. Riffaterre express, in a somewhat extreme form, the goals which some linguistically oriented investigators wish to achieve. . . . That a linguistic orientation can be extremely fruitful is shown by R. Ohmann's 'Prolegomena to the Analysis of Prose Style.'" D. G. Halliburton

J Aesthetics 26:542 summer '68 700w

CHAUVIN, REMY. Animal societies; from the bee to the gorilla; tr. by George Ordish. 285p il pl $6.50 Hill & Wang
591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior 68-14791

A professor "of Psycho-Physiology and Behavioural Science in the University of Strasbourg . . . [presents this] comparative study of animal behaviour. . . . After a detailed account of the organization of the hive the author discusses modes of communication, the dance, the transmission of information concerning the location of food and its collection, together with exchange of information after swarming. . . . The second part of the book moves into the field of vertebrates [covering bird and mammal behavior]. . . . Modes of recognition are discussed, family life, the 'pecking order' or hierarchy, together with means of communication within a species and also between different species. . . . The book concludes with a section on the world of primates and of the relationship of human society to animal society." (TLS) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in French in 1963.

"Several recent writers have emphasized the similarities between animal and man—[R.] Ardrey made gay leaps from the 'territoriality' of slime moulds to that of man [in The Territorial Imperative, BRD 1966], while Desmond Morris had racy fun with The Naked Ape [BRD 1968], and [K.] Lorenz made cross-phyletic comparisons [in On Aggression, BRD 1966] which led him to a solution to man's aggression bizarrely reminiscent of the playing fields of Eton. But Chauvin is a biologist who takes a more balanced view. . . . His refusal to draw false parallels only makes his book the more fascinating. This is especially the case when he is writing about the social insects. This is his own specialist field, and he writes with authority, accuracy, humility and, above all, with wonder. . . . He is less at home with the vertebrates." R. H. Hinde

Book World p16 N 3 '68 850w

"[This] study of animal relationships is fascinating; it is a nice blend of science and story that is instructive and a delight to read. Recommended for all natural history collections." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 93:4157 N 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by J. Z. Young
N Y Rev of Books 11:37 N 21 '68 290w

"The photographs and shadowless line drawings are delightful and instructive elucidations of the text, and the diagrams are clear and helpful. . . . Here is a look at social animals through eyes that are delighted though unsentimental, sympathetic though informed. . . . [in a] very graceful translation." H. C. Gardner
N Y Times Bk R p32 N 24 '68 280w

"The account of bird song, distress and alarm calls, vocal exchange between parents and offspring are among the themes which make fascinating reading. . . . The volume is well illustrated and is written with charm and a pleasing degree of informality. It illustrates comparative relationships in animal societies and emphasizes the high organization of the very primitive members of the animal kingdom. . . . The author stresses the need for comparative thinking among scientists if we are to arrive at a greater understanding of life on this planet."

TLS p682 Je 27 '68 800w

CHEKHOV, ANTON. The island; a journey to Sakhalin; tr. by Luba and Michael Terpak; with an introd. by Robert Payne. 374p $6.95 Washington sq. press

915.7 Sakhalin. Penal colonies 67-10299

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p6 My 26 '68 900w
Choice 5:1314 D '68 190w

Reviewed by Irving Howe
Harper 236:69 Ja '68 1300w

Reviewed by S. E. Hyman
New Yorker 43:113 F 10 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Michael Futrell
Pacific Affairs 44:146 spring '68 400w

CH'ÊN, HSI-ÊN. See Chen, T. H. E.

CHEN, LUNG-CHU. Formosa, China, and the United Nations; Formosa in the world community [by] Lung-chu Chen [and] Harold D. Lasswell. 428p $8.95 St Martins

327.51 Taiwan. U.S.—Foreign relations—China (People's Republic of China), China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—U.S. 67-25577

This "is coauthored by a young Taiwanese jurist, . . . and [the] American political scientist. In addressing themselves jointly to the issue of China's participation in the U.N., they propose 'one China, one Formosa' as its solution. They advocate that Peking be given the China seat and that Formosa be granted membership as a new state on the assumption that the Formosans as well as the Chinese mainlanders in Taiwan will by a U.N. supervised plebiscite choose independence. Chen and Lasswell then set out to apply the Lasswellian concepts of world political process and nation-building to Formosa in terms of its internal and external structural and functional development." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is explosively controversial. . . . [Its logical argumentation] is most persuasive, although its organization and supporting evidence leave much to be desired. . . . Perhaps the most original and valuable portion of the book deals with the authors' blueprint for a Formosan national polity after independence. Despite the air of unreality pervading these sections, the concrete suggestions for nation-building are fascinating to any student of developing nations. . . . The general reader will find [the book] both informative and stimulating, but those familiar with the Formosan problem may wish for a tighter, less repetitive, and more original presentation of the authors' case." Douglas Mendel

Am Pol Sci 62:673 Je '68 600w

"This is a unique attempt to deal with Asian materials. On paper, at least, the proposal looks rational, reasonable, and responsible; no one can tell how it would work. Essential reading for students of world politics and nation building. Appendix contains some basic statistical and empirical data."
Choice 5:680 JI '68 120w

"[The 'one China, one Formosa'] suggestion is well argued, but this reviewer feels that the authors provide enough evidence to undo their thesis. . . . Even they admit that the Formosan independence movement lost its top leaders in the riots of 1947 and that fragments of it are scattered in major cities throughout the world. In addition, what is to prevent Chiang Kai-shek's son from ruling the island in the same way as his father, or else making a deal with Communists, as already rumored. Unfortunately, the authors do not come to grips with these questions." L. H. Madaras
Library J 93:194 Ja 15 '68 230w

Reviewed by L. C. Green
Pacific Affairs 41:269 summer '68 750w

CHEN, NAI-RUENN. Chinese economic statistics; a handbook for mainland China [a monograph of the Com. on the economy of China of the Social science res. council]. 539p $15 Aldine pub.

315.1 China (People's Republic of China)—Statistics 66-15200

This "volume covers eleven areas of the economy [in the 1950's], ranging from area and population, through various sectors, as national income, to living standards and employment. It is divided into two parallel parts: the explanatory text and the 484 statistical tables." (Ann Am Acad)

"[This] is a major aid to students of the Chinese economy in particular and of economic organization and development in general, to be referred to rather than to be read. Compiled and computed from Chinese Communist publications, the statistics and the description of their conceptual basis present a most useful handbook, if used with great caution, for putting important economic phenomena of Chinese society in a quantitative context. . . . The impediments of gathering data in underdeveloped economies, the special definitions imposed by Marxist doctrine, the differences arising from systematic variations, and the difficulties Westerners must experience in overcoming the language barrier—these all conspire to raise doubts about effective utilization of official series. The quality of statistics varies within the economy itself. . . . It is to the editor's credit that he has marked well the route to be followed if these official statistics are to help the student of China's economy perceive its structure and its operations more clearly." Charles Hoffmann
Ann Am Acad 374:250 N '67 420w

Choice 5:33 Mr '68 150w

Reviewed by Bernhard Grossmann
Pacific Affairs 41:93 spring '68 500w

"[This volume] is one decade—the most important decade—behind the times. 'Unfortunately, everything statistical in China stops after 1959, . . . a statistical blackout unprecedented in modern history.' This book can hope only to set a bench mark for comparison with an eventual flow of data."
Sci Am 217:154 O '67 90w

"[This will] be a standard work of reference. . . . A long introduction explains the criteria used by the Chinese themselves in preparing the statistics, a useful guide to the understanding of any Chinese statistics, not just the ones in this book. . . . [It is] a book of solid worth and practical value, qualities lacking in many more pretentious studies of the Chinese economy that fill library shelves."
TLS p1264 D 28 '67 600w

CHEN, THEODORE H. E., ed. The Chinese Communist regime; documents and commentary. 344p $8.50 Praeger

951.05 China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government. China—History—1949—Sources 67-18969

"The documents have been selected with the central purpose of enabling the reader to understand how the Chinese Communist government and Party are organized, how they exercise their control, and what their major policies of economic and social development are. . . . Most of the documents are laws and directives that form the basis of policy. There are a few official policy statements, but speeches as such have been avoided. The documents are those of the regime since its establishment; the only pre-1949 document is Mao Tse-tung's analysis of classes in Chinese society." (Pref) Bibliography.

"Doubtless responsible for the dryness of much academic writing about the Mainland is the turgid Chinese Communist prose, examples of which are included [here]. . . . More useful to the nonspecialist are [Chen's] introductory essays in which he raises important questions of interpretation." John Israel
Book World p3 Mr 17 '68 110w

Choice 5:248 Ap '68 200w

"[The] director of the Asian-Slavic Center at the University of Southern California largely excludes material on education, cultural change, foreign relations and speeches. . . . Wherever possible, [he] uses official Peking translations. Some are readily available, such as Mao's 1949 proclamation and the 1954 constitution, while others, such as the marriage law and rules of student conduct are less well known. Mr. Chen's commentary that succinctly reviews China's successes and failures is a valuable addition to the tedious official prose. For research collections." Collin Clark
Library J 92:2787 Ag '67 130w

CHENERY, JANET. The toad hunt; pictures by Ben Shecter. 64p $1.95; to libs & schools $2.19 Harper

Amphibia—Stories 66-18653

The story follows "a pair of boys in search of a toad. They meet [frogs,] a turtle, a salamander and a pond full of polliwogs in their travels." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grades one to two." (Library J)

Horn Bk 43:458 Ag '67 60w

"[This] provides excellent information for the young nature detective. . . . Well-paced story with delightful illustrations." H. H. McGrady
Library J 92:2043 My 15 '67 30w

"This story, though it is not likely to keep readers glued to their chairs is pleasantly told. Several of Ben Shecter's illustrations are particularly amusing." Alice Fleming
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p49 My 7 '67 60w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:145 D '67 50w

CHENEY, CORA. The incredible Deborah; a story based on the life of Deborah Sampson. 203p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.63 Scribner

B or 92 Gannett, Deborah (Sampson)—Juvenile literature 67-23683

A fictionalized biography of the only known female Revolutionary soldier. When she "was five, her father was lost at sea and the family forced to separate. Soon Deborah was working for her keep as a mother's helper, farmhand, weaver, and schoolteacher. She had more freedom than most girls in colonial New England, and her interest in the Revolution led the tall, strong-jawed girl to don the uniform of a Continental soldier. Deborah served for two years without detection by flirtatious young ladies, surviving to eventually marry and become a mother." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. "Ages ten to sixteen." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Mary Ames
Best Sell 27:360 D 1 '67 120w

Horn Bk 44:189 Ap '68 300w

"A truly incredible story, carefully researched and documented, this [work] . . . is marred to an extent by the intrusion of background material about daily life and historic events in pre-Revolutionary Massachusetts which slows down what would otherwise be an absorbing life story." Madalynne Schoenfeld
Library J 93:879 F 15 '68 150w

"It is an unlikely story, though true; and the author's doggedly gay style does nothing to breathe life into it. The question remains: Why did Deborah Sampson, depicted here as an eminently practical girl, do such a silly thing? No answer is given." D. B. Chidsey

CHENEY, CORA—Continued

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p28 N 5 '67 110w

"The author carefully explains that she fleshed documented facts with fictional episodes; the resultant biography makes Deborah most convincingly and vigorously real." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:48 N 11 '67 170w

CHESTER, LEWIS. The Zinoviev letter [by] Lewis Chester, Stephen Fay [and] Hugo Young. 218p pl $5.95 Lippincott

942.083 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century 68-19829

"In the midst of the British general election in October 1924, British newspapers published a letter supposedly from G. E. Zinoviev, president of the Communist International, to the British Communist Party calling on them to stir up the British masses in support of the ratification of Anglo-Russian trade treaties. They were also to establish party cells in the British army in order to paralyze the government in the coming class struggle. . . . The Foreign Office accepted the forgery as a genuine document. . . . The publication in an election campaign appealed to all who were fearful of the Bolshevik influence and they turned the MacDonald government out of office." (Library J) The editor of the "Insight" column of the Sunday Times (London) and his associates examine the case. Bibliography. Index.

"Lovers of historical mysteries ought to like this first-rate piece of deduction dealing with one of the interesting forgeries of recent times.

[The authors] have put together an interesting tale of intrigue, forgery, and government stupidity. They make out a very convincing case for a White Russian forgery in Berlin which was passed on to London where a former member of M.I.6 bluffed government officials into considering the letter as genuine. The writing does not always measure up to the fascinating story and the authors tend to exaggerate the long-range effects of the Zinoviev letter. Nonetheless this is a book to be highly recommended for libraries." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:2491 Je 15 '68 300w

"[This book] is absorbing both for the ideological and technical information it presents. Ideologically the letter could have had no effect had not people already believed that the British Communist Party, with army and navy infiltrated, were about to raise the barricades, controlled by the Third International. . . . Then there is the technical side. Here the authors' triumph is concretely to have shown just what established interests will do when the chips are down. . . . The book is a great corrective to those who habitually deride conspiracy theory, who believe the ruling order to be decently dressed even when its trousers are visibly around its ankles." Alexander Cockburn

New Statesman 74:596 N 3 '67 700w

Newsweek 71:91 J1 1 '68 420w

"[The authors] have shown skill and pertinacity in ferreting out this rabbit-warren of intrigue. Their story is told in a rather undistinguished journalistic style, but without embroidery, and with a laudable determination to stick to facts which can be proved, or established by reasonably certain conjectures. The only exception is the last chapter, in which the hypothesis is put forward that the agent who originally got the letter was the famous spy Sidney Reilly, who was caught and shot by the Russians a year later. . . . This is a pity: although the hypothesis is submitted merely as a guess, it detracts a little from the sober, matter-of-fact quality of the rest of the book."

TLS p1035 N 2 '67 1400w

CHESTER, MICHAEL. Relativity; an introduction for young readers; il. by Henri Fluchère. 158p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Norton

530.1 Relativity (Physics)—Juvenile literature 67-15444

"The author first attempts to explain the theory of relativity in a descriptive fashion . . . [and then] uses ten appendices to present the theory of relativity through mathematical concepts." (Best Sell) Glossary. Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"The young reader will find the descriptive part of the volume easier to follow, but with guidance and through class work the second part of the book will deepen his knowledge."

Best Sell 27:465 Mr 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:333 Je '68 290w

"In a provocative and challenging exposition, the author plunges head-on into such topics as relative speed, the twin paradox, length contraction, relativistic calendars, curved space, space-time. He reduces difficult abstractions and sustains interest by using brief, concise sentences, short chapters, and understandable analogies. His book is more technical and detailed than [H.] Kondo's Adventures in Space and Time: the Story of Relativity [BRD 1967]. . . . For the strongly motivated student who can apply considerable concentration to the understanding of difficult concepts, this is a substantial book, clear and inviting in format. It clarifies problems of relativity and can be used to stimulate discussions." F. M. Branley

Library J 93:879 F 15 '68 140w

CHEVREUL, M. E. The principles of harmony and contrast of colors and their applications to the arts; based on the first English edition of 1854, as tr. from the first French ed. of 1839, De la loi du contraste simultané des couleurs; with a special introd. and expl. notes by Faber Birren. 256p il pl col pl $27.50 Reinhold

701 Color

66-24553

In this work Chevreul, who "in 1824 was appointed director of dyes for the Royal Manufacturers at the Gobelins tapestry works. . . . articulates how we see color." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"An elaborate and expensive reissue of an epochal work on color as translated in 1854 by Charles Martel. Faber Birren's chatty introduction and commentary are sometimes helpful, but, as regards Chevreul's influence on neo-Impressionism at any rate, [W.I.] Homer's Seurat and the Science of Painting [BRD 1965] is more informative. While possibly determined by the proportions of the original plates, the format is rather unwieldy. . . . The color plates, adapted from the original French edition and that of 1854, exploit the brilliance of modern inks and printing techniques and are generally good. . . . Its great art historical significance makes this book, long unavailable, a must for college libraries, and even for those which possess the last edition, the improved and augmented plates might justify purchase of the present volume."

Choice 5:474 Je '68 200w

"[Chevreul was] most influential with the Impressionists and Neo-Impressionists; he has been widely quoted by many artists, and influences Op Art today. This attractive book contains illustrations of some of the works where emancipated concepts of color resulted from Chevreul's rules, and works illustrating the 'law of simultaneous contrast.' The text, offset from the first English edition, is most ably supported by Faber Birren's substantial historical and critical annotations, and well-chosen illustrations. Recommended for extensive purchase by art collections." M. M. Ferguson

Library J 93:1468 Ap 1 '68 170w

CHICHESTER, SIR FRANCIS. Gipsy Moth circles the world. 269p pl col pl maps $6.95 Coward-McCann

910.4 Gipsy Moth IV (Ketch). Voyages around the world. Sailing 68-16001

The author of the autobiography The Lonely Sea and the Sky (BRD 1964) and Alone Across the Atlantic (BRD 1962) has written an account of his nine month voyage alone around the world in the ketch Gipsy Moth IV. Starting from Plymouth, England in August 1966, he sailed round the Cape of Good Hope to Sydney, from there around stormy Cape Horn and north through the Atlantic back to Plymouth.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:126 Mr '68 1100w

Reviewed by J. B. Cullen

Best Sell 27:458 Mr 1 '68 650w

Reviewed by William Hogan

Book World p1 F 25 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Holger Lundbergh

Christian Science Monitor p12 Mr 14

'68 650w

"Sir Francis's aim was not simply to sail round the world single-handed, itself an uncommon enough achievement, but to do it faster, much faster, than anybody else had ever done. . . . His extraordinary feat was the result of constant unremitting attention to detail, as the book makes plain. . . . Above all [his] narrative reminds us how men can transcend their apparent physical limitations when they are doing something that they very much want to do. He admits to being frightened. . . . He would indeed be superhuman had he never wavered. But it is the Chichester who puts on a green velvet smoking jacket to celebrate his 65th birthday that one comes back to, the Chichester who sheds a tear while enjoying a bottle of Montrachet on his wedding anniversary, Chichester the happy man. Complicated analysis of his motives is irrelevant."

Economist 225:ix D 2 '67 550w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:107 Ap '68 300w

"At an age when most of us are staying in armchairs, the 65-year-old Sir Francis accomplished the fastest circumnavigation of the globe in a small sailing vessel . . . and wrote the story of his adventure in a book that will be read for as long as its great predecessors, such as Joshua Slocum's accounts [The Voyages, BRD 1959]. . . . Not half the writer that Joshua Slocum was, Sir Francis nevertheless gives something unique—a really detailed record of his experience. The book is particularly attractive, well printed, and well illustrated with photographs and informative drawings, although the color of the photographs leaves something to be desired. Recommended for all adult collections." Karl Nyren

Library J 93:1014 Mr 1 '68 170w

"The author's sailing feat . . . is already a legend, yet his undramatic and understated account of this voyage is a disappointment. The facts are there, but they are presented in technical nautical terms. . . . What Sir Francis felt and thought while alone on the ocean, however, is not touched on. There is no index or glossary to help landlubbers. . . . This superlative sailor had a whopping good story to tell without a commensurate storytelling ability." Helen Jacob

Library J 93:1335 Mr 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Tom Nairn
New Statesman 74:767 D 1 '67 1550w

"[This is] an intensely detailed personal document. There is an almost minute-by-minute recapitulation of events, carrying, in addition to a brave man's personal reactions and emotions, a vast amount of technical nautical material. This can be fascinating to the experienced off-shore yachtsman, but a reader without this background, more interested in romance and adventure, may find some of it heavy going. . . . Controversy is here in large doses, too, mostly of a technical nature concerning Gipsy Moth's characteristics. Sir Francis pulls no punches in criticizing the boat's design. . . . For the serious student of the peculiar pursuit of going to sea in small sailboats, the technical material in the text and in the appendices offers a rich extra dividend. The style is often understated and very British, with occasional surprising lapses into sentimentality over home and family, but the drama is there, and the very understatement actually adds to the impact of major incidents. Rounding Cape Horn . . . is inevitably the most dramatic of all the milestones of the passage." Bill Robinson

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 10 '68 650w

Reviewed by Alan Villiers
Sat R 51:27 Mr 2 '68 1450w
Time 91:88 Mr 1 '68 240w
TLS p1187 D 7 '67 1100w

CHICK, EDSON M. Ernst Barlach. 154p $4.50
Twayne

832 Barlach, Ernst 67-19354

This study of "the German writer, sculptor, and graphic artist . . . gives a sketch of Barlach's life, presents an . . . interpretation and . . . criticism of his works, traces the literary sources and real-life influences, and discusses the reasons for the strained relationship between Barlach and the theater directors and critics. The four great plays of Barlach are used as bases for various aspects of study." (Choice)

"[This] welcome addition to any college library [is] the first book on Barlach from the pen of an American scholar. . . . The interpretation of Der Arme Vetter dwells heavily on Barlach's concept of time and space; that of Die Echten Sedemunds deals with the nature of the grotesque. The chapter on Die Sündflut is devoted primarily to the study of Barlach's diction, and the chapter on Der Blaue Boll analyzes his artistic vision. Carefully documented; good, selected bibliography."

Choice 5:630 J1 '68 120w

"The book should help introduce English-speaking readers to an outstanding German dramatist of the 1920's and 1930's. Recommended for German literature collections in large public and academic libraries." Edith Lenel

Library J 93:1484 Ap 1 '68 160w

CHIDSEY, DONALD BARR. The great conspiracy; Aaron Burr and his strange doings in the West. 166p il $3.95 Crown

973.5 Burr, Aaron. U.S.—History—1783-1809
67-27042

A biography which includes "the circumstances surrounding [Burr's] duel with Hamilton . . . [and his] plots with Blennerhassett, General Wilkinson, and other leading figures of the day. . . . [The author also describes] Burr's trip south with his small 'army' and the eventual capture and arraignment of the former Vice President. Then we see the . . . trial at which Burr was charged with conspiracy. . . . and finally [his last] . . . years in Europe and New York." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Like Chidsey's other popular histories (which can be read by virtually any age group) the reader is treated to an absorbing flesh and blood 'happening.' . . . [The author's] witticisms and his occasionally infuriating ability to make participants come to life and his knowledge of the period and environment make up for scanty research. With little written on Burr (and Wilkinson) over the last 30 years and because this is a rather judicious and informative account (in spite of being on the light side), this book should be considered acceptable in college collateral reading."

Choice 5:255 Ap '68 170w

"By blending historical facts with a fictionalized approach [the author] presents a moving picture of the only Vice-President ever to win a duel on the field of honor. Pedants may find Mr. Chidsey's enthusiasm for his subject slightly overwhelming, but because his approach is so readable he cannot severely be called to task on this score. However, sentences such as 'Burr even had time for a romance, reputedly with a maiden called Madeline Price; but then, he always had time for things like that,' are something else and will cause historians' brows to wrinkle!" Paul Sarnoff

Library J 92:2916 S 1 '67 140w

CHIDSEY, DONALD BARR. The war in the North; an informal history of the American Revolution in and near Canada. 214p $3.95 Crown

973.3 U.S.—History—Revolution. Canadian Invasion, 1775-1776 67-17708

An account of the campaigns "from the fall of Fort Ticonderoga in 1775 to the surrender of General Burgoyne in 1777." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Although Donald Chidsey's book is admittedly popular history rather than a scholarly study, this work falls far short of meeting minimum standards even when measured in terms of its own genre. . . . Over three-fourths of the book is devoted to two major campaigns . . . leaving little space to mention other important developments in the northern theater of operations. . . . [The author has] relied upon two secondary sources . . . [whose] findings are distorted to a degree by Chidsey's overly dramatic presentation of events. . . . The book has numerous errors, major and minor . . . [which] make the book useless to the scholar and a source of misinformation to the general reader." G. A. Billias

Am Hist 73:901 F '68 600w

"This 'informal history' was probably not written for the academic market. It is a short, unoriginal, and superficial battle history based exclusively on standard printed accounts. . . . Although [it] is tinselled with a number of illustrations, elementary notes and appendices, and a selected bibliography, essential maps are curiously omitted. Not recommended for the undergraduate library."

Choice 4:1437 F '68 100w

CHIDSEY, D. B.—Continued

"Mr. Chidsey's animated and vivifying history details the campaigns and describes intimately key military figures, their relationships, maneuvers for official positions, personal foibles and strengths." S. G. Heppell
Library J 92:1830 My 1 '67 130w

CHIDSEY, DONALD BARR. The war with Mexico. 192p il $3.95 Crown 973.6 U.S.—History—War with Mexico, 1845-1848. Texas—History 68-20461

This narrative of the 1830's and 1840's covers the United States' controversy with Mexico from Goliad and the Alamo to Chapultepec. Bibliography. Index.

"Chidsey's 12th book about dramatic periods in the history of the U.S. . . . is a superficial, slang-filled narrative . . . aimed at a mass audience. The author, who ignored manuscript collections, has an acquaintance with standard published sources and an eye for colorful stories here, but there are no original scholarly interpretations to be found. . . . Well written popular histories have a place on the shelves of a college library, but this book would annoy all but the most indulgent college reader."
Choice 5:1212 N '68 100w

"This is a brisk and brief account of one of this country's lesser-known but more consequential wars . . . [written in] a clear and simple style. . . . In such short space [the author] can deal only briefly with most events and individuals, and they are often described or characterized in a few pithy words or sentences. But there are lively close-ups of the Alamo, the Democratic convention of 1848, the battles in the Valley of Mexico, and the leaders of the times. Not a book for scholars, but the general reader and the young adult should enjoy it; those interested in further reading on this period will find the well-chosen bibliography useful." R. W. Ryan
Library J 93:1138 Mr 15 '68 110w [YA]

CHIEFFO, CLIFFORD T. Silk-screen as a fine art; a handbook of contemporary silk-screen printing. 120p il col il $10.95 Reinhold 764 Silk screen printing 67-14153

The author "is an artist who is acting chairman of the fine arts department at Georgetown University. His text . . . includes making frames; purchasing materials; paper, film, and photographic stencils; resist techniques, tusche, and . . . other techniques . . . [with a] chapter on silk-screen printing in the schools." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Chieffo is a qualified artist and teacher of considerable experience as a printmaker. . . . [This] is written as a how-to-do-it manual taking the reader through the processes step-by-step. There are also drawings and photographs showing the way to do many of the operations. The greatest fault of the book is the lack of precise names, making this work hard for the inexperienced to use."
Choice 5:764 S '68 80w

"Because of Mr. Chieffo's comprehensive coverage and artistic assumptions, his book is highly recommended for artists, teachers, students, and libraries serving them." Delores McCollm
Library J 93:1620 Ap 15 '68 220w

CHIFFLOT, T. G. Water in the wilderness, understanding the Bible; tr. by Luke O'Neill. 141p $3.95 Herder & Herder 220.07 Bible—Reading 67-13298

This volume is intended "to introduce the reader to some of the basic backgrounds and means of interpreting the Biblical text. Its three main parts carry the . . . subtitles, 'Principles for a Reading of the Bible,' 'Simple Thoughts To Nourish Our Faith,' and 'Some Notes for Further Reflection.' A concluding section treats of Christ as 'The Source and End of Scripture.'" (Choice) Originally published in French under the title Comprendre la Bible. Index.

"This small work by the late general editor of the important Jerusalem Bible [see BRD 1966 for English version] . . . is a competent work, gracefully written, and could be appreciated on the college level. Its main importance, however, is in its revelation of the animated Christian spirit and of the depth of Biblical understanding that motivated Chiffot's own life and work. As such, it is an excellent introductory study to some aspects of Roman Catholic Biblical interpretation."

Choice 5:791 S '68 140w

"In this book [Père Chiffot] has condensed the main themes of the Bible and of biblical interpretation in a masterful way. To scholars his approach may seem a bit rhetorical, but, then, it is hard to avoid that mode of discourse when one lives as close to the Bible as this author does."
Christian Century 84:86 Ja 18 '67 60w

CHILCOTE, RONALD H. Portuguese Africa. 149p maps $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall
960 Portugal—Colonies. Africa 67-14849

In this "study of Portuguese Africa based in part on field work there and in Portugal, [the] theme is the persistence of African resistance to Portuguese conquest, domination, or assimilation since the 15th century." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

"The reader will find here information not readily available elsewhere about recent developments in Angola and Mozambique as well as information about the virtually unknown territories of Portuguese Guinea, the Cape Verde Islands, Sao Tome, and O Principe. Chilcote will also tell the reader a great deal more than he will care to know about Portuguese metropolitan politics. What the book needs is greater maturity of outlook and a more felicitous style. . . . Fine and extensive critical bibliography."
Choice 5:665 JI '68 120w

"Professor Chilcote's history is important because it brings together 500 years of history into a well-synthesized presentation that is interesting to read and soundly documented. . . . As Chilcote presents the facts, it becomes evident that the weaknesses in the Portuguese Government and in its treatment of Portuguese citizens at home are reflected and magnified in the African provinces. Recommended both for general and special collections." M. D. Herrick
Library J 92:1830 My 1 '67 110w

CHILD, JULIA. The French chef cookbook; drawings and phot. by Paul Child. 424p pl $6.95 Knopf 641.5 Cookery, French 68-12997

"This book grew out of the educational television series 'The French Chef.' . . . It ranges from sauces, stews, and meats to appetizers, vegetables, desserts, cakes and pastries, and from the very simple to the fairly complicated. The book represents 119 programs, . . . and the recipes are printed in the order that the shows were produced. Although about a third were taken from Mastering the Art of French Cooking [by Simone Beck, Louisette Bertholle and Julia Child, BRD 1962], some of the television recipes differ slightly from the book recipes." (Intro) Index.

"[In] Julia Child's new and delightful book, . . . the simplest soups and the most complicated patisseries are treated with the same loving, meticulous care. One immediately has the impression that nobody wants the amateur cook to succeed with each recipe more than the author herself. . . . To execute some of her recipes, one must be more than an enthusiastic cook. One must be experienced. . . . Fortunately, there are some fine quickies among the recipes, with which a cook can make an incredibly good impression with a minimum of effort. . . . An ambitious housewife will be particularly interested in the series of 'Dinners for Four in Thirty Minutes.' These menus are beautifully balanced; one leaves the table delightfully refreshed, not overstuffed. . . . [This book] is not for the rank amateur nor for the shortcut specialist in cooking. It is for the student of serious cuisine." Letitia Baldrige
Book World p4 Ap 14 '68 700w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:108 Ap '68 310w

"For the multitude of her fans who either missed a show or want them all preserved, this book is just what they're waiting for. . . . Some of the scripts include more than one dish or more than one way of cooking that particular dish. Included are, of course, her explanations on how to manage various cooking techniques. In some of the scripts, she suggests accompanying dishes and wines. . . . [Mrs] Child has a happy facility for making recipes sound delicious and easy. No public library should be without this." Lelia Saunders

Library J 93:1142 Mr 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p23 Je 2 '68 500w

CHILD STUDY ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.
Your growing child and sex. See Arnstein, H. S.

CHILDS, HERBERT. An American genius, the life of Ernest Orlando Lawrence. 576p il $12.95 Dutton

B or #2 Lawrence, Ernest Orlando. Nuclear physics—History 68-12456

A biography of the American scientist who received "the Nobel Prize in physics in 1939 for his discovery, development, and use of the cyclotron. . . . [The author,] a free-lance writer, has based his book on more than 800 interviews which he conducted with Dr. Lawrence's family, friends, and colleagues." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This extensive biography, intended for the general reader, is primarily a personal rather than a scientific treatment. . . . Despite immense detail, this is a highly readable, fascinating story and will be of interest to a wide range of readers. Highly recommended for academic and public libraries." J. K. Lucker
Library J 93:1473 Ap 1 '68 140w

"Moving in and out of the spotlight with Lawrence are many of the leading scientists of the times. . . . A series of incidents involving Lawrence and Oppenheimer are described; they provide considerable information on the evolving relationship of the two men. . . . [Among] the hundreds of acquaintances who furnished material to the author, there is some evidence that time has softened their memories of some of the tougher aspects of Lawrence's character. . . . The author does not attempt to analyze or interpret his subject; rather he has chosen to be a careful reporter. Nevertheless, the reader will find that Lawrence emerges in the book sharply etched. . . . Throughout the book are many evidences of Lawrence's unusually deep loyalty and attachment to old friends and former colleagues. Also evident is Lawrence's consistent refusal to be petty. . . . For those who did not know Lawrence or the era in which he lived the author may present more details than they care to read. However, those who have some memory of the man will find this book fascinating, and historians will find it a rich source." P. H. Abelson
Science 160:521 My 3 '68 1150w

The CHILD'S world; ed. advisory bd: Marvin L. Berge, chairman; Ann Neigoff, managing ed. rev ed 6v il pl maps $37.50 Child's world
031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries—Juvenile literature

"According to its publisher The Child's World 'is not basically a reference tool, . . . but is designed to serve as supplementary and enrichment material for the home and classroom library.' . . . In planning the 1965 revision . . . it was decided that the two volumes The Story World and The World of the Arts, added in 1961, did not need revision at this time. The remaining four volumes . . . received revision in varying degrees." (Booklist and S B B) Indexes. For the first two editions see BRD 1951 and 1962. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"The most notable updating apparent in [The World and Its Wonders are in] the articles on space and space exploration, the addition of computers in the articles on metals and machinery, and a list of scientists and inventors with brief biographical notes. . . . Few changes were made in Countries and Their Children. . . . The presentation could be improved if the narrative story form were eliminated. . . . The only new section [in Plant and Animal Ways] is on protective coloration for animals. . . . Except for the two new biographies of Helen Keller and John F. Kennedy, only minor changes or omissions from the 1961 edition were noted [in People and Great Deeds]. . . . Revision has improved the writing particularly in the Plant and Animal Ways volume, and changes and additions to the illustrative material are noteworthy. However, the lack of any major changes or additions in the text would indicate that this set does not displace the 1961 edition. Therefore, owners of the 1961 edition will not find it necessary to replace with this edition. The Child's World's only use would be as a browsing set in a home or library where budget is not an obstacle. For this use it is recommended."

Booklist and S B B 64:1101 Je 1 '68 850w

"The set is sturdily bound and the covers, though white, are washable. Tight side-sewing keeps the volumes from opening easily but at least the inner margins are reasonably wide. The type, printed on coated paper, is legible and appropriate to the intermediate grades. There are many illustrations [but] the general appearance of the art work is mediocre. The set does lend itself to browsing in many fields and has been carefully edited to fill developmental needs and to give much information on a wide variety of subjects. The editors have given such painstaking care, however, to keeping the sentences short, plain, and simple, and to putting information in narrative form that they have edited all style and literary quality out of the writing. . . . The lack, in every volume except that on the arts, of suggestions for appropriate books to read next is a serious drawback." S. L. Kennerly
Library J 91:4363 S 15 '66 550w

CHILTON, THOMAS H. Strong water; nitric acid: sources, methods of manufacture, and uses. 170p il $7.50 Mass. inst. of technology

661 Nitric acid 67-16496

The author attempts to show "how 'the history of the manufacture of nitric acid exemplifies the response of the inventive spirit to the interplay of political and economic forces, while the design of modern plants demonstrates the value of applying the principles of pure chemistry in a chemical engineering achievement.'" (Library J) Index.

Choice 5:814 S '68 180w

"A highly readable factual volume . . . for the chemistry student or for the general reader with some background in the science and an interest in technology. . . . Recommended for public, high school, and college general science and chemistry collections as well as those labeled history of science." H. Oatfield
Library J 93:2673 Jl '68 110w

The CHINA QUARTERLY. China under Mao: politics takes command; a selection of articles from the China quarterly; ed. by Roderick MacFarquhar. 525p $8.50; pa $3.95 Mass. inst. of technology

951.05 China (People's Republic of China) 66-25630

The editor has "in general chosen pieces because they contribute to our understanding of recent Chinese history with the intention of giving this volume an appeal beyond the immediate circle of specialists. [He has] also selected a few articles that have dealt with abiding principles of Chinese Communist theory and practice." (Introd) Index.

Reviewed by A. T. Steele

Book Week p8 Ap 30 '67 400w

"[This volume is] a student's handbook rather than any retrospective tribute to the six years of existence of the respected China Quarterly. . . . It is not, however, a book for any but the hardiest general reader. It forms no coherent whole; authors are not identified; dates of original publication are not indicated. The last omission combines with an unfortunate timing of the book's publication—apparently it went to press just prior to the sudden turmoil of last summer's purge. . . . For anyone who is willing to bear with these inconveniences and read the book in conjunction with other materials, however, the compilation is most worthwhile. . . . Some of the key reconstructions of policies and purges that have appeared in the China Quarterly are again given here . . . [including] analysis of the secret military papers of 1961, the 1957 rectification campaign at Peking University—all these are must reading for anyone who wants to puzzle out the China of 1967." Elizabeth Pond
Christian Science Monitor p9 My 18 '67 450w

"Those familiar with the China Quarterly will find nothing new in [this] selection of twenty-four articles from the 1960-1965 issues. The most significant aspect of this collection is the perspective which is offered. This is best exemplified by Benjamin Schwartz's presentation of the Maoist vision of society ■ a prime operative goal; David Charles's explanation of the inter-relationship between doctrine and organized opposition in the case of P'eng Teh-huai; and Morton Halperin's dispassionate scholarship on Chinese nuclear strategy. The balance of the collection offers the reader most useful quantitative data, notwithstanding the fact that the commentary may be more questionable now than at the time of original publication." S. J. Noumoff

The CHINA QUARTERLY—Continued

Pacific Affairs 40:365 fall-winter '67-'68 120w

CHO, SOON SUNG. Korea in world politics, 1940-1950; an evaluation of American responsibility. 338p $7 Univ. of Calif. press

327.519 U.S.—Foreign relations—Korea. Korea—Foreign relations—U.S. Korea—History 67-14968

"This study is concerned primarily with American policy toward Korea . . . from the Cairo Conference in 1943 to the eve of the Korean War in 1950. Its particular focus is on those policy decisions which led, first, to the division of the country and then sought, unsuccessfully, to bring about its reunification. My aim has been to discover how and why the important policy decisions were reached; and to examine the reasons why those policies ended . . . in failure." (Intro) Bibliography. Index.

"Not since [G. M. McCune's Korea Today, BRD 1950] has there been a serious attempt at a dispassionate analysis of the conditions antecedent to the [Korean] war. . . . [Cho] goes into all the matters treated by McCune in greater depth, with fuller documentation, and with the benefit of seventeen years of hindsight. . . . Cho's presentation is measured, precise, and persuasive, but it seems to me that he may be somewhat overindulgent of Syngman Rhee and the forces he led. . . . [He] deserves congratulations for a careful and valuable study." Hilary Conroy

Am Hist R 73:1601 Je '68 460w

"[This] is an exhaustive study, and the author's meticulous research produced an excellent account of the period. The author seems to have exhausted all pertinent materials available . . . [and] has done a difficult task of piecing together numerous interacting factors that foredoomed the fate of Korea. The study, however, suffers from two fundamental difficulties. The first is the general lack of utilization of abundant materials researched to analyze the basic theme of the book, an evaluation of American responsibility. . . . The second is the author's 'Korean-centric' attitude. . . . Despite the difficulties, however, the study is important." D.-S. Suh

Ann Am Acad 375:222 Ja '68 600w

"The first published evaluation of American policy which makes full use of published State Department records as well as extensive Japanese and Korean sources. The viewpoint, nevertheless, is that of a native Korean who views the present political division of Korea as a direct outgrowth of American policy during and after World War II. . . . Along with Gregory Henderson's Korea: The Politics of the Vortex, it represents the most authoritative interpretation in print to date."

Choice 5:1346 D '68 170w

TLS p1234 D 21 '67 650w

CHÖGYAM TRUNGPA. Born in Tibet, by Chögyam Trungpa, the eleventh Trungpa Tulku, as told to Esmé Cramer Roberts; with a foreword by Marco Pallis. 264p pl maps $5.95 Harcourt

B or 92 Buddha and Buddhism. Tibet

68-11078

"This is the story of the early life and escape from the Chinese of a young tulku of Tibet, an incarnate lama of high rank. . . . Born in a cow byre in 1939, [Trungpa Tulku] was installed at the age of thirteen months and for the tenth successive time as the religious head and supreme abbot of the Surmang group of monasteries." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"At this juncture, because Tibetan society is under the absolute control of Mao Tse-tung's China and its unique civilization is rapidly receding into the domain of history, any direct testimony of what Tibet was like until its recent conquest is a particularly precious document. . . . Here is a book that should be read by all those who are sensitive to the manifold potentialities offered men by the alternatives of history. The Tibetan way of life has had a quality of uniqueness unlikely to be duplicated anywhere else in the world. Chögyam Trungpa's memoirs are an invaluable addition to the records of the fast vanishing Tibetan past."

Joseph Bram

Library J 93:1890 My 1 '68 130w

TLS p775 Ag 31 '67 250w

CHOI, WOONSANG. The fall of the hermit kingdom. 179p $6 Oceana

951.9 Korea—History. Korea—Foreign relations—Japan. Japan—Foreign relations—Korea 66-11939

The political history of Korea from 1870 to 1910 discusses "the 'opening' of Korea, the rivalries of China, Japan, and Russia respectively for paramountcy in the peninsular country, the political consequences of the Sino-Japanese Wars and Russo-Japanese Wars, and the annexation of Korea into the Japanese empire." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"This book is most useful as a review, for its meticulous chronology, and for its appendices of relevant documents. Other works on Korea have ordinarily been much freer from typographical errors than Choi's. H. Conroy's The Japanese Seizure of Korea [BRD 1962] is a far better study."

Choice 4:1430 F '68 110w

"Not particularly scholarly, this monograph is of value only to those interested in the general history of the period. High school students also may find it good reading." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 91:4105 S 15 '66 80w [YA]

Reviewed by F. C. Jones

Pacific Affairs 41:439 fall '68 90w

CHORLEY, RICHARD J., ed. Models in geography; ed by Richard J. Chorley [and] Peter Haggett. (Madingley lectures, 1965) 816p il maps $19 Barnes & Noble

910 Geography

68-71825

"Five parts include chapters on the role of models: models of physical, socioeconomic, and mixed systems; and information-education models." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Personal name and subject index.

"[This] consists of a remarkably comprehensive and scholarly analysis of geographical models as currently conceived and used by devotees. . . . Illustrations are adequate. . . . Bibliographies total more than 2,000 entries, almost entirely from British and American scholarly sources. . . . This work stands essentially alone, although more of its type certainly will evolve. Scope, quality, and usefulness to specialists in geography, economics, sociology, earth sciences, urban affairs, and industrial location justify its inclusion as a library resource."

Choice 5:244 Ap '68 150w

"There is no doubt that this book will provoke amiable and profitable discussion among geographers for some time to come, and it is equally certain that the editors are substantially correct both in their diagnosis of the state of the discipline and in their contention that the development of a new unifying research tradition is overdue in geography. Whether or not they have delineated a paradigm capable of articulating a tradition which will provide that unity will be apparent only in the number of major geographical problems that are solved within its framework. . . . Yet withal, so extensive is the territory covered in these chapters, so numerous the ideas and insights thrown up on nearly every page [that it] must be reckoned one of the most stimulating texts ever to have been produced by British geographers. Any discipline can only be the healthier for such a penetrating critique of its basic assumptions and preconceptions."

TLS p736 J1 11 '68 2300w

CHRISMAN, MIRIAM USHER. Strasbourg and the reform; a study in the process of change. 351p il $8.75 Yale univ. press

940.2 Reformation. Germany—Church history. Strasbourg—History 67-13431

This work examines "the effect of the Reformation on the religious, political, economic, social, and educational life of . . . [this] city, which was at the crossroads of Europe and of the forces of reform in the 16th century. . . .

[It is based on] archival sources, chronicles, and the writings of the reformers, as well as of the latest secondary literature." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The emphasis here is on the relations between the reformers and the magistrates. Others—humanists, commons, Anabaptists, the Catholic bishop, and the Chapterherren—receive attention . . . but the author's sympathies seem to lie with Bucer and his colleagues . . . for collaboration between the two institutions was rejected by a magistracy that saw no reason to share with a new church the powers they had so long fought to take away from the old. . . . A map of the city, the index, and the author's lucid description of the various municipal councils make this book, apart from its other merits, a work of reference for anyone interested in the history of this and other cities in the period of the Reformation." Gordon Griffiths

Am Hist R 73:509 D '67 600w

Reviewed by R. H. Bainton

Ann Am Acad 378:161 J1 '68 900w

"Chrisman breaks new ground in her careful yet highly readable account of the complex interaction of the Magistrat, citizenry, old church, and new church under the reformers in this time of change. She shows how some institutions (specifically the church), the educational system, and social classification underwent a profound transformation, especially under the fresh impact of the Reformation, but how other institutions (the political and economic power structure) scarcely changed at all. No comparable study exists in English. Highly recommended for all students of the Reformation."

Choice 4:1432 F '68 160w

"The Protestant Reformation in Strasbourg was a very local affair. More conservative than revolutionary, it began with the long-standing concern over the failings of the clergy and ended with the establishment of a secular control far stronger than that once exercised by the bishop. The Reformation belonged to the city, not to the reformers like Bucer and Capito. . . . Practical and moderate, [the Reformation in this city] was more tolerant of Catholicism than of Anabaptism, for only the latter posed any threat to the status quo. . . . Mrs. Chrisman, who teaches history at the University of Massachusetts, has constructed a balanced and well-written picture of a city in the process of change. Very highly recommended." R. R. Rea

Library J 92:1926 My 15 '67 140w

CHRISTENSEN, ERWIN O. A guide to art museums in the United States; basic information about eighty-eight major and regional art museums in fifty-nine cities of the United States, including over 500 illustrations of representative works of art for identification. 303p $7.95 Dodd

708 U.S.—Galleries and museums 67-26838

"The first part of the text gives . . . consideration to major museums of the East, Middle West, and Pacific Coast, presenting the history and background of the collections with the location and description of representative works. . . . The second part gives more general information about regional and more specialized museums. In both parts administrative information about hours of operation and admission is included, as well as lists of art museums connected with colleges and universities, [and] a list of museum directories and regional guides." (Publisher's note) Indexes list museums, arranged by name and city, works of art discussed under names of artists, schools and media; and other names.

"In this graceful, well-written guide Erwin Christensen . . . a former curator of the National Gallery of Art, reveals his appreciation and understanding of the objects he discusses. Instead of merely listing paintings or sculpture, he has singled out outstanding items, describing each painting or sculpture briefly with perceptive observations on the artist's contribution. He refers the reader from one museum to another in comments on a specific artist. His focus is on the major collections, but references to other museums provide continuity. . . . Highly recommended for all pertinent collections." R. N. Van Note

Library J 92:4139 N 15 '67 180w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:62 N 16 '68 100w

CHRISTGAU, ALICE E. The laugh peddler; ■ story by Alice E. Christgau; ill. by Arvis L. Stewart. 156p $3.95 Young Scott bks.

68-15340

A novel about "a 12-year-old orphan named Sidney, the Minnesota farm relatives who take him into their hard-scrabble lives, and an itinerant Syrian peddler whose joyful spirit is worth far more than the contents of his pack. The story occurs in 1914 and portrays the struggles of a small farmer against storm, crop failure and fire. When the peddler is unjustly blamed for the fire, Sidney attempts to clear his name and in the process solves two mysteries. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"When Yusef Hanna opened up the big pack he carried on his back, he brought more to the Minnesota farm families than the silks and laces, buttons and threads he peddled. He brought his own special brand of warm good will and the way he had of 'teasing the laughter out of you.' So appealing a character is he that a reader quickly shares the anguish of the Miller children when the Laugh Peddler is accused of causing a disastrous fire in their barn. Mrs. Christgau's well-plotted book shows an interesting segment of farm life at the turn of the century. It provides, too, a satisfying family story, spiced with a double-barreled mystery." Jean Baron

Book World p20 (children's issue)

My 5 '68 150w

"The reverse of a recurrent theme—the problem of adjustment from a rural to an urban environment—receives treatment in a story which rates high in human interest, eventfulness, and vividness of setting." M. M. Horn

Bk 44:323 Je '68 170w

"The excitement of a barn fire, a blizzard, and a slight mystery concerning a beaver poacher are woven into the well-told story of everyday farm life and a boy's adjustment to a life which he finds, can be challenging and rewarding. The setting and characters are well presented, and the black-and-white illustrations effectively convey the mood of the story." Patricia Dahl

Library J 93:1797 Ap 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Polly Longworth

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p34 My 5 '68 160w

CHRISTIAN, C. W., ed. Radical theology: phase two; essays in a continuing discussion; ed. by C. W. Christian and Glenn R. Wittig. 218p $4.95; pa $2.25 Lippincott

230 Radical theology

67-20169

This collection of articles concerning the Death of God controversy attempts to document reaction to it, and includes the work of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant authors. Some of these papers have appeared previously in various periodicals such as The Christian Century, The Journal of Religious Life and Jewish Life. Bibliography.

"One of the most interesting collections of articles to come out of the Death of God controversy. It focuses upon the work of Thomas J. J. Altizer, Harvey Cox, William Hamilton, and Paul M. Van Buren. The introductory essay by Langdon Gilkey and the piece on the 19th-century background by William Earle in Part I, Setting and Background, are particularly fine. In Part II, Reactions and Criticisms, which is the heart of the book, C. W. Christian's critique of the new optimism and Howard Harrod's discussion of the ethical implications of radical theology deserve special mention, as do Norman Lamm's and John Wild's articles in Part III, Outlooks and Alternatives. . . . Wittig's bibliography is also useful. Likely to prove an extremely valuable book for undergraduates and the general public."

Choice 4:1396 F '68 150w

"This is at least the third anthology of essays triggered by death-of-God talk so far in 1967. It is too soon to discern a plotline to the new theological work; people are scurrying around in confusion, marking time, bartering for position, looking for direction. But the Christian-Wittig collection . . . while rich in contradiction and at times even chaotic, should provide seed thoughts for patient readers who are trying to put things together again."

Christian Century 84:1000 Ag 2 '67 160w

"[An] attempt to provide an overview of the debate currently raging between the radical theologians best known to most of us as the 'God is Dead' school and their more conservative colleagues. It is 'marked by a cautious and tentative inquiry into the aims and meanings of the new theologians.' Some of the essays are sympathetic to the movement; most are not. The book is amply provided with scholarly footnotes. Recommended for college, university, and public libraries interested in the theological debates of our times." J. A. Clarke

CHRISTIAN, C. W.—Continued

Library J 92:2578 J1 '67 160w

CHRISTIANITY in education; delivered in the Universities of London, Kings' college and Nottingham by F. H. Hilliard [and others]. (Hibbert lectures, 1965) 111p $3.50 Humanities press

370.1 Church and education. Education—Great Britain [66-70562]

These six lectures by four British educationists "consider the role of Christianity, first in schools and then in higher education. Dr. Hilliard discusses the failure of the Church to come to terms with the vigour and vision of the Renaissance, allowing a secular humanism to occupy the centre of the educational stage. . . . The headmaster of Winchester writes about the particular problems of the private sector of education. [Professor Niblett suggests] that universities are not really interested in religious education, except as a by-product of the search for knowledge. . . . Professor Rupp disagrees with Dr. Hilliard's implicit suggestion that the role of Christianity is to serve as a bridge between the increasingly specialized studies of other faculties, setting them all in the wider context of a universal significance. . . . For him its function is to perpetuate the great tradition of scholarship, and provide a human community in which learning may be pursued." (TLS)

Choice 5:103 Mr '68 110w

"In the past few years much has been written and spoken in the way of criticism and analysis of the current problems of Christian education. . . . Professor Niblett's lecture on personal and impersonal education is the best of [this] distinguished collection [on the subject]." TLS p727 Ag 11 '66 470w

CHRISTIE, AGATHA. Endless night. 248p $4.95 Dodd

68-13598

The site of the house called The Towers had once been known as Gipsy's Acre. It was there that Michael Rogers first met a wealthy American oil heiress, Fenella Guteman, whom he was later to marry. "The account of Michael's courting of Ellie, their growing attraction for each other, is the starting point of this drama that begins and ends at Gipsy's Acre. The story concludes with the revelation of a . . . [crime and] . . . the paraphernalia that had been required to effect it." (Publisher's note)

Best Sell 27:476 Mr 15 '68 100w

"When Mrs. Christie writes psychological-romantic novels as Mary Westmacott, the pickings are slim indeed. [This book] is Christie writing as Christie—only it should have been Westmacott. It's Christie gone gothic; part-mystery, part-suspense with gypsies' warnings and other pseudo-sinister overtones. Even the mystery lacks the usual Christie flair. Instead of being neatly hidden, the clues stand out against the general melodrama, and the solution becomes not a question of how but of when?" P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 20 '68 130w

Reviewed by E. A. Morse

Library J 93:2550 Je 15 '68 80w [YA]

"[Mrs. Christie has] produced a surpassing mystery that is almost as fine a novel. . . . The ingenious plot manages to avoid death itself for no less than the first three-quarters of the book. Only near the denouement does 'Endless Night' become a detective story. . . . Not that the familiar Christie touches are lacking. . . . Use of the two-way clue is dazzling. And, more than ever, the rigorous Christie epistemology-psychology invades every page of the book; her characters are normal people whose own free will essentially decides their courses." P. G. Neimark

N Y Times Bk R p49 Mr 17 '68 750w

"It really is bold of Agatha Christie to write in the persona of a working-class boy who marries a poor little rich girl, but in a pleasantly gothickal story of gipsy warnings she brings it all off, together with a nicely melodramatic final twist."

TLS p1092 N 16 '67 50w

CHRISTIE, TREVOR L. Etched in arsenic. 306p $5.95 Lippincott

343 Maybrick, Florence Elizabeth (Chandler). Murder. Trials 68-11374

"The story of Florence Chandler Maybrick's trial, conviction, and imprisonment for the arsenic poisoning of her husband, James, at their home, Battlecrease, in Liverpool in 1889, has been told many times before by mystery writers, reporters of crime, and in accounts of famous trials. Mr. Christie feels that his predecessors all have turned the principal actors into stereotypes, and that a full account could breathe life into 'the spectacle of a feckless young American girl, with a faulty upbringing and the liberal moral values of the new world, thrown among the female lions of Victorian England.' He is less interested in determining whether or not Florence gave the arsenic than in discovering how she stumbled on the path that led her to the steps of the gallows." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"An absorbing, understanding, well researched study of personality development and of Victoriana." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:767 F 15 '68 170w

"[This] should prove to be the definitive and permanent account of a major classic. Sentence by sentence, Mr. Christie does not write too smoothly; he is easily lured by the call of the cliché-bird. But he organizes his material well, with copious verbatim quotations; he resists all temptation to fictionize, even briefly; and the material itself is superb, including much that is available nowhere else, especially on Mrs. Maybrick's pitiful and bedraggled existence after her release from prison." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p43 Mr 24 '68 200w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 100w

CHRISTOPH, VAN F., Jr. auth. The real woman in the religious life. See Evoy, J. J.

CHRISTOPHER, JOHN. The city of gold and lead. 185p $4.25 Macmillan (N Y)

67-21245

"The boys who escaped the tyranny of the Tripods in The White Mountains [BRD 1967] are now in their mountain hideaway training to compete in an athletic event that will screen candidates who aspire to serve the tyrants in the City of the Tripods. Only Will and Fritz pass the test, and then their problem is to hide their lack of adoration for the Tripods and their mission to obtain whatever information they can about the Tripod plans for world domination. . . . Ages eleven to fourteen." (Sat R)

Reviewed by D. B. Whitman

Book World p12 Mr 17 '68 210w

Reviewed by P. J. Henniker-Heaton

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 100w

Horn Bk 43:756 D '67 150w

"Though this book and its forerunner are full of tension, mystery, and moral message, the package appears to be merely competent science fiction. There is, nevertheless, a need for such at this age level, and the fans will enjoy it." J. C. Thomson

Library J 92:3184 S 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by Jonathan Segal

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p16 My 5 '68 100w

"The writing has pace, the plot is suspenseful, and the setting is filled with exotic charm and horror. A convincing fantasy. It ends with the boys' statement: 'We were going home, but only to arm ourselves and others. We would come back.' So will the readers." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:36 D 16 '67 160w

"The story is exciting enough, but all the original concepts—of the 'Capped' humans whose thoughts and reactions are controlled electronically by their masters and of a future society returned to medieval feudalism and chivalry—were introduced in the former book and no surprises are left."

TLS p1160 N 30 '67 90w

CHU, DANIEL. Passage to the Golden Gate; a history of the Chinese in America to 1910 [by] Daniel Chu and Samuel Chu; il. by Earl Thollander. 117p $2.95 Doubleday

325.2 Chinese in the U.S.—Juvenile literature 67-10546

The history of this "minority describes not only their customs and closely-knit social structure, but includes the Los Angeles Massacre of 1871, the Tong Wars and the opium dens of pre-1906 San Francisco. [Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"This is a much too brief account of the immigration of the Chinese people to the States from 1840 to 1910. . . . It is unfortunate that the authors present almost nothing of the cultural enrichment gained by our civilization with the advent of this race to our country. Style and content put this within the reading level of the young, but these readers lose out on the many things that could have helped in the appreciation of the Chinese."

Best Sell 27:429 F 1 '68 130w

"Accurate, undramatized history. . . . American laws limiting immigration from the Orient and the contributions of present-day Chinese-Americans might have had a fuller discussion. Nevertheless, as is the case with other titles in the Zenith series, there is nothing else covering the history of these immigrants at this length." S. M. Worthing

Library J 92:4620 D 15 '67 110w

CHU, SAMUEL, jt. auth. Passage to the Golden Gate. See Chu, D.

CHUIKOV, VASIL I. The fall of Berlin; foreword by Alistair Horne; tr. from the Russian by Ruth Kisch [maps by John Purton] [Eng title: The end of the Third Reich]. 261p $5.95 Holt

940.54 Berlin, Battle of, 1945 68-10059

A Russian general, the author of The Battle for Stalingrad (BRD 1962), presents a "military memoir of World War II. . . . Marshal Chuikov, the defender of embattled Stalingrad, . . . relates the exploits and operations of the 8th Guards Army (the 62nd Army of Stalingrad fame) from the Soviet-Polish border to its final storming of Berlin. [The author discusses] the operations against Poznan, Kustrin, and Berlin [and describes] his talks with General Krebs, Chief of the German General Staff, in Berlin on May 1, 1945." (Library J) Translated from the Russian, this book was first published in October Magazine.

"Chuikov is not only a successful and self-confident Soviet soldier but also an excellent propagandist for the Communist cause. . . . Part of the book might be of value to military historians. . . . [although] even a commander of an army comprised of 9 divisions, out of a total of almost 200. . . . represents a fairly limited spectrum of the over-all campaign. Marshal Chuikov tends to overrate his personal contributions and those of his units relative to the final outcome of the Soviet offensives of 1944-45." Eric Waldman

America 118:420 Mr 30 '68 470w

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 27:458 Mr 1 '68 550w

"[This is a] fluent, illuminating and surprisingly honest military history. But it is also a strangely old-fashioned book in praise of patriotism, convincing and often moving in ways that would be difficult, if not impossible, for a Western writer to carry off. . . . The marshal is a good Communist (or sounds like one) and parrots Communist dogma. That is perfunctory. What is real is his passionate belief that the Soviet cause was righteous and prevailed through the valor of the Soviet soldier. . . . Frank in rehearsing strategic debates, Marshal Chuikov has some notable reticences. The most serious, perhaps, is his silence on Soviet casualties. . . . He gives no credit to the considerable and crucial Allied military aid. . . . in the early days. . . . He minimizes throughout the contribution of other fronts against the Axis. . . . But there is truth here of first-rate importance. . . . [and] Marshal Chuikov shows himself a man of unusual sensitivity and charm." Gordon Harrison

Book World p8 Mr 3 '68 850w

"Although [the author's] style is somewhat polemical and didactic, he does give the readers a good understanding of Soviet tactics and the exploits of individuals. If the discerning reader can overlook some of the propaganda, he will obtain information about tactics, Soviet logistical difficulties, and will get a good look at differences between Soviet generals and methods of operation during the Stalinist period. . . . [The book] ends with an appeal for peace and warnings of the holocaust that could arise from nuclear war. For public and academic libraries." A. S. Birkos

Library J 92:4500 D 15 '67 180w

Reviewed by John Toland

N Y Times Bk R p1 Mr 17 '68 1300w

"What is truly astonishing about Marshal Chuikov's blow-by-blow chronicle of the final phases of World War II is the relative absence of platitudes. . . . What is even more astonishing is Chuikov's candor. . . . He is sharply critical of strategy and tactics laid down by his superior officers, from Marshals Rokossovski and Zhukov straight through the ranks of the Supreme Command to Stalin himself. . . . For military historians, Chuikov provides grist for their mill. For war buffs, he provides detailed tactical accounts of battles. For political historians, he raises anew the perennial mysteries of the last days of the Third Reich." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:96 F 19 '68 650w

TLS p162 F 15 '68 1950w

CHUJOY, ANATOLE, ed. The dance encyclopedia; comp. and ed. by Anatole Chujoy and P. W. Manchester. rev & enl ed 992p il $20 Simon & Schuster

793.303 Dancing—Dictionaries 67-28038

This revised edition covers various aspects of the dance, including "history, biography, terminology, choreography, music, stage design instruction, criticism." (Choice) For the previous edition see BRD 1949.

"The book's attributes include size (1,008 pages), almost twice the original edition, and scope (close to 5,000 entries and 274 photographs). . . . A particularly lucid introduction is contributed by Lincoln Kirstein. This and much more gives the Encyclopedia a highly compelling interest and, more pertinently, offers a source for comprehensive, penetrating information that professionals and amateurs alike will find invaluable. . . . Belongs in every arts library."

Choice 5:181 Ap '68 190w

"A welcome and needed revision of the most useful of all dance encyclopedias. . . . The format is roughly the same as that of the old edition but with larger and better type and many illustrations (the earlier edition had none). . . . The style is usually uncommonly graceful for a book of this type. . . . The editors emphasize ballet and other theatrical dances giving a minimal amount of information about ethnic and social dance. . . . The book's only weaknesses are insufficient bibliographical information for many entries and insufficient cross-references from article to article." G. L. Mayer

Library J 93:93 Ja 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:63 My 18 '68 180w

CHURCHILL, ALLEN. Over here! an informal re-creation of the home front in World War I. 240p il $6.50 Dodd

973.91 European War, 1914-1918—U.S. U.S.—Social conditions 68-16878

The author attempts to describe the spirit, the social background and the political attitudes of Americans from 1914 to 1919. He tells of "the draft, the training camps, the Liberty Bond campaigns, the men and women on the home front, the first American soldiers in France, the battles that followed, the peace conference and the defeat of the Versailles Treaty in the Senate." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] gives us the names of two magazine files, three newspaper files and about forty books consulted. There is not a footnote in the book. Nevertheless. . . . he has done astonishingly well. The chapters dealing with our leisurely decision to enter World War I are excellent. . . . The book will be especially interesting for those who did not live through World War I." Paul Kiniery

Best Sell 28:163 J1 15 '68 500w

CHURCHILL, ALLEN—Continued

"There is no indication that [the author] ever set eyes on Black Jack Pershing, or Woodrow Wilson, but he summons them from the shades with a remarkable power of evocation and the effect is startling. It shouldn't be, but it is. . . . What seems to this generation strange and new, and what gives the book its vivid coloration, is the evocation of the spirit in which this nation went to war and which persisted until Armistice Day. . . . Definitely a contribution to the history of that period." G. W. Johnson

Book World p4 Je 9 '68 650w

"[This popular account] suggests nothing quite so much as an undergraduate term paper that has got somewhat out of hand. All the familiar figures of the time, Woodrow Wilson, William G. McAdoo, Herbert Hoover, George Creel, and others, flit back and forth on Churchill's reportorial screen but their various appearances seem curiously flat and two dimensional. Mr. Churchill, author of Remember When [BRD 1967] . . . relied primarily on such books as Frederick L. Allen's Only Yesterday [BRD 1931] . . . and on such periodical publications as the Saturday Evening Post and the New York Times. This is clearly and admittedly not a scholarly study. . . . It adds little, if anything, to what is already available in the books included in his bibliography." R. A. Gray

Library J 93:1136 Mr 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by R. L. Tobin
Sat R 51:29 Jl 20 '68 370w

CHURCHILL, RANDOLPH S. The six day war, by Randolph S. Churchill and Winston S. Churchill. 250p maps $3.95 Houghton

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967- 67-29980

The story of the 1967 Arab-Israeli War. "Young Winston Churchill, who covered the war as a correspondent, is chiefly responsible for the military narrative, which is illustrated with . . . battle maps. His father [offers] a political analysis of the war's causes and consequences." (N Y Times Bk R)

"A hurried journalistic account by the son and grandson of the late Sir Winston Churchill. Reading their account is an exercise more in discerning the trends of current events than in evaluating any settled history. . . . Occasional chronological confusions give the impression at times that one is reading several different newspaper clippings, not all of which have been properly arranged and edited. While The Six Day War is of value as an introduction, to get a true picture of the events of last June we will have to wait for a more thorough analysis." P. J. Henriot

America 118:165 F ■ '68 600w

Choice 5:1025 O '68 180w

"[The authors] write and report from the Israeli side. The perspective will be useful to the uninstructed reader, though it is questionable at points. But the account of the Israeli victory, step by step, is stunning. It is all from one side, but the Israeli generals are obviously the best source, and no doubt they are professional as well as justifiably proud. The narrative is lucid, colorful, filled with good quotations, devastating—the reader feels as if he were riding an avenging hurricane." S. R. Davis

Christian Science Monitor pB14 N ■ '67 300w

"This is not only the first substantial book on the June Israeli-Arab war, but a very good one. . . . No library with this book need bother, in my judgment, with those thin and watery, quickly written non-books produced by several wire services and several journalists. . . . The Churchills' interest and their most forceful thrust concerns the military side of the war. . . . Their description of the political and diplomatic aspects of the war is weaker, and they fail to take up several important questions. Because the book is intended for a British audience, the Churchills pay some attention to the British press and governmental reaction. It should be added that Churchill's viewpoint (like this reviewer's) is decidedly pro-Israeli. But this neither detracts from its timeliness nor, obviously, from its appeal to American readers." H. J. Steck

Library J 92:4007 N 1 '67 260w

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 8 '67 140w

Reviewed by Leslie Roberts

Sat ■ 50:44 N 4 '67 470w

Time 50:119 O 13 '67 190w

Va ■ R 44:lxxiv spring '68 110w

CHURCHILL, RANDOLPH S. Winston S. Churchill; companion volume. v 1; pt 1, 1874-1896; pt 2, 1896-1900. 678;679-1290p ea $12.50 Houghton

B or 92 Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer

These two volumes are designed to supplement volume one, Youth, 1874-1900 (BRD 1966) of the author's biography of his father. The documents upon which that book is based appear in these companion volumes.

"My advice is to skip a good deal, especially in the first volume. There are interesting details of course, and some of them are new. The Buzzard papers, for instance, only came to light after the biographical volume was complete. . . . I would let the detail take care of itself and read this book as literature; not the life-record of a great statesman but as the letters of a great writer. For Churchill was a great writer, and these were the days when he was forming not only his life but his style. It was a vivid and personal style. . . . In these volumes we find an interesting article which [Churchill] wrote, but did not publish, at the age of 22. It is entitled 'The Scaffolding of Rhetoric,' and is a statesman's grammar of oratory. . . . Politics, adventure, personal philosophy, omens of the future, all are to be found in [these] early letters." H. R. Trevor-Roper

Book World p1 S 17 '67 1300w

Choice 5:112 Mr '68 190w

Reviewed by Drew Middleton
N Y Times Bk R p10 S 17 '67 900w

"The volumes contain some illuminating commentary upon Churchill by his contemporaries, and reviews of his first books. This rich and many-sided compilation is invaluable not only for its facts but for its revelation of Churchill's psychology during the early phases of his great career. The volumes contain much incidental material that will be of interest to students of British history. . . . [As one reads] it becomes plain that Winston Churchill was determined from the beginning to play a great part in British and, if possible world history. . . . These volumes contain a mass of new material pertaining to Churchill's capture by the Boers and his ensuing escape from the prison in Pretoria. His enterprising son has gathered some delightfully vivid letters written by other prisoners involved in the escape." Allan Nevins

Sat R 50:34 N 18 '67 1300w

"The first 'Companion Volume' [is] an outstanding example of the documentation with which [Mr. Randolph Churchill] proposes to illuminate and enrich his story. . . . Although the principal purpose is to support the narrative there is great pleasure to be gained in reading straight through, particularly in tracing the development of the subject's epistolary style and the beginning of his literary style. His letters are always racy and vivid, though usually dashed off without conscious art. The portrait of Sir Winston's parents which emerges in the main book largely from their own writings is here confirmed because they are given more scope to express themselves. . . . Sir Winston's letters from India are captivating in style and content. . . . The letters from Sudan and from South Africa show a great advance in poise without losing anything in vivacity. . . . The editing is excellent. A word must be spared for the sparkling brief biographies."

TLS p830 S 21 '67 900w

CHURCHILL, RANDOLPH E. Winston S. Churchill; 5v; v2. The young statesman, 1901-1914. 763p $10 Houghton

B or 92 Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 118:44 Ja 13 '68 200w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 220:144 D '67 600w

Choice 5:112 Mr '68 200w

Reviewed by Elspeth Huxley
Nat R 20:302 Mr 26 '68 1400w

Reviewed by D. A. N. Jones
N Y Rev of Books 10:33 My 23 '68 3700w

CHURCHILL, WAINWRIGHT. Homosexual behavior among males; a cross-cultural and cross-species investigation. 349p $7.95 Hawthorn bks.

301.41 Homosexuality 67-24652

The author, a clinical psychologist, builds his discussion partly on "the data compiled by [A. C.] Kinsey and his associates [Sexual Behavior in the Human Male, BRD 1948 and Sexual Behavior in the Human Female, BRD 1953] and the book Patterns of Sexual Behavior by [C. S.] Ford and [F. A.] Beach [BRD 1951]. He views homosexual behavior as within the normal range of behavior, and eschews the exclusively psychopathological orientation of Bieber and other psychoanalytic authorities. In presenting the cross-cultural evidence he distinguishes between societies which can be called Sex-Positive and those which are Sex-Negative, and discusses homosexual behavior within each of these types of society." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] comprehensive, scholarly survey of the literature. It is in this sense that the word 'Investigation' in the subtitle must be interpreted, for no original data are presented. . . . Throughout the book [Churchill's] presentation is thoughtful, clearly presented, and logically consistent. Highly recommended for the general audience, but also relevant for professionals." Choice 5:125 Mr '68 130w

"Some may well find sections overly philosophical and didactic, but this is a valuable, well-written, and carefully documented study of a very sensitive area. Recommended for subject collections and large general collections." George Adelman

Library J 92:3433 O 1 '67 170w

CHURCHILL, SIR WINSTON. Churchill: his paintings; a catalogue; comp. by David Coombs; foreword by Lady Spencer-Churchill. 272p il col il $15 World pub.

759.42 Paintings, English 67-24472

In this catalog of paintings, drawings and sculptures by the late British Prime Minister, the pieces "are arranged in a 'pictorial diary' of the painter's active life, according to the decades during which they were done (as closely as this can be estimated)." (Library J)

"Churchill took up the hobby of painting as early as 1916 . . . and progressed through a series of landscapes, mostly, (his portraits and still lifes are nowhere near as well executed as the landscapes), evincing a sequence of influences, mostly impressionistic . . . of areas in the south of France, in North Africa, in England, in and about Chartwell and Blenheim, and some even in North America (Canada for the most part). 73 of the plates are in full color. The remainder in black-and-white. He tried his hand at water-colors, oils and (it would seem) pastel crayon. The few sculptures are undistinguished."

Best Sell 27:299 N 1 '67 170w

"Mr. Coombs, assistant editor of the Connoisseur, believes that 'the worth of a work of art depends upon the worth of the person who produced it' and that 'Sir Winston's paintings are worth looking at because of the man who produced them.' The paintings are generally landscapes, seascapes, and portraits. This is a catalog then of the work of a man who was not a professional artist but who enjoyed painting. It is an appropriate purchase for the biographical sections of large public libraries." Delores McColm

Library J 92:4404 D 1 '67 140w

CHURCHILL, WINSTON. Heroes of history: a selection of Churchill's favorite historical characters all told in his own words from his four-volume A history of the English-speaking peoples; followed by a profile of Sir Winston himself drawn from autobiographical writings and speeches; pictures by Robert MacLean. 192p $4.95 Dodd

920 Heroes—Juvenile literature 68-27439

The sixteen biographical sketches range from Alfred the Great and William the Conqueror to Abraham Lincoln, Robert E. Lee, and Queen Victoria. Index. "Ages twelve to sixteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:657 D 21 '68 90w [YA]
Best Sell 28:276 O 1 '68 80w

"[The leaders] profiled in this attractive book in Churchill's own rolling prose [were] selected from his histories by five editors and not rewritten for young readers. . . . Teenaged history buffs will find much to ponder." Jean Baron

Book World p32 (children's issue) N 3 '68 170w [YA]

"Churchill's language . . . is magnificent. The historical accounts on the other hand are thin and for the most part standard fare." Henry Gilfond

N Y Times Bk R p62 N 17 '68 100w

"There is no particular continuity to the heroes . . . except that the editor considers them Churchill's favorites. . . . Any book which . . . whets children's appetites for such a classic outline of our history, is to be welcomed. Churchill's shrewd judgments, his clear-headed appraisal of the War Game, his touches of irony, expressed in majestic, well-balanced periods and striking epithets, will give them an ear for good writing even if the details required to satisfy examiners are lacking. . . . The rich double colour-pages symbolizing each subject are pictorially evocative and satisfying, well suited to the heroic grandeur of the style, but even young readers are embarrassed by the absurdities of interpretation in the lengthy captions. . . . Moreover, the marginal notes . . . are often misleading and sometimes downright foolish; a pity."

TLS p1381 D 5 '68 300w

CHURCHILL, WINSTON S., jt. auth. The six day war. See Churchill, R. S.

CIARDI, JOHN. An alphabestiar; il. by Milton Hebard. unp de luxe ed $5.95 Lippincott 811 67-28281

A book of poems.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 220:150 D '67 100w

"[This book,] boxed, illustrated, and handsomely embossed . . . reads as if it were written to fulfill a publisher's contract. John Ciardi has been, is, and can be a self-demanding poet of earned, selfless, and inadequately acknowledged virtue. But his 'Alphabestiar,' in spite of its self-consciously 'poetic' typography, is no more or less than witless prose, pretentiously published. The human impact of his lovely old poem on the 'Mystic River' is worth 2600 of the forced moralisms which burden this present alphabet." Philip Booth
Christian Science Monitor p16 N 9 '67 80w

"Ciardi is a man interested in tradition. His loving admiration for his European heritage and his forthright American wit makes [this] a zestful excursion. The poems, a reflection of feelings and ideas, range widely. . . . 'B is for Bombers, our national pride,' tell us where he stands on at least one issue, but then Ciardi never allows us to doubt where he stands on many issues. The two best poems are the lyrical and tender 'L is for love . . . and the pantheism of 'S is three grey SQUIRRELS/ at a Mayday in themselves (though it's November now)/ pinwheeling in that beech. . . . ' Ciardi's poetry pleases because of his creative mixture of detail and idea. The book is beautifully made and the wash illustrations [are excellent]. Recommended for public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:192 Ja 15 '68 170w

CIBA FOUNDATION. Symposium on Caste and Race: Comparative Approaches, 1966. Caste and race. See De Reuck, A. ed.

CICERO, MARCUS TULLIUS. Cicero on moral obligation; a new translation of Cicero's 'De officiis'; with introd. and notes by John Higginbotham. 214p $5 Univ. of Calif. press 170 Ethics 67-26959

This "work was originally intended . . . by Cicero for the instruction of his son, Marcus. It is a handbook of good conduct rather than a cogently-argued philosophical discourse. . . . The text used is that of Holden (Cambridge University Press, 1869) except where otherwise stated." (Pref) Chronological list of Cicero's works. Index of proper names.

Choice 5:618 J1 '68 60w

CICERO, M. T.—Continued

"There is every reason to welcome this complete translation. . . . The translator writes clear, fast-moving English. He has judiciously pruned certain flourishes of Cicero's verbosity, choosing to translate one word at times, when the great advocate could not resist writing two. The result, however, never abandons the original and never distorts. . . . The brief introduction contains the minimum background necessary. Its survey of influence overlooks Castiglione and Chesterfield, but its last two pages on Cicero's modern reputation are trenchant. The work requires a multitude of notes for today's general reader; here they appear partly as footnotes, partly at the back, and partly not at all." H. G. Edinger
Class World 61:254 F '68 200w

"Mr. Higginbotham's translation [is] . . . in one sense competent, acceptable and admirable, and at the same time unbearably undistinguished. . . . Mr. Higginbotham is lively in a way, but with a dull liveliness that brings out the worst, not the best, in his original. It may be that this translation, which is intended for classical background courses and presumably for Latinless readers, has aimed only at a sober competence; the notes are informative and the introduction is excellent."

TLS p1103 N 23 '67 650w

CICERO, MARCUS TULLIUS. On old age; and, On friendship; tr. with an introd. by Frank O. Copley. 115p $4.95 Univ. of Mich. press 878 67-11279

In these essays Cicero "puts his ideas into the mouths of distinguished Romans who are eagerly questioned by young listeners. . . . [In the first essay, Cato refutes charges against old age] from his own experience and the examples of others and concludes that his old age is joyful. In On Friendship, Laelius tells of his dead friend Scipio and defines what is necessary for real friendship." (Publisher's note) Glossary of proper names.

"A welcome addition to Copley's other distinguished versions of Latin authors, this volume contains a judicious essay on Cicero the man of letters and statesman and a full translation of both essays. . . . There are some brief notes. The translation is highly readable and intelligible. When necessary, Copley paraphrases without prolixity and the result is clear. . . . [He] avoids archaism. The book may serve as a model of practice in Latin prose translation, and it brings the two essays well within the range of Latinless undergraduates. Recommended."

Choice 5:44 Mr '68 110w

Reviewed by R. G. Schettler
Class World 60:393 My '67 310w

CICOUREL, AARON V. The social organization of juvenile justice; from the research program of the Center of law and society, Univ. of Calif, Berkeley. 345p $8.95 Wiley 364.36 Juvenile delinquency. Justice, Administration of 67-29850

In this analysis of the "everyday practices of the police, probation officials, and the courts, [the author, a sociologist] points out how these agencies actually generate delinquency by their routine encounters with juveniles. The organizational workings producing delinquency are examined in the activities of two police and probation departments of approximately the same size. Variations in law-enforcement activities are traced by examining cases from low- and middle-income families, in order to show differences in the administration of justice and how community political structure and departmental organization influence juvenile justice." (Publisher's note) Name index. Subject index.

"Cicourel challenges conventional sociological views of delinquency and raises a number of difficult and complex theoretical and methodological issues regarding the routine processing of individuals by complex organizations. Of particular importance is his discussion of the problems of objectification and verification in sociology. Despite his occasional obtuse sentences and the overuse of such words as 'articulation,' he has written a challenging book almost certain to stimulate discussion among sociologists." M. A. Forslund
Library J 93:92 Ja 1 '68 200w

"Cicourel's careful analysis of official records discloses the tremendous ambiguities that surround a juvenile's assignment to delinquent status. . . . This suggests that if we want to understand delinquency what we most need to study is the causes of the behavior of labelers and the consequences for children of being labeled. . . . Detailed analyses of interviews and documentary records show how the police balance the constraints of their jobs against the opportunities afforded by each case for personal and occupational aggrandizement. . . . [This book disappoints] by failing to make systematic use of the knowledge it contains about the organization of juvenile justice. Real analysis of the social structure which produces juvenile delinquency as a social fact goes by the board while Cicourel makes and remakes the point that delinquency is a socially produced fact."

H. S. Becker

Science 160:644 My 10 '68 650w

CIORAN, E. M. The temptation to exist; tr. from the French by Richard Howard; introd. by Susan Sontag. 222p $5 Quadrangle bks.

194 Philosophy, Modern 67-10242

A French-Rumanian philosopher "examines the existential themes of nationalism, death, and religion." (Library J) Originally published in 1956 entitled La Tentation d'Exister.

Reviewed by Daniel Stern

Book World p6 S 22 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 16 '68
850w

Reviewed by Bernard Murchland

Commonweal 89:446 D 27 '68 1150w

"[Cioran] deals with a variety of subjects in this collection of provocative essays. . . with the depth and imagination of both philosopher and poet. He is an interesting writer, and his presentation is often as illuminating as his ideas. . . . Mr. Cioran is an intellectual who is sincerely concerned with the problems of man, and a writer who tempts us to exist in a better fashion than we have before." Howard Ozmon
Library J 92:4004 N 1 '67 200w

"[The] lack of coherence between reality and language is the book's main theme, or rather its chief energizing force and occupation, since Cioran is so far from being a systematic thinker that even 'theme' is too circumscribed and official a word to describe the kinds of tasks his mind sets itself. [His writing is] impulsive, rash, extraordinarily subtle but also robust, immensely well provided with learning but never merely erudite, rapid, dizzying and dangerous. . . . [He has a claim] to be regarded as among the handful of forceful and original minds writing anywhere today. . . . That reason, thought, is our curse, causing us to 'acquire existence by division from our being,' while at the same time it remains true that it is our very nature to reason, is Cioran's obsession." Richard Gilman

New Repub 158:25 My 18 '68 2400w

"As Susan Sontag points out in her exemplary introduction, there is nothing fresh about Cioran's thought. . . except its formal fury. . . . Truths he utters ironically to expose the falsehood in them, while falsehoods receive the same treatment, so what soundness they have will shine through. He seems really to think that if he writes his lies like lies, that will excuse them, but what he risks by this tactic is revealing an essentially frivolous mind. At his worst he appears a world-weary wit out of Oscar Wilde, no more. . . . What Cioran would do without his belief in alienation, disease, and decline, is not clear; yet surely these ideas should be abandoned, unless he is willing to qualify them until they lose their usefulness to poetry." W. H. Gass
N Y Rev of Books 11:18 Ag 22 '68
3250w

CIPES, ROBERT M. The crime war. 207p $5.50
New Am. lib

364 Crime and criminals—U.S. Law enforcement 68-23036

"Cipes, a former federal prosecutor [maintains that] there is no great, new, threatening crime wave. . . [and that] the public, not realizing that a good 40 per cent of reported crime is for offenses of the vagrancy type, is brainwashed to believe that the only salvation lies in a 'crime war.' Cipes's thesis is that the hysteria generated by such unnecessary 'crime wars' plays into the hands of vigilantes, leads to harsh and repressive measures that do more harm than good, and acts as a roadblock to any sensible approach to the crime problem. . . . [He then] discusses the impact of recent Supreme Court decisions, attacks the overzealous use of informers . . . and describes the assembly-line justice, or injustice, meted out in People's Courts for petty crimes." (Sat R) Three chapters appeared previously in The Atlantic Monthly. Bibliography. Index.

"This book does not encompass all that its title suggests. Cipes dedicates a good part of it to the proposition that crime is a social problem. He then tackles specific abuses of criminal procedure such as the right to counsel, J. Edgar Hoover, confessions, publicity, J. Edgar Hoover, detention procedures, the prosecution complex, informers, and lastly, J. Edgar Hoover. The book is not really about the crime war so much as it is a collection of essays by a former prosecutor who attacks the illogical, illiberal, middle class status quo concepts of handling crime. No dollar-and-cents solutions are offered but the book is a readable, if disjointed, collection of essays on criminal law. For college and public libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:2684 J1 '68 110w

"In an election year in which 'crime in the streets' threatens to become a catch-all slogan playing on racist emotions and basic fears, this debunking book. . . . comes as a welcome appeal to reason. Its message is simple and important. . . . [The author] adopts the attitude that the criminal underworld, which controls literally billions of dollars in revenues, could not exist except for puritanical laws like those against gambling. He argues, in effect, for a permissive, wide-open society, and he ignores, as such advocates usually do, the evidence we have of what happens in such a society. . . . Failure to recognize such results, or indeed to find any significance in the power of the criminal underworld, constitutes a major flaw in an otherwise sound book." F. J. Cook

Sat R 51:29 Je 29 '68 850w

CIRKER, BLANCHE, jt. ed. Dictionary of American portraits. See Cirker, H.

CIRKER, HAYWARD, ed. Dictionary of American portraits; 4045 pictures of important Americans from earliest times to the beginning of the twentieth century; ed. by Hayward and Blanche Cirker and the staff of Dover publications. 756p $30 Dover

704.9 U.S.—Biography—Portraits 66-30514

"Except for Presidents, Vice Presidents, and Chief Justices of the United States, and First Ladies and White House hostesses, who are all included, the cutoff date set by the editors for this dictionary was 1905, which means that persons included had played a significant or notorious role in American life before that date. The portraits chosen, for the most part, show the sitters at the height of their careers. . . . When possible, three-quarter views of the sitters were chosen as the most representative. All the portraits show head and shoulders only, and they are uniformly scaled. . . . Names of painters, engravers, and photographers are listed when known. Each sitter is identified by name, dates, and occupation or profession." (Library J) Index by profession.

"This extensive gallery of Americans, involved in all endeavors . . . will serve libraries which are poor in portraiture. . . . Appendix matter cites picture sources, selected bibliography, and a list of portraits sought but not obtained. Especially fine is the subject approach, i.e. 'profession,' of the index which will really put the book to work. This kind of reference is of importance to the small or new library." Choice 5:460 Je '68 140w

"A considerable number of consultants, from all walks of life, aided in the formidable task of selecting the names of those to be included. The result is marvelously catholic in scope. The indexes, by profession or occupation, for example, include 77 categories, from actors to zoologists. Permission is given to reproduce the portraits, and when credit is necessary, and only then, credit lines are given. . . . In only 12 cases is more than one portrait of a sitter given. Invaluable to public libraries and useful to many special collections." M. E. Landgren

Library J 93:535 F 1 '68 200w

"[A] remarkable and monumental [book]. The 2 1/2 x 3 1/4" reproductions—arranged alphabetically, six to a page, well printed on coated stock—are from drawings, paintings, and photos, many of them rare. . . . How romantic to see the young Henry Adams and the young Maude Adams paired ■ if they were soulful contemporaries, or Increase Mather looking down his supercilious nose at Christy Mathewson while Edgar Lee Masters contemplates both of them in epitaphic silence." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:45 My 18 '68 100w

TLS p915 Ag 29 '68 300w

CLAIR, COLIN. Unnatural history; an illustrated bestiary. 256p il $5.95 Abelard-Schuman

398.4 Animals, Mythical

66-25012

This "account of mythical animals, insects, and birds resurrects the mythology of the centaur, mantichora, icy salamander, baleful basilisk, and many others." (Library J) Bibliography.

"A tradition of the medieval bestiary, one which lasted from the 4th Century to the 14th Century, included poor zoological observation and an insistence upon making the animals objects of theological symbolization. Colin Clair, author and journalist, gives the subject surface treatment, but he includes an introductory historical chapter and a short bibliography that may provide added reader impetus. There are 36 woodcut illustrations ranging from the 12th Century to the 17th Century. However, there is no index. For college, public, and, to a lesser extent, university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 92:4416 D 1 '67 120w

"The author's bestiary . . . includes Lions, Satyrs, Chimeras, Krakens, Mermaids, Tigers, Hydras, Basilisks and of course Dragons. I don't think Mr Clair is bold enough about dragons. He is cautiously liberal about Sea-Serpents, not even entirely discounting the Something in Loch Ness, but dismisses dragons as snakes. . . . This is altogether an excellent work of research, delightfully presented." Anthony Carson

New Statesman 74:849 D 15 '67 800w

New Yorker 43:191 O 7 '67 100w

"After sampling the text and the delightful illustrations, one can readily understand why the author chose to conclude this book with a brief essay on 'The Beginning of Zoological Gardens.'" Va Q R 44:xliv winter '68 120w

Va Q R 44:xliv winter '68 120w

CLAPP, PATRICIA. Constance; a story of early Plymouth. 255p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Lothrop Hopkins, Constance—Juvenile literature

68-14064

This novel opens as the Mayflower approaches the shore of America. The "heroine, Constance Hopkins, was a real person, as are all the other characters in the book except one—Minnetuxet, daughter of the Indian Samoset, who became Constance's good friend. The story is told through Constance's journal, which she began in November 1620, aboard the Mayflower as it lay anchored off the coast of the land she dreaded as dismal and fearsome. The journal concludes after her marriage in February 1626, when life in Plymouth at last held forth hope and happiness." (Book World) "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 119:656 D 21 '68 60w

Best Sell 28:63 My 1 '68 130w

"There hardly seems room for another retelling of the oft-repeated Plymouth story, but Patricia Clapp has given her new one such freshness and immediacy that it is certain to be a favorite with girls of today. . . . To her journal, Constance confides her inmost feelings and, with engaging frankness, gives a vivid picture not only of a bright, lively, often confused and fearful girl but also of the other settlers and of the hardships, tragedies and problems that beset the struggling colony. Readers will see in Constance a girl like themselves." P. C.

Book World p26 (children's issue) My 5 '68 250w

Horn Bk 44:328 Je '68 140w

"This is the story of the maturing years of an appealing teen-ager, who really had not wanted to leave the excitement of London for an unattractive wilderness. . . . A skillfully written, historically accurate romantic novel with a fine sense of time and place. An interesting note: the heroine is an ancestor of the author." C. A. Hough

Library J 93:1318 Mr 15 '68 120w

CLAPP, PATRICIA—Continued

Reviewed by Robin McKown
N Y Times Bk R p34 Ag 18 '68 300w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 80w

CLARE, JOHN. The wood is sweet; poems for young readers chosen by David Powell; introd. by Edmund Blunden; il. by John O'Connor. 96p $2.95; lib bdg $2.21 Watts, F.
821 Nature in poetry—Juvenile literature
63-18573

This poet's work "appeared in England during the . . . era that gave birth to Shelley, Keats, and Wordsworth. . . . [The poems in this selection concern] the seasons, love, nature, and small animals (the killing of a terrified badger by a band of villagers is the only grim selection.) [Index of first lines] Grade six and up." (Library J)

"[Clare's] poetry, generally lacking a metaphysical approach (and therefore the quality of immortality), cannot compete [with his contemporaries]. On its own terms, however, this collection of alliterative sonnets, ballads, and other verses is sweet and skillful. . . . These poems sometimes echo the greats, but Clare's deftness and originality are often evident in charming lines like 'all is gone and nothing but the grass remembers spring.' A few poems are reminiscent of [R. L. Stevenson's] A Child's Garden of Verses, but the bulk of them are truly romantic, filled with graceful images of unspoiled nature. The decorative pen-and-ink sketches are unimaginative, but the book is an adequate selection for libraries." Marjorie Lewis

Library J 93:13313 S 15 '68 120w

"One of the best non-fiction books in the children's lists this autumn. With his marvelous capacity for what Edmund Blunden's perceptive introduction calls 'seeing and in every way recognising the amazing fullness of life round his early home,' Clare is an excellent addition to this . . . series. The delicate rhythms spring naturally—and yet so individually—from the folk-songs Clare loved. The terrors and joys of a world that is anything but just a bit of old Arcady make this book something to be cherished." Charles Causley

New Statesman 72:712 N 11 '66 180w

"These poems were not written for children, but most of them have appeared in school anthologies, and tried favourites such as 'Little Trotty Wagtail' can be relied on to exercise their perennial spell over a new generation. The only obvious omission is the haunting poem 'Remembrances', in which Clare ruminates on the scenes of his own childhood. But everything in this collection will appeal to the thoughtful and sensitive young reader. John O'Connor's drawings pay respectful tribute to a great poet, and Edmund Blunden contributes a careful and loving introduction."

TLS p448 My 19 '66 110w

CLARK, COLIN. Population growth and land use. 406p maps $14 St Martins

301.3 Population 67-15941

The author of Conditions of Economic Progress (BRD 1940), maintains that "to a community living by traditional methods of agriculture an increase in population . . . is the only force powerful enough to make such a community change its methods so that it can become more productive. . . . [He examines] effects of increases in population and proposes measures for dealing with the problems that result. He considers the medical, historical, economic, biological and sociological factors of population growth, and discusses mathematical techniques for measuring them, as well as more specific problems such as the distribution of population between regions, towns and villages, and changes in land use in urban areas." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Etienne Van de Walle
Am Econ R 58:645 Je '68 1300w

"It is refreshing to read a book by a distinguished economist which is moderately optimistic without neglecting the realities of the situation. . . . Not everyone will agree with [Clark's] thesis that an increase in population will often force a traditional society to become more economically productive or that an affluent industrial society often attracts increasing numbers of people, resulting in urban congestion and blight, but these are challenging theses deserving of more research and analysis by social scientists. Recommended for college students and interested laymen."

Choice 5:379 My '68 200w

"For all those interested in the effects of population growth upon food production, land use, urbanisation and economic development. . . this book may fairly be regarded as indispensable. Mr Clark has assembled a mass of statistics upon all these related subjects which are presented with great lucidity. Thus, whether or not one accepts all the author's interpretations of his figures, one cannot but be grateful for so much solid and wide-ranging information. . . . Some may find the manner of reasoning disconcertingly abrupt. Long pages of clearly presented facts are interlarded with brief but sweeping judgments, occasionally seasoned with a witty aside. The book ends suddenly without general conclusions. . . . However a general argument does emerge."

Economist 224:221 J1 15 '67 1000w

"[Clark's] old interest in long-run trends, the old flair for empirical data and skill in their analysis, the dazzling breadth of knowledge, the critical sharpness, the subtle defense of an unspoken religious ideology—all are here, . . . but somehow, in spite of the excellence of particular sections, an overall integration is missing. . . . The general theme—clearly a major issue of today's world—gets lost from view or inadvertently contradicted in long stretches of irrelevant writing. The separate chapters, usually beginning or ending abruptly in picayune points have little structure. . . . Theory is clearly not Clark's forte. . . . Consider Clark's proclaimed association between population growth and social progress. . . . Most parts of the book are tangential or irrelevant to his major argument, and some of them are the most interesting. . . . His chapters on central topics in demography—fertility, mortality and population growth—are, in spite of their wide and esoteric coverage of the research literature, somewhat old-fashioned." Kingsley Davis

Sci Am 218:133 Ap '68 4000w

"This is an optimistic accessible important and unorthodox book. . . . [Despite] demographic increase [which] multiplies urban sprawl. . . . Dr. Clark is convinced, the earth will still provide for any foreseeable future. . . . Such a judgment from our leading agricultural economist is heartening. It is not entirely convincing. But that the demographic orthodoxy is probably wrong seems more than likely. Dr. Clark is encouraging, worth the most serious attention . . . and valuable, for he reopens what has seemed a closed debate."

TLS p1212 D 14 '67 800w

CLARK, DAVID ALLEN. Jokes, puns, and riddles; il. by Lionel Kalish. 288p $4.50; lib bdg $5.25 Doubleday

817 American wit and humor—Juvenile literature 67-19070

Contains "quips, daffinitions, and comebacks . . . selected for young people. There are jokes about sports, animals, and school; about motorcycles and space flight; about famous people and foreign countries." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Despite a definite but unavoidable family resemblance to the bible of all cataloged humor, the venerable Joe Miller Joke Book, this has some new versions of the old routines as well as some more recent types. . . . When the plaintive cry is heard in the children's libraries of the land—'Don'cha got any new joke books?'—then the true value of this gem will shine forth. . . . You'll be glad you have it, momentarily. . . . One note of warning: don't read it straight through yourself, it's likely to bend the minds of adults. The cartoonish illustrations might bring a faint smile to your curling lip, however." Marilyn McBeth

Library J 93:2536 Je 15 '68 180w

"[This book includes] every clean joke you ever heard or told throughout your adolescence, and perhaps your second childhood, too. [Clark] has slightly updated a few—like the one about the Idaho potato whose father would not permit her to marry H. V. Kaltenborn, because he's a commentator. . . . Mr. Clark has categorized [the jokes] into such groupings as absent-minded professors, doctors, insults, wisecracks, classrooms, women and men drivers and so on. He even has a chapter of those elephant jokes that once trampled so badly. The happy feature of [this collection] is not only that it's a good reference book but that it's inoffensive in content. A nice, innocuous, funny slice of comedy, for any youngster." Jerome Beatty

N Y Times Bk R p24 Je 16 '68 330w

CLARK, FRANK. Speed math. 123p $3.95
Watts, F.

511 Arithmetic 68-10369

"Mr. Clark shows how the associative, commutative, and distributive properties of numbers can be used as bases for simplifying and speeding up mathematical computation." (Library J) Index.

"The author does much verbal explaining, but his basic method is to supply enough different examples so that the reader can filter out the central abstraction for himself—rather like showing a child pictures of different kinds of chairs until he grasps the concept of 'chairness.' The examples themselves are interesting in another way. Mr. Clark's techniques include many (such as digit-sum checking and casting out nines) which were taught to our grandparents as regular procedure, were often skipped over in my own grade-school days, and now appear in the 'new math' only in connection with a careful explanation of why they work." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:338 Je '68 170w

"[The author] extends his text beyond Asimov's Quick and Easy Math [BRD 1964] by the inclusion of additional methods, additional subjects, more illustrative material, and problems for practice and so requires more mathematics background of his readers. The writing is clear and concise, though the great economy of words sometimes results in insufficient explanations. The index is adequate, but a better table of contents should have been provided. Good supplementary material for students in the new math programs and enrichment for those in the old, this might be useful for adults, too." J. K. Meyers

Library J 93:2545 Je 15 '68 130w

CLARK, G. KITSON. See Kitson Clark, G.

CLARK, GRAHAME. The stone age hunters. 143p il col il maps $5.50 McGraw

913.03 Stone age. Man, Prehistoric 67-15599

In a "reinterpretation of the culture of prehistoric man, [the] professor of archaeology at the University of Cambridge has synthesized new findings and theories in basic areas of paleolithic research: the changes in classification and nomenclature in human paleontology, the reinterpretation of the symbolism of cave art with new emphasis on its sexual meanings, and the growing belief that the change from paleolithic to neolithic culture was a gradual and continuous transformation rather than a 'revolution.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

*Choice 5:846 S '68 170w

"A well-reasoned, soundly documented and well-illustrated volume in the 'Library of the Early Civilization Series.' Not for the uninitiated or browsing reader; the abundance of technical terminology (without adequate definition) makes this suitable for those with some background in European prehistory. Academic, subject and large public libraries will find this book useful." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 92:2924 S 1 '67 160w

"Professor Clark gives us the anthropological and archaeological facts about the later phases of human evolution in a simple style and with beautiful documentation. He has a large series of original illustrations of tools, ornaments, and cave paintings, many of them in color. He uses cautiously the parallels with surviving populations that live by hunting, to elucidate the probable conditions of earlier cultures. If there is a disappointment for the non-specialist it is that he does not pursue the questions of the early stages of development of powers of symbolic representation, language, aesthetics, and religion. Of course the evidence is scanty." J. Z. Young

N Y Rev of Books 10:9 Mr 14 '68 450w

"[A] compact and masterly review of our knowledge of how men came to be urban and civilized. . . . There is a picture per page in this fine small book, many in color as glowing as those of the Baltic amber bear and the Australian spearpoint worked out of bottle glass. Most of the illustrations are freshly chosen, although some imperishable classics are also here."

Sci Am 218:146 Ja '68 400w

TLS p1336 N 28 '68 270w

Va Q R 44:cxxxlii summer '68 80w

CLARK, H. F. DICKIE-. See Dickie-Clark, H. F.

CLARK, HAROLD F. Classrooms on Main Street; an account of specialty schools in the United States that train for work and leisure [by] Harold F. Clark [and] Harold S. Sloan; pub. for the Inst. for instructional improvement, inc. 162p $3.95 Teachers college press 374 Vocational education. Schools—U.S.

Technical education 66-20307

An examination of "nondegree granting institutions that provide training and skills in some specialty area not found within the curricula of conventional public and private schools. [The authors], professional economists and government consultants, examine these specialty schools in terms of their origin, programs, attendance, tuition, faculty, and laws regulating their practices. This report is designed to provide counselors with a comprehensive picture of the type of instruction available and the choice of skills that can be learned in specialty schools." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Unlike the standard works in the field. . . this book has sacrificed depth for breadth, and attempts only limited coverage of each of the various areas included within the specialty schools. Though the factual data in this book are presented with little literary imagination, it remains easy to read. Recommended for undergraduate teacher candidates, and counselors."

Choice 4:1292 Ja '68 210w

"Not a critique. A stratified sample of about 500 catalogs was reviewed, about 125 schools were visited, about a score of conferences were held with employers of graduates, and relevant literature was reviewed. . . . The authors largely refrain from evaluation. . . . [However, this book] does inform or remind counselors and others concerned with advising students that specialty education exists as a potentially useful adjunct to their public school experience. . . . Not much assistance is provided in matching individual aspirations or abilities with jobs. Neither is there much aid to the counselor in predicting success in training or on the job. No vocational information is presented which is not already as conveniently available in other sources such as the Dictionary of Occupational Titles. The lack of new job information or organization also limits the unique usefulness of [the book] for students." J. W. Altman

Teach Col Rec 68:268 D '66 1550w

CLARK, J. DESMOND, comp. Atlas of African prehistory; maps drawn by Eve Kemnitz. 62p $32.50 Univ. of Chicago press

912.6 Atlases. Africa—Maps. Africa—Antiquities Map 66-22

"This 'boxed' atlas is comprised of two distinct sets: (a) 11 base maps with 26 overlays on a scale of 1:20 million; and (b) 1 base map with 12 overlays on a scale of 1:38 million. Set 'a' has base maps on geological, meteorological, and negatal matters; its overlays delineate sleeping sickness, prehistoric art, political boundaries as of 1965, middle stone age, etc. Set 'b' concentrates entirely on animal distribution; its base map, 'Simplified Vegetation,' supplies an informative backdrop, e.g. the range of the White Rhinoceros. A 62-page booklet comments on the transparencies and the status of African prehistory research, offers coordinates on fossil fauna, and gazetteers prehistoric sites." (Choice)

"Cumbersome, but like the continent it covers, well worth the effort of learning how to operate. . . . this companion atlas to W. W. Bishop and J. D. Clark's Background to Evolution in Africa expects more than prehensile skills from users. A combination of Africanist, anthropologist, earth scientist, and geographer is required if maximum information is to be lifted from these maps. Libraries deeply involved with African materials and study will value this ecological synthesis."

CLARK, J. D.—Continued

Choice 4:1099 D '67 250w

"The base maps of [set 'a'] provide a wide choice of ecological conditions which may have affected the biological and cultural evolution of man on the African continent. . . . A very large number of combinations is possible; by selecting, for example, map 9 (hypothetical vegetation zones, 150 percent of present rainfall, temperatures as today), and combining it with overlays 1 (drainage) and 23 (Neolithic industries of North Africa), the user can approximate conditions in the Sahara during the Neolithic Wet Phase. . . . The map and overlays of [set 'b'] provide outlines of present-day discontinuous distributions of seven mammals (for example, the white rhinoceros and the diadem monkey) and five bird species. . . . [This atlas] whets an Africanist's appetite for similar compilations of ethnographic, linguistic, and protohistoric data." N. J. Van Der Merwe

Science 159:292 Ja 19 '68 460w

CLARK, JAMES M. Teachers and politics in France; a pressure group study of the Fédération de l'éducation nationale. 197p $6.50 Syracuse univ. press

331.881 Fédération de l'éducation nationale 67-13494

A "monograph on the largest and most powerful teacher's organization in France, the Fédération de l'Éducation Nationale (85 percent of all elementary and secondary school teachers). Discusses its history, organization, and policies, concentrating on its political activities since World War II. Includes statistical data and two . . . case studies of the FEN in action. Main thesis: the FEN is a pressure group rather than a union. Demonstrates the importance of such pressure groups to the democratic process and how the focus of activity has changed from the Fourth to the Fifth Republic." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Clark rightly emphasizes the unique elements of cohesion that permit the FEN to remain autonomous. . . . In order to judge the effectiveness of the FEN as a pressure group, [he] offers case studies of the school laws of 1951 (loi Barangé) and 1959 (loi Debré). . . . [His] analysis of the loi Barangé is generally more detailed and more satisfactory than his treatment of the loi Debré. . . . A well-written, model case study of a major French interest group." B. E. Brown

Am Pol Sci R 62:275 Mr '68 700w

"An excellent monograph. . . . Highly specialized work, but interesting and well written. Fills a scholarly void with respect to our knowledge of Continental pressure groups."

Choice 4:718 S '67 200w

CLARK, L. R. The ecology of insect populations in theory and practice [by] L. R. Clark [and others]. 232p 11 $8 Barnes & Noble

595.7 Insects. Ecology

The authors present a "discussion of both the theoretical and practical aspects of the study of insect populations with general principles that apply to the study of populations of any animal." (Choice)

"As members of the Australian Division of Entomology and the Canadian Department of Forestry the authors have received the practical experience that is as necessary as training in ecological theory for a presentation of a well-rounded discussion of the dynamics of insect populations. Their chapter on the ecology of pest control especially reflects their concern for the practical aspects of ecology. An excellent reference volume."

Choice 4:1264 Ja '68 80w

"[This book] provides the first thorough, objective evaluation of enough of the results [of long-term studies of insect populations] to begin to make some real sense of the matter. . . . The details are spelled out in intensive accounts of ten of the best-studied insect species. Objectivity is achieved by the regular use of original data and lengthy quotations from the original authors. Much of the material had previously been limited to entomological journals and agricultural house organs and was not well known. . . . The book is at its best in its dispassionate review of earlier contending hypotheses and the small but growing set of case histories that are beginning to select among them. It also contains a good deal of practical advice for economic entomologists planning population studies. It is weak in its neglect of the mathematical theory of demography and competition. . . . The writing is also uneven and in spots distressingly pedantic or defensively vague. . . . but it will make valuable extra reading for both graduate students and professionals." E. O. Wilson

Science 158:622 N 3 '67 850w

CLARK, RONALD. Queen Victoria's bomb; the disclosures of Professor Franklin Huxtable, M. A., Cantab; a novel. 234p $4.95 Morrow

68-12148

In the days of Queen Victoria an English scientist, Professor Huxtable, discovers the atomic bomb. He supposes his weapon will, as a deterrent, put an end to war forever. He initially has two problems. "To be an effective threat the bomb must be demonstrated. To protect it from other nations it must be kept secret. His dilemma takes the professor . . . to India, the Crimea, Africa." (Christian Science Monitor) Eventually, he faces the problem of whether the bomb should be used at all.

"Clark spends an unnecessarily long time tracing the discovery and development of the nuclear device, but once Huxtable completes this work the story picks up in both interest and tempo. . . . [He] offers an interesting well-written and well-developed story along with a strong moral argument. He preaches no sermons against nuclear war, yet gets his point across with a subtle forcefulness that can not be missed." D. F. Sharpe

Best Sell 27:439 F 15 '68 700w

"[The author] is at his best bringing us the unmistakable voices of Queen Victoria, Lincoln, Florence Nightingale. Mr. Clark, the author of that perfectly sober non-fiction account of atomic power, 'The Birth of the Bomb,' uses his expert knowledge to keep his fiction possible—if most improbable. His feeling for history makes the past extraordinarily vivid, the voices of his well-known figures ring with conviction." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 14 '68 250w

"The purpose of the novel seems to be satirical, to parallel in Victorian terms the reactions of the 20th Century to the bomb's actual development. . . . As a novel, however, Mr. Clark's book is a failure. History cannot be distorted in any important particular, so we know in advance the outcome of all major incidents. There is little excitement, no surprise, no humor, and no genuine feeling. Even the hero is merely a cardboard figure whose sole purpose is to utter the pretentious clichés imposed upon him. Most irritating is the facile manner in which well-known figures appear, bring forth their famous phrase, and at once retire." T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:570 F 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ja 21 '68 160w

CLARK, RONALD W. The Huxleys. 398p 11 $8.95 McGraw

920 Huxley family

68-17745

A biographical study of the Huxley family. The first "half of the book is devoted to [Thomas Huxley]. . . . A short intermediate passage deals with the next generation, . . . most of the rest is devoted to Sir Julian and to Aldous Huxley, with shorter passages on many of the other . . . members of the family." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Gertrude Himmelfarb
Atlantic 222:88 Ag '68 950w

Reviewed by Leon Edel
Book World p1 J1 14 '68 430w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p13 J1 18 '68 250w

"The book is workmanlike and readable. It is best, as one would expect, on the scientific side; but, even on Aldous Huxley, the facts are there. There are enough photographs to demonstrate the astonishingly high standard of looks in the family. On the whole, though it is interesting, one cannot call the book a complete success. Families—particularly when they are brilliant and active in diverse fields—do not make a continuous story, and once the family broke up in the natural course, on the death of its founder, the book ceases to have much shape or continuity."

Economist 227:iv Ap 27 '68 320w

Harper 237:79 Ag '68 90w

Reviewed by A. J. M. Pedley
Library J 93:2647 Jl '68 110w

Reviewed by Calvin Bedient
Nation 207:376 O 14 '68 430w

Reviewed by P. P. Ardery
Nat R 20:867 Ag 27 '68 240w

Reviewed by Lawrence Graver
New Repub 159:15 Ag 10 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin
New Statesman 75:175 F 9 '68 550w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
N Y Times Bk R pl Je 30 '68 1050w

"Andrew, who won a Nobel Prize for work in physiology, is almost unknown to the public and therefore hardly gets mentioned by Ronald Clark. George Huxley, the eminent Greek historian, rates barely a line. In other words, this is not a definitive family history. . . . To be fair, it was essential to concentrate on the best-known Huxleys. But even the Big Three need more bringing to life than they get here. . . . Very little will excuse Clark's sketchy approach to Julian's biology and his philosophy of 'humanism,' which is now a major intellectual movement in Britain. This goes for Thomas and Aldous, too. . . . Fortunately, there are many anecdotes. . . . Those who 'want to read further,' as the textbooks say, can turn to Leonard Huxley's two-volume life of his father, Thomas Henry."

Newsweek 71:100B Je 24 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Neil McKendrick
Sat R 51:28 Ag 3 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Garrett Hardin
Science 161:1336 S 27 '68 400w

Reviewed by R. M. Adams
Sci Am 219:135 O '68 3450w
Time 92:72 Jl 19 '68 340w

"Mr. Clark's family-tree of three generations springing from T. H. Huxley contains some 120 names. The tricky art of multi-biography consists of selecting an attitude to life that in various degrees runs through a whole family, showing precisely how this worked itself out in a handful of its members while leaving room for rapid surveys of its outlying branches. [The author] tells most of his complicated story through T. H. and two of his grandsons, Julian and Aldous, whose mother was Julia Arnold, niece of Matthew. . . . When Mr. Clark has drawn all his threads together, The Huxleys looks very like what he intended it to be—a thoroughly family affair. Looking back at his family, this is no mean achievement."

TLS p448 My 2 '68 1700w

CLARK, THOMAS D. Kentucky: land of contrast. 304p $7.95 Harper

917.69 Kentucky—History 67-28804

The author has written a history of the state from the time of the pioneers such as Daniel Boone to the present day. He describes how "like other neighboring states Kentucky's progress has been handicapped from time to time—by divided loyalties during the Civil War, the poverty of Appalachia, and . . . in different politicians. [He discusses] Kentucky's contributions to American life . . . in journalism and literature, horse breeding and bourbon whiskey, and in native sons from Clay, Jefferson Davis, and Lincoln to Alben Barkley." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is an authoritative, well-written social history of the state and its institutions. Dr. Clark, a historian, . . . writes graphically of the family feuds, political corruption, and general apathy which for over a century kept Kentucky near the bottom of the nation in education, road building, penal policies, and mental health treatment. . . . [He also] examines contemporary problems facing modern Kentuckians. Recommended for public and college libraries." Suzanne Lennon

Library J 93:749 F 15 '68 100w

N Y Times Bk R p39 Ap 28 '68 230w

CLARK, W. HARTLEY. The politics of the common market. 180p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

320.94 European Economic Community. European federation 67-14848

"The author draws on documents hitherto unavailable outside the offices of the European Community to analyze the Common Market as a political institution which may render the traditional nationalistic governments of Europe out of date. . . . [He discusses] the distribution of power among member nations, . . . and the influence of Cold War politics on Common Market decisions. [He] explains the workings of the European Community, [and] shows what influences went into making it a . . . political force within the first nine years of its life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Within the limitations which he has set for himself, Professor Clark has provided a useful introduction; many of the criticisms one could make would be directed more toward the limitations than what was done within them. Yet there are criticisms to be made. Many statements in the book are too strong or potentially misleading, even when accompanied by qualifications. . . . More seriously, discussions of certain points are less complete than they need be. . . . [The book] does not say anything particularly new about the European Communities and does not provide as much information as it could and it should. However it is a useful introduction and is better than other attempts of its kind." R. L. Peterson

Am Pol Sci R 62:677 Je '68 750w

"[This book] will contribute substantially to a better understanding of both the Common Market and the European integration movement. . . . Clark, of the Department of Government at Carleton College, . . . [in his] detailed and satisfying description of the Community's structure . . . has separate chapters on the 'Council,' 'The Commission,' 'The Administration,' 'The Parliament,' 'The Court,' and 'Political Forces.' In these discussions he brings out the impressive extent to which custom has developed to supplement the formal rules of the treaty of Rome. . . . With his specialization in international affairs, he naturally compares certain Community problems with those within the United Nations. . . . One of his finest chapters is that on the Court. . . . [A readable] well-written volume." N. L. Hill

Ann Am Acad 374:186 N '67 300w

"The strength of the book lies in the discussion of the day to day operation of community political bodies and not in the somewhat sketchy treatment of the economic progress of the E.E.C. . . . Of particular value is the analysis of the probable role of the separate governing bodies in the future formation and implementation of foreign policy of the 'six.' Excellent correlative reading for courses treating the economic aspects of customs unions, and should be required reading for students working in the areas of international relations and political integration."

Choice 5:1336 D '68 220w

"[Clark who] rightly emphasizes that the idea [of a Pan-Europe movement] has caught on mainly among intellectuals and idealists . . . perhaps overestimates the strength of the movement towards a unified Europe, considering the tremendous power of nationalism during the 20th Century. This book will be of interest to both academic and large public libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 92:1838 My 1 '67 150w

CLARKE, ARTHUR C. The promise of space. 325p il $8.95 Harper

629.4 Space flight. Outer space—Exploration 68-17042

"Initially the author traces the history of space travel. . . . He then takes the reader through the problems of fuel selection, rocket dynamics and the multistage rocket. Next he presents the case for space travel around the earth. . . [offers] a study of recent lunar data and the Apollo mission with its goal of putting a man on the moon and returning him safely. . . [and considers] other members of the solar system, and possible plans for their exploration." (America) Annotated bibliography. Index.

CLARK, A. C.—Continued

"This interesting and current book contains excellent illustrations and photographs. It is not only valuable reading for space buffs but should bring science closer to the interested citizen who wishes to be informed about our first steps into space. It presents the farsighted view of current space research." R. H. Goldsmith

America 119:48 J1 20 '68 250w

"The discussion of such matters as rocket propulsion, the reasons for building rockets in stages, and the factors that control escape from the earth are as clear as can be found anywhere; and the exposition is enlivened by many anecdotes from Clarke's full store of memories of these last eventful decades. There are excellent chapters on the planets . . . and the prospects for life elsewhere. The completely non-technical reader will want to skip over some portions of the chapters on the physics of the solar system and the detailed workings of rockets and satellites, but these are readily spotted and can be passed by without seriously disturbing the book's continuity." Robert Jastrow

Book World p1 Je 30 '68 1300w

Reviewed by R. S. Potts
Library J 93:2888 Ag '68 170w

Reviewed by Collin Clark
Library J 93:[3337] S 15 '68 90w [YA]

Reviewed by T. H. Jukes
Nat R 20:1332 D 31 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Brenda Maddox
New Statesman 76:877 D 20 '68 280w

"There are some people . . . who feel that there are too many books on space travel. That may be a correct general observation; but the number of good ones is small, and even the good ones become slowly obsolescent. Therefore, notwithstanding the total number of space books, one that is up-to-date and good deserves a warm welcome. I hardly need to say that [this volume] fits this description; it is to be expected from the past activities of the author. . . . For the novice to the field it is a very fine introduction; for the 'old hand' it contains bits of information and speculation that come as surprises. At any event it is worth the time spent in reading it, even worth the time for several readings." Willy Ley

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ag 25 '68 750w

New Yorker 44:88 J1 27 '68 130w

Reviewed by E. M. Emme
Science 161:374 Ag 30 '68 550w

CLARKE, AUSTIN, ed. The plays of George Fitzmaurice, v 1. See Fitzmaurice, G.

CLARKE, JOHN HENRIK, ed. William Styron's Nat Turner; ten black writers respond. 117p $4.95; pa $1.95 Beacon press

813 Styron, William—The confessions of Nat Turner. Turner, Nat 68-27519

"In John Clarke's introduction and in nine essays by Lerone Bennett, Jr., Alvin F. Pousaint, Vincent Harding, John Oliver Killens, John A. Williams, Ernest Kaiser, Loyce Hairston, Charles V. Hamilton, and Mike Thelwell, William Styron's The Confessions of Nat Turner [BRD 1967, 1968] is attacked as a distortion of historical fact and of the life of Nat Turner, leader of a slave rebellion in Virginia in 1831. Rather than presenting Nat Turner as a married man separated by slavery from his wife and as a true revolutionist against an unnatural system, Mr. Styron is accused of emasculating Turner, portraying him as an indecisive, one-dimensional Hamlet in blackface, obsessed with erotic fantasies concerning white women. . . . The basic historical document on Nat Turner, the confession as reported by Thomas R. Gray in 1831, is appended." (Library J)

"Though they differ in their opinions as to whether or not Mr. Styron was conscious of what he was doing, the authors are all convinced that he has carried white racist attitudes into the novel, has failed to research the historical influences on Turner's character, and has deprived Turner of the purpose of his mission. All of them feel Mr. Styron has revealed himself, not Nat Turner; that he tries to escape the verdict of history embodied in Turner and his 'spiritual sons of the twentieth century'; and that Turner still awaits his true interpreter. . . . A necessary book for all libraries which have Styron's novel." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:2658 J1 '68 270w

Reviewed by E. D. Genovese
N Y Rev of Books 11:34 S 12 '68 6200w

"There are legitimate complaints, historical and literary to be made against Styron's book, and as presented by two of the ten essayists, Vincent Harding and Mike Thelwell, those complaints are cogently, even poignantly, set forth. . . . [However,] in drawing their charges, the essayists imply that . . . the historical evidence establishes clear patterns that run counter to those presented by Styron. . . . [But] the historical documentation [on Turner] is so skimpy and contradictory that only by embroidering or ignoring it (the very sins for which they denounce Styron) can the black writers in this collection establish their predetermined and dogmatic 'lessons.' . . . Styron's chief crime, it appears, is his refusal to reduce any man to caricature, whether as Hero or Oppressor." Martin Duberman

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 11 '68 2350w

"Clarke, associate editor of Freedomways Magazine, has assembled a talented and varied group of black intellectuals. . . . Because this book is angry and because it is so counter to the critical acclaim that met Styron's novel, there is an obvious temptation to cry black racism. But to dismiss [it] out of hand would constitute the rankest sophistry. This is an important book; it deserves a full hearing. . . . Many of the allegations . . . reduce themselves to matters of opinion regarding the literary license of a novelist. Styron's ability as a writer, and the autobiographical nature of Styron's Confessions. Here the criticism is telling. Ultimately at issue between Styron and his critics, however, is a conception of history—a search for meaningful, 'usable past.' . . . Like the best of the New Leftists [the writers] score effective blows against the smugness of America's conception of her past. In the worst tradition of New Left historical interpretation, however, they insist on a total vilification of the establishment, liberals included, and a corresponding deification of radicals." E. M. Thomas

Sat R 51:23 Ag 17 '68 1850w

Reviewed by Michael Cooke
Yale R 58:295 D '68 2400w

CLARKE, MARY STETSON. Pioneer iron works; ill. by Josua Tolford. 80p $4.25; lib bdg $3.97 Chilton co.

672 Saugus Iron Works—Juvenile literature. Iron industry and trade—Juvenile literature 68-21134

"Not many years after the settlement of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, the Saugus Iron Works was founded at the village of Hamersmith, now Saugus. . . . [The author] has recreated the Massachusetts village as it was in the mid-1600s, telling the manner in which the iron works were constructed and taking the reader on a tour of what was considered one of the wonders of the New World." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. 'Grades five to eight.' (Library J)

"The entire process of the Ironworks is explained with clarity. . . . [The book] will inform young readers and help them to understand some of the modern developments in the iron and steel industry. [It] is recommended for library acquisition."

Choice 28:111 Je 1 '68 80w

"Mrs. Clarke has recreated [the] town and its reason for being, the hardships and dangers which confronted the varied population of Puritans, Scots, prisoners purchased from England, Welsh and English ironworkers, and indentured servants. [Her] explanations of each step in the operation of the crude, dangerous, but effective machinery are quite technical. Drawings and sketches illustrate unfamiliar terms with precision. This book will be of particular interest in Massachusetts and the New England area where it can encourage a visit to the Ironworks Restoration in Saugus, but it is also useful for general collections, particularly in school libraries." Julia Russell

Library J 93:3966 O 15 '68 180w

CLARKE, MARY WASHINGTON. Jesse Stuart's Kentucky. 240p $6.95 McGraw 818 Stuart, Jesse 68-18575

The author describes the Appalachian novelist/poet's "use in his work of the Kentucky hill community traditions of song, story, sign, and superstition. She reviews his use of hill community religious, social, and ethical practices and includes a discussion of the picture he gives of the economic problems and mode of living of the hill community farmer and worker. Miss Clarke places special emphasis on Stuart's experiences as a teacher." (Library J)

"[A] well-written and interesting book. . . . Originally submitted as a doctoral dissertation at the University of Pennsylvania in 1960, the book is based on sound scholarship and a sympathetic appreciation of Stuart's achievements. [It] should appeal to scholars and general readers interested in Mr. Stuart's work and in the traditions of one region of the nation. It is suitable for collections in college, university, and large public libraries." D. R. Picht

Library J 93:3561 O 1 '68 180w

"For those already familiar with the work of Jesse Stuart, . . . this critical study will appear as a long-deserved tribute to an honest man and an honest writer. For others it will serve as a suitable introduction to Stuart's books. It gives little more than hints, however, of the tragedy and ugliness which the greed of industry has inflicted upon this region; nor does [the author] convince me that Stuart, for all his virtues, is more than a good regional writer." Edward Abbey
N Y Times Bk R p36 C 27 '68 90w

CLARKE, ROBIN. The silent weapons. 270p $4.95 McKay

358.3 Chemical warfare. Biological warfare 68-18469

The author "writes about nerve gases that kill instantly, aerosol spray that will spread plague, a few pounds of botulism toxin which could poison metropolitan water supplies and kill millions." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. C. Cowen
Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 15 '68 450w

"Clarke, a British science writer and editor, reveals an amazing amount of frightening information [here]. . . . The book, which is well written and documented, contains a bibliography for those readers who want to know more about methods of genocide. . . . There is no doubt that [this] should be made available. Books like [this] are written so that people may read about man's inhumanity to man." M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:2253 Je 1 '68 190w

"Clarke modestly acknowledges at the outset that his book is essentially a synthesis of previously published materials. Nevertheless, he has produced a useful primer on the scientific, strategic and political aspects of [chemical and biological warfare]." D. S. Greenberg

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 9 '68 750w

CLASSIC cars in Profile. nos. 1-24, 25-48; general ed: Anthony Harding; with ill. by Gordon Davies [and others]. 2v ea $12.95 Doubleday 629.2 Automobiles—History

These two volumes bring together the first forty-eight issues of the two-year-old British "Profile" series. "Each volume contains 24 10-page profiles that give a capsule history of individual cars. These profiles are written by different authors who tell about some of the manufacturing history, track events, and other [details]. . . . The authors give explanations and descriptions of some engineering developments that made these cars famous. They also give engine and body specifications." (Library J)

"This handsome two-volume set portrays ■ delightful potpourri of historic automobiles. . . .

The books are enhanced with photographs, diagrams, and many beautifully hand-colored illustrations. . . . The selections are mostly of European origin and the stateside enthusiast will have to be content with the Stutz, Cord, Model T Ford, Duesenberg, and Mustang. There are included, however, many Grand Prix and other competition cars in addition in the usual sedans and roadsters. Classic car buffs the world over will find this set fascinating. Recommended for automotive collections." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 93:566 F 1 '68 180w

"This is the single really important auto-book publication of the year. . . . The profiles are original—not rehashes—and frequently delightfully opinionated. The information is detailed and accurate; the only carp is over occasional slight pictorial distortions (e.g. tire sizes) in some of the color drawings. The title is misleadingly modest: classics are covered, but so also are antiques, racers, sports cars and the ubiquitous 'special interest' cars. There is no particular rhyme or reason to the order of selection, which is itself refreshing." Elliot Fremont-Smith

N Y Times Bk ■ p64 D 10 '67 290w

CLAUDE BERNARD and experimental medicine; collected papers from a symposium commemorating the centenary of the publication of An introduction to the study of experimental medicine and the first English translation of Claude Bernard's Cahier Rouge; ed. by Francisco Grande and Maurice B. Visser. 210,120p il $8.95; pa $4.95 Schenkman pub.

612 Physiology. Science—Philosophy 66-23043

"The first half of this volume is composed of the papers delivered at a symposium held at the University of Minnesota on April 16 to 18, 1965. . . . The second half consists of the first English translation of the complete Cahier Rouge in which Bernard jotted down his scientific and philosophical thoughts and ideas during the decade from 1850 through 1860." (Library J)

"These papers by an impressive group of authorities from this country and abroad present some interesting and informative views on both the scientific and philosophical aspects of Bernard's work. . . . [And the] fascinating and provocative journal [the Cahier Rouge] deserves a place in any history of science or history of civilization collection. The whole book is strongly recommended for all college, medical, and large public libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 92:1844 My 1 '67 130w

"The papers [included here are] of mixed quality, several serving as little more than 'celebrations' of the French physiologist, others attempting serious historical analysis." Everett Mendelsohn

Science 160:654 My 10 '68 240w

CLAWSON, MARION. Economics of outdoor recreation. by Marion Clawson and Jack L. Knetsch; pub. for Resources for the future, inc. 328p $8.50 Johns Hopkins press

333.7 Outdoor recreation 66-16040

This volume presents an analysis of "all aspects of outdoor recreation research. Divided into five parts, [it] provides the reader with a progression from an introductory glossary through an analysis of demand and supply, economic considerations, and the need for further research. . . . to a clarification of the major issues of public outdoor recreation policy." (Library J) Index.

"[The authors] summarize the arguments concerning policy issues rather than advocate specific policies. Clawson and Knetsch direct their book primarily toward park and recreation workers and students in the field of outdoor recreation rather than toward professional economists. But economists concerned with outdoor recreation will find much of interest in the economic analysis and in the discussion of policy issues. . . . The attempt to remain neutral on policy issues and to present pro and con arguments leads to discussions that are not as incisive and clear as they could be. . . . This book performs an important function by employing an analytical approach in the discussion of problems of outdoor recreation.

CLAWSON, MARION—Continued

Earlier discussions usually lacked such an approach. By bringing together widely scattered materials and presenting them in an integrated and consistent manner, the book also serves a useful function. It should provide both a starting point and a stimulus for further research on this topic." R. L. Pfister

Am Econ R 57:1406 D '67 1000w

"This important study, by two members of the Land Use and Management Program of Resources for the Future, Inc., provides a needed basis for the evaluation in economic terms of outdoor recreation. For academic and larger public libraries." W. C. Roselle

Library J 91:6077 D 15 '66 140w

CLAYPOOLE, JAMES. Letter book: London and Philadelphia, 1681-1684; ed. by Marion Balderston. 256p il $7.50 Huntington lib.

920 Claypoole family. London—Commerce. Pennsylvania—History—Sources 66-25063

This is a collection of letters by a London Quaker merchant who migrated to Philadelphia in 1683. The editor has prepared an annotated introduction to tell the reader "about Claypoole and his family. She intersperses . . . notes between the letters in the body of the book, lists the 'Masters and Their Ships Mentioned by Claypoole' in an appendix, and [includes an index]." (J Am Hist)

"There are some fascinating letters in the middle of the book indicating the general hopes and anxieties as well as the particular plans of a London merchant migrating with his family to the new colony. . . . But there is tantalizingly little in the letters concerning Claypoole's influence on and relations with Penn; there is not much about the Frame of Government; and the letter book ends before Claypoole's worst troubles with the Free Society began. . . . For the introduction the editor has done extensive research to uncover the details of Claypoole's life, although many questions are left unanswered." A. G. Olson

Am Hist R 73:588 D '67 380w

"Mrs. Balderston's selection from the letter-book in the possession of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania is . . . important to economic historians. . . . Bills of exchange dominated [Claypoole's] life; the letters are a valuable illustration of their role in England's overseas trade at this time. . . . The moralizing in his letters, and his cheating the Customs, should be of interest to students of Protestant business ethics." K. G. Davies

Engl Hist R 83:841 O '68 260w

"[Claypoole] wrote some fascinating letters during the early 1680s; but he also droned on with dull business details and pious religious sentiments in others. . . . [He] wrote most of these letters from London before he sailed for America. . . . [They] indicate the wide range of commercial ventures which claimed his attention. And as a member of the inner circle of Quaker leaders in London, Claypoole entertained George Fox, corresponded with Robert Barclay, and was an associate of William Penn. This volume makes accessible valuable primary materials which will be used by scholars in a variety of ways." E. B. Bronner

J Am Hist 54:384 S '67 210w

CLAYTON, JOHN JACOB. Saul Bellow: in defense of man. 273p $6.95 Ind. univ. press

813 Bellow, Saul 68-14599

In this study of the American author's "fiction, Mr. Clayton finds three interrelated contradictions in Bellow's work. First Bellow takes a stand against the cultural nihilism of the twentieth century; . . . [yet he is] essentially a depressive, whose imagination is as horrified by the emptiness of modern life as is Ionesco's. . . . [He] rejects the tradition of alienation in modern literature and emphasizes the value of brotherhood and community, yet his main characters are masochists and alienated people. . . . [He] is especially hostile to the devaluation of the 'separate self' in modern literature [but] . . . has been forced to discard individuality. . . . Mr. Clayton ends by analyzing the unity of Bellow's fiction and his development as a writer." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Clayton of Boston University has written a readable and fluent study of Bellow's philosophy, and, to a much lesser degree, his aesthetics. . . . Bellow's deep roots in Jewish culture and his feeling for the American scene give him special perspectives that perhaps lead to ambiguity and contradictions in his novels. Mr. Clayton's study will be useful in collections where a solid critical work of this important American author is needed, but the book will appeal to the specialist rather than to the general reader." E. J. Gaines

Library J 93:2242 Je 1 '68 130w

"[The author] by emphasizing the contradictions in Bellow's work. . . . What Clayton doesn't seem to understand, or at least doesn't make much of, is the fact that these contradictions are the secret of Bellow's power as a novelist. . . . [However,] Clayton has read the novels closely and comes up with some original and interesting interpretations. . . . He always stimulates the reader and often wins his assent." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:26 Je 22 '68 360w

CLAYTON, RICHARD. See Haggard, W.

CLEARY, BEVERLY. Mitch and Amy; il. by George Porter. 222p $3.75; lib bdg $3.56 Morrow

67-1293

Mitch and Amy Huff were nine-year-old twins. "Amy could not resist taunting Mitch over his reading difficulties, yet she was the one who finally found the book her brother first read independently. When Mitch unwittingly became the target of the school bully, Amy kept Mrs. Huff from interfering, and together they handled the problem in their own way." (Publisher's note) "Ages nine to eleven." (Sat R)

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p15 Mr 9 '67 170w

"Probably only a parent of twins could create so convincing a pair as . . . Mitch and Amy and could write about them so realistically and so unsentimentally. Passionately loyal to each other, yet frequently indulging in spontaneous bickering, the two will quickly find place among the other favorite Cleary characters. . . . The author brings to her writing her usual easy humor and sensitivity to the sights and sounds of school children." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 48:346 Je '67 120w

"This is an idealized portrait of life in a well-run, middle class household. The plot, alternating in point of view between brother and sister, consists of a series of everyday activities, such as school and scout projects and meeting new friends. Too much homey detail slows the story, making this a book for more patient readers than those devoted to Henry Huggins [Henry and the Clubhouse, BRD 1963] and friends." Elena Flant

Library J 92:2019 My 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:36 Mr 18 '67 200w

CLEARY, BEVERLY. Ramona the pest; il. by Louis Darling. 192p $3.75; lib bdg $3.56 Morrow

68-12981

A story about a five-year-old girl. "Ramona Quimby, the spirited small girl, who has often been a nuisance to Henry Huggins and others of her neighborhood, is delighted with kindergarten and her pretty young teacher. She lustily sings the song about the 'Dawnzer lee light,' wondering what kind of lamp a 'dawnzer' is. On Show and Tell Day she enthusiastically presents her doll, named Chevrolet, whose hair she has tinted green. She also decides to marry Henry Huggins, to Henry's dismay. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p24 S 8 '68 210w

"Eight-year-old girls, their own beginning schooldays still close, should empathize as Ramona starts her kindergarten record with a series of misdeeds, unintentional and otherwise. Boys will probably say: Yeah, just like a girl!" P. M. D.

Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 2 '68 80w

Reviewed by E. L. Heins

Horn Bk 44:419 Ag '68 260w

"Whether or not they have met Ramona in other Cleary books, children will enjoy reading this very funny story to themselves. Adult-child relationships are humorous and perceptively handled." Jessica McDaniel

Library J 93:2536 Je 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Ellen Goodman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 My 5 '68 250w

"Writing a book about a five-year-old that older children will enjoy is an art, and in this story Beverly Cleary has created a comic and endearing character in the irrepressible Ramona."

Some of the scenes—such as the one in which Ramona makes abortive attempts to be the best restler in the class—are priceless." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:38 My 11 '68 100w

CLEATOR, P. E. Exploring the world of archaeology; designed by Mary Gehr. 141p il col il col maps $3.95; lib ed $4.50 Childrens press

913.03 Archeology—Juvenile literature. Civilization, Ancient—Juvenile literature

66-7931

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by E. F. Ridington

Class World 61:220 F '68 50w

Reviewed by Charles Thomas

New Statesman 75:699 My 24 '68 70w

Social Studies 59:44 Ja '68 100w

CLEAVER, BILL, jt. auth. Lady Ellen Grae. See Cleaver V.

CLEAVER, ELDRIDGE. Soul on ice; with an introd. by Maxwell Geismar. 210p $5.95 McGraw

301.451 Negroes

67-27277

In a collection of essays and open letters written from California's Folsom State Prison, the author, an Afro-American now on the staff of Ramparts magazine, writes about the forces which shaped his life. There are sections "on the Watts riots, on Cleaver's religious conversion, on the black man's stake in the Vietnam War, on fellow-writers and white women." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Atlantic 221:106 Je '68 1600w

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 40w

Reviewed by Jervis Anderson

Commentary 46:63 D '68 4850w

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff

Commonweal 89:359 D 6 '68 40w

"While serving a long prison term Eldridge Cleaver . . . discovered his blackness. In this collection of essays and letters he struggles with the spiritual and intellectual significance of that discovery. . . . Recommended as further testimony to the fact that Fanon is the new king to the black radical." Janet Freedman

Library J 93:564 F 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:1822 Ap 15 '68 200w [YA]

"Unsparring, unaccommodating, tough and lyrical by turns, foolish at times, unconvincing in many of its specific ideas but extraordinarily convincing in the energy and hard morale of its thinking, painful, aggressive and undaunted, Soul on Ice is a book for which we have to make room—but not on the shelves we have already built. . . . For Cleaver, the [attempt is] . . . to be Negro, with no concessions, no adaptations to white expectations, but at the same time to hold back from excess; it is to be able to invent myths and intellectual schemes for holding Negro experience and providing for a Negro future, but at the same time to distinguish in the white-controlled present whatever has remained human and might recommend itself as ally. . . . His writing remains in some profound sense not subject to correction or emendation or, most centrally, approval or rejection by those of us who are not black." Richard Gilman

New Repub 158:25 Mr 9 '68 3450w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:12 D 19 '68 1400w

"Cleaver is a 33-year-old black man, an ex-convict and former Muslim whose book . . . strongly affirms what the Commission on Civil Disorders just told us about our country. . . . He is not a nihilist like so many of his contemporaries who share his revolutionary zeal more than his sense of history. He can tear the system apart, but, unlike them, he has a few ideas about how to put it back together again." Charlayne Hunter

N Y Times Bk R p3 Mr 24 '68 1100w

"[Cleaver] has produced an original and disturbing report on what a black man, reacting to a society he detests, reacting to life behind bars for nine years, finally becomes. The shock treatment starts with Chapter I. . . . Hatred remains the theme of most of the book. . . . [Its] sweeping generalizations are typical of the propagandist. . . . [However], in those essays where he manages to get away from his fix on Whitey, Cleaver shows that he can write. . . . The final essays on masculinity and mass entertainment in America, and the sex drives there, are original and often quite funny. Cleaver can be a mature, perhaps even a great writer when he learns who his real foe is." Gertrude Samuels

Sat R 51:31 Mr 9 '68 850w

Reviewed by Michael Cooke

Yale R 58:102 O '68 2500w

CLEAVER, NANCY, jt. auth. The legend of the willow plate. See Tresselt, A.

CLEAVER, VERA. Lady Ellen Grae [by] Vera and Bill Cleaver; il. by Ellen Raskin. 124p $2.95 Lippincott

68-10981

In this sequel to Ellen Grae (BRD 1967), the eleven-year-old tomboy is sent from her home in Florida "to Seattle with her . . . Aunt Eleanor and her Cousin Laura to learn how to become a lady." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six" (Library J)

"[The authors include] a good portion of harmless, necessary horror and fine, purple prose. . . . I enjoyed the book and found it too short. The authors left me wishing to know more about the neighbors . . . and hungering for more adventures in Seattle: Ellen's contretemps with a garter belt, the saga of the home permanent, and the false eyelashes at $6.00 a set. Girls and people who have been girls, and males as well, will probably enjoy this book. It is a nightshade sundae, but the helping is too small." Martha Bacon

Atlantic 222:148 D '68 400w

Book World p22 (children's issue) N 3 '68 180w

Horn Bk 44:559 O '68 230w

"The Cleavers have squandered their considerable writing talents on a sequel that subverts the essence of the excellent Ellen Grae. . . . [The heroine is] transformed from the first book—in which she was sensitive enough to become feverish over an ethical dilemma in honesty and responsibility to others—into a child who gambles and wins with a possible suicide that would leave someone else gathering guilt. This time, she doesn't notice that honesty and responsibility to others are central here, too. The Cleavers write well—but they either didn't realize what they created the first time or don't see how they've devalued Ellen Grae in attempting to trot her out again." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:3966 O 15 '68 240w

Reviewed by Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 8 '68 190w

"Ingenuous and ingenious, Ellen Grae is a marvelous character, whose troubles are less serious here than they were in the first book." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 110w

CLEBSCH, WILLIAM A. From sacred to profane America: the role of religion in American history. 242p $5.95 Harper

261.8 U.S.—Religion. U.S.—Church history. Church and social problems 68-11730

A professor of religion and humanities analyzes the influence of religion on American society. He maintains that "having stimulated and initiated a campaign in some area or other (education, pluralism, social and personal ethics, equality and nationality are each discussed at some length), the churches have found that their success was snatched away by society as a whole. This is the definition emphasized for the term 'profane.'" (Christian Century)

"[The author implies] that the fulfillment of church-initiated campaigns often outgrew

CLEBSCH, W. A.—Continued

the churches themselves. . . . The application of this thesis to education and the social gospel reveals no surprises to those familiar with American historiography. The studies of equality and nationality, on the other hand, seem both fresher and more dubious. Clebsch has done some work in manuscripts in the Huntington Library and effectively quotes from this material, especially in the chapter on social ethics. . . . Those seeking forthright conclusions drawn from the insights of the earlier chapters will be disappointed to discover that they must be found, if anywhere between the lines. . . . The chief difficulty with the book as a whole lies in its lack of lucidity." E. R. Sandeen

Christian Century 85:590 My 1 '68 700w

"Prof. Clebsch has a fertile mind and this volume fairly bursts with fresh ideas. Sometimes profusion confuses. This is especially the case as he engages in several shifts throughout the book, from a schematic to a chronological approach, from the analysis of 'campaigns' to that of 'cities' in the last chapter, and often from one set of terms to another as he makes these various shifts. But the basic thesis is clear and he has succeeded in carrying the conversation about the relation between religion and American life to another level. . . . His volume is a warning that too often and for too long a time this interaction has been greatly oversimplified." J. H. Smylie

Commonweal 89:33 O 4 '68 1150w

Critic 27:78 Ag '68 100w

"Mr. Clebsch has written a brilliant summary of American history as influenced by religious forces, showing 'how pluralistic religion can serve a pluralistic society.' His book is recommended for academic and larger public libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:4506 D 15 '67 130w

Reviewed by C. A. Holbrook
New Eng Q 41:469 S '68 800w

CLEGERN, WAYNE M. British Honduras; colonial dead end, 1859-1900. 214p maps $4.50 La. state univ. press

972 British Honduras—History 67-11686

"A study of 19th-century British Honduras, documenting its political growth from the settlement of Belize to the Colony of British Honduras." (Choice) Portions of the text have appeared in The American Journal of International Law and The Americas. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This volume documents the frustration implicit in its subtitle. In considerable detail it traces the internal politics of British Honduras over four decades and provides extended treatment of diplomatic questions relating to boundary controversies, especially those arising from the British treaty with Guatemala in 1859. . . . The author notes that British Honduras is 'one of those places brought from obscurity by recurrent dispute' and that political narrative of its late nineteenth-century history is relatively absent. This small gap now seems adequately filled by Clegern's researches into documents and local newspapers. For some time to come it is doubtful if a major need will arise to reconstruct much further this anatomy of futility." H. F. Cline

Am Hist 73:633 D '67 400w

"Clegern's literary style is commendable; his documentation is thorough. Foreign Office files and contemporary sources serve as the basis of his documentation. Although the audience will be limited to a few scholars interested in the Caribbean and the Empire, [this] is a solid scholarly work on a relatively insignificant area of the Empire which has received small attention from historians."

Choice 4:1040 N '67 180w

CLEGG, CHARLES, ed. The Lucius Beebe reader. See Beebe, L.

CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE. See Twain, M.

CLEMENT, M. O. Theoretical issues in international economics [by] M. O. Clement, Richard L. Pfister [and] Kenneth J. Rothwell. 449p $6.50; pa $5.25 Houghton

382 International economic relations 67-1952

The purpose of this book is to review "subject areas in international economic theory which in particular have received widespread and intensive attention in the last two decades and in which signal contributions have been made. . . . Each of the chapters is a 'survey article' . . . [which attempts to develop] the theoretical or analytical ideas that have been brought to bear on contemporary international economic issues." (Pref) The nine chapters are divided into two parts: Pure international trade theory and International monetary theory. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[The authors] have digested scores of articles and monographs representing the output of an entire generation of international economists. . . . Moreover, in their reviews they have respected both the complexity of contemporary issues and the subtlety of theoretical discussions. And even though they were individually responsible for drafting separate chapters, they were collectively successful in minimizing stylistic differences, substantive inconsistencies, and avoidable redundancies. Consequently, they have produced a volume of extraordinary usefulness—nine autonomous survey articles, all of high quality and some . . . that are absolutely first-rate. Students at the graduate level and teachers will find the book an invaluable reference aid . . . [although the] list of topics can hardly be described as exhaustive." B. J. Cohen

Am Econ R 57:1379 D '67 900w

Choice 5:94 Mr '68 220w

"[This volume] is useful not only for students but also for professional economists who want to catch up with the literature."

Economist 224:795 S 2 '67 60w

CLEMONS, ELIZABETH, Waves, tides, and currents. 112p il maps $3.75 Knopf 551.4 Oceanography—Juvenile literature.

Tides—Juvenile literature. Ocean waves—
Juvenile literature 66-13786

The author offers an "account of the great natural forces at work within the seas and oceans. The descriptions of the action of the tides and the influences that cause its variations are . . . illustrated with . . . photographs and diagrams. [Glossary. Bibliography. Index.] Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 2 '67 120w

"An accurate and fairly detailed account. . . . [The descriptions] are lucid and interesting." E. F. Grave

Library J 92:2448 Je 15 '67 90w

Reviewed by R. L. Batten

Natur Hist 76:71 N '67 120w

"This beginners' book on oceanography delights the eye with its unity of text, illustration and design. Ages ten to fourteen." Jane Manthorne

N Y Times Bk R p32 Je 11 '67 100w

CLÉTY, WINCKELMANS DE, CHARLES. See Winckelmans de Cléty, C.

CLEVELAND, JOHN. The poems of John Cleveland; ed. by Brian Morris and Eleanor Withington. 175p $9.60 Oxford 821 67-91974

In attempting to establish the canon of Cleveland's poems, the editors have eliminated "literally dozens of poems from the list of those which have been accepted from time to time as his. . . . The introduction contains a biography, a study of the textual problems, and a critical introduction to the canon. Critical commentary on each poem is provided." (Choice) Index.

"An outstanding piece of work; it will undoubtedly stand for some time as the critical edition of the work of an interesting, if 'minor' 17th-century poet. . . . The editors have performed a remarkable feat of textual criticism. . . . The most important of the poems remaining are satires of some force and power; the defects of Cleveland's lighter verse . . . allowed by the editors in a thoughtful introduction; but their historical interest is not to be denied. But the best of the satires, for example 'The Rebel Scot,' have, it seems, established a place for Cleveland among the better minor poets of the period."

Choice 4:1379 F '68 170w

TLS p841 S 21 '67 550w

CLEVELAND, MARTHA. Charles Percy: strong new voice from Illinois; a biography. 228p pl $5.95 Harris-Wolfe & co.

B or 92 Percy, Charles Harting 67-31276

Cleveland, a political journalist, outlines the Senator's life "as a child, adolescent, soldier, young business executive, and so on, in three chapters; she then devotes the remaining 21 to Percy the politician." (Library J)

"Percy, whose defeat of longtime Illinois Senator Paul Douglas in 1966 brought him to national attention, is not particularly fortunate in his gushy biographer—a minor league political columnist whose almost unqualified admiration for her subject has produced a saccharine volume hardly worth adding to any library."

Choice 5:1037 O '68 50w

"[The book ends] with chapter 24 which is suggestively punctuated as '1600 Pennsylvania Avenue?' There is one key uncertainty about Senator Percy which his biographer should have elucidated but unfortunately has not. Does the often-expressed belief that Chuck Percy is en route to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue have any substance or is it merely a clever ad man's contrivance? . . . The book will appeal to the general reader." R. A. Gray

Library J 93:3542 O 1 '68 180w

CLIFFORD, JAMES L., ed. Man versus society in eighteenth-century Britain; six points of view. 174p $6 Cambridge

914.2 Great Britain—Civilization [68-120571

